

TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE,
MORALS,

FREE THOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 9. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, March 3, 1877. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $2 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

CARDINAL CULLEN plays the flunkey with alacrity, refusing to admit the eloquent Mahony's corpse into the Dublin Cathedral.

A MODERATE ASSESSMENT.—Mr. Moody wants $45,000 more to pay the expenses of running the Boston tabernacle. Won't "Jesus pay the bill?"

PROCTOR still insists that the moon is dead. Probably he is right. Otherwise why should a coroner hang around it every time it is eclipsed?

REV. TALMAGE commends Joseph as a fine business man and insurance agent; yet it can be well remembered how completely he was sold in Egypt.

A NEW order of religious abstainers called "Danielites" has been organized in London. They use neither flesh, fish, fowl, alcohol, nor tobacco.

THE eagle, the raven and the parrot have been known to live one hundred years, and the swan has been known to reach the age of one hundred and fifty years.

MR. VANDERBILT's dissatisfied heirs have no difficulty in finding lawyers to contest the old Commodore's will. The pickings promise too well to be shunned.

It is said that Cardinal Manning feels twenty years younger since it has been declared that the next pope shall be selected without any regard to nationality.

It is stated as a fact that two aeronauts in crossing the English Channel at a high elevation were able to perceive distinctly the irregularities of the bottom.

ELECTRICITY travels through wire at the rate of 130,000 miles per second, while the nervous fluid passes over the nerves of the body at the rate of 200 feet per second.

DR. SCHLIEMANN is said to be now ready for another job. He will take a contract to dig up Moses, the witch of Endor, or the widow that Elijah boarded with during that long dry spell.

A STATISTICIAN has ascertained that of 1,000,000 born, only one half live to the age of 43; 233 live to be 100 years old, and that but one will reach 108. The period of life between 15 and 20 has the fewest deaths.

Two hundred and fifty expeditions at a cost of $25,000,000 and hundreds of lives, have been sent to the Arctic waters to discover the open polar sea, and to reach the pole, and as yet entirely without success.

SAID Napoleon Bonaparte to the astronomer, Laplace, "Tell me what your views are respecting God." To which the great scientist replied, "Sire, I find no use nor place in my philosophy for such a hypothesis."

THE Graphic says that Tilden has lost all confidence in astrology since the "seven stars" on the commission serve him so ineffectually. Who can bind the sweet influence of the Pleiades and loosen the bonds of Oregon?

HOWEVER old the earth may be, according to Professor Proctor it has not reached its growth. He estimates that 400,000,000 extra-terrene bodies become incorporated with the earth every year, and some of them weigh a ton each.

"A WIDOW" in one of the morning papers avers that the Hon. John Morrissey relieved her in distress, and declares that Mr. Talmage, who wishes Morrissey were dead, to be as far below John Morrissey as "hell is below heaven."

THE Brooklyn Clinton Avenue Congregational Church is divided in sentiment. The entering wedges of discord are Beecherism and anti-Beecherism. It seems as if the Beecherite domination are crystalizing.

MOODY misstates the truth when he attributes to Voltaire the aphorism, "Ignorance is the mother of devotion." Although the phrase is unquestionably true, it was used by Jeremy Taylor half a century before Voltaire was born.

ALLUDING to Mr. Talmage's best wishes for John Morrissey's death, Mr. Morrissey expresses the opinion that Mr. Talmage, by such utterances, evidences his unfitness to be at large, and that his friends should take care of him. The gambler is doubtless the most of a gentleman of the two.

THE Lafayette, Ind., Courier perpetrated this: "Hayes, crushed to earth, again has risen: The presidential chair is his'n: While Tilden, wounded, wriggles madly, And dies, because he hasn't got Bradley."

TWO Broadway concert saloons—rather vile places, by the by—were raided by the police a few nights ago. Three divinity students were found among the spectators. Probably they are students of the divinities that dispense lager and bad whiskey.

THE Rev. Mr. Keely of Madison is in trouble. It is the same old story. There is a pretty woman connected with it. Her name is Clemmens. "They loved not wisely, but too well." "Wherever God erects a house of prayer, The Devil always builds a chapel there."

GOV. CONNOR of Maine announces that there has been no increase of crime in that State since the death penalty has been abolished. How long is the barbarous crime of choking wretches to death on the gallows to be continued in any of the States?

IN speaking of the miraculous cure of Mrs. Robinson in Chicago, the Graphic says, "It does not seem to pan out any better than the Lourdes lady. She travels under an assumed name; her son is on trial for murder; her cure was effected by 'doctoring' and she was not quite cured anyhow. Are none of the beautiful illusions of youth to be left us?"

FEMALE PREACHERS.—Rev. Mr. Buckley does not believe in it. He said in the Methodist ministers' meeting the other day: "If the mother of our Lord were to preach, I would oppose it." We are not aware that it has been announced that the mother of God is to take the pulpit. If this is not blasphemous on the Virgin, it is, at least, vergin' on the blasphemous.

ARE the Newark Methodists right? They bargained with the Rev. Miss Oliver to preach for them during March, and after she had got her sermon prepared, they met and discussed the matter and even had the assurance to write the lady that they wished not to hear her. We advise her to at once bring a suit for a "breach of promise." It cannot be called a breach of preach.

THE following epitaph is, or was, in the Church of Saragossa, Spain. "Here lies Juan Cabeza, chorister of our Lord, the King. When he was received into the choir of the angels, in augmentation of that happy company, his voice was so distinguishable from the rest, that even God himself hearkened to him with attention, and said: 'Hold your tongues, ye calves, and let Juan Cabeza sing my praise.'"

REV. DR. BRODUS, in lecturing to Baptist ministers a few days ago, said he fervently hoped none of them wrote their sermons under the influence of alcohol. It is to be feared that the good man had a painful suspicion lurking about him to make such a remark. But he is right; let the Baptist stick to his water. If he cannot find salvation by that element there is little hope for him. Let him not mix alcohol with his water.

OUR correspondent, S. B. Shepherd, Troy, Kansas, writes thus: "It seems to be according to the 'laws of Hoyle' in Kansas to get up in church and call the preacher a liar. Mr. Osterhaus recently arose in his place in church in North Topeka, and then and there called the Rev. J. B. Orwig a liar. He was subsequently arrested and prosecuted on behalf of the State, and the case was tried by a jury in Topeka on the 16th, resulting in acquittal. Osterhaus had plenty of witnesses to prove that he had spoken the truth concerning the reverend gentleman."

THE troubles in the Rev. Phoebe Hannaford's "Church of the Good Shepherd," Jersey City, are to culminate in division of the church. The reverend lady's friends have hired another hall, while the Rev. Mr. Williams of Hightstown, N. J., is engaged to preach to the ladies and other members who "hold the fort." One of the most noticeable things about Williams, and which the church esteems the highest is, he is not a woman.

THE pastors and officers of fifteen east side Methodist churches held a meeting on Washington's Birthday to look into the condition of things regarding themselves. They found that a majority of the churches were deeply in debt, with the indebtedness increasing and a diminution of members. Upon the whole, the outlook is a cheerless one and a week of special prayer was decided upon. If that week of prayer does not fix up things all right and put the churches on their feet again, the ponderous question will again present itself, "What's to be did?"

A CONSIDERABLE degree of religious fermentation is reported in Russia, and new sects are constantly springing up. One of these new sects, the "Philippovtzi," preach suicide by fire and starvation as the greatest of Christian virtues. The "Child Murderers" think it their duty to people paradise with the souls of innocent children. The "Stranglers" believe that people can only enter heaven by a violent death. Other sects are the "Flagellants," and the "Sceptzi" or mutilators. The Sceptzi number about 100,000 persons of both sexes. It is amazing what wild vagaries human beings have been led into upon the subject of religion and the best means of appeasing an angry, exacting deity.

THE GEESSE AND THE FOXES.—A Fable by Frances Wright.—Oh, this is a glorious generation for those who have too much or too little wit to afford to be honest. It is par excellence, the age of triumph for the shrewd and the crafty. 'Tis, in fine, the golden age of the foxes. But, alas! 'tis also the golden age for the geese. And the geese are as nine hundred and ninety-nine to the foxes. Are my readers in doubt as to my meaning? I mean there are nine hundred and ninety-nine geese in existence to one fox; and that the fox has a merry time of it, making his supper off the geese, just when and how he pleases. Are my readers still in doubt as to my meaning? Were I of the saving faith I should say, "I write in parables, that reading ye may not understand"; but being a heretic, I shall add the moral of my fable. The fox is the priest; and the nine hundred and ninety-nine geese are the believers, on whom the priest breakfasts, dines, and sups.

A FRIEND sends us the following: The three little girls were playing with kindergarten blocks and several dolls of small size; also a detached monkey—once a climbing monkey. They said, "Let's build a church." Accordingly a church was built, seats arranged, and a pulpit constructed. The dolls made a very respectable congregation of devout worshippers, and a little book lay open upon the pulpit desk but now a dilemma arose! What should they do for a preacher? Looking anxiously about for a "shepherd to go in and out" before the flock, Grace, aged five years, suddenly snatched up the mutilated monkey, which had not been considered a fit candidate for church-membership, and was left outside among the debris left from building the house. With a very solemn countenance, and in a subdued voice, she said: "I guess the monkey will do for a minister." And she proceeded to install him pastor of the congregation, by bolstering him up between two blocks behind the desk.

A SCHOOLMASTER'S PRAYER.—A pious Michigan schoolmaster in the habit of opening his school with prayer, offered up the following: "Once more, O Lord, I beg to remind thee that day by day, and month after month, I have implored thee to strengthen the intellect, grant understanding, and shower down thy blessing upon this school. But, Lord, I must confess that my prayers have been in vain, and that my school is no better behaved, and no more learned than are other schools that have neglected to publicly call upon thee for help. I try to mix my religion with the arts and sciences in suitable proportions, and believe in the truth of thy holy book. I believe thy big fish story; thy snake story; that Daniel, like Van Amburgh, went in among the lions, and that, according to thy book, this world is flat and just six thousand years old, but I have to ask thee, O Lord, for a little more light about them three hundred foxes, and if their tails was all tied to one fire-bran." Of course, Lord, I believe every single word that's in thy holy book, and only ask for just a little more faith and light in this one instance, for the reason that I myself have had some experience in trying to catch foxes. And O Lord, owing to the fact that this district is opposed to corporeal punishment, I have to ask thee to let thy power be felt by sending forth two she bears an' gobble up about forty of these unworthy children what are in the habit of alluding to the bare spot on the top of their respected teacher's head."

Events of the Week.

We have had another week of pleasant winter weather.

THE Merchant's Hotel at Rondout, N. Y., was burned. Loss $30,000.

A STEAM-BOILER exploded in Petersburg, Ind., by which four men were blown out of existence.

THE Deaf and Dumb Asylum at Council Bluffs, Iowa, was burned Feb. 25. Damage, $100,000. No lives lost.

THE whaling steamer, Spitzbergen, belonging to Dundee, Scotland, has been lost. Twenty-two persons perished.

THE Rev. Benjamin Williams, Pontiac, Mich., who has been holding revival meetings, has been expelled for Beecherism.

TEN men over in New Jersey are digging for the treasures buried by the pirate, Capt. Kidd, over one hundred and fifty years ago.

PEACE is made between Turkey and Servia, and Russia is retiring her forces. Signs of war in Europe are thus fading away.

HAYES says he is going to trust in God. From our limited experience we should advise him not to do a credit business, and to trust nobody.

THE Rev. Elijah Hammoth, Methodist minister of Pennington, N. J., has been arrested on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses from a member of his flock.

THE Electoral Commission is still continuing its labors of counting the votes—eight to seven—for Hayes. It looks as though Hayes would be President—if we are to have a President.

G. E. MALTEBY & Co., 41 Harrison street, have been donating more shelled oysters to the poor and to the charitable institutions of this city. They have given away, in the aggregate, many barrels. They read THE TRUTH SEEKER.

JOE COBURN, the noted pugilist, recently got into a melee with some policemen, and was very unruly. He shot two policemen and fired also at two others. In making his arrest the policemen found it necessary to beat him severely with their clubs. He is having his trial in the court of general sessions this week.

MRS. JOHANA COAKLEY, a widow fifty years of age, of Williamsburgh, drank a number of glasses of beer and then retired to bed, leaving a kerosene lamp burning near her bed. By some means fire was communicated to the bedding which was soon in a blaze. The poor woman was so badly burned that she died.

THE following despatch is from Bury, Quebec, Feb. 27.—"Quite a commotion has arisen here over the elopement of Rev. C. Thorne, D.D., rector of this place, with a lady member of his congregation. He left a wife and two children behind. It is also said that he has been administering medicine to his wife containing slow poison."

AN insane printer, named James C. Griffin, left his home at No. 187 Madison street on Tuesday last, leaving the following peculiar writ of divorce for his wife Bydella: "By authority of Almighty God, which I get from the Holy Bible (Deut. xxii.), I do hereby give you, Bydella Williams, a divorcement from me from this day and henceforth forever." "JAMES C. GRIFFIN."

ST. JOHN'S GUILD a very respectable church charitable institution of this city is to be investigated. Large sums of money, provisions and clothing are consigned to them for the benefit of the poor, but it has been discovered that nearly the entire amount of the funds find their way into the pockets of the managers. It is said it costs seventeen dollars to get one dollar into the hands of the poor.

PROF. WM. FALKE, a young German of very unusual intelligence, who went from this city to Cincinnati a few weeks ago to take a position in a chemical manufacturing house, committed suicide last Sunday night by taking chloroform. The intelligence is most painful to us. We knew him well, and regarded him as one of the most promising young men within our acquaintance. Some untoward events must have produced a temporary aberration of mind. He was capable of doing much good in imparting the scientific knowledge of which he possessed so much.

Science and the Arts.

Is America the New World?—Continued.

BY L. L. DAWSON, CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.

I might perhaps put in more legends, but it would be an unnecessary taking up of time and space, as all are very much alike or tend to the same thing. I will now bring to notice the antiquity of some of the races, and see what light can be thrown on them by history and tradition. "The oldest race known in Mexico were the Colhuas, who came in ships probably from South America, a remnant of the people, as conjectured by the Abbe Brasseur, who had escaped the terrible calamity involved in the destruction of Atlantis, by the combined forces of fire and water. They were not barbarians, but are described as a people who first planted among them the seeds of civilization and erected large cities. They taught the Chichimecas, the rude tribes, how to cook food and cultivate the soil. These tribes, according to tradition, were the Autochthones, the people by whom the region was occupied at the beginning of time. It was through an alliance with them that the Toltecs gained supreme power, which appears to have become disintegrated, leaving the country disorganized, two or three centuries before the appearance of the Aztecs. The oldest certain date, according to Abbe Brasseur, in the Toltec language, reaches back 955 years before Christ; and as the Toltecs dwelt for some time in the country of Zibalba before they seized upon the supreme power, their migrations must have begun more than a thousand years before the Christian Era" (Foster. Prehistoric Races of the United States, pp. 342-443).

"Authorities are conflicting as to the origin of the Aztecs, but whatever their origin, this fact stands out in the history of that country; that the Aztecs moved into the valley of Anahuac only about three hundred years before the Spanish conquest. The Aztecs, grafting their ideas on an older and higher order of civilization, had made themselves skilful artificers. They attained a knowledge of the more intricate movements of the solar system; they solved the cause of the eclipses, and calculated the length of the solar year. It is quite probable that these astronomical problems, which indicate a high range of intellect, were not wrought out by their own ingenuity, but were derived from the subjugated race. The older ruins show a refined skill which was not attained in those of a modern date; and the picture writing on the Aztec monuments fails to interpret the inscriptions of Palanque and Copan" (Foster. Prehistoric Races of the United States, pp. 340-341). "The Aztecs had made considerable progress toward civilization under a dynasty of monarchs who, it appears, preferred the arts of peace to a waste caused by war, when the conquistadores came and blotted out the last remains of aboriginal civilization on the continent of North America. The last empire was buried amid slaughter and devastation" (Scrap Book).

Thus we see by historical data that before the conquest of Mexico there were three successive races or nations, each distinct from the others, not including the Autochthones, consequently Mexico, since the conquest, is in its fourth historical period. It is natural to suppose that a country contiguous to Mexico, containing all the advantages of soil, climate, etc., as our country, would be in a historical period equal to that, and although we have not the records to draw evidence from that it is so, yet I think circumstances and facts show conclusively that we are in the fourth period of our country. I think the remains of paved streets of cities, walled tombs, and macadamized roads east of the Alleghenies, as evidence of the first period, also in connection with them the remains of the cities in Kentucky, and the petrified body found in Mammoth Cave, and perhaps the fossil child found in Kane Co., Ill., about a year ago. The time of the Mound Builders I consider the second period, and the period of the savage tribes as third, and the time of European occupancy as the fourth period.

I separate the first and second periods because there are no indications of the Mound Builders having gone farther east than Ohio, and in all of the country they occupied they have not left any ruins or remains that would show as high a stage of civilization as paved streets of regularly laid out cities. I place these ruins in the period previous to the Mound Builders because the remains of so civilized a people, occupying so wide a space of country as indicated by ruins so much alike, so far apart as Massachusetts is from Kentucky, would be more plentiful, and we should, no doubt, have a historical record of them if of later date. The Mound Builders are supposed to be an Indian race, or connected with the Aztecs, consequently if the petrified remains were connected with them, they would have been classed with them by those skilled in ethnology, by the shape of the skull, and the features.

We hardly know where to place the Pigmy race, as there are no traditions of them, nor any ruins, but simply the evidence that they existed at some time because their skeletons are found in the graves as they were placed probably, thousands of years ago. The tombs are formed by placing flat stones up edgewise at the sides and ends of the graves and placing another flat stone over them, and covering over all with earth.

There are some mounds found in western New York, but they are very different from those in Ohio and the valley of the Mississippi, they having more the shape of fortifications.

On the history of the third and fourth periods of our country it is unnecessary for me to dwell.

It is supposed by some that the Peruvians can be traced back still farther than the Mexican race, or even the civilization of the Chinese Empire, which is the oldest of Asia.

I give an extract from a paper read by Mr. Charles Brooks before the Academy of Sciences in San Francisco not long since on "The Origin of the Chinese Race." The object of the writer being to prove that the first Mongolians came from some part of this continent, probably Peru. The argument may be succinctly stated as follows: "Central Asia has hitherto had the credit of being the cradle of mankind. Scientists say that America is older, geographically, than any other part of the earth's surface. Therefore, in a natural process of evolution, the aboriginal man must have appeared on this hemisphere, in the vicinity of the first rocky elevation. The Chinese people are unlike any other people on the continent of Asia. They are hemmed in by mountains and the great wall along the northern and western frontier. They have had no communication with other Asiatic people from time immemorial. According to this tradition, their first progenitors landed on the southern coast of China. In looking for the place whence they might naturally have been brought by favoring winds and currents, our attention is turned to Peru. The records of that country show an immense antiquity. Their civilization was extremely ancient, and the remnants of an almond-eyed race resembling the Mongolian are found in the Peruvian mountains and also about the head-waters of the Amazon. Peru had an immense population 2,000 years before Christ. Early in the history of the world the Peruvians possessed a knowledge of solar movements, the mariner's compass, and hieroglyphics or picture writing. An armed vessel or an invader might have gone in sixty days from Peru to the southeastern coast of China. Chinese records show that 3588 years before Christ Fo Ki, a stranger king, introduced the recondite knowledge possessed by the Peruvians to the Chinese. The lower roots of the Peruvian idiom are connected with the two hundred and sixteen radicals of the Chinese language. These writings occur all through Asia, and as far west as the Pyramids. It was shown that while Peru had at one time 11,000,000 of inhabitants, her industries had died out and her population disappeared indefinitely after having achieved a high degree of civilization."

Mr. Brooks is not the only one that holds out the idea that man first appeared on this continent, for the "Abbe Brasseur boldly asserts that he has found proofs that the first civilization of the earth was on the ground which sank in the cataclysm of the Antilles; that the first ceremonial religion commenced there, as well as the first age of bronze, which spread over the two hemispheres; and that there we have the beginning and basis of American Ethnology" (Foster. Prehistoric Races of the United States, p. 397).

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Doctrine of Filiation, or Descent-Theory.

BY PROF. ERNST HAECKEL.—CONTINUED.

CHAPTER V.—CONTINUED.

UNIVERSALITY OF VARIATION.

This important fact might be illustrated by an immense number of examples. It is evidently, therefore, not the number of actually existing germs which indicates the number of individuals which afterwards come into life and maintain themselves in life; but rather the case is this, that the number of adult individuals is limited by other circumstances, especially by the relations in which the organism stands to its organic and inorganic surroundings. Every organism, from the commencement of its existence, struggles with a number of hostile influences; it struggles against animals which feed on it, and to which it is the natural food, against animals of prey and parasites; it struggles against inorganic influences of the most varied kinds, against temperature, weather, and other circumstances; but it also struggles (and this is much the most important), above all, against organisms most like and akin to itself. Every individual, of every animal and vegetable species, is engaged in the fiercest competition with every other individual of the same species which lives in the same place with it. In the economy of nature the means of subsistence are nowhere scattered in abundance, but are very limited, and far from sufficient for the number of organisms which might develop from the germs produced. Therefore the young individuals of most species of animals and vegetables must have hard work in obtaining the means of subsistence: this necessarily causes a competition among them in order to obtain the indispensable supplies of life.

This great competition for the necessities of life goes on everywhere and at all times, among human beings and animals as well as among plants; in the case of the latter this circumstance, at first sight, is not so clearly apparent. If we examine a field which is richly sown with wheat, we can see that of the numerous young plants (perhaps some thousands) which shoot up on a limited space, only a very small proportion preserve themselves in life. A competition takes place for the space of ground which each plant requires for fixing its root, a competition for sunlight and moisture. And in the same manner we find that, among all animal species, all the individuals of one and the same species compete with one another to obtain these indispensable means of life, or the conditions of existence in the wide sense of the word. They are equally indispensable to all, but really fall to the lot of only a few—"Many are called, but few are chosen." The fact of the great competition is quite universal. You need only to cast a glance at human society, where this competition exists everywhere, and in all the different branches of human activity. Here, too, a struggle is brought about by the free competition of the different laborers of one and the same class. Here too, as everywhere, this competition benefits the thing, or the work, which is the object of competition. The greater and more general the competition, the more quickly improvements and inventions are made in the branch of labor, and the higher is the grade of perfection of the laborers themselves.

The position of the different individuals in this struggle for life is evidently very unequal. Starting from the inequality of individuals, which is a recognized fact, we must in all cases necessarily suppose that all the individuals of one and the same species do not have equally favorable prospects. Even at the beginning they are differently placed in this competition by their different strengths and abilities, independently of the fact that the conditions of existence are different, and act differently at every point of the earth's surface. We evidently have an infinite combination of influences, which, together with the original inequality of the individuals during the competition for the conditions of existence, favor some individuals and prejudice others. The favored individuals will gain the victory over the others, and while the latter perish more or less early, without leaving any descendants, the former alone will be able to survive and finally to propagate the species. As, therefore, it is clear that in the struggle for life the favored individuals succeed in propagating themselves, we shall (even as the result of this relation) perceive in the next generation differences from the preceding one. Some individuals of this second generation, though perhaps not all of them, will, by inheritance, receive the individual advantage by which their parents gained the victory over their rivals.

ADVANTAGEOUS CHARACTERS TRANSMITTED.

But now—and this is a very important law of inheritance—if such a transmission of a favorable character is continued through a series of generations, it is not simply transmitted in the original manner, but it is constantly increased and strengthened, and in a last generation it attains a strength which distinguishes this generation very essentially from the original parent. Let us, for example, examine a number of plants of one and the same species which grow together in a very dry soil. As the hairs on the leaves of plants are very useful for receiving moisture from the air, and as the hairs on the leaves are very changeable, the individuals possessing the thickest hair on their leaves will have an advantage in this unfavorable locality where the plants have directly to struggle with the want of water, and in addition to this have to compete with one another for the possession of what little water there may be. These alone hold out, while the others possessing less hairy leaves perish; the more hairy ones will be propagated, and their descendants will, on the average, be more distinguished by their thick and strong hairs than the individuals of the first generation. If this process is continued for several generations in one and the same locality, there will arise at last such an increase of this characteristic, such an increase of the hairs on the surface of the leaf, that an entirely new species seems to present itself. It must here be observed, that in consequence of the interactions of all the parts of every organism, generally one individual part cannot be changed without at the same time producing changes in other parts. If, for instance, in our imaginary example, the number of the hairs on the leaves is greatly increased, a certain amount of nourishment is thereby withdrawn from other parts; the material which might be employed to form flowers or seeds is diminished, and a smaller size of the flower or seed will then be the direct or indirect consequence of the struggle for life, which in the first place only produced a change in the leaves. Thus the struggle for life, in this instance, acts as a means of selecting and transforming. The struggle of the different individuals to obtain the necessary conditions of existence, or, taking it in its widest sense, the inter-relations of organisms to the whole of their surroundings, produce mutations of form such as are produced in the cultivated state by the action of man's selection.

This agency will perhaps appear at first sight small and insignificant, and the reader will not be inclined to concede to the action of such relations the weight which it in reality possesses. I must therefore find space in a subsequent chapter to put forward further examples of the immense and far-reaching power of transformation exhibited in natural selection. For the present I will confine myself to simply placing side by side the two processes of artificial and natural selection, and clearly explaining the agreement and the differences of the two.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Evolution of Israel's God.—Continued.

BY A. L. RAWSON.

The number of the lost works is large, and included, besides the supposed books on Natural History by Solomon, many on history and biography, the chief of which were, The Book of the Wars of Jehovah (quoted in Nu. xxi. 14, 15). The Book of the Wars of the Lord (perhaps the same as the first); Joshua's Division of the Land in Seven parts (Josh. xvii. 6); The Book of Joshua (Josh. x. 13., 2 Sam. 1-18); Solomon's Proverbs; Solomon's Songs (not the Canticle or Song of Songs which is not by Solomon); Solomon's Natural History (2 Kings iv. 32, 33); The Acts of Solomon (1 Kings. xi. 41); The Annals of Samuel; The Annals of Nathan; The Annals of Gad, (1 Chr. xxix. 26); The Life of Solomon by Ahijah; The Life of Solomon by Iddo (2 Chr. ix. 29); The Acts of Rehoboam (2 Chr. xii. 15); The Chronicles of Judah or Israel (quoted 31 times); The Life of Uzzah (2 Chr. xxvi. 22); The Book of Jehu (2 Chr. xx. 34); The Book of the Kings of Israel and Judah (2 Chr. xxviii. 26, xxxv. 27, xxxvi. 8); The Life of King Hezekiah by Isaiah (2 Chr. xxxii. 32); The Life of Manasseh (2 Chr. xxxiii. 18); The Prophecy of Ahijah (2 Chr. ix. 28); The Book of Shemaiah (2 Chr. xii. 15); The sayings of Hosea (2 Chr. xxxiii. 16); The Lamentations (2 Chr. xxxv. 25).

What is called the first and most important work of the schools was the "Book of Jashar," that is to say, a work on the ideal character of the Hebrew nation, containing religious and national poems, chiefly on the early ages of the nation, forming a history in poetry of the acts of divine providence in Israel, as exhibited in victories like that of Joshua.

over the five kings (Josh. x. 18), and in the life of the king and hero Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam. i. 18). The complete work contained many substantial expressions of the religious and theocratic ideas of the Jews; their ideas of the nature of God, his dealings with men, of the connection between man's duty and his happiness, and a contrast of their own character as a nation under the special care of God with the character of other nations, who are supposed to be less favored by God, or Godless.

There was probably a work on "The Genealogies and Acts of the Patriarchs," from which a few selections have been preserved in the Old Testament, chiefly in Genesis.

In addition to these works there are the Chronicles and the books of Ruth and Job and besides the minor prophets, the books of Ezra and Nehemiah, and then at Malachi, it is customary to end the 'canon' (rule for credit or authenticity) of the Old Testament. Then follows the Apocrypha, and the New Testament also with its Apocrypha.

It is supposed that a series of more than thirty writers, writing in succession during a number of centuries, without concert, yet all combine unconsciously to one end, like parts of a dissected map fitting to form a whole, they conspire to the unity of a very elaborate scheme, each being unaware of what is to come after. When all is finished, it is found to be profound music, like a vast oratorio of the ages, perfect and of elaborate harmony, which has resulted from a long succession of strains, each by itself fragmentary. As though the ancient writers had each written a single letter of the divine name that was to be given to Jesus, and no one knew that name until the final letter had been written. Such a theory requires the office of an overruling inspiration. This inspiration is supposed to have directed the writers as to the right kind of truth to write, and to have assisted the copyists so far as to preserve the truth against loss, and all translators and editors, in short the truths in the Bible protect themselves, being imperishable, and so are independent of the decay of languages, and in defiance of human learning and labor.

Thinking men now generally regard the Bible as a human composition, or as it is now a compilation of literary fragments, rather loosely put together, which constitutes a theory of God's dealings with man, with some efforts at a definition of what God, is and deeper insight into man's character through which are scattered a few traditions of historical interest but almost totally devoid of chronological elements although located in a vague way in the several countries known to the writers.

Such men value the book for what they can draw from it, and naturally or instinctively refuse to worship the mechanical printing of words or letters, which is not of itself living, nor can it give life to others.

The highest claim that any one makes is that inspiration ended with the prophecy of Malachi, 420, B. C., and that long interval, and including say 60 years more to the time in which one of the gospels was written, making 480 years was one in which the one-sided, uncritical, and superstitious priests were left to the uncontrolled tendencies of their own biased and fallible judgment. There was liability for error to have crept in during that period, and we have no reliable historical proof to the contrary.

In a small tract like this it is impossible to extend the argument on each point, and I will leave the case at present resting on a few statements which may be proven true by any careful student even without extensive research.

The Old Testament ends where the true history of the Jews begins. The writings before the Apocrypha are allegorical, poetical, symbolical, and altogether unworthy the name of history.

The traditions of the early formation of the Hebrew nation are not entirely lost, for there are fragments of four distinct and successful efforts at separation of the Jews from their neighbors. The first is the separation of the family of Shem from those of Ham and Japhet, next the family of Abraham from the Kenites and other Shemitic tribes; then the family of Isaac from those of Ishmael and other descendants of Abraham; and finally the family of Jacob is separated from the Edomites and other branches of the descendants of Isaac.

These traditions have been written up by different scribes, compiled, extracts made from the collection, and the great mass of the works lost. The later editors knew little or nothing of the true origin of their materials, and used their own judgment as to selections. All these writings, of which there are now parts or whole works remaining were composed during the time of the Maccabees and of the Herods, and some of them since the destruction of Jerusalem under Hadrian, at the end of Barcoab's rebellion, A. D. 136. Every one of them was written in the Greek language, which was the language of the court and of scholars, while Arabic and Syriac were spoken by the common people.

[CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.]

Something for Infidels to Consider.

MR. EDITOR: On the 13th inst., died in this city, Mr. Philip Gassman, and a more honest, upright and just man can hardly be found than he was. But Mr. Gassman was also an Infidel; not one of those prudent, silent ones who never dare to utter a liberal word for fear they might be called Infidels and suffer in their business or social standing, but one of those earnest, true Infidels who never are ashamed of their Infidelity, speak as they think, and act according to the principles of right, justice, and honesty. On his sick-bed, during the year of his lingering and painful sickness, he showed not only the greatest patience, quietness, and resignation, but often spoke to me and others of life, death, and futurity, with the composure of a philosopher. He did not believe in another life after death, and yet awaited his slowly but perceptibly approaching death with the utmost tranquillity and equanimity. He enjoined his family not to have his corpse taken into any church; to have no clergymen nor religious ceremonies whatever at his funeral, but requested me to preach his funeral sermon. All this was done in strict conformity with his wishes. He had, nevertheless, quite a decent funeral, for he was a member of the "Haragari Lodge of Titusville" (happily for his poor family who received $600 besides $40 for funeral expenses), who of course, turned out in a body, as did also his friends, and many others out of curiosity.

Now what is most significant, and what I wish especially to call the attention of Liberals to, is the attitude of the press in relation to this case. The Titusville Courier (Dem.) spoke next day, in perhaps half-a-dozen lines, of the funeral and of the "beautiful services" of the Haragari—which they really are, though the Courier could not tell, as they were spoken in German—but had not a single word to say, neither of Mr. Gassman nor of my sermon, though the latter was spoken in English. The day after the funeral I met the reporter of the Titusville Morning Herald (Rep.) who requested my manuscript of me. He got it, and next day I expected to read my sermon in the Herald, but it was not in. At noon next day I happened to meet said reporter. He seemed surprised that my sermon was not in the paper. "I let Mr. Bloss (the proprietor) have your manuscript," said he. "He thinks it would not do to publish the whole, but made an extract from it and wrote a beautiful article in which he does Mr. G. as well as yourself full justice. Probably it will appear to-morrow." It has not appeared yet, and most probably never will.

Now, my Liberal friends, does not that prove to you the necessity of having Liberal Leagues established throughout all the country? When the secular press of the country says, "It would not do to publish a Liberal sermon," and when it dares not refer to it even by a single word, whatever the urgency might be, is it, then, not time for Liberals to wake up, to abandon their indifference and lethargy, and arouse to action.

To stimulate them to do so is the object of this communication. Time and its events call loudly in the ears of the Liberals. Will they wake up? Can anything arouse them to action, to be up and doing their duty?

MORRIS EINSTEIN.

Titusville, Pa., Jan. 24, 1877.

"Bulldozing."

DEAR TRUTH SEEKER—This is a new word lately coined. There must be a necessity for its use, or there would be no sense in making it. Well, what does it mean? Politicians say, "Intimidation." But what is its theological meaning? Scare. I think, MR. TRUTH SEEKER, it must have a theological sense as well as a political sense; and if one definition is right, the other cannot be wrong.

It is said by politicians that a man is a "bulldozer" when he uses threats, ungentlemanly and unjustifiable arguments, to intimidate voters, in order to get their votes. But what of the theologian who uses the same unjustifiable arguments in order to scare the ignorant, the stupid, and the fearful into the support of his absurd and cruel theology? If one is a "bulldozer" in politics, is not the other equally a "bulldozer" in theology, i. e. religion. A theological "bulldozer" is a religious (?) curiosity, anyway. Christendom has quite an army of them yet, though their number is decreasing. The numbers diminish just in proportion as their intellectual endowments rise above the average. To this there is no exception.

Now, MR. TRUTH SEEKER, I will relate, in a few words, an item of some interest concerning one of this kind of folk.

It was on or about Sunday evening, January 7, 1877. The ensuing week was to be a week of prayer. Twenty-one was the number (it is supposed). Each surviving member was to start off in search of Jehovah, requesting him (or her or it) to add new members with more enthusiasm (money) than old ones, to feed, clothe, house, and keep in countenance and expression the "bulldozer" who officiated. Something must be said to wake up the dormant feelings. There were people enough there, but they were listless—well dressed on the outside, but knowing and caring but little about the inside. Sensation, interest, was needed. How should it come? Hark, O ye Heavens! and lend a listening ear, thou Pandemonium! Let Diabolus laugh, and Diablerie shiver! The sensation came; the interest felt; the awful climax reached, to wit:—the railroad disaster at Ashtabula and the theatrical conflagration at Brooklyn were evidently the work of the Jewish and Presbyterian Jehovah. (O my!) What for? The answer came:—To make us outsiders shudder, repent, "jine" the church, pay up and—love him. (O my!) The climax reached at last! What then? One unanimous "stare" instead of "scare," excepting a moderate few, who, quietly folding down their hands and rolling up their eyes, mentally ejaculated, It must be so, or our minister would not say so. We pay him for thinking for us and talking to us, and he only says what he knows; bless the Lord, O my soul, for his mercy endureth forever—who can deny it.

But with the bulk it did not take. Some looked grave as owls; some smiled; some cleared their throats, as though the dose was "costive;" others winked a bat of incredulity, while the more advanced said: "Bulldozing."

I refrain from relating the expressed opinion of many that heard it. Suffice it that condemnation is the rule and not the exception. Approval rests entirely with the "sold," i. e., regenerated.

QUERY:—MR. TRUTH SEEKER, will a feather float in an atmosphere lighter than itself? Will it descend until it strikes a stratum of its own specific gravity? So. Will a stream (without hydraulics) rise higher than its fountain? (If it does, you may be sure it is beneath strong pressure.)

CLIMAX:—Can a clergyman or devotee rise higher than the character of the God he worships? If the God worshipped is a murderer for selfish ends, will not the other be the same at heart? If a clergyman believes his God is a "bulldozer," is it not a demonstrated problem that he is a "bulldozer" too? Is it wrong for a clergyman to do as his God does? Is it not a fact beyond cavil that the more a clergyman acts like his god, the more godly and god-like he is?

If a god, be his name Moloch, Fohi, Allah, Brahm, Siva, or Jehovah, will use his omnipotence to destroy human life arbitrarily by wholesale—men, women, and children indiscriminately—in order to make the living love and worship him, it will certainly prove a failure with all but a diminishing tribe of "bulldozers."

LOGICAL CONCLUSION:—The minister who worships such a monster as his God could not scruple, when guided alone by his God's character and conduct, to commit any crime under a "bulldozing" legislature in order to scare the simple into support of his inhuman dogmas.

CONCLUSION:—Spirit of Nature, all-sufficing Power; Necessity, thou mother of the world; all that the Universe contains are but thy passive instruments. And thou, Necessity, regardest them with an impartial eye, whose joy and pain thou can not feel. The inextinguishable spirit or life all matter feels is Nature's only God. But human pride and selfishness are prone to invent more serious names to hide their superstition and their ignorance. IOWA.

A Note from Rev. John Marples to Mr. Underwood.

MR. EDITOR: It will be seen by the following note from Mr. Marples that he is well satisfied with the report of the "Underwood-Marples Debate," which you have recently published in a neat little volume. I expected he would be, for he is an honest, fair-minded man. His course is in pleasant contrast to the dishonest and contemptible conduct of Prof. Burgess, who after trying, but in vain, to prevent the publication of the Aylmer Debate, when it finally appeared in book form commenced representing through the Christian Standard and in numerous private letters that it was an "Infidel affair" gotten up by an Infidel reporter and myself to make money, the object of these falsehoods—which are in perfect keeping with the disposition and character of the man—being to keep from the reading public the weakness of his arguments and the meagreness of his attainments, as well as to have a pretext for declining to meet me in another debate.

Both Debates were reported by Mr. John T. Hawke, formerly Parliamentary reporter, but now one of the editors of the Toronto Daily Leader, and both are as fair and as honest reports as were ever made.

Respectfully, B. F. UNDERWOOD.

LONDON, ONT., Feb. 8, 1877.

MY DEAR SIR: Copies of the Debate were sent to me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve them very much. You have done me justice. The only thing I regret in the book is that you did not insert a personal notice of yourself as well as of me. I know that many people in Canada would have been pleased to see that as well as mine. Should you bring out a second edition of the Debate, I suggest you put it in.

I have a small parcel from Mr. Bennett and have sold some of them. I intend to push the sale all I can. With kind regards, I remain my dear sir, yours very truly.

JOHN MARPLES.

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

A Proposition to Debate.

MR. G. H. HUMPHREY of this city has handed us the following to appear in these columns. We said to him we were quite uncertain whether either Col. Ingersoll or Mr. Underwood could soon make it convenient with their previous engagements to come to this city, to hold a debate with a person they never heard of, but we added if neither of those gentlemen can give their attention to the matter, we will undertake to discuss the questions in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, we taking the affirmative and he the negative. He surely shall not go begging for an opponent. [ED. T. S.]

QUESTIONS.

1. Did unbelievers in the Bible do as much for American Independence as the believers in it?
2. Has Infidelity done as much as Christianity to promote learning and science?
3. Is there a stronger probability that Infidelity is true than that the Bible is divine.

The undersigned has challenged Col. R. G. Ingersoll to a public discussion of the foregoing propositions. It is to be hoped that he will accept, but should he decline, Mr. B. F. Underwood or any other exponent of Paineology, will be taken as substitute. Very respectfully, 81 East Tenth street New York. G. H. HUMPHREY.

Love is the greatest of all reformers—the fulfilling of the law.

No one wilfully wrongs those he loves. If the world loved more it would sin less.

LIFE, like the diamond in a mine, is sometimes valueless to its owner, until it becomes estimated by another.

WHEN all men shall learn that their enemies are also their brothers, they will hasten to be reconciled, and nations will cease to shed each other's blood.

Honor, it is said, there is among thieves. Leagued rogues and bandits are faithful to each other, and if they loved mankind as well, their vocation would be gone.

THE whole number of Popes to Pius IX is 244. Of those 104 have been Romans, and 103 natives of other parts of Italy, 15 Frenchman, 6 Greeks, 7 Germans, 5 Asiatics, 3 Africans, 2 Dalmatians, 3 Spaniards, 1 Hebrew, 1 Thracian, 1 Dutchman, 1 Portuguese, 1 Candiot, and 1 Englishman.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.
SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 12.

Great Jehovah, were not thy prophets of olden time a great trouble to thee, and did they not often do discredit to their holy calling and to thee? Were they not men with animal passions and imperfections, like their fellow beings? And were they not as liable to indulge in the weaknesses and infirmities common to our race about as often as other men?

In taking a retrospective view of those old Hebrew prophets, does it not strike thee that they were a peculiar and rather fallible lot of men? Wert thou to choose again for the same number of mouthpieces, couldst thou not make a better selection?

To begin with Moses—though he did not pretend to foretell future events, still he filled the place of prophet or mouth for thee—was he not, though said to have been the meekest of men, a very irascible, quick-tempered, relentless and exacting sort of person? Did not the manner in which he secretly murdered that unfortunate Egyptian and buried him in the sand, strikingly indicate his character and temper? Though thy word says he often held thee back and prevented thee from acting rashly and impetuously, and by persuasion kept thee from passionately destroying thy people, after all the trouble thou hadst taken to bring them out of a land of bondage, was he not also himself very rash and hasty? And though he often excelled thee in coolness and patience, did he not also quite frequently fly into fits of rage and fierce anger when exciting causes arose? Was not the occurrence of his breaking, in a passion, the two tables of stone on which thou hadst worked forty days at writing thy short code of laws, because his brother Aaron, the high priest, had gotten up a golden calf in his absence, and the people had begun to worship it, a case in point?

Was not his anger, as well as thine own, greatly aroused also at the time of the revolt of Korah, Dathan and Abiram from his authority? Did he not on many other occasions show a hasty, impatient temperament? Was it not, nevertheless, kind and amiable in him to so often prevent thee from stepping without the bounds of propriety, and making thyself ridiculous in the eyes of the surrounding nations, who perhaps would have laughed at thee and said thou hadst undertaken a contract greater than thou wert able to perform? Did he not possess a great influence over thee, to be able to hold thee in check, and to assist thee in controlling thy anger and furious wrath, which without him thou seemdest hardly able to do? Did he not, with his plausible reasoning, often show thee the futility and impropriety of certain acts which thou didst threaten to commit? Did he not on many occasions prevent thee from destroying Israel, whom thou so tenderly lovedst?

But with the good qualities which Moses evinced in restraining thee in the moments when thou wert thrown off thy guard and became hastily very angry upon small provocations, is it not true, also, that he was guilty of tyranny and cruelty in an excessive degree? Were not the cruel orders which he gave in reference to the murdering in cold blood of at least fifty thousand of the women and children of the Midianites, and the turning over of 32,000 young, innocent girls to gratify the beastly lusts of the soldiers, when a war of extermination was mercilessly prosecuted against that peaceful people, the most cruel and monstrous that a man ever gave? Could a man of beneficence, mercy, and forbearance ever be guilty of such measures? Did he not also show himself to be a blood-thirsty, relentless man, on numerous other occasions?

Did Moses, in these cases, by the by, act upon his own impulses, or did he simply carry out thy instructions? Does not thy word say it was the latter? Can it be that a God of mercy, love and kindness could ever give such commands? Is not that transaction concerning the Midianites one of the darkest blots that ever disfigured the fair fame of a god or a man?

Did not Samuel, although in the main a worthy sort of a man, oppose having kings to rule over Israel after thou hadst decided upon that course? Was he not also mistaken in the selection he made of King Saul, whom he anointed in thy service? Did he not afterwards find it necessary to revoke his choice in this business by withdrawing his favor from Saul and bestowing it upon David? Did Samuel act by thy instructions in this matter? If so, does it not speak rather badly for thy prescience or thy ability to foresee the future?

Was not David, thy favorite prophet and psalm-singer, a man black with crimes of the darkest hue? Did he not cause the death of hundreds of thousands of people? Did he not play on a grand scale the part of an assassin, a robber and a brigand? Did he not prey upon surrounding nations, and despoil them in a most unfeeling and merciless manner of their honest possessions? Was he not most emphatically a man of blood and murder? Did he not basely cause the death of his loyal soldier Uriah, because he had fallen in love with his wife Bathsheba, and had committed adultery with her? Was he not a very lecherous man? and did not that passion lead him into the commission of many crimes and improprieties? For one who was a special favorite of thine—"a man after thine own heart"—was he not, in the familiar language of the day, a rather "hard nut?"

Was not the good prophet Elijah almost too much of a murderer to be a first-class saint? Was not the slaying of four hundred and fifty priests at one time, because they did not have the same religion and believe in the same God that he did, rather a bloody piece of business? Would not the transaction have done honor to the wild Indians of North America, or to the magnates of the Christian Church in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries? Was not also his putting to death with fire over a hundred men, at another time, simply because they asked a favor of him, decidedly a cruel, hard-hearted transaction? Would a really good man have a disposition to perform such an act?

How much, Jehovah, hadst thou to do with this taking of human life? Didst thou not assist thy servant Elijah somewhat? Could he have performed the work so effectually without aid from thee? Was it between thee and him, "like master, like man," or like God, like prophet?

But was not the vindictive Elijah good to the widows, or to one widow, at least? Did he not board with her during long dry spell, when provisions became extremely scarce and dear? and did he not with thy aid, or without it, have the facilities for supplying her larder from day to day, from month to month, and from year to year? But did he not finally distinguish himself by a most remarkable aerial ride in a chariot of fire, drawn by horses of fire, since which time he has not been seen by mortal eyes?

Was not his servant, and thy servant, Elisha a worthy disciple of the good Elijah? Was not his causing the death of forty-two young children by furious she-bears, because they reminded him of his hair being gone from the top of his head and because they suggested that he also should make an aerial ascension, worthy of Elijah in his palmiest days? Was not Elisha also good to the widows, or rather to an old man's buxom wife? Did he not kindly aid her in getting a son after her husband had become so advanced in years that he could not render her such aid?

By the by, Jehovah, is it strange that in reading the story of the sudden and mysterious disappearance of Elijah while in company with Elisha only, that it has been thought a theory more probable that Elisha put the older prophet quietly out of the way and secreted his body, thus gaining possession of that wonderful mantle which was capable of parting rivers and causing their waters to pile up like walls, and also to become prophet-in-chief to thee in place of Elijah who was rather in his (Elisha's) way, than that the old prophet had risen up by means of a fiery chariot and horses in the cold thin ether of the atmosphere of the upper regions? Is it not far more in keeping with the experience of mankind? Have not rulers and officials in various capacities thus often been quietly sent to their rest by those who wished to fill the shoes they wore, where there is no authentic and reliable record of a man going off bodily into the upper air? Is it not true, too, that human life was but lightly valued in those times, and that a single life, more or less was an insignificant matter with either Elijah or Elisha?

Was not thy prophet Isaiah an erratic, ranting, bombastic sort of person? and are not the chapters in the Bible ascribed to him the most disjointed, disorderly, incoherent, extravagant set of compositions that ever were written and gathered together? Is not some of it mere wild rhapsody, more adapted to the capacity of a lunatic than a sane man? Is not some of it history, but disconnected and fragmentary, without beginning or ending? Is it not clearly the production of more than one person? Were there not two or more Isaiahs? Can such wild and crazy matter be prudently taken as a guide by any sensible class of persons either as to what has taken place in the world or is to take place?

Is not the book ascribed to Jeremiah much of the same irregular, disjointed character, partaking in part of history and in part of a species of composition which passes for prophecy? Was he not rather an equivocal sort of person? and was there not some justice in the charge made against him that he was not true to the best interests of his own nation but subservient to the interests of Nebuchadnezzar of the Chaldeans? Were not many of the chapters—which he never wrote—added to his writings long after he had ceased to live?

Was he not also a dolorous and melancholy character? Did he not moodily brood over the troubles which beset him and his people? Are not his "Lamentations" the result of this peculiarity of his? Is it not strictly true that the writings attributed to Jeremiah referred almost entirely to the condition of captivity in which his countrymen were then held, and that they have no application, and are of very little use, to the people of the present age of the world?

Was not Ezekiel much of the same kind of a character? and did not his visions relate almost wholly to the condition of his people in their irksome captivity? and were not his dreams mostly of his native country, his beloved city of Jerusalem, and the blessings that would inure to his countrymen were they restored to their former privileges? Was he not sometimes very coarse and vulgar in style? and did he not put things into thy mouth, or represent thee as speaking words and uttering sentiments which thou never didst utter? Are not the instructions about mixing human excrement with the bread for the people, as given in Ezek., chap. iv., of this character? In short, could not the world relinquish all that is contained in the book of Ezekiel without suffering material loss?

Was not the dreamer Daniel another wild, erratic, visionary character? Have his dreams or his visions ever been of the slightest profit to the world? On the contrary, have they not been a great detriment and injury? Have not months and years been spent by infatuated interpreters of thy word and thy mysteries in counting up the days and weeks, "the time, time and a half time" mentioned by Daniel, to ascertain when the end of sublunary things should come? and has not the date for the final end of the world often been set, when the old earth should cease to roll, and when the sun and moon should be turned to blood and the stars should fall from heaven? Have not the periods for all this to come to pass been set scores and scores of times? and have not people in consequence been induced to neglect the affairs of life and to become fanatics and lunatics in consequence of Daniel's dreams and visions? and has not much very valuable time thus been worse than thrown away? Is it not true, Jehovah, that the Book of Daniel is a production of an age some three or four hundred years later than the date accorded to it in the Bible? And is not the character of Daniel entirely a myth?

Has not the invention or the introduction of the Multiplication Table and the Rule of Three—or Proportion—in mathematics been of vastly more importance to the human race than a thousand Daniels and Elijahs with their dreams and visions, yes, with all the other prophets, named and unnamed, thrown in? Have the hordes of prophets that have lived upon the toiling masses been of any real utility to mankind? Could they not have been dispensed with and the world revolved through space just as well without them?

We have not named the "lesser prophets;" is it necessary to do so, though they ante-date the greater prophets? Were not their productions of the same wild, incoherent, and incongruous nature of those already alluded to? Did not their disjointed, disconnected ravings apply mainly to the events of the times in which they were written? Were they of any particular service then? and are they of any appreciable value now? Has not the invention of the steam engine and its application to machinery done a thousand times more to help along the human race in the struggle of life than the labors of all the prophets and of all the gods combined?

Was Jonah one of thy prophets? Didst thou really raise him up to do the great work which he performed? If so, how is it that his immense labors have not the slightest connection with the Jewish history and writings? And if his career was of so much consequence that such an unnatural, improbable, and impossible feat was performed on his account as his being swallowed by a fish and remaining three days unharmed in its stomach, and then thrown up at the expiration of that time upon dry land, why does not his name and adventures appear in other parts of the Bible? and why is his name not mentioned by some of the Jewish writers?

As his career is not alluded to by the old Bible writers; as his story is not located within the territory of the Jews; as all the localities named in connection with him belonged to the "heathen," is it not reasonable to conclude that the story is a heathen tale, gotten up to amuse some ingenious heathen writer, and that from its novelty and improbability it was adopted by the Jews, and centuries afterwards was added to the compilation called the Bible?

Is it not rather unjust to make thee father such a silly, unmeaning story? If thou wert anxious to show thy power, and how thou couldst set the laws of nature aside, would it not have been far more striking for Jonah to have swallowed the whale and even the city of Nineveh itself? Could men have doubted him or his capacity after he had swallowed them? Do not our swallowing abilities have to be taxed in a degree almost equal to that, to passively and unquestioningly accept all that is said about Jonah and Daniel and Ezekiel and Jeremiah and Isaiah and Elisha and Elijah and Moses, and all the rest of the "Holy Prophets"? Is not the belief in the vast services they have rendered the world of mankind, and that they were specially commissioned to speak for the great God of the Universe, fast passing away? and are not men turning their attention to subjects and discoveries vastly more useful, sensible, and true?

Dost thou now consider that thy cause was greatly advanced by the aid and services of thy numerous prophets? Couldst thou not have got along just as well in running this diminutive globe without their services as with them? Did they not often compromise thee and place thee in very embarrassing circumstances? Didst thou not find, in fact, that the mischief they did and the trouble they made, fully counterbalanced all the good they accomplished for thee? May it not be inferred that this is the reason why thou hast seen fit to dispense with their services for the past twenty centuries? If they were essential to the success of thy enterprise in former times, and if thou couldst not manage this whirling sphere and control thy turbulent, restless people without their aid, how is it that thou hast been able to get along without them for these two thousand years? If they were necessary then, why not now?

In looking at the past, is it not strange, we repeat, even to thyself, why thou shouldst have needed such a motley, conglomerate assortment of worthless men to speak thy word, and to convey intelligence from thee to the inhabitants of the earth, or rather, to a single diminutive race of wild, contentious, marauding people, who occupied the hilly country of Palestine, comprising only 11,000 square miles of territory?

As thou hast learned to dispense with that class of men altogether, is it not fair to conclude that thou hast improved by experience, and hast learned that there is a better way to manage thy affairs than to have so many extravagant, contradictory, imperfect, and unreliable mouthpieces? And will it not be much the same, Jehovah, with the more numerous class, the priesthood, in common with all the numberless gods and religions which the world has believed in? Hast thou not required, for more than thirty centuries, a vast number of idle, designing, assuming, contentious, exacting, and greedy men, who have lived upon the labors of others, without producing even a hill of beans or a stalk of corn to feed themselves and their wives and their children? Have they not, nevertheless, fed upon the best the earth has produced? Have they not fed upon the daintiest and most savory dishes of capon, roast beef, venison, and yellow-legged chickens? Have they not been clad in rich garments, in broadcloth and fine linen? Have they not worn the silkiest hats and the shiniest patent-leather boots, which have been earned by the hands of others, and all because they claimed that they were mediators, middle-men, go-betweens, betwixt thyself and the rest of the inhabitants of the earth, making known to them thy will and desires?

Has it not been a most troublesome and expensive way of making known thy mind to thy large family of children, to keep up such a numerous retinue of idle, lecherous, worthless priests, to do thy will for thee? If thou hadst hit upon some general plan of communicating thy laws and purposes to the children of the earth, say in the strata of the rocks which form the crust of the earth, in the rivers, the hills, the valleys, and the towering mountains; in the plains, the forests, and the vast oceans of restless water; in the vegetation that springs from the soil; in the endless varieties of animal life, from the "mote that floats in the sunbeam" to the leviathans and whales that people the Arctic seas; in the finer fluids, gases, powers and forces that permeate the atmosphere and the substance of the earth and all matter; hadst thou, Jehovah, been content to reveal thyself in all this endless routine of marvels and beauties, could not thy children have learned quite as much of thee as they now know, and without the services of this burdensome, motley class of priests which the toiling sons of men have so long been compelled to support?

Really, could not the world have got along quite as well without this privileged priestly class, this self-constituted celestial aristocracy of assuming pretenders, as it has with them? Have they not taught far more lies than truths? Have they not attempted to instruct the people of thee and thy will, when they knew not a thing more of thee than the merest child in its mother's arms? Have they not in all ages assumed to know far more of thee and of the mystery of thy plans than they had the slightest authority for doing? Have they any more positive knowledge of thy nature, thy character, thy attributes, thy organization, thy personality, thy form and figure, thy appearance, thy residence or dwelling-place, thy disposition, thy wishes, thy designs, and thy secret will, than have other men? Have they any means of taking observations of thee, of learning of thy hiding-places, thy retreats and thy secluded walks, not equally open to all other men?

Have they not, in fact, hoodwinked the world for thousands of years by assuming to have knowledge of thee and thy purposes not imparted to the rest of mankind? Has not this assumption, this false claim, been their stock in trade, and by these means have they not maintained a domineering, tyrannical, aristocratic supremacy over their fellow beings? Is it not to this class in reality that is due the absurd and false theories of thyself that have been taught to the world? Have they not cudgeled their brains and taxed their ingenuity to get up inventions of thee and to excite wonder, fear, and apprehension of thee and of thy anger in the minds of their simple fellow beings?

Have they not, Jehovah, simply created thee, given thee the characteristics and dispositions which they have told the world of respecting thee? Has not this been the way with all the gods that have an imagined existence? Have they not been the inventions, the manufactures of the priests that have lived and flourished in the world by virtue of their speaking for the gods they have made, and making known the will of these gods to the credulous, gaping multitudes who looked up to the same designing and villainous priests as almost superhuman in character and wisdom, and as possessing a vast amount of knowledge of the gods and an immense influence at their courts and thrones?

Has not this been the way the ignorant world has been going on for thousands of years? Have not the priests been making gods and deluding people in reference to their vast knowledge and influence with them? Have thy priests been any exception to the general rule in this respect? Have they not given attributes to thee? have they not declared what thy will has been? Have they not professed a great influence at thy court precisely as the priests of the other gods have done? Let us repeat, have they not actually been makers of thee? Is not the world indebted to these pretentious priests and prophets for all they think they know of thee? And have they not been richly repaid for the information and the inventions they have thus been the authors of?

Have thine not been the most exacting as well as the most mischievous class of priests of all the gods that deluded men have worshiped? Have they not incited more bloody wars; have they not ruled kings and generals more absolutely and imperatively than any other class of priests that the sons of men have supported?

Have not thy priests, Jehovah, under Jewish and Christian auspices, incited more bloody wars, have they not caused more streams of blood to flow, have they not caused a much greater sacrifice of human life, have they not devastated this fair earth time and time again, far in excess of all the other priests of all the other religions of the world? Does not history tell this bloody tale? Has human happiness and prosperity had any more deadly and persistent enemies than thy pampered priesthood?

Have not priests instituted and conducted for hundreds of years the most cruel and diabolical prisons and dungeons of torture where scores of thousands of hapless, wretched mortals have been afflicted for days, nights, weeks, and months, with the most terrible cruelties the mind is capable of conceiving? Have not unknown thousands of poor wretches been made to suffer a thousand deaths for merely lisping a word against the rule of the priests, and even for being suspected of having lisped it? Have not great numbers been sent to the most cruel death conceivable without even knowing their accusers or being informed of the crimes with which they were charged?

Has not the rule of priestcraft in the world been a long reign of tyranny and blood? Have not millions of hapless human beings, fathers, mothers, brothers, lovely maidens, prattling children, and little infants almost without number, been left to fester and decompose in cities, in quiet homes, and on the bloody field of war after being slain at the behest and instigation of the priests? Have they not made a slaughter-pen, a charnel-house, a field of human gore, of the fairest portions of the earth?

Would it not have been better, vastly better, that the world should know nothing of a Jehovah, nothing of an invisible, unknowable, incomprehensible, unreasonable deity, nothing but the vast Universe, with its boundless extent, its endless existence, its marvelous powers and capabilities; nothing of a bloody, mercenary, intriguing, designing priesthood, than to have the experience it has had? Would not, in fact, no religion at all, save the natural good incentives and offices of the human heart, be greatly preferable to the rule of priestly tyranny, surveillance, and blood which the sons and daughters of men have been compelled to submit to?

Have not the Jewish and the Christian priesthood been a most expensive luxury—if luxury they may be termed? Have not thou and they been a most onerous tax to the portions of mankind that have believed in thee? Would not honestly, a full knowledge of the Universe and its laws, —without priests, bishops, and prelates, save the teachers of science and philosophy—have been vastly better and cheaper for the world?

Is it not ignorance that has made men delve in dark recesses of mysticism and fable, that has caused them to manufacture crude and monstrous gods, and that has induced them to sustain and support the privileged, pampered, lecherous priesthood that have lived sumptuously upon the toil and sweat of the masses, giving nothing valuable in return? Could not the world very profitably dispense with this onerous burden, and in place thereof learn the teachings of reason and common sense?

Are not the priesthood of our own day and country—though the evolution of the mind and the advance in civilization and intellectuality less disposed to incite war and bloodshed than in the heyday of the Children of Israel and the times of the Crusades—do they not show the same characteristics of subjecting the masses to their rule and dictation, to accept from them the oracles of a mysterious God, the will of heaven, and the fear of hell? Do they not, as of old, still require the people to look to them to learn the mysteries of godliness and the purposes of Deity?

For this are not their hands laid as heavily upon the people as ever before? To support the sixty thousand priests of this country and their institutions does it not cost the laboring people fully $200,000,000 annually? Do not the 600,000 Christian priests of the world cost the nations which sustain them $1,000,000,000 annually? Are the benefits received anywhere in proportion to the outlay?

Is this state of things always to continue? When the people become more enlightened will not mysticism, supernaturalism, and priestcraft be compelled to retire to the rear and to relinquish their long, cruel, and bloody reign? Will not the human race be far happier under the benign rule of nature, reason, and science? Are not truth and reason immensely to be preferred to mythology, ignorance, and superstition? Will not the world be wiser, better, and happier when each man learns to do his own thinking, his own praying, and his own communing with heaven?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Science Hall.

On Sunday evening last, T. B. WAKEMAN continued the subject of the "History of Morals," and gave a most interesting discourse which was chiefly confined to the Romans and their phase of civilization, their system of labor, the marriage relation, etc. He drew a distinction between the Romans and the Greeks in the scale of civilization and morals, and gave to the former the credit of attaining to the highest degree both in civilization and morals. In the Roman Empire, slavery was greatly modified, and woman became the wife and companion of man more fully than she had under the Grecian regime. He asserted that neither Greece nor Rome were empires or nations in the strict sense of the term; that the predominating force that held them together was the love of conquest and not that close integration which is the characteristic of nations in the proper sense of the word. When Rome had conquered the world, and there were no other countries for her to subdue, civil wars and dissensions sprung up, and an end to her power and glory was the result. He traced the introduction of Christianity into the Roman Empire, and showed that its comparatively new doctrine of immortality, of a home in the skies, a city not built with hands, drew the minds of the ignorant population from the affairs of this world, and caused them to place their attention upon their future home above the stars. It made them careless and indifferent about improving the conditions of life in this world, and for this reason public improvements were neglected, education and science deteriorated, learning was neglected, books were burned and discouraged, and general ignorance spread over the nations where Christianity ruled. Thus ignorance, superstition, and bigotry culminated in the middle or dark ages, as a natural result, all over Christendom. This state of things was what led to the wars of the Crusades, and the defeats which the Christian forces met with in the "Holy Land," gradually caused them to appreciate the fact that there was something in this world to live for and to struggle for. As the duties and comforts pertaining to this life attracted their attention, the importance of preparing for their home above the clouds lessened. A desire for education and for the arts and sciences began to increase, and the Arabians who had conserved, through the long gloomy night of the dark ages, the principal part of what the world now has of education and the arts and sciences, imparted them to the Christian nations, until colleges, seminaries, and schools of learning sprang up all over the Christian world.

He showed how the Christian religion, descending through the feudal system of Britain, laid the foundation for the present more fully developed variety of civilization. He gave Christianity the credit of being the bridge which had brought us to this condition, and thought that despite its dark and damning phases, this credit should not be denied it.

But imperfect justice has been rendered to Mr. Wakeman's lecture. He spoke without cessation for nearly an hour and a half, and the discourse was replete with instruction and deep interest, and exhibited the speaker in a very favorable light as a student, a thinker, and philosopher.

On next Sunday evening, Hugh Byron Brown will deliver a lecture in the same hall on "The Safe Side." It will be well worth hearing.

B. F. UNDERWOOD spoke last Sunday at Salem, O. On March 5th he commences a debate with the Rev. Clark Braden, at Toledo, Iowa.

LET us repeat the offer heretofore made: To new yearly subscribers for THE TRUTH SEEKER we will add ten extra copies of Vol. III. for 1876. If every friend of the paper will make an earnest effort to extend our circulation a large addition can be made to the number of our readers.

WE HAVE JUST gotten up a new edition of our Catalogue of Liberal, Anti-theological, Scientific and Progressive books of our own publishing as well as those published by others. These are sent free upon application. Let those who wish to order a book of any kind send for a catalogue. We send any work obtainable in the country, postpaid, at publishers' prices. We await orders.

The Friends of Liberty.

We congratulate our friend, Mr. Samuel Baldwin bookseller of Washington City, for his public appreciation of the priceless service of Thomas Paine in the War of the Revolution, by publishing a photograph, a fine work of art, exhibiting the "Immortal patriots of American Independence, the greatest Friends of Liberty," and justly representing Thomas Paine's portrait in companionship with those of his compeers—Washington, Franklin, Jefferson and Lafayette. They are mounted on heavy board and will be mailed to any address. Small size, 50 cents; large size, $1.00. Write to S. M. Baldwin, 920 F. st., Washington, D. C. He writes us he has in his store a life-size portrait of Paine; also a pair of spectacles and shoe-buckles used by the hero when living.

CLEARFIELD, PA., FEB. 26, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT—Dear Sir: I see by the last TRUTH SEEKER that you intend to publish a "Book of Forms, Hymns, and Songs for the Liberals." I say amen! to that. Such a work is needed wherever Liberals are to be found. Is it not enough that we are born under the auspices of Christianity, baptized in our helpless infancy, drilled in the Catechism, driven or coaxed into Sunday-schools, dragooned into the Church, and dogged through life by the hell-hounds of Zion, but as soon our breath leaves our bodies, the priest takes possession of the premises, dictates what disposition shall be made of the body, and preaches our poor souls into heaven or hell, according to the amount paid for the "support of the Gospel"? It is high time that Liberals dispense with the services of the sleek, black-coated leeches!

Another pressing want of the time is an illustrated paper for children and youths, to take the place of the illustrated Sunday-school papers that sow the brambles of superstition in the minds of the children of to-day. If you know of such a paper, please send me the address as early as possible.

Enclosed find $1.00, for which send me some tracts, as I wish to spread the true gospel. Yours, HARRY HOOVER.

[We know of no such illustrated paper for children, and fear it will be some time before such a one could be made to be remunerative.—Ed. T. S.]

CALL FOR A CONVENTION OF THE DONORS OF THE PAINE HALL FUND.

At a meeting of Liberals and Donors held at the Paine Memorial Building in Boston, January 27, 1877, the undersigned were appointed a committee to call a Convention of all the Donors of the Paine Hall Fund, and were instructed to send to each Donor a written or printed notice of the same. The objects of this Convention are to effect a permanent legal organization of the Donors, and to elect a Board of Trustees, who shall be empowered to negotiate with the three Joint Tenants of the Paine Memorial Building for the transfer of the same by deed to this Board of Trustees, and to raise such a fund as may be necessary to secure the transfer; or to adopt other means to the same general end. At present, there is a debt of about $70,000 on the building; and it is believed that, if the title of the building shall be vested in Trustees duly elected by the Donors themselves, it will be possible to raise the amount necessary to reduce this debt to a point compatible with the permanent retention and control of the building for the purposes for which it was erected. The three Joint Tenants—Messrs. Mendum, Seaver, and Savage—give public assurance, at the meeting of January 27, of entire willingness to transfer the property to any properly elected Trustees who shall relieve them of all personal responsibilities and liabilities on its account; and, if the Board of Trustees contemplated in the foregoing plan shall be enabled, by the co-operation of the Liberal public, to assume these responsibilities and liabilities with a greatly reduced debt on the building, and therefore without any personal risk to themselves, the money already invested in the Paine Memorial will be saved to the Liberal cause.

The undersigned Committee now issue this call for a Convention of all the Donors of the Paine Hall fund, to be held at Paine Hall, Boston, on Saturday, March 3, at 10 o'clock, a. m., for the objects above specified; and urgently advise the attendance of as many of these Donors as can possibly be present.

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
W. S. BELL,
FRANCIS E. ABBOTT,
Committee.

Boston, Feb. 6, 1877.

We, the undersigned, the three Joint Tenants in whom the title of the Paine Memorial Building is vested, hereby agree to transfer this title by deed to any Board of Trustees duly elected by the Donors of the Paine Hall fund, if and whenever such Trustees shall release us from any and all personal liabilities on account of the said building.

(Signed,) HORACE SEAYER,
JOSIAH P. MENDUM,
THEO. L. SAVAGE.*

* "This agreement is signed by me on condition that it shall be fulfilled within three months from date, so far as I am personally concerned, as I decline to be held longer responsible for the present management of the building."
"THEO. L. SAVAGE."

Pennsylvania State Society of Spiritualists.

The eleventh annual meeting of this society will be held at Lincoln Hall, Broad and Fairmount ave., Philadelphia, March 31, 1877, and on Sunday, April 1st, at 10 A. M. and 3 and 8 P. M. This will be the 20th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, and will be celebrated by the First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia in conjunction. The members of this society, and friends of the cause from all parts of the State, and from other places, are invited to meet with us to consider the present condition and prospects of Spiritualism, especially with reference to the subject of more complete and efficient organizations throughout the land. The general subject of organization will be considered, and it is hoped that something can be done to advance the cause of Spiritualism, and to bring its advocates into more harmonious relations with each other, that the power which rightfully belongs to the millions of Spiritualists in this and other lands, may be directed not only to protect Spiritualists in their civil, political, and religious rights, but to exercise an influence for the real benefit of mankind everywhere.

The meeting will be free to all, and we hope our friends will respond to this call, either personally or by letter addressed to our Secretary.

"Come, let us reason together." There are thousands of Spiritualists in this great State, whose influence would be much more effectual if we knew each other better and were properly banded together in a society, without a creed or any restriction of individual freedom, but with a determination to aid each other and the world in the reforms of the age, all of which are more or less intimately associated with our cause.

ISAAC REHN, President.

HENRY T. CHILD, M.D., 634 Race st. Philadelphia, Secretary.

Papers friendly to the cause are requested to copy the above.

Attention, Liberals!

The desire of many Liberals to form a fraternal society in some advantageous locality, in order to enjoy not only the pleasure of each other's society, but for mutual benefit and protection; I am therefore induced to extend to all those so inclined, a cordial invitation to come to this part of Kansas, the garden of the State, and unite with me in building up a society upon any plan best adapted to intellectual progress and civilization of the day.

The land is situated near the forks of the Solomon river. This river is formed by the junction of its tributaries at this point; it possesses many good water powers, and has many grist and saw-mills which are steadily at work at grinding and sawing the whole year round. The North and South forks of the river rise some three hundred miles West of this point and are settled by a thriving people, bringing to this point one of the largest trades in Kansas. For agricultural and stock-raising pursuits no State in the Union can excel this section. Large crops of all the cereals are annually raised here, and cattle, sheep, and hogs abound in vast numbers.

The land which I propose to lay off into lots and blocks is situated in a very attractive manner. The Northern line of the land is the Southern line of Cawker City. On this quarter of the one hundred and sixty acres is one of the most beautiful places for residences that the West can afford, and the landscape view is decided to be transcendently magnificent in every direction. The geographical position of this land and locality are plainly detected by observing upon the map of Kansas the natural routes to this part of the State, and already three railroads are pushing their way into our midst in wide-awake earnest. The Union Central Branch from Atchison, Ks., the Kansas Central Narrow Gauge Missouri, and Burlington, Iowa, branch of Chicago, Quincy, and Burlington. This road will run from the North and, passing through this place, proceed to form a conjunction with the Kansas Pacific.

Seven years ago I came here and located this land for the express purpose of building a Liberal city. At that time very little of the county of Mitchell was settled, nor was it organized. Indians of the Arapahoe, Comanche and Cheyenne tribes were no rarity, citizens were brutally and savagely murdered, women were snatched from their homes, and carried to the wigwams of these fiends, tortured and abused, and for years suffered a terrible living death as prisoners to these savages. Now the bloody trail that led through our midst has become a scene of industry; fields of grain grow where the scalped victim was once found in his gory death-slumber. A large population fills our county. Farms have sprung into existence and business seems to have escaped some custom monopoly to reorganize itself here. Merchants, wagon-makers, blacksmiths, hotel-keepers, hardware merchants, a printer and press; in fact, all kinds of trades can here find a growing business to engage in. With capital sufficient a large business from an extensive country can be done. Those wishing to invest and form a society will learn all the particulars by addressing me at Cawker City, Mitchell Co., Ks. Please enclose stamp for return letter.

Yours truly, MARIE DEFORD, M.D.

A late copy of the Banner contained the following friendly notice:

THE UNDERWOOD-MARPLES DEBATE, commencing July 20th, 1875, and continuing four evenings between B. F. Underwood, of Boston, and Rev. John Marples, of Toronto, Ontario, is reported and presented in neat volume form by D. M. Bennett, office of THE TRUTH SEEKER, New York. This protracted debate caused no little interest in Canada, as its perusal in the present faithful form will likewise do in this country. The subjects debated were—The Existence of a Personal God and the Inspiration of the Scriptures. Mr. Underwood is widely known as an advocate of Free thought. His opponent was a Scotch Presbyterian minister who came out to Canada only a few years ago. Mr. Underwood had evidently every advantage of him in point of coolness of mind, clear and condensed statement, and logical continuity of thought. Dr. Marples shows best as a declaimer, whose emotions are thoroughly stirred by his faith in what he is saying. The whole debate will prove very profitable and stimulating reading.

We are happy to learn that "Apples of Gold," the book by the talented Liberalist, Miss Susan H. Wixon, is receiving good attention, not only from the Liberalists, but from other sects, and is being introduced into Sabbath-schools and public schools. Miss Wixon has displayed fine talents as an inventive genius which places her as a writer far ahead of other authors whose works are scarcely more than a compilation, and we hope her book will find a place on the drawing-room table of every Liberalist, as well as Christian, in the land, as one that will not only please and instruct the youth, but adults also.

S. W. K.

Friendly Correspondence.

W. H. GALE, Hart, Mich., writes: I have been delaying sending in my dues in hopes I could make up a club here. I shall succeed in doing so eventually. I think you were wise not to enlarge the paper. Step lightly till you are on a firm foundation. I am in receipt of the Evolution. Though its typographical appearance is good, its contents are too foggy and pointless for me. It is not positive enough to suit the Liberal masses.

JONAS S. KNIGHT, Wiscasset, Me., writes: Please send me extra copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER to scatter around among the clerical wolves and their foolish followers here. I tell you, they are arrows, and they hit the mark every time. We are surrounded by bigotry and superstition, but I am battling against them to the best of my ability. My family is delighted with your paper, and it is always the first sought for among the other weeklies. The "World's Sages" is also a mine of thought to me. If I could only afford it I would very soon have all of your publications. Your writings ought to be scattered throughout the land. I have just been out to get a subscriber, and I persevered till I got one. I feel like saying to each of your old patrons, Go thou and do likewise, and we would soon double Bro. Bennett's list.

J. H. MARTIN, Noble, Ill., writes: You are engaged in a noble cause, and I would be glad to assist you more if it were in my power. I hope that there are not many who have neglected their duty to remit as I have done. I think your paper the best thing of the kind that I have come across. It has caused some of the scales to fall from my eyes, and I think it has loosened them a little on some of the elect. The Church of to-day is not what it has been in days gone by. Its persecutions have grown milder, and its Gods and devils have been tamed to a considerable extent. Nevertheless, there seems to be a veneration for the old system in the minds of the masses because it is old and dying, but it requires a man of much moral courage to attack it even in its present crippled condition.

W. RICHARDSON, Del Norte, Cal., writes: If your paper continues as good as it has been thus far, you can consider me a life subscriber. I have taken it from its first feeble start, and without flattery, it has to my mind been growing better ever since. I know you are making hosts of friends by your fearless way of presenting the truth. The majority of thinking minds, especially those that have felt the blasting effects of old theology, naturally fraternize with you in your strenuous efforts against the encroachments of superstition. I see much in the "signs of the times" to encourage continued labor. The agitation of thought going on in all the churches is an evidence that they are getting "stirred up" by seekers of truth and common sense all over the land. The clergy are on the defensive, now-a-days, seeking to guard their flocks from the gathering storm of Free thought. The most prominent parson in this place has lately devoted half a dozen evenings to proving the personality of the devil. They all understand if that linch-pin is out the old rattling gig can't run much longer. But there is too much free air around these grand old mountains for "they of the bloody faith," as Shelley calls the priests, to pull the wool over the common-sense miners here. They often come into my store and laugh at the priestly efforts to frighten old women. The world is fast outgrowing the age of fear and faith, and the dawn of a brighter future is even now at hand.

DAVID BRUCE, Brooklyn, L. I., writes: With reluctance I thought I should have to discontinue your valuable paper. I have no fault to find with it, only its teachings end where mine begin. For forty years I was a Materialist, in which faith I was much strengthened by the logical reasoning of Mr. R. D. Owen, in his popular lectures at the Hall of Science, New York. I am now, through long and deep reasoning, a crazy Spiritualist. Bear in mind, I hold you as an honest exponent of truth and exposé of error wherever it is to be found. I blame you not for your skepticism on the subject of Spiritualism, perhaps you have not had the same opportunities as myself and some others to gain full assurance of its truth. The old adage not unfrequently presses itself upon me, "He who deliberately attempts to deceive others is a knave; and he who deceives himself is a fool." You are safe in your position as a Materialist, and I candidly assure you I should have remained one had it not been for the direct proofs in perhaps a hundred different ways of an intelligence outside of myself. I think you are doing a good work. You are bringing your readers through the brambles and trickeries which beset the pathway of the honest enquirer after truth up to the oblivious jumping-off place—the grave; and there you leave him, and if he has any desire for further light, there is plenty of ways of acquiring it.

J. C. DRESLOW, Kansas City, Mo., writes: I am in receipt of some copies of your paper. I cannot say that it comes up to my ideal of a Free-thinker's journal, although in the main I am pleased with it. Of course it is easier to criticize than to conduct a paper. I know whereof I affirm, as I speak from experience. I desire that this have a place under the head of "Friendly Correspondence," notwithstanding it is not free from criticism. We are all very apt to think we are nearer right than any one else. How important it is that we all have charity. It is my honest opinion that THE TRUTH SEEKER manifests a little too much egotism and dogmatism, and not quite enough charity, when treating of the great questions now agitating the minds of the real thinkers of our times. I may be mistaken, but it seems to me that we should treat our opponents with as much courtesy as we would desire them to extend to us. If we cannot convince with arguments, kind words, and correct lives, we never will with sarcasm, ridicule, and harsh epithets. This is my experience with my Christian friends, and I should not change my policy if I were to assume the duties of an editor. Grant that we are more liberal than all others of different views, need we for that reason call ourselves Liberals? Does not this smack too much of that article we so denounce in others? You no doubt see the point. We desire to proselyte, and therefore should draw to, instead of repel from us. We should try and be consistent. My wife reads your paper but little, and the features I am condemning are the cause of it—not that she has no relish for truth. These are some of my thoughts—free thoughts—and it is for your readers to judge as to their force.

S. R. SHEPHERD, Troy, Kan., writes: Find enclosed the photographs of twelve Infidels who, about five years ago, organized the Philomathean Society in Valley Falls, Kansas, a village of 1000 inhabitants, six church buildings, and eight or ten church organizations—then one of the worst church-ridden towns in the West. For a year the society met in my office, when it removed to a hall. It is still in full blast, though probably a million prayers, more or less, have been offered up for its destruction. Soon after its organization, the unintelligent, unread, and intolerant wing of the church militant opened the floodgates of hell, and poured a torrent of persecution and moral assassination upon its members for more than a year. This only added members to the society and increased its outside backing. In a year more, the square issue of infidelity being made in the school election, the Liberals rallied and elected their board, put in their teachers, and then turned to and wrested the city government from the heretic-burners. Sunday grove-meetings and picnics, were then inaugurated by the Liberals, and one Sunday we had three train loads of people from Leavenworth, Atkinson, and Topeka come in to help us enjoy the precious boon of religious liberty. In another year the Liberals elected the president of this society to the State Legislature (Lower House), and the next year another member of the society to the State Senate. This serves to show what may be accomplished by organization and an open, manly, resolute resistance to the bulldozing, ku-kluxing, witch-burning bigots who would manacle and shackle the consciences of their fellows. Success in this case is especially gratifying to me, having been the subject of the crusaders' particular fury.

A. A. BARNES, Longton, Kan., writes: Your letter with three volumes of THE TRUTH SEEKER came duly to hand. I have looked through them and learned the outline history of the valiant little sheet; but I am certain that I do not nor never will, know of all the trials you have gone through in bringing it up to the present time. I am sorry that I was not favored with the first copy at birth. I might have helped you along a little; but the "vineyard" is still open and I may hoe a row in it yet. Those back volumes are precious documents to have and circulate. They show how hard has been the struggle of your journal for dear life, and cannot but enlist in its behalf the sympathy and support of Free thinkers who may read them. The papers you sent to Barber at Elk Falls were like hot cakes; he could not keep one to carry home. He says that every day somebody asks if he has any more of those papers. But the truth is, people are too poor to subscribe. If times ever do get better here, if Liberalism doesn't go like wildfire through this section, I am no prophet. Friends at the Falls are anxious to organize and start a library. I was to have met them three days ago, but bad weather prevented, and still prevents, so I have made out the enclosed, that you may, if convenient, and advisable, send me one copy of each, or such of them as you have on hand, my object being to look some of them over as soon as possible, as I may be involved in another debate. (The other one, I think, accomplished some good for the cause.) I will visit Independence soon and I think that I can stir them up to organize and start a library there, too; also get you more names. They must have some lectures there. There are skeptics there who would avow themselves if only the ice was broken. They are willing to attend lectures that, being fashionable, they could get their wives to see what was going on and take the curse off their own hearts. Women are the chief drawback. They would, if they could, to-day vote God and the whole church outfit into the Constitution. But I am after them, and some of them curse me now (in their peculiar way). I believe that some of them may live to bless me yet. My own wife was a live coal from the altar, the daughter of a Methodist preacher, and he one of five brothers, all of "the cloth." And when your paper made its first bow in the house, I tell you, there came near being war "in heaven." But I managed my part to the honor of the cause. Firmness and calmness was my motto; and now, after eight months, I may read aloud anything from "the shop" without fear of evil results. In fact, I believe the danger is over. The future is ours. Never do you give up! When it comes to the worst, write confidential letters to those able to help you. I do not like to trouble new converts about money, for it proves a damper. But rather than see your paper go under, I would do something desperate to aid you.

CLARENCE JOHNSON, South Wolfesboro, N. H., writes: I received the tracts you sent last all right, and have not got many of them left. I want you to send me some more as soon as you can. Enclosed please find one dollar for the same. Send me an assortment of Ingersoll's, D. M. Bennett's, and John Sypher's tracts. I am reading the "Sages," and if I could not get another copy would not take twice what I paid for it. Still they are holding forth to their several gods two or three evenings in a week, but they have not shown much power as yet. I heard that a lady said God was here in the place. I don't believe it, for I can't find anyone that has seen him, and I don't want to myself, for Paul says that "no man can look on him and live," and I don't want to die just yet. Of all the meetings they have had they have not got a convert, and only one backslider, for all their talking and telling them where they are bound to go if they do not repent and believe as they do. I am some like Syphers, don't ask them to believe as I do, but they believe the Bible which says "believe or be damned." I should think they would be discouraged. If God is here in the place I suppose the devil must be here also, for they go hand in hand. For my part give me the devil for my guide before such an angry God as the Bible represents him to be, flying into a passion at the least offense and killing thousands. But I think Paul must be mistaken, for we read in Genesis, 32d chapter, that Jacob saw God face to face, and here is one thing that contradicts that, 1st John, chapter iv., "No man hath seen God at any time." If they do not believe it let them turn to these chapters and read for themselves. There are a few more they can read, Kings, 2, 11.; Ezekiel, 4; Daniel, 3 and 4, and see if the truth is told in that chapter, the 5th of James, where Christ preached on temperance. We have persons here in this place who say they believe the Bible to be true; who believe in a personal God, but they go on in their sins, and commit many every day. If they should die where oh where would they go to according to their belief. Perhaps they intend to get in at the eleventh hour. I do not think men can live very comfortable lives and believe when they die that they are going where they will burn forever and ever and never try to repent. A few here in this place saw that extract from my letter which you published last week, and they are making quite a stir about it. I heard they were going to take up a subscription to buy me a box to carry my tracts in. I hope they will, but I do not think I shall want it for I can't keep them long enough to put them in a box. I wish you could have R. G. Ingersoll or D. M. Bennett to talk to the people of this place a few nights, to let them know that Freethought is increasing in this country, and have some one make them comprehend the meaning of the immortal words of Thomas Paine: "The world is my country, to do good my religion." Since beginning this letter I have received my box. Oh, I wish you could see it. It is a little the meanest box you ever saw; a fair sample of those who sent it, but I would not disgrace a tract by putting it in such a box. They did not tell the truth about it, for I'll bet my last dollar they never paid a cent for it. You don't know how much superstition there is here. We have got two subscribers and expect two more. There is more excitement here now than we ever had before. We have got them so that they are brushing the dust off their Bibles and commencing to read them, and we hope they will continue to do so. I hope there will be more take THE TRUTH SEEKER, so that they will not have to borrow it and then make fun of the truth. But—

"The truth shall ever come uppermost, And justice shall be done."
We have sent for three copies of Bro. Syphers' Agitator, and hope you both will meet the success you so much merit.

Special Notices.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygienic Home is a Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

A YOUNG MAN, of twenty-five, a Freethinker, wishes to correspond with Liberal young lady. Object, mutual improvement and amusement. Address, "Nom de guerre" care of TRUTH SEEKER.

WANTED.—A young man of liberal mind wants to correspond with an Infidel or Atheist lady. A strong-minded and strong-bodied woman, not under twenty nor above twenty-five years of age. Address "The Man who Laughs," Box 22, Seymour, Wis. 1t

WANTED.—AN EXPERIENCED NURSE and house-keeper with approved morals, active, intelligent, and of sufficient age to give character to a Hygienic Institute. Would prefer a lady wishing treatment and board for impaired health, with a view to the position after it is restored. Address J. S. Lyons, M. D., Springfield, Mo.

DR. J. W. PALMER, formerly of Manchester Hospital, London, England, cures Catarrh, Throat Affection, Bronchitis, and Consumption. Also, a speedy cure for Opium and Morphine Habits, and a Desire for Strong Drink. Price for medicines for any of the above $5.00. A certain Cure for Tobacco Using $1.00, all by mail. Send money at my risk. Address, Dr. J. W. PALMER, Cleveland, Ohio. 417*

CORRESPONDENCE WANTED.—A young man in good physical and intellectual health wishes to engage in correspondence with rationalistic young ladies in a similar healthy condition, between twenty and twenty-five years of age. Defenders of their sex, advocates of Freethought, and those willing to be active co-workers in the reforms of the present and future, especially those pertaining to the vital interests of their sex, preferred. Address PHILLIP G. CENNON, 5t Minneapolis, Minn.

To The Afflicted Everywhere.

If you are sick and wish to procure the services of a reliable and skillful physician, it would be well to write to Dr. R. E. Fellows, whose charges will not exceed from $5 to $12 for a thorough treatment of the Head, Throat, Lungs, Heart, Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, Bladder, Bowels, Womb, Genital Organs, or Rheumatic or Neuralgic Difficulties, or Eruptions of the skin, Blood Impurities, Tumors, Cancers, or any Nervous Affections, or Diseases of the Eye or Ear. The Doctor's warranted cure for Spermatorrhoea should be in the hands of those suffering from this life-wasting disease. It is an external application, and has made 800 permanent cures. Address Vineland, N. J.

Payne's Sunday Press.

SETH WILBUR PAYNE, Editor.

Conceded to be one of the most entertaining weeklies published in America. Fresh, lively, and sparkling. Every line original. Choice stories and sketches, bright, terse, and lively editorials on subjects of interest to both young and old, the gay and the sad, the rich and the poor. Any one may order it for one, two or three months at the rate of ten cents per month, postage free. Address PAYNE'S SUNDAY PRESS, JERSEY CITY, N. J. 3m06

WINTER'S

WONDERFUL HAIR RESTORER

is now offered to the people in the form of a recipe, sent post-paid to any address for $1.00. It is made of simple ingredients. No sulphur. No sugar of lead, nor any other poisonous substance. Restores faded, dry, harsh, and falling hair to softness and natural color. Restores hair to the prematurely bald-headed where all other hair restoratives have failed. Removes all unpleasant irritation, itching, and scaly dandruff. Three Reasons why every one who has lost or is losing their hair should buy this valuable HAIR RESTORATIVE RECIPE. Firstly, it is the best and most successful hair restorative ever discovered. Secondly, it contains no poisonous substances. Thirdly, Every purchaser of this Wonderful Hair Restorative Recipe can make his own remedy at trifling cost. Address J. C. WINTERS, CINCINNATI, Ohio. 3m06

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLELT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1760

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

Save Doctor's Bills!

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

Sexual Physiology.....$2.00
Mother's Hygienic Hand-book..... 1.25
Health and Diseases of Women..... 24
Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses.. 50
Send for a catalogue.

R. T. TRALL, M.D.,

Room 1, Science Hall,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Chronic Diseases of Both Sexes

INHERITED OR ACQUIRED, A SPECIALTY.

Twenty-five years' experience justifies the undersigned in offering his medical services to those afflicted, of both sexes, who, before they resign themselves as incurable, are sincerely invited to consult.

Dr. T. R. KINGET,

Of 125 East Thirtieth street, N. Y., and to send for his large pamphlet, 32 pages, "MEDICAL GOOD SENSE," mailed free on receipt of stamp, also for his "QUESTIONS FOR INVALIDS." The medical fees, to suit the times, are moderate. The Doctor has been eminently successful in the treatment of diseases affecting the Head and Throat, the Heart and Lungs, diseases of Liver, Stomach, Bladder, Kidneys, and Bowels; also, diseases of the womb and generative organs of both sexes.

Dr. Kinget's warranted treatment of SEMINAL WEAKNESS and IMPOTENCE has effected over 1,000 permanent cures within twelve months. Offices, MANHATTAN MEDICAL INSTITUTE, 125 East 13th street, N. Y., and HOME FOR INVALIDS, Manassas, Va. Office hours from 9 till 12 A. M., and from 2 till 8 P. M.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319 6th Ave., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters P. O. Box 4829 New York City. 171

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.	F. E. Abbot.
Paine's Monument.	Frothingham.
Paine's Bust.	Wendell Phillips.
Voltaire.	Emerson.
Rousseau.	Garrison.
Humboldt.	Henry Bergh.
Goethe.	Peter Cooper.
Schiller.	D. R. Burt.
Aug. Comte.	S. P. Andrews.
Heine.	Walt Whitman.
Alex. Pope.	Froude.
John Milton.	Max Muller.
Goldsmith.	Warren Chase.
Shelley.	Jas. Parson.
Byron.	Wm. Denton.
Burns.	Dr. Slade.
Washington.	A. J. Davis.
Franklin.	Foster.
Jefferson.	J. M. Peebles.
John Adams.	Frances Wright.
J. Q. Adams.	E. Y. Wilson.
Madison.	G. L. Henderson.
Jackson.	Prof. Fiske.
Lincoln.	Fred Douglas.
Lincoln's Monument.	N. P. Banks.
Gerrit Smith.	P. V. Nasby.
Henry C. Wright.	Beecher.
J. S. Mill.	Tilton.
Sumner.	Moulton.
Edgar A. Poe.	G. W. Curtis.
Greely.	Th. Nast.
Castellar.	J. G. Bennett.
Tennyson.	Chas. A. Dana.
Darwin.	Foote Carey.
Tyndall.	Alice Carey.
H. Spencer.	Elizabeth C. Stanton.
Huxley.	Susan B. Anthony.
Proctor.	Lucy Stone.
Draper.	Julia Ward Howe.
Bradlaugh.	Chas. Cheney.
Holyoake.	Paulina Davis.
Ingersoll.	Mary F. Davis.
Underwood.	Emma H. Britten.
Mendum.	Lizzie Fowler.
Seaver.	Mrs. Slanker.
L. Colby.	Susan H. Wixon.
Dr. Hare.	D. M. Bennett.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc. at 20 cents each singly, or six for one dollar.

Neat Albums, by mail, holding 30 photos., 80 cts., holding 50, $1.
D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

STUDYING THE BIBLE,

OR

BRIEF CRITICISMS ON SOME OF THE PRINCIPAL SCRIPTURE TEXTS.

By MRS. ELMINA D. SLENKER,
Author of "John's Way."

This is a very spicy, readable book. Price 75 cents, free of postage.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY. By R. T. TRALL, M.D. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. 25,000 copies of this work have been sold. Finely illustrated, and a very important work. Price, $2.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"

In paper, 80 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

THE NEW RAVEN.

A POEM BY WILL COOPER.

Published in THE TRUTH SEEKER under the title of "Plymouth Cantos, from a Bible Standpoint." This Poem has attracted marked attention, and is considered the sharpest thing that has appeared for a long time.

PRICE ONLY TEN CENTS.

MONKS, POPEs, and their Political Intrigues. By JOHN ALBERGER, containing an interesting history of the Crimes, Corruptions and Vices of the two hundred and ninety-seven Popes that have professed to fill the chair of St. Peter. Price, $1.50.

The Resurrection of Jesus.

A new Lecture by W. S. BELL, of New Bedford, Mass., the able Libera Lecturer. It is an excellent Essay. It costs but ten cents, mailed to any address. Send for a copy. Address

D. M. BENNETT,

SCIENCE HALL, 141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

DR. E. B. FOOTER'S PLAIN HOME TALK, A most valuable work on health and disease, with the most rational modes of treatment. It contains over 900 pages and 300 illustrations. As a work on Hygiene, it has hardly an equal. Price, with a beautiful chromo, $3.25.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Otuttl and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1760

SCOTTISH

WESTERN LOAN CO.,

OF LEROY, MINN.,

Invest Money in first mortgages on improved farms in Iowa and Minnesota. Interest nine per cent annually in advance. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. Send for circulars to G. L. HENDERSON, President, 141 Eighth street, New York. *1716

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First, "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second, "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., New York.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

ALL DISEASES

Diagnosed by Individual Nativity and specially treated in accordance therewith. The time of birth to be given, or as near as may be. Medicines sent post-paid, by mail.

FEE, INCLUDING MEDICINES, $2.

Diseases Treated with Precision, and Scientific Treatment Guaranteed.

Address CHAS. WINTERBURN, M.D.

25 West 26th St., New York.

[We have been personally acquainted with Dr. Winterburn more than fifteen years. We know him to be a gentleman of deep research, wide experience and great reliability. He is very successful in treating diseases of all kinds, and we cheerfully recommend him to the sick and afflicted.—Ed. T. S.]

THE Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-Smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT,

Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine. 11

EVERY LIBERAL WHO, IN THESE TIMES of Revival and Religious Frenzy, wishes to disseminate convincing truth, should send for an assortment of TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS and TRUTH SEEKER LEAFLETS. They present sensible arguments which religious zealots cannot evade. Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

KIDDER'S

SECRETS OF BEE-KEEPING.

One of the most reliable BEE-BOOKS now in use. It touches on over a hundred points pertaining to Bee-Keeping. It is a guide to the Bee-keeper in every department of Bee management. It is gotten up in condensed form, and contains as much matter as any two-dollar book, and yet we propose to sell it at a much less price. Bound, 75 cts.; Paper cover, 50 cts. Postage free. Address, D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

POSITIVELY

$50.00 WORTH OF INFORMATION in form of a nice book of over 100 pages, well illustrated, sent post-paid for $1.00

BY A PRACTICAL CLOSE OBSERVER

How to keep the bees, and hen-roosts free from lice. How to feed to get an abundance of eggs, even in mid winter. How to manage settling hens, chickens, &c., and how to preserve eggs a great length of time. Best breeds of hens, &c. Enclose $1.00 with order.

E. D. BLAKEMAN, Circleville, Ohio.

[Mr. Blakeman is a school-boy friend of ours. We know him well; he is entirely reliable, and the information he has to impart upon the poultry subject is valuable.—Ed. T. S.]

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CRAVEN.

Price, by mail, $1.00. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $3 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 36

FOR NINETY DAYS

FROM THE DATE OF THIS ISSUE OF THIS PAPER

Elegant Table Silverware

Can be secured by all who receive a copy of this week's paper, on compliance with the following conditions.—The Standard Silverware Company, 14 Maiden Lane, New York, manufacturers of Pure Coin-Standard Silver Plated Ware, will send to any one entitled to receive the same a Set of Double Extra-Plated Silver Spoons, and engrave on each spoon any desired Initial. You are required to cut out the following Silverware Coupon and send it to the above Company with your name and address, as a guarantee that the order comes through this paper. You are also required to enclose with your order the nominal charge of seventy-five cents to pay cost of engraving initials, packing, boxing, and express charges. The spoons will be sent by express (or mail, if you have no express office) and delivered in your hands without further cost. As the seventy-five cents barely covers express and engraving charges, the spoons will cost you nothing. These spoons are guaranteed to be of the best material, and sold at retail at from $3.50 to $4 per set, as the following letter from the Standard Silverware Company will testify:

OFFICE STANDARD SILVERWARE COMPANY, 14 Maiden Lane, New York City. To Whom it may Concern.—The Spoons sent out under this arrangement, we guarantee are of best quality, first heavily plated with pure nickel (the hardest white metal known), and a double-extra plate of pure Coin-Standard Silver added on top of the nickel, thus rendering them the very best Silver-plated ware manufactured. In no case will they be sold at retail by us, and cannot be secured from general dealers for less than $3.50 to $4 per set. Our lowest wholesale price is $65 per gross (twelve dozen). We will honor no order which does not contain the Silverware Coupon, and we will not honor the Coupon after ninety days from the date of this paper. (Signed) STANDARD SILVERWARE CO.

SILVERWARE COUPON.

On receipt of this Coupon, together with 75c. to cover express or mailing, engraving, and boxing charges, we hereby agree to send to any address a set of our Pure Coin-Standard, double-extra-plated and on each spoon engrave any desired Initial. All charges are to be prepaid by the 75c. sent in, and the spoons will be delivered at destination free of any other charge. Good for ninety days from date of this paper, after which this Coupon is null and void. (Signed) STANDARD SILVERWARE CO., 14 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

SILVER SPOONS,

Should it be desired, any one of the following articles will be sent in lieu of the spoons, on payment of the following charges: Six solid steel knives, blade and handle one solid piece, best steel, double nickel and silver plated, $2; retail price, $6. Six forks, double nickel and silver plated, 95c.; retail price, $4.50. If all these goods are desired, enclose the total charges, which will be 75c. for spoons, $2 for knives, and 95c. for forks; total, $3.70, thus securing for $3.70 what would cost you $14 in any other way. Remember, under this arrangement each article, except knives, will be engraved with any Initial desired without extra cost.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

By the terms of this contract this liberal arrangement holds good for only ninety days from the date of this paper, therefore it is to the interest of all who are entitled to its benefits to see to it that they are not delayed by reason of the expiration of the time specified. All letters containing silverware should be addressed direct to the STANDARD SILVERWARE CO., 14 Maiden Lane, N. Y. City. Letters containing subscriptions must be sent direct to the office of this paper.

MISFIT CARPETS.

English Brussels, Three-Ply and Ingrain, also, Stair Carpets, Velvet Rugs, Crumb Cloths, Oil Cloths, etc., very cheap at the Old Place, 112 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

Carpets carefully packed and sent to any part of the United States free of charge.

Send for Explanatory Circular.

J. A. BENDALL.

Gems of Thought.

EVERY man is an impossibility until he is born; everything impossible, until we see success.—Emerson.

OF more worth is one honest man to society, and in the sight of God, than all the crowned ruffians that ever lived.—Thomas Paine.

NOT in the sky, not in the sea, not if we enter into the clefts of the mountains, is there known a spot in the whole world where a man might be freed from an evil deed.—From the Hindoo.

I READ Paine's theological works with great pleasure and profit. Indeed, judging him by his writings, he was one of the grandest and best men that ever trod the planet.—Rev. David Swing.

HONOR to the house where they are simple to the verge of hardship, so that there the intellect is awake and reads the laws of the Universe, the soul worships truth and love, and honor and courtesy flow into all deeds.—Emerson.

THE noblest thing on earth is the man who rises to the dignity of self mastery. The man who can refuse indulgence to a clamoring desire, can hold the craving appetite ungratified, and say to the rising passion, "Peace be still!" is a true hero.—Anon.

MORE and more the surges of everlasting nature enter into me, and become human and public in my regards and actions. Through the years and the centuries, through evil agents, through toys and atoms, a great and beneficent tendency irresistibly flows.—Emerson.

HONOR to him who first, "through the impassable paves a road!" Such, indeed, is the task of every great man, nay, of every good man, in one or the other sphere, since goodness is greatness, and the good man, high or humble, is ever a martyr and a spiritual hero that ventures forward into the gulf for our deliverance.—Carlyle.

LET us ever strive to keep fresh in our thoughts the determination that our hearts shall always retain the fresh, warm, pure impulses of youth. To do this, we must have our minds continually growing, growing, growing, so that we shall always be new, and consequently young, cheerful, and happy.—Mrs. E. D. Stenker.

WHEN a woman becomes so far sunk below the level of common sense, her mind gangrened with bigotry and clogged with the rotten fungus of superstition, that she cannot tolerate a book or journal devoted to freethought and scientific truth, she is unfit to become the mother, guardian, and instructor of a generation that is to make its record in the last quarter of the nineteenth century.—A. A. Barnes.

HUMANITY worshiped here cannot extend its domain there—there must still remain for us, outlying this terrestrial sphere, the other sphere named Infinite, into which our eager and aspiring thoughts will wander, carrying with them, as ever, the obedient emotions of love and awe, so that besides the Religion of Humanity, there will be a Religion of the Universe, for man of science will reject with a sneer the subordination of the intellect to the heart, of science to emotion.—Anon.

THOMAS PAINE though misrepresented, denounced, slandered, by the ignorant and bigoted clergy, has furnished the substratum of the best theological thought of modern times. The principles of the "Age of Reason" are embodied in sermons—Orthodox and Radical—all over the country. A Methodist clergyman, to whom he had loaned a copy of the "Age of Reason," said on returning it, "Thomas Paine is the most slandered man that has lived, and I have ignorantly helped to slander him."—Dr. T. A. Bland.

GENERAL laws are atheistical. They say practically, "We are without God in the world—man look to thyself: weak though thou mayest be Nature is thy hope." And even so it is. Would I escape the keen wind's blast, I seek shelter; from the yawning waves, I look up, not to heaven, but to naval architecture. In the fire-damp, Davy is more to me than the Deity of creeds. All Nature cries with one voice, "Science is the Providence of man." Help lies not in priests, not in prayer; it lies in no theories, it is written in no book, it is contained in no theological creed. It lies in science, art, courage, and industry.—George Jacob Holyoake.

SCIENCE, the great iconoclast, has been busy since 1809, and by the highway of progress are the broken images of the past. On every hand the people advance. The Vicar of God has been pushed from the throne of the Caesars, and upon the roof of the Eternal City falls once more the shadow of the Eagle. All has been accomplished by the heroic few. The men of science have explored heaven and earth, and with infinite patience have furnished the facts. The brave thinkers have used them. The gloomy caverns of superstition have been transformed into temples of thought, and the demons of the past are the angels of to-day.—Ingersoll.

WE wonder if the time will ever come—(yes it will come)—when use, which constitutes the employment and happiness of heaven, and the honest effort to be useful, will be the standard of manhood. Conditions are nothing. There are no riches in gold, there is no religion in meeting-houses, there is no philosophy in books, there is no greatness in historical record, that will begin to compare with the true heart of man and the true life of humanity. Our measures are false, our weights are false, our opinions, because in our blindness and prejudice we only see through a glass darkly; but some day the time will come, a man will stand on his manhood, and that will be next to Godhood since it will radiate with the divine whence it emanates and to which it returns, in the perpetual alliance of parent and child.—The Merimac Journal.

Odd and Ends.

ONE of the sweetest things in this world is a sixteen-year-old girl baby.

SOME physicians say that a swing is good for the health. That may be so, but many a poor fellow has come to his death by it.

"No girl gets along well without a mother," says a moral exchange. It is certainly impossible for her to get a start in the world without one.

A WESTERN woman recently fell out of a second-story window and struck on her head. She said she didn't know when anything had made her so mad before.

A VERMONT youth at his mother's funeral said to the neighbors: "Me and my father are obliging to you all, and hope soon to be able to do as much for you."

SUNDAY-SCHOOL teacher—"Why did Pharaoh kill the boy babies of the Hebrews, and not the girls?" Bright boy—"Please, sir, wasn't it because he objected to the Hebrews and not to the She-brews?"

SUITOR—"Well, may I hope, then, that at some future time I may have the happiness of making you my wife?" Charmer—"Yes, I hope so. I'm sure, for I'm getting tired of suing fellows for breach of promise."

LAVENDER's wife said to her husband the other night: "I am afraid you have taken more beer than is good for you." And the unexpected reply was: "Well, I think myself I could have brought it home easier in a jug."

MISS MIDDLEBURY sat down at the piano yesterday afternoon and sang, "Where are the dreams of the dawn?" And her young brother, coming out of an adjoining room from an interview with his father, sobbed out the refrain, "Under the bending willow." And he meant it, too.

"How late may lovers stay?" is the vital question just now. Of course there will be a difference of opinion, but personally we should set the time to leave at about the moment when we became aware that a man out in the back bedroom had arisen, and was tucking his shirt in his pants, and getting on his boots.

WHILE the panorama of life is gridironed, so to speak, with lights and shadows, it is only too true that the serious aspect of things is, to some observers, the most common; and this reminds us that there is nothing more serious than the expression of a man's face while engaged in chasing after his wife's bustle in a high wind.

A LITTLE school girl asked her teacher what was meant by "Mrs. Grundy." The teacher replied that it meant "the world." Some days afterward the teacher asked the geography class to which this little "bud of promise" belonged. "What is a zone?" After some little hesitation, this little girl brightened up and replied: "I know; it's a belt around Mrs. Grundy's waist."

A PROVIDENCE boy went to a birthday party, and describes it as follows: "First, we all had some bread-and-butter; then we had some lemonade, cold enough to freeze us; then we had a piece of birthday cake; then we all had lots of ice-cream, and then we all had the stomach-ache; then we all lay down, and the big girls gave us some peppermint; and then we all went out to play."

GIVING HIM PLENTY OF TIME.—Tom Harvard kept a gun shop at Riverside. Tom was a first-class workman, but distressingly dilatory in the dispatch of business. He would meet his patrons with a positive promise, which he would renew month after month, until at length his shop became an armory of unfinished rifles and fowling pieces.

One day his neighbor Smith, who had suffered repeatedly by Tom's habit of procrastination, entered his shop.

"Tom," said he, "I want you to make a gun for my little boy—a small, well-finished piece, and as light in the barrel as will be consistent with safety."

"Oh, yes," said Tom, "I will make it immediately. You shall have it at once. But, by the way, how old is the boy?"

"Well, as to that," replied Smith, "the boy is not born yet, but I thought I had better get the gun under way."

A TESTIMONIAL WANTED.—They had a quarrel Sunday evening. He got mad and swore he'd leave her. Then she got vexed and told him he could do as he pleased. He left. The next night he came around again. He asked to see her alone. She readily complied. She was all of a tremor. Her heart went out to him in a gush of sympathetic love. She stood ready to throw both her arms about his neck and cry out her joy. There was not much color in his face, and his voice was husky. He said:

"I have been with you six months, Matilda, and I have tried in all that time to do what was right." He paused an instant to recover the voice which was faltering rapidly, while her trembling increased. "I know that I have got considerable temper, and that I do not always control it as I ought. But I have tried to be faithful to you, tried to do everything that I thought would tend to make you happy. And feeling this, I have called to-night to see if you wouldn't be kind enough to give me a sort of testimonial to this effect, so that I could show it to any other young lady I might want to go with. It might help me."

He looked at her anxiously. All the color left her face in a flash. She made a great effort to swallow something which threatened to suffocate her. Then she spoke:

"You get out of this house as quick as you can, you miserable whelp, or my father shall kick you out."

He didn't toy with time. He left without the testimonial.—Danbury News.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Ots.
1.	Discussions on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	2
8.	The Old Snake Story.	2
9.	The Story of the Flood.	2
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	2
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arrangement of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	2
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	For Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snodde. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	10
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. E. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	5
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	2
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	1
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	2
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	2
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	1
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	5
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	5
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	5
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	5
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	2
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Stenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	2
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	5
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 135th Birthday. Bennett.	2
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	2
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Stenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible: Is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	10
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Ball.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Stenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciots.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsborg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	3
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	10
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off. As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

These eight Scientific Tracts are made into a pamphlet of 125 pages, at 20 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

Truth Seeker Leaflets.

Sent, assorted, or as desired, post-paid, at 4 cents per dozen; 25 cents per hundred, or $2 per thousand.

Let them be distributed freely in every town, village and neighborhood. Address, D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth	50
" " with Examination of Prophecies	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27 00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jaccoliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 60 and	1 00
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Shagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Krishna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch. Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diagnosis.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.	1 50
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be thyself, Who is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.	1 75
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols..	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent of Man. (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible, Wright.	35 & 60
Evans' History of all Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Gray's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 1 50
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.	50
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneelands Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Vale.	1 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	501
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	4 40
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts.	3 50
" Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peoples All Around the World.	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	50
" Rights of Man.	2 00
" Theological Works.	2 50
" and Miscellaneous Works.	2 50
" Miscellaneous Writings; Centennial edition.	2 50
" Political Works. 2 Vols., 8vo.	5 00
" Complete Works. 3 Vols., 8vo.	7 00
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen.	60
Synagmia, Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature, D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Stenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Works.	2 00
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols..	12 00
Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols., 8vo.	8 00
Sexual Physiology, Trull.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius VII.	25
Tyndal's (Prof. John) Entire Works.	2 00
The Christ of Paul.	75
The Case against the Church.	2 00
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices, Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers.	4 50
" $3.00, $4.00, and	1 00
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and
IV, 50 cents and	1 00
The Outcast, Winwood Reade.	1 50
Talks with my Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D.	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	40 & 75
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	75
Vestiges of Creation.	1 00
Volney's Ruins.
" New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE
& MORALS

FREE THOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 10. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY } New York, Saturday, March 10, 1877. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 6th St., } $2 per Year.
BY D. M. BENNETT. NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

THE San Francisco Alta confesses that California does not do much praying, yet it is down on its Chi-knees all the time.

DR. PRIME does not approve of humor in the pulpit, and condemns Mr. Moody's jokes. Does not believe in "mixing the Gospel with fun."

THE telephone wonders are attracting very general attention. A few evenings since distinct musical airs were transmitted over the wires from Milwaukee to Chicago, a distance of eighty-five miles.

BAPTIST ministers are now agitating the great question, "Ought women to preach?" The opinion appears to be unfavorable. St. Paul is still regarded sound.

OUR new President has been sworn in twice. It is to be hoped this is not an indication that he is going to pass his term in swearing. He doubtless will feel like swearing many a time.

REV. MR. PARKER of Hartford objects to reading notices from the pulpit, and suggests as an improvement that the choir sing them, and gives a formula for doing the same.

RECORDER HACKETT of the bench in this city is conscious that a great amount of perjury is committed in our courts. He says, "I have never known parents to fail to commit perjury to screen their children."

ONE Jew, four Christians, and five Turks have been chosen to represent Constantinople in the new Turkish Parliament. Russia would permit no such liberality as that in her dominions, even if there were a Russian Parliament.

THE Graphic says: "A hot mince pie will bring a man to repentance when a forty-parson power of exhortation will slip across the surface of his conscience like a puff of tobacco smoke over a glass of Schiedam snaps."

MR. BEECHER's lecture on hard times which he is delivering through the West with immense popularity seems to have a partial reviving effect upon business. He tells them, too, how they can live on small salaries and save a little besides. How much Beecher could tell his audiences if he would give them all he knows.

A CORRESPONDENT at Champaign, Ill., writes us about a pious Mr. R. B. Condit, a star in the Presbyterian Church who has decamped with over $80,000 that belonged to other people, and mostly widows and orphans. He stood high in the Church, and was thought to be an honorable man. It is hard to tell who the good men are until they are proved able to withstand temptation.

MOODY's revival does not seem to prove as successful as his Chicago venture. The attendance is fair but the conversions are scarce. The candidates don't seem to scare as freely as Moody desires. Many people come in from the surrounding towns and the rural districts. As the Boston Times says, "They come full of hayseed and return full of holliness." As a financial success the revival bids fair to prove a failure. Moody, hurry up with your stories about sulphur and blood.

RICHARD A. PROCTOR, writing about the probability of there really being such things as "sea serpents," says it is not likely that naturalists know all the forms of animals that exist in the oceans. He reminds us that the first account of a giraffe was laughed at, that the gorilla was for a long time disbelieved in, and that those who originally described a gigantic cuttlefish were regarded as liars. Mr. Proctor's conclusion is that the stories of "sea serpents," therefore, are not unreasonable.

WE have a President at last. The Electoral Commission decided that Hayes had received a majority of the electoral votes, and he has been duly installed in the office, and as we go to press is busy and full of trouble in selecting his Cabinet. The trouble is, there are so many distinguished men who are willing and anxious to serve their country that it is impossible for Hayes, or any other man, to find places for all. It is to be hoped that good men may be selected, and that the wheels of government may run smoothly and pleasantly. Hayes' inaugural address is widely praised for its mildness, reasonableness and patriotism. It is to be hoped that he will make a good President.

THE Rev. Mr. Putnam, of St. Paul's Episcopal Church of Jersey City, has been charged by his parishioners with spending too much time in trying to feed the poor, whereby he neglects his sermons. They hire their minister to attend to their spiritual welfare, and they do not care whether the physical is looked after or not. What a glorious thing it would be if there were no worse charges to be brought against the clergy of this country than is brought to the door of Mr. Putnam, that of feeding the poor.

METHODIST ministers of this city propose to exclude reporters from ministers' meetings. They evidently do not like the manner in which the Anna Oliver affair has been shown to the world. There are differences of opinion however. One clergyman longs for some plan whereby ministers' meetings may be improved. Another desires that reporters submit their reports to the ministers before carrying them to the newspaper offices. A voice sung out, "The editors of the papers will not allow the ministers to overhaul the reports." So they go.

A FRIEND at Canton, Ill., sends us a full account about an aggravated case of burglary and larceny committed on different occasions by James Young, an active member of the Methodist Church and of the Young Men's Christian Association. He occupied the floor over George Black's grocery-store, and it was discovered that he had on several occasions entered Black's store by means of shoving the bolt of the lock on the back door and robbed the money drawer, as well as taking goods from the shelves. Finally Black and another man quietly waited for the pious brother and caught him in the act of taking money from the drawer. He was sent to jail in default of bail to await trial. Oh! the wickedness of the human heart, when lighted up with the Christian religion.

A PRETTY PICTURE OF HEAVEN.—The Rev. E. R. Keyes of the Swedenborgian church in Jersey City, on last Sunday, in a sermon opposing the idea of no sex in heaven, said: "Men and women appear as men and women in heaven. The same ineffable felicity that exists between lovers here will continue to exist in heaven. Those who would unsex the sexes at death have not duly considered the sources of ennobling enjoyment that are thus denied them. People couldn't endure existence in heaven with sex abolished. We might as well attempt to reproduce the sublime strains of Mozart or Haydn or Beethoven without the harmonious blending of bass and soprano and tenor and contralto, or seek to bring forth from the earth the green grass, the blushing flower, or the fruitful tree without the genial showers and the fructifying light and heat of the sun."

BAD FOR GOD.—So many Republican members of the Ohio Legislature accompanied President Hayes to Washington that the Democrats of that body were left in a majority, and although they were charged by the Speaker to do nothing rash in their absence, on the 1st instant a set of resolutions were introduced and adopted by which among other things, in consideration of the frauds that had been used and sanctioned in declaring Hayes to be elected to the Presidential chair that they had lost all confidence in Almighty God. This is certainly very severe on the individual referred to, and is placing him in a very embarrassing situation. To lose the confidence and respect of the entire Democratic party is no small matter, even on the part of a god. It has been suggested by an incorrigible Republican that the feeling was eminently mutual, for God has had no confidence in the Democrats for a long time. Now we are not so vindictive. We would like to see confidence restored again between these parties, and everything working lovely.

EUGENE CROWELL, M.D., of Brooklyn, has a very interesting article in the Spiritual Scientist of the 1st inst., upon the subject of "Spiritualism and Insanity." He has taken much pains to procure information upon the causes of insanity, the number of subjects, and the exciting causes of insanity in the various asylums of the country. He addressed letters of enquiry to all the institutions of the kind, and received reports from fifty-eight, which he gives in detail. In the entire number of asylums he finds there have been 68,876 patients, of which number 2,000 were ascribed to religious excitement, and 229 to Spiritualism. There are now 80,000 patients, the insanity of 580 of whom is ascribed to religious excitement and 76 to Spiritualism. The proportion of insane patients in the hospitals is 1 in 1,000. It will be seen at once that the proportion of Spiritualists who become insane is remarkably small. They are entitled to a representation in the asylums of the country of 1,333, and all they have towards this number is 76. So it will be seen that Spiritualism is not driving people crazy with the celerity that has been popularly supposed.

PROF. FELIX ADLER lectured last Sunday at Standard Hall on "The Office of the Priest." After telling of the valuable services to mankind of the priests of ancient Greece, he said: "It is a grateful task to recall the services of a class with whose present representatives we have so little sympathy. It is asked how have they degenerated, become oppressors of the people and enemies of liberty everywhere? It is by long and uninterrupted tenure of power too often abused, a power constantly arrogated to themselves. For them God is a king like a human king, having his ceremonials, and they, the priests, are his courtiers; all petitions must pass through them; to them he delegates his authority, they are his lieutenants, governors, viceregents on earth. They are selected, not for merit, but by grace; their follies are clothed with sanctity: with them obstinacy is zeal, stupidity is faith. Observe the Christian priesthood. We know how the power of the early Popes was abused, and how a man, assuming to be a god, became less than a man. With the Reformation there came only a partial reform; the excommunication was retained; the Protestant ministers also assumed to be vicars of Christ. The Jews form an honorable exception; for eighteen centuries they had the sense not to revive the priesthood. Their so-called rabbis were only teachers, and their positions depended upon their merits and ability. Morally speaking, the office of priest is no less perilous to the community than to the persons who fill it. The barest, emptiest pulpit harangue passes unchallenged in church if accompanied by a few quotations, and set to the regulation jingle. Hear them: 'In God's name I command you!' In the name of Heaven I forbid you!'—as if the whole Universe rested upon their shoulders! Poor, puny babblers!"

THE Times, in commenting on a recent sermon of the Rev. Mr. Talmage on insurance, uses the following remarks: "Litho and agile as are the legs of Mr. Talmage, his warmest admirer must concede that they are not successful in drawing comparisons. While in many respects they are the peers of the best circus and ballet legs, they cannot trace an analogy correctly. This, however, is not strange; we must not require perfection of anything human. When Mr. Talmage throws one leg over the pulpit he readily concedes its brilliancy and grace, and when he waves both legs in the air, we are melted by their irresistible pathos. A pair of legs characterized by brilliancy, wit, pathos, and eloquence should not be aspersed because they are lacking in some other quality. Were Talmage absolutely perfect in all respects, he would be a cherub with legs—a variety of cherub totally unknown to theologians or painters. When Mr. Talmage called Joseph 'the President of the first life insurance company the world ever saw,' he failed to perceive the true nature of Joseph's corn operation. It is, perhaps, requiring too much to ask that every Brooklyn minister should thoroughly appreciate Joseph's character, but there is really no excuse for misunderstanding his course in buying corn when the market was overstocked. That able Hebrew was the first financier on record who ever made a 'corner.' He bought enormous quantities of corn, which he held 'for a rise,' and when the years of famine arrived he was the only man in Egypt who had corn to sell. This operation presents itself to Mr. Talmage's legs as precisely analogous to the ordinary business of a life insurance company. But let us be patient. Perhaps Mr. Talmage did not charge Joseph with being connected with life insurance companies out of personal malice. He may simply have desired to propitiate a Brooklyn audience by attacking the virtuous patriarch, and may have excused himself by reflecting that Joseph is dead to such an immense extent that he cannot be injured now by any libelous charge.

Events of the Week.

THE potters of this city are on a strike.

Two hundred bricklayers are on a strike in Brooklyn.

ANOTHER insurance company has gone up. The Bangor Fire.

THE past week has mostly been pleasant. One rainy day and some high winds.

A NEW horse disease has broken out in Brooklyn which is proving fatal with numbers of horses.

A KEROSENE lamp exploded in Hackensack, N. J., on Monday night, by which two ladies were so badly burned that they died.

HEAVY and disastrous gales have prevailed off the British and French coasts. The Herald is laying considerable claim to having accurately predicted them.

JOHN BRADLEY, a discouraged bookkeeper, out of work and out of money, ended his life by Paris green. He died hard. It is not a good material to finish off with.

ABRAHAM WANNIKEN, aged sixty years, in Jersey City, suicided by shooting himself through the head. Out of health and out of money; perhaps he could not do better.

JOSEPH COBURN, the notorious pugilist, has had his trial for shooting two policemen when they were trying to arrest him, and has been sentenced to hard labor in Sing Sing prison for ten years. Stern justice!

A MOST destructive fire visited Nos. 1, 3, 5, and 7, Bond street in this city on the night of the 6th. Four tall and stately fire proof buildings were brought low. Several very extensive manufacturers of jewelry, watches, surgical, optical and philosophical instruments were burned out. The losses aggregate fully $1,000,000. Several firemen and insurance patrolmen were injured.

A MYSTERIOUS case of a young woman, Amelia Parker, in Brooklyn has come to light, whose throat was cut because she persistently refused to marry Carpenter Beebe. Upon being refused, he seized her and cut her throat to the windpipe, and she fell to the floor. He carried her to a drug store and had her throat dressed, and she is likely to recover. He escaped to New Jersey but has been arrested.

PROF. HENRY, of the Smithsonian Institute, has received a telegram from Prof. Foerster, Director of the Berlin University, saying: "A new planet was found by Paliser on March 2d; eleventh magnitude; possibly Camilla." Leverrier, the French astronomer, is again after Vulcan, and calls upon his brethren to watch for the truant. Possibly Vulcan and the newly discovered planet may be the same.

WE are able to state that our friend, Prof. Wm. Falke, who recently died in Cincinnati, did not commit suicide. There was no reason for doing so. He was pleasantly situated; was getting a remunerative salary, and his surroundings were agreeable. He had been busily occupied and was sleepless; to induce slumber he resorted to chloroform as was his wont, and he doubtless used a little too much. He did not intend suicide.

GREAT excitement is prevailing at Bradford, Pa., and vicinity, over the discoveries of petroleum that have recently been made there. Some fourteen years ago Job Moses (an old friend of ours by the by) went to that locality according to current reports, by those who know, upon statements made by the spirits or "mediums" that oil abounded there. He commenced boring wells, but found no oil. Geologists and scientists and others laughed at him and assured him there was no oil there. Everybody called Moses crazy, but he kept on putting down wells. The amusement was an expensive one, and thousands upon thousands of dollars were consumed. Thus a handsome fortune was used up, and no oil found. Still he was confident he would find oil, and he was successful in inducing some capitalists to join him. At length oil was struck at a depth of 1,100 feet, and since then numerous wells have been put down, and 2,000 barrels of oil are produced per day. Moses is now making $500 per day, and is no longer regarded as crazy. Towns and villages are springing up in the vicinity as by magic. Land has advanced from nothing to $1,000 per acre. Great is petroleum!

Science and the Arts.

Is America the New World?—Continued.

BY L. L. DAWSON, CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.

In corroboration of the foregoing I quote from another work a description of a religion which in circumstances and theory is parallel to the Protestant religion of the present time, and the teaching of the Bible, but which preceded the Christian Era many hundreds of years. "Historical authority, relative to the crucifixion of the Mexican god, Quexalcote, and his execution upon the cross, 587, B. C., as a propitiatory sacrifice for the sins of mankind, is explicit, unequivocal, and ineffaceable. The evidence is tangible, and indelibly engraven upon steel and metal plates. One of these plates represents him as having been crucified on a mountain; another represents him as having been crucified in the heavens, as St. Justin tells us Christ was. According to another writer, he is sometimes represented as having been nailed to a cross, and by other accounts as hanging with a cross in his hand. The Mexican antiquities (vol. vi., p. 166) says, Quexalcote is represented in the paintings of 'Codex Borgianus' as nailed to the cross. 'Sometimes two thieves are represented as having been crucified with him. That the advent of this crucified Savior and Mexican god was long anterior to the era of Christ is admitted by Christian writers. In the work above mentioned, 'Codex Borgianus,' may be found the account, not only of his crucifixion, but of his death, burial, descent into hell, and resurrection on the third day. And another work, entitled 'Codex Vaticanus,' contains the story of his immaculate birth by a virgin mother. Many other incidents are found related of him in his sacred biography, in which we find the most striking counterparts to the more modern gospel story of Jesus Christ, such as his forty days' temptation and fasting, his riding on an ass, his purification in the temple, his baptism and regeneration by water, his forgiving of sins, being anointed with oil, etc. (Graves. The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors, pp. 109, 110).

Again I quote: "The well-authenticated story of Quexalcote of Mexico, which the Rev. Mr. Maurice concedes to be, and Lord Kingsborough and Niebuhr (in his history of Rome) prove to be much older than the Gospel account of Jesus Christ. According to Maurice's 'Indian Antiquities,' Humboldt's 'Researches in Mexico,' Lord Kingsborough's 'Mexican Antiquities,' and other works, the incarnate god, Quexalcote, was born of a spotless virgin, and led a life of the deepest humility and piety, retired to a wilderness, fasted forty days, was worshiped as a god, and was finally crucified between two thieves; after which he was buried and descended into hell, but rose again the third day. The following is a part of Lord Kingsborough's testimony in the case: 'The temptation of Quexalcote, the fast of forty days ordained by the Mexican ritual, the cup with which he was presented to drink (on the cross), the reed which was his sign, the 'Morning Star,' which he is designated, the 'Tecupal or Divine Stone,' which was laid on his altar, and which was likewise an object of adoration. All of these circumstances, connected with many others relating to Quexalcote of Mexico are very curious and mysterious' (Vol. vi., p. 237 of Mexican Antiquities. Graves. The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors, p. 325). 'The ancient Mexicans were in the habit of baptizing their infants soon after they were born' (Ibid., p. 168).

From Inman's 'Ancient Symbols' I quote the following: "The tree and serpent are common emblems, and have been found in Indian temples in Central America" (p. 55). In copies of sculptures in Palanque "one is a tree whose trunk is surrounded by a serpent" (p. 12). Another is a man and woman standing before a cross, proportioned like the conventional one in use among Christians (p. 13). Also that "The virgin and child are to be found even in ancient Mexico" (p. 76).

Another writer says: "The Exodus of the Israelites is so wonderfully similar to the Exodus of the people of Mexico, that if you had not previously suspected me of drawing some other picture, you would have felt, assuredly, that it was none other than the Exodus of the Mexicans that had been the original. It will not be pretended, I hope, that the inhabitants of Mexico, who before their invasion by the Spaniards, Pizarro and Cortez, had not heard of the existence of either Jew or Christian, could have borrowed their theology from our Hebrew Pentateuch. Yet is their Masi, the founder of their race, the perfect counterpart of the Hebrew Moses; and their Supreme God, the adorable Viteyiputzli, the very fac simile of Jehovah" (Taylor. Astronomical-Theological Lectures, pp. 123, 124).

Another writer says: "Mrs Simon, a learned authoress, has labored to prove that the Indians of America are the ten lost tribes of Israel. She proves that the ceremonials of the Indians and Hebrews are identical; that the Indians have among them the cross; that among those most ancient ruins of Central America a cross has been found with a crucified man sculptured upon it; that the Indians circumcise; have a sacred chest similar to the ark of the covenant, and that the fragmentary ceremonies remaining among them are so strictly in accordance with the Jewish, that they must owe their origin to them. In her account of the crucified man she proves entirely too much for her hypothesis; for these ruins are confessedly older than the Christian era, and pointing to a period more ancient than the dispersion of Israel" (G. C. Stewart. The Hierophant, pp. 101, 102).

From another writer I quote as follows: "In the early history of this country, the Spanish conquerors of Central America found the cross engraven on the walls of Mexican temples; which form of worship was probably derived from the ancient Toltecs" (Craven. Christianity Before the time of Christ, p. 9).

From another writer I quote as follows: "The Spanish conquerors were surprised beyond measure at the beholding of the cross—the symbol of their own worship—usually adored in Mexico. It was sculptured on the walls of the temple" (Hull. Christianity, its Origin, Nature, and Tendency Considered in the Light of Astro-Theology, p. 24).

The only inference we can draw from the foregoing historical quotations is that thousands of years ago the people of Mexico and Central America were not heathens, but were civilized if not very much enlightened.

Figuer speaks highly of the ancient Mexicans and Peruvians, and admits the possibility of their having at one time excelled us in enlightenment. I quote as follows: "The Chinese were civilized long before the inhabitants of Europe. Egyptian civilization dates back to at least 4,000 years before Christ, as is proved by the magnificent statue of Ghafreli, which belongs to that period, and which, since it is composed of granite, can only have been cut by the aid of iron and steel tools, in themselves indications of an advanced form of industry. This last consideration should make us feel modest; it shows that nations which we now crush by our intellectual superiority, the Chinese and the Egyptians, perhaps also the old inhabitants of Mexico and Peru, were once far before us in the path of civilization" (Human Race, pp. 36, 37).

He also says: "In America, just as in Europe, a great number of specimens of prehistoric pottery have been collected. They are, it must be confessed, superior to most of those found in the ancient world. The material of which they were made is very fine; the shapes of the vessels are of the purest character, and the utmost care has been devoted to their workmanship" (Primitive Man, p. 337).

Professor Gunning says: "It is a law which holds in natural history that a species of wide geographical range is of ancient type; the same law should apply to features. The slanting eye is found in the South American Indian and the Chinaman" (Lecture in Chicago, Feb. 13, 1876). Figuer, in his work, "The Human Race," illustrates the South American Indian and the Chinaman with slanting eyes.

It is evident from the foregoing that we must admit a great antiquity since the first appearance of man on the American continent, no doubt antedating all accepted chronology.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Doctrine of Filiation, or Descent-Theory.

BY PROF. ERNST HAECKEL.—CONTINUED.

CHAPTER V.—CONTINUED.

ARTIFICIAL AND NATURAL SELECTION.

Both natural and artificial selection are quite simple natural, mechanical relations of life, which depend upon the interaction of two physiological functions, namely, on Adaptation and Inheritance, functions which, as such, must again be traced to physical and chemical properties of organic matter. The difference between the two forms of selection consists in this; in artificial selection the will of man makes the selection according to a plan, whereas in natural selection, the struggle for life (that universal inter-relation of organisms) acts without a plan, but otherwise produces quite the same result, namely, a selection of a particular kind of individuals for propagation. The alterations produced by artificial selection are turned to the advantage of those who make the selection; in natural selection, on the other hand, to the advantage of the selected organism.

These are the most essential differences and agreements of the two modes of selection; it must, however, be further observed that there is another difference, viz., in the duration of time required for the two processes of selection. Man in his artificial selection can produce very important changes in a very short time, while, in natural selection similar results are obtained only after a much longer time. This arises from the fact that man can make his selection with much greater care. Man is able with the greatest nicety to pick out individuals from a large number, drop the others, and to employ only the privileged beings for propagation, which is not the case in natural selection. In natural conditions, besides the privileged individuals which first succeed in propagating themselves, some few or many of the less distinguished individuals will propagate themselves by the side of the former. Moreover, man can prevent the crossing of the original and the new form, which in natural selection is often unavoidable. If such a crossing, that is, a sexual connection, of the new variety with the original forms takes place, the offspring thereby produced generally returns to the original character. In natural selection, such a crossing can be avoided only when the new variety by migration separates from the original and isolates itself.

Natural selection therefore acts much more slowly; it requires much longer periods than the artificial process of selection. But it is an essential consequence of this difference, that the product of artificial selection disappears much more easily, and that the new form returns rapidly to the earlier one, which is not the case in natural selection. The new species arising from natural selection maintain themselves much more permanently, and return much less easily to the original form, than is the case with products of artificial selection, and accordingly maintain themselves during a much longer time than the artificial races produced by man. But these are only subordinate differences, which are explained by the different conditions of natural and artificial selection, and in reality are connected only with differences in the duration of time. The nature of the transformation and the means by which it is produced are entirely the same in both artificial and natural selection. (Gen. Morph. ii. 248.)

NECESSARY EFFICIENCY OF NATURAL SELECTION.

The thoughtless and narrow-minded opponents of Darwin are never tired of asserting that his theory of selection is a groundless conjecture, or at least an hypothesis which has yet to be proved. That this assertion is completely unfounded, may be perceived even from the outlines of the doctrine of selection which have just been discussed. Darwin assumes no kind of unknown forces of nature, nor hypothetical conditions, as the acting causes for the transformation of organic forms, but solely and simply the universally recognized vital activities of all organisms, which we term Inheritance and Adaptation. Every naturalist acquainted with physiology knows that these two phenomena are directly connected with the functions of propagation and nutrition, and, like all other phenomena of life, are purely mechanical processes of nature, that is, they depend upon the molecular phenomena of motion in organic matter. That the interaction of these two functions effect a continual, slow transmutation of organic forms, is a necessary result of the struggle for existence. But this, again, is no more a hypothetical relation, nor one requiring a proof, than is the interaction of Inheritance and Adaptation. The struggle for life is a mathematical necessity, arising from the disproportion between the limited number of places in nature's household, and the excessive number of organic germs. The origin of new species is moreover greatly favored by the active or passive migrations of animals and plants, which takes place everywhere and at all times, without being, however, entitled to rank as necessary agents in the process of natural selection.

The origin of new species by natural selection, or, what is the same thing, by the interaction of Inheritance and Adaptation in the struggle for life is therefore a mathematical necessity of nature which needs no further proof. Whoever, in spite of the present state of our knowledge, still seeks for proofs for the Theory of Selection, only shows that he either does not thoroughly understand the theory, or is not sufficiently acquainted with the biological facts—has not the requisite amount of experimental knowledge in Anthropology, Zoology, and Botany.

If, as we maintain, natural selection is the great active cause which has produced the whole wonderful variety of organic life on the earth, all the interesting phenomena of human life must also be explicable from the same cause. For man is after all only a most highly-developed vertebrate animal, and all aspects of human life have their parallels, or, more correctly, their lower stages of development in the animal kingdom. The whole history of nations, or what is called "Universal History," must therefore be explicable by means of "natural selection,"—must be a physico-chemical process, depending upon the interaction of Adaptation and Inheritance in the struggle for life. And this is actually the case. We shall give further proofs of this later on.

It appears of interest here to remark that not only natural selection, but also artificial selection exercises its influence in many ways in universal history. A remarkable instance of artificial selection in man, on a great scale, is furnished by the ancient Spartans, among whom, in obedience to a special law, all newly-born children were subject to a careful examination and selection. All those that were weak, sickly, or affected with any bodily infirmity, were killed. Only the perfectly healthy and strong children were allowed to live, and they alone afterwards propagated the race. By this means, the Spartan race was not only continually preserved in excellent strength and vigor, but the perfection of their bodies increased with every generation. No doubt the Spartans owed their rare degree of masculine strength and rough heroic valor (for which they are eminent in ancient history) in a great measure to this artificial selection.

MILITARY SELECTION.

Many tribes also among the Red Indians of North America (who at present are succumbing in the struggle for life to the superior numbers of the white intruders, in spite of a most heroic and courageous resistance) owe their rare degree of bodily strength and warlike bravery to a similar careful selection of the newly-born children. Among them, also, all children that are weak or affected with any infirmity are immediately killed, and only the perfectly strong individuals remain in life and propagate the race. That the race becomes greatly strengthened, in the course of very many generations, by this artificial selection cannot in itself be doubted, and is sufficiently proved by many well-known facts.

The opposite of this artificial selection of the wild Redskins and the ancient Spartans is seen in the individual selection which is universally practiced in our modern military states, for the purpose of maintaining standing armies, and which, under the name of military selection, we may conveniently consider as a special form of selection. Unfortunately in our day, militarism is more than ever prominent in our so-called "civilization"; all the strength and all the wealth of flourishing civilized states are squandered on its development; whereas the education of the young, and public instruction, which are the foundations of the true welfare of nations and the ennobling of humanity, are neglected and mismanaged in a most pitiable manner. And this is done in states which believe themselves to be the privileged leaders of the highest human intelligence, and stand at the head of civilization. As is well known, in order to increase the standing army as much as possible, all healthy and strong young men are annually selected by a strict system of recruiting. The stronger, healthier, and more spirited a youth is, the greater is his prospect of being killed by needle-guns, cannons, and other similar instruments of civilization. All youths that are unhealthy, weak, or affected with infirmities, on the other hand, are spared by "military selection," and remain at home during the war, marry, and propagate themselves. The more useless, the weaker, or infirmer the youth is, the greater is his prospect of escaping the recruiting officer, and of founding a family. While the healthy flower of youth dies on the battle-field, the feeble remainder enjoy the satisfaction of reproduction and of transmitting all their weaknesses and infirmities to their descendants. According to the laws of transmission by inheritance, there must necessarily follow in each succeeding generation, not only a further extension, but also a more deeply-seated development of weakness of body, and what is inseparable from it, a condition of mental weakness also. This and other forms of artificial selection practiced in our civilized states sufficiently explain the sad fact that, in reality, weakness of the body and weakness of character are on the perpetual increase among civilized nations, and that, together with strong, healthy bodies, free and independent spirits are becoming more and more scarce.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Evolution of Israel's God.—Concluded.

BY A. L. RAWSON.

The age before that of Alexander the Great's invasion was one of tradition only, in which the native tribes of Phœnicia and the hills of Samaria and of Judea contended with each other for the supremacy, the northern tribe of Ephron succeeding earliest in building up a kingdom; the southern tribe of Judah becoming its rival some time later. The early age was pictured by the scribes and poets as the golden age, in which heroes, kings, prophets, and sages lived long lives, honored by the people and favored by God. The actions or lives of these ancient mythical personages are symbols of the Jewish ideas of God, the nation and religion. The teaching in the schools was allegorical and mysterious, which has been misunderstood and rationalized by late teachers. Noah the man of rest has been elevated into an actual Noah, a man. The Egyptian mysteries were the source of both the Hebrew and the Greek symbolism, and by them we can reestablish the Hebrew original sense and simplify the interpretation of the obscure passages. Peter says (1. P. iii. 20, 21) Noah was a type of baptism in water as Jesus was of the baptism in blood, by which a haven of rest is formed. Paul says the exodus or passing through the Red Sea was a baptism. (1 Cor. x. i.) The 600 years of the Patriarchs to the exodus are the term of the life of Noah to the flood. The 40 days of Genesis vii. 12, are the forty years in the wilderness; the interval between the first and the second flight of the dove is that between Joshua and Samuel; the second flight of the bird of peace indicates the time from Samuel to David; the third flight ends at Solomon who is the true Noah or man of rest and peace, who located the Jewish symbols in a fixed place, and founded the theocracy. The day on which Solomon's Temple is dedicated is the 17th day of the seventh month (1 Kings, viii. 2), which is the date of Noah's rest on the mountain (Gen. viii. 4), in the same month (Ethaniam—two months of rains) was celebrated the feast of the Tabernacle which commemorated the restless wanderings of the people in Moab and out of Arabia. The identity of Solomon and Noah, in the mythical schemes is further shown in their names Noah (Hebrew noach) and that the title given to Solomon by David (1 Chr. xxii. 7-9), of a man of rest (Hebrew menuchah). The Hebrew shows the coincidence in the letters more closely than the English, but the idea of rest in each case is identical. The rainbow of Noah is a pledge of God's presence with his true servants, the same rainbow symbol Jacob saw at Bethel or Peniel (God face to face), and the same promise of presence is repeated at the dedication of Solomon's Temple as also in Deuteronomy (xii. 12). There are other aspects of the case, but enough has been shown to enable us to perceive that the Noah story refers to that "rest which remaineth to the people of God" (Heb. iv. 6), and that rest is attained by faith, and the ground on which that faith stands is the intuition of the Jew. However satisfactory that "inner consciousness" might have been to the Hebrews, it is not so to us in this age of scientific inquiry. A fact or a faith that is unsustained by the results of any and all tests possible is no fact and no faith worth notice, and all such will receive less and less notice as often as men discover their emptiness.

The Jews attempted to plant a state among the hills of Palestine, on the theocratic idea; having from certain known attributes of man assumed them as the divine attributes, and located them outside of man, in the heavens, far beyond his reach except through the mediation of the priest. Humanity has been made aware of this robbery during the present half century, and is slowly but surely regaining its lost treasures. True humanity which is Godlike is the proper character of man, and is possible to the whole race. This is the truth as opposed to the erroneous supposition that mankind are totally depraved and morally dead.

The Jews despised all nations outside of their little family of Hebrews, and were not very good friends with their relatives in that family. The Gentiles were cursed with ignorance and the neglect of God in their estimation. And this opinion was held by them in spite of the magnificent art works which beautified the known world, not one thought or stroke of which originated with the Jews. The five arts are the highest known means of expressing our feeling, sentiments, knowledge, both of nature seen and unseen, and the Hebrews are acquainted with only music and poetry. These two answer all the demands of their intuitive souls, and while they gratify and charm still they are not sufficient to reflect the whole broad expanse of the Universe without and within. They despised and prohibited sculptures and painting and neglected architecture, and did not cultivate science. Yes, there are exceptions. They cultivated the science of occult numbers, and of double meanings of sentences, words, letters, of the letter and spirit of the allegories, and the art of writing history backwards. But science in its true sense of dealing with real things they knew nothing about.

We may therefore conclude that so far as an intuitive knowledge of an assumed divine being could answer the Hebrews had many vague ideas of God, but of the real God of this Universe, the all in all of the exterior and of the interior Universe they could not possibly have had any clear notion nor definite idea.

THE END.

Letter from John Syphers.

LOCKPORT, ILL.

DEAR BROTHER BENNETT: I have just snatched up my pencil to send you a little echo from the West; from the plains of Illinois, the beautiful prairie State; although she's young, but yet she's great, for all her people love to Agitate. As to the weather, the lovely Miss Spring sat down (accidentally I suppose) in the lap of old King Winter, nearly a month ago. We were all suspicious that she was a little too fast, and our suspicions were realized, for last night he kicked her from his lap and treated us to another little gift of his beautiful snow. But then, by and by, he will want to linger in the lap of Miss Spring—she can then get even with him by treating him to a little dose of ditto, or tit for tat.

Everybody is sick of political agitation, out this way. They ask me if I am not going to give them a little agitation of a different kind. I tell them, that is just what I am going to do. Our printing-office begins to look like business; two presses in position, and worlds of type coming on—nonpareil, agate, diamond, little pica, long primer, short primer, and piles of great wooden type that I don't know the name of, but think it's "bulldozers."

We intend to throw some humor into our agitations on religious subjects, for they have always been discussed with too long a face.

But those whom I ask to become my patrons and subscribers have a right to ask who I am, what I am, and where I was educated.

As to who I am—some call me John the Baptist; some, John the Divine; some, John the Agitator; some, John the Mysterious; some, John the Good-humored Jolly Joker; but I call myself simply John Syphers.

As to what I look like, you must gaze upon my picture at the head of my Agitator, and determine for yourself.

As to where I was educated, I would simply say that I graduated in the great university of the Universe. I have a life-time scholarship in that institution, and I never expect to complete my studies.

As to the cot where I was born, it stood among the everlasting hills and mountains of old Pennsylvania. I commenced my education in an old log school-house, stuck away up in the head of a dark mysterious hollow. Instead of glass, it had greased paper in the windows—the only pure article of light in the institution came down the chimney, which was very large, occupying nearly one whole end of the house.

My first teacher was big, jolly Mike Strosinder, my cousin. He was of German extraction, and called me his industrious little white-headed cuss-tomer and relative from the woods. I made rapid strides in my literary attainments, mastered the alphabet the first day, and then came the a-b, abs and b-l-a-b-s, blabs, in quick succession. But my "master" wanted to promote me in some way as a reward for my industry, so he gave me the privilege of sitting on one end of the big back-log in the fireplace, where I could get a first-class article of light directly from the sky above, and coming down the chimney.

One morning the big boys and the master dug out of the hillside a couple of large stones, and brought them in and laid them in the fireplace to lay the fore-stick on. The stones, of course, were full of frost and ice, which by the hot fire soon became converted into steam. Suddenly, one of the stones exploded with a noise like a cannon, and raised me from my seat on the back-log half-way up the chimney, and just as I came down, the other stone went off and blew me clear out into the middle of the floor, with my hair on fire and full of coals and ashes, eyelashes scorched off, and the fringes on my little blue hunting-shirt on fire!

This was my first blowing-up at school, and it frightened me so that I forgot all I had learned and had to go back and commence at my a b c's again. But when I learned them the second time it was to stick, and if all the cannon in the world had gone off at once, they could not have scared them out of me.

The hills around that school-house were so high that I have often looked up through the chimney and seen the cows coming down the hills home!

I have a long lecture on "Bob Ingersoll and his Man-made Gods." It is a stunner! I will bring it out either in my first or second number of The Agitator. It is full of fun, incidents, and stories; also, a full account of Bob's religious beliefs and disbeliefs. I have known him for over twenty years, both as a drunken Democrat and as a sober Republican. I also have his negative and am making a large lot of his photographs. Every man should have one. That head of his is a perfect study. I believe it contains the largest brain in America to-day. Head large and full in front, and full on top. Knowledge and wisdom are two different things. Knowledge comes in through the front brain, but wisdom down through the top. Wisdom enables us to see the deeply hidden principles that underlie all things. A man with a flat top to his head may have knowledge, but he can never see principles. The very apex of Bob's cranium is ornamented with about nine dozen hairs; but then, when we come down to the cerebellum, or base of his brain, hair becomes more plenty.

Any man upon whom Mother Nature has bestowed such a head as she has upon Bob Ingersoll, and filled it with a good, first-class set of brains, and he does not use them in thinking for himself, and speaking for himself, he just ought to be bulldozed out of this world.

But Bob is the great Demosthenes of America to-day. He is more than a Demosthenes. His style of oratory is original and new.

Demosthenes and Cicero
In oratory were all the go;
But now they will not do at all—
We take our cue from Ingersoll.

Any person sending me a subscription for The Agitator and three postage stamps, I will send a photograph of the immortal Bob. It will take one of the stamps to return you the picture; the other six cents will not cover the cost of the picture, but who cares for expenses?

The little Agitator will speak for itself. It will come to your home and agitate you twelve times in a year; and all we ask in return is that you send us the small sum of one dollar, or loan me a dollar, and I will write opposite your name on the book, "Paid for one year." Look at that large roll of bills in your vest pocket; send me just one, to Lockport, Ill., and you will never miss it. But if you do not send it, remember that I will miss it so very, very much. All who think they will take my paper, and pay for it on the receipt of the first issue, will please send me a postal card to that effect.

JOHN SYPHERS.

Two Dozen Questions.

1. Is belief or unbelief in all the peculiar doctrines of Christianity either a virtue or a crime, or is a person morally better for the one or morally worse for the other?
2. Can anything be said to be revelation which was known before?
3. Was anything ever created in vain?
4. Whence cometh evil?
5. May it not be set down as a conclusion of sound reasoning that moral law has evil to precede it?
6. Does not evil exist as a fact in the Universe, forever known to Infinite Wisdom, and is therefore co-eternal with Infinite Knowledge?
7. Did the moral code of Moses suit Jesus of Nazareth?
8. What does Christianity amount to if the man who accepts it and the man who spurns it may be alike good?
9. Is it not exceedingly difficult to define Christianity when Christians are so much divided in belief?
10. Is Jesus Christ the mediator between God and those whom he (God) knew and knows would and will die impenitent and go to endless punishment?
11. Is a man in great danger of endless punishment provided he is perfectly honest, true to his convictions, has been striving to the best of his ability to know and embrace the truth, and is still what is popularly known as an unbeliever?
12. Are there any damnable heresies in the world except those which lead to damnable practices?
13. If different councils had the right to reject certain sacred writings as not being the Word of God, why can not we of the present reject what seems to us fabulous and contrary to our ideas of morality?
14. Taken alone, in which is there most virtue for the prevention of disease, prayer, or sanitary measures?
15. What is the difference between the natural and the supernatural? or, what can be attributed to the power of God that is above nature?
16. If the Supreme God once took upon himself human nature, did he not in that act undergo a change; for anterior to the conception and birth of Christ, was he (God) not simply divine?
17. If divine justice required satisfaction by the death of Christ, could it condemn the men who put him to death, seeing they did only what justice required to be done?
18. Where Christians pray to God to save them through their Redeemer, do they not make a clear distinction between God and Christ?
19. Did not God make the serpent that tempted Eve?
20. Was the death of Christ a substituted expedient in lieu of universal damnation in the moral government of God?
21. If a person can be his own soul destroyer, why not his own soul savior; if he is a free moral agent in the popular sense of the term?
22. Is it not impugning the wisdom of God to say that he did not design that Adam and Eve should fall?
23. If God made provisions against the entrance of evil into the Universe, were not those provisions inadequate? If he made no provisions, did he not design the entrance of evil?
24. Suppose the Eden experiment had not failed, then would not men be justified by good works?

J. H. DENSLOW.

EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER:—Mrs. M. E. Lowry, a converted actress, has been holding revival meetings in our Methodist Church. Over one hundred selfish persons have been converted to the idea that "Jesus will settle their bills," and they will pass into heaven celestial paupers. One day when my name was mentioned to her she said, "I hope Dr. Brown will never be saved." Meaning, I hope he will go to hell. The same evening, during her revival harangue, she also said, "There is a man in this town I want either converted or killed." In her mind still lingers the same desire to kill as John Calvin had to burn. The common law is the only restraint over some revival evangelists who seem so anxious to save souls in another world, while they propose hell or murder for the earnest and honest infidel in this.

If she has religion, it is only of the hell kind, and can be received by believers who enjoy,

"Hell is a boiling brimstone pit,
Where poor, damned souls forever sit,
And burn, and bake, and roast, and fry,
And are gnawed by worms that never die."

Binghamton, N. Y., March 8, 1877.

T. L. BROWN.

A CHILD may lead a horse to water, but an hundred men cannot make him drink. One little effort may plant a council that the strongest opposition cannot overthrow.

ERROR is blind. REASON is argus-eyed. And yet the mass of mankind seek the former for counsel and wisdom, rather than the latter.

THERE is pleasure enough in this life to make us wish to live, and pain enough to reconcile us to death when we can live no longer.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.
SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 13.

Great Jehovah, we wish to know all we can of thee, and it is to thee we come for this knowledge. May we ask of thee concerning thy family relations, and the children thou hast begotten?

In Genesis vi. 2-4, it says thy sons "saw the daughters of men that they were very fair, and they took them wives of all which they chose"; and also after that when thy sons "went in unto the daughters of men, the daughters bore children to them; the same became mighty men, which were of old, men of renown."

May we enquire, Jehovah, as to the production of these sons? Didst thou beget them in the same way that all sons have been begotten in all ages and in all time, or did they come forth from thy brain in full size as the fabled Minerva is said to have emerged from the brain of thy competitor, Jupiter? As there was never a child born without a mother any less than without a father, is it not fair to conclude that thy sons spoken of were begotten like other sons with the assistance of a female, or several females?

This being conceded, does it not necessarily decide the great problem in the affirmative whether thou hast a personality? Does it not establish the fact that thou not only hast a form and organization, but thou hast also male organs of generation? Wilt thou make us to understand how thou couldst get sons unless this is so?

Is it not proper that in obtaining a full knowledge of thee and thy works we should know something of the mother or mothers of thy sons? Wilt thou inform us whether they were heavenly or earthly in character? If they were heavenly were they immortal like thyself, having not beginning of existence; or were they creatures of thy forming? Is not the first the more reasonable supposition? And is it not fair to suppose that female organs of generation are as divine and of as early an origin as the male organs? As thou didst allow thy most favorite patriarchs, kings and prophets to have several wives each, is it probable that thou wouldst deem the luxury inadmissible in thy own case?

Is it not an improbable theory that thou wert wholly of the masculine gender, and that thy great opponent, the Devil, was wholly of the masculine gender, and both for countless quintillions of years—from the earliest morning of eternity—and that there was no female that ever had an existence till about six thousand years ago, when, by a skillful surgical operation and a little extra manipulation a "slight variation" was produced, and our grandmother Eve became a female? Are we to understand, we repeat, that masculinity has ever existed—say for ten thousand decillions of ages—and that femininity is only sixty centuries old? Is it not far more probable that the latter is as ancient as the former? that one is the counterpart of the other, and that one could not exist without the other?

Look at it whichever way we will, the maternity of thy sons puzzles us. If their mothers were of the imponderable, ethereal, invisible nature which thou art said to have, how could they bear sons possessing tangible physical bodies like men, and so they could take the daughters of men for wives and produce a powerful, mighty race as posterity? Does not the fact that thy sons were such a class of beings go strongly to prove that their mothers were natural, physical women, possessing all the parts and characteristics that women have ever possessed?

Does not this admission involve another difficulty quite as perplexing as the other? Can we by any possibility comprehend how an immaterial, ethereal, invisible masculine could cohabit with an ordinary physical feminine, composed of flesh and blood, and a progeny be the result? Is it not as difficult to realize this and fully believe it as it is the mythological stories earlier told of the gods Brahma, Vishnu, Fohi, Ormuzd, Baal, Osiris, Devatat, Eros, Astarte, Zeus, Saturn, Jupiter, and a large number of other ancient gods, holding the sexual relation with females and begetting gods and demi-gods? Cannot all those legends and impossible narrations of mythologies be equally relegated to the same domain of invention?

Has not fondness for beautiful, fascinating women been a peculiarity of nearly all the gods that men have believed in, and does it not look much as though thou hadst, in this particular, borrowed from the pagan gods, who were believed in and made familiar to men long before thou wert heard of upon the earth? Can it be possible that thou or thy writers and defenders could have found it necessary to appropriate from the gods of the heathens, aught of their characters, actions, or attributes, particularly such features as pertain to sexuality, masculinity, and the cohabitation of the sexes?

Is it not true that Phallic worship, or the adoration of the god Priapus—the male organ of generation—is one of the oldest forms of worship known in the world, and which has descended from prehistoric ages to comparatively modern times? Was not the organ of masculinity regarded by many of the ancient nations as the creative, life-giving force, and was it not for ages looked to as the highest object of veneration? Is there not abundance of proof that this form of worship was common in India, in Chaldea, in Persia, in Egypt, in Thibet, in Assyria, in Phœnicia, and many other countries? Is not evidence of this found in the carvings in stone and in images in the ancient temples found in many of those countries? Were not the towers of ancient India, the round towers of Ireland, the Druidical piles, and much elsewhere in the same direction erected as symbols in honor of the god Priapus, and largely used in the Phallic worship? Have not relics and coarse sculpture been found in Mexico and California, showing that the aborigines of those countries were also devotees of the same worship? Is it not clear that this form of worship was prevalent over considerable portions of the earth as far back in the primitive ages of men as the "Stone Age"? Do not the crude carvings and statues that have come down from that twilight age of the human race abundantly establish this fact?

Were not the generative organs of both sexes regarded as the most sacred parts of the human being, and were they not by means of symbols, figures, and devices of numerous kinds, for a long time held as the most legitimate objects of worship? Was not the male organ especially regarded as the creator of man and all human life?

Is it not true, too, that from this very source came many of the symbols that for thousands of years have been used in religious worship, particularly the Christian cross? Was not the cross first used as a symbol representative of the male generative organs, and for ages was it not regarded in that light? Was not the cross used in Egypt as a religious symbol representing life and fertility many centuries before the dawn of the Christian religion? Is not the same true of Thibet and other countries in Asia? Has not Christianity borrowed that symbol from the pagan world the same as she has borrowed from the same source her rites, her sacraments, her dogmas, and her worship? In fact, were not Mosaic Judaism and primitive Christianity largely made up from the ancient symbol-worship, and were not many of the old legends and traditions borrowed or appropriated from those early sources and gradually woven into the more modern religious formulas? Have not the religions of the world been mere outgrowths, one from another; and did they not all have their origin in prehistoric races of men when their ideas were crude and when the forces of nature and the elements were personified and worshiped as gods and goddesses?

To return, Jehovah, to thy sons mentioned in Genesis, may we ask were they thy only children? Hadst thou not daughters as well as sons? Is it not singular that among so many children that there should have been no females? Had there been the usual proportion of daughters among them would not thy sons have been saved the necessity of taking the daughters of men for wives and to be the mothers of their children? Or did they prefer the daughters of men because they were more physical, more tangible, more warm-blooded, and possibly more voluptuous?

Did not thy sons enjoy the sexual embrace with the daughters of men as fully as did the sons of men? Had they not about the same passions, the same loves and the same desires? Did they not inherit that characteristic from their father or was it wholly from the mothers' side?

Is it not the love of sexual pleasure that induces the cohabitation of the sexes far more than the desire for offspring? Does not this rule apply to gods as well as human beings? Is not pleasure the object and moving impulse in all cases, in all grades of animal life, from the highest forms to the lowest and most simple? Is it not a fortunate thing that this is the case? Were it not for this desire of pleasure—the sexual propensity—would there not be great danger that the race of men and the entire animal world would become extinct? Did this passion descend from the gods to men? or, vice versa, did it ascend from men to gods? According to all the traditions that come down to us, were they not an amorous, lecherous class? Is not this characteristic peculiar to all the higher forms of animal life? Are not the lower forms of animal life which have no sexual organs and propagate their species by the process of gemination or budding, which is simply parts of the body being detached and assuming an independent life, as with the star-fish, jelly-fish, coral, polyps, and the other species of the protozoans and radiates, far inferior in every sense of the word to the classes of animals that possess sexual organs?

In the ancient sex-worship, was not the yoni almost equal with the linga as an object of worship and adoration? Did not the gods themselves pay special veneration and service to this deity, and have not the sons of men closely followed their example, even down to the present day?

May we enquire how it was that the progeny of thy sons, in union with the daughters of men, became so extinct as to be unrecognized from ordinary men? Were they short-lived and unprolific, or was it owing to their being a mongrel race between gods and men, and therefore like mules and other hybrids not possessing the power of reproduction?

May we enquire, too, what became of the sons themselves? If they were of thy begetting, were they not immortal and deathless? Could death ever come upon thy sons? But we see them not on the earth now, nor have they been seen for thousands of years; how are we to account for it? Didst thou get weary of their toying and dallying with the daughters of men and therefore take them up to heaven and set them at other employment and in assisting thee to operate the Universe?

Were those the same sons that were a thousand years afterwards mentioned in the book of Job, where it narrates how thy sons gathered together to present themselves before thee, at which time Satan also presented himself? Were not these sons of the earth, and did they not live among men? What has become of this last-mentioned lot of sons? Have they, too, passed out of existence to leave room for others for the last four thousand years, or have they been promoted to a higher state of existence to assist thee in running thy heavenly kingdom and in managing the new Jerusalem?

Is there not a great obscurity about these sons of thine, how they came into existence, what kind of women their mothers were, what was the ultimate destination of both mothers and sons, where they now are, and what are their employments? Is there not a great deficiency in thy book in this respect? Would not thy word have been vastly more perfect and more satisfactory had it given full information upon these subjects and not left us so in the dark about thy family relations and the members of thy immediate household?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

What I Don't Believe.—No. 19.

194. I do not believe that Matthew's pretended fulfillment of Isaiah's prophecy was a fair representation as given thus (Matthew viii., 16), "When the evening was come they brought unto him [Jesus] many that were possessed with devils, and he cast out the spirit with his word, and healed all that were sick, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias (Isaiah) the prophet saying, Himself took our infirmities and bear our sicknesses." There is really no application or similarity between the two passages. Isaiah was not talking about casting out devils; in fact, he knew nothing about devils. He never used the word devil, neither is it to be found in any part of the Old Testament. He was speaking in his usual vague manner about an event that had already taken place. The language is in the past tense. He does not pretend to have the slightest allusion to what was to occur seven hundred years after he was dead. The casting out of devils was a business that was greatly believed in about the time the New Testament was written. At that period the devils seemed to be very fond of getting into people. Seven were said to have been cast out of Mary Magdalene; and from a wild crazy man that was found wandering among the tombs, two thousand devils were cast out or at least enough to fill two thousand head of swine, and cause them to rush down a steep place into the sea and be drowned. Isaiah had no conception of anything of this kind, and described nothing of the sort. In the days of the prophets they had wizards and witches and familiar spirits, but these were quite different from the devils that bothered people so fearfully in Christ's time. Before that time, and since, people have principally been the authors of their own devils, and the outside ones have been good enough to attend to their own business, if they have any business that requires their attention.

In the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah the prophet talks about some person who had lived and "hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows." It is forcing the use of language when speaking of events that have already transpired to make it mean something different that is to take place several centuries in the future, but this has to be done to make this chapter have any application to what took place in the world centuries after it was written.

195. I do not believe that the next fulfillment of prophecy which Matthew claimed was any more truthful and correct, to wit, "When the Pharisees went out and held a council against him, how they might destroy him; but when Jesus knew it he withdrew himself; and great numbers followed him, and he healed them all, and he charged that they should not make him known; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet saying, Behold my servant whom I have chosen, my beloved in whom my soul is well pleased. I will put my spirit upon him, and he shall show judgment to the Gentiles, he shall not strive nor cry, neither shall any man hear his voice in the streets—a bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench till he sends forth judgment with victory, and in his name shall the Gentiles trust" (Matt., xii., 14-21).

The prophecy and the pretended fulfillment in this case seem to match very badly. Matthew is not at all happy in the way he endeavors to make them fit. The assumed prediction has no relation to the fulfillment. Isaiah said nothing about a council; nothing about anybody trying to destroy Jesus nor any other person, nothing about great numbers following him, nothing about his healing them, and nothing about his charging those healed to not make the facts known. What the prophet did say seems to have far more application to Cyrus or some other king than to Jesus. The latter did not rule over the Gentiles; moreover, he did not "show judgment" to them, nor did they trust in his name. And he did strive and cry, and his voice was heard in the streets and in the highways.

There is not the most remote connection between what Matthew calls the prophecy and what he calls the fulfillment. The application is extremely far-fetched. Who Isaiah was talking about cannot be known, and it is not likely that he knew himself, but it is most evident that his words bear no relation to the incidents to which Matthew endeavors to make them apply.

196. I do not believe that the passage in Zechariah ix., 9, about the king of Zion or Jerusalem returning to that city riding on an ass had any allusion to Jesus riding into the city similarly mounted, as Matthew represents. Riding on asses was the principal mode of traveling in those days, and because Zechariah was talking about the king of the Jews returning from captivity riding on an ass, it seems hardly necessary that Jesus should send his disciple to steal an ass that the words of Zechariah might be fulfilled. It is not at all likely that Zechariah had the slightest reference to Jesus, or Jesus to Zechariah. It was the ingenious and prevaricating Matthew that brought them together in that assinine manner.

197. I do not believe that the loose and rambling remarks which Jeremiah made (xxxii., 6) about the letting or the purchase of a certain field had the most distant allusion to the betrayal of Jesus by Judas, or of his returning the money he obtained for his baseness, or what was done with the money as Matthew makes an effort to show. It is another instance of Matthew's inventive ability. Let any one read the chapter in Jeremiah referred to and he will see that the talk about selling the field alluded to has no more connection with Judas nor the money he obtained for betraying Jesus than it has to the purchase of a farm in Iowa. The forced application which Matthew tries so hard to make is only another proof of the false claims that have been set up to make prophecy agree with subsequent events. It is such kinds of fulfillment of prophecy that the Christian belief is greatly built upon.

198. I do not believe that the asserted fact that the garments of Jesus, after his crucifixion, were divided among the soldiers by lot was prophesied of at all as Matthew attempts to establish. In Psalms xxii., 18, the writer, whoever he was (for what are called the Psalms are undoubtedly the writings of different persons), complains of his hard fortunes, and speaks of his garments being divided by lot. His language is in the present tense, referring to events, real or imaginary, that were in existence at the time of writing. It did not purport to be prophecy, but Matthew found enough in it to justify him in saying, "this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet." In twelve different instances does Matthew attempt in this manner to point out events connected with the career of Jesus predicted by the prophets, and not in a single instance was he honest and truthful. Not in a single instance can it be truthfully said that what is called the prophecy had any connection with what was represented to be the fulfillment. These instances, so far from adding any strength to the case Matthew attempted to build up by his ingenuity, only exposed its weakness and untruthfulness.

199. I do not believe that a fair application of the language in Malachi, iii., 5, "Behold, I send my messenger before thy face which shall prepare the way before thee," could have any reference to John the Baptist or the coming of Jesus, as Mark attempts to establish. The prophet's language imperfectly describes a time of terror and consternation, while the coming of Jesus was supposed to be happy and peaceful. It is only another instance where language called prophecy has been forced to apply to events to which it had not the slightest reference. The words of Isaiah, xi., 3, "The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight," so often quoted as a prophecy of John the Baptist, is in the present tense, and is no prophecy. It bears no more relation to John the Baptist than to any person who might speak in the wilderness. The Baptist prepared no way, nor did he straighten any paths. The language of the supposed prophecy has no force or application connected with Jesus.

200. I do not believe any other of the passages in the Old Testament called prophecies were written with any reference to an individual who was born and had a short and inglorious career in the world seven hundred years later. For instance, the passage in Deuteronomy, xviii., 15, cited by the writer of the Acts (Chap. xiii., 22) as applying to Jesus, and which reads in this wise, "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you, of your brethren like unto me, him shall you hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you." It is altogether a false assumption and an imposition to attempt to make the passage refer to Jesus. It was Joshua that was meant, and as the book containing the quotation was not written until after the time Joshua came upon the tapis it was easy enough to predict him in that manner. If a man was at this time writing a history of the times of Abraham Lincoln it would be easy enough to throw in some remarks referring prophetically or otherwise to Ulysses S. Grant or Rutherford B. Hayes. It does not take a very profound prospect to do that, but to speak with any accuracy of a man who is to come upon the earth twelve hundred years later is quite another thing, and I do not believe it has ever been successfully accomplished.

The allusions found in the books of the prophets thought by Christians to indicate the coming of their God are all either of a very ambiguous character or refer to events that have already taken place. Some of them are of a wild, rhapsodical, indefinite character that may be made to fit one thing about as well as another. Matthew far excelled the other writers of the Gospels in trying to fit predictions and fulfillments, but he made a failure of it as we have seen. Unless others possessing more accuracy can be shown, it is hardly worth while to lay much stress upon the claim that the old prophets saw and foretold the advent of Jesus into the world. Nothing could hardly be further from the real truth.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

SCIENCE HALL.—Friend Hugh Byron Brown delivered before the Society of Humanity, last Sunday evening an excellent discourse, entitled "The Safe Side." Want of room prevents our giving even an abstract of it in this number, but we hope in our next to lay a part at least before our readers. His lecture was followed by a few remarks from G. L. Henderson, who is here temporarily from the West.

Unbelief of Franklin, Washington and Jefferson

We received the following letter of enquiry several weeks ago and intended to reply to it earlier, but other duties engaged our attention. We hope it is not too late to answer our friend's purpose.

KEY WEST, Florida.

Dear Sir: I have noticed in several Freethinking papers, the mention of Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, and Jackson as "Infidels." Will you be so kind as to give a constant reader and a "truth seeker," the grounds for such claims. From Washington's address to Congress in 1783, from his farewell address, and from his Inaugural, it would seem he could not be numbered in the list of Infidels. Jefferson's two Inaugurals, especially the closing passages, would cause one to conclude that he was not a Materialist at least, and in faith and veneration was in consonance with his fellows. Jackson died a communicant, and I have failed to find aught in Franklin's biographies to warrant counting him as an Infidel. The unauthorized claiming of great men for Infidelity adds nothing to our strength, but causes substantial claims to be doubted.

TRUTH SEEKER.

According to our information neither Franklin, Washington, nor Jefferson were Atheists. They were unbelievers in the divinity of Jesus and in supernatural and revealed religion. They were Deists. Franklin and Washington were non-belligerent and rather reticent upon religious subjects; especially was this the case with Washington. Jefferson was more unreserved and outspoken. He was as positive an unbeliever in the Christian religion as was Thomas Paine, or any man who has ever lived in this country.

Franklin often admitted that he was a Deist, but denied being an Atheist. As far back as 1828 he made a formal written statement called his "creed," in which this passage occurs: "There is one supreme, most perfect Being, author and father of the gods themselves. He is infinite and incomprehensible. He does not expect nor desire the worship of man; he is above it." Parton tells us that Franklin was in the habit of amusing his friends at the expense of Bible admirers by opening the Bible and pretending to read from it parables and stories that conflicted with the usual Christian opinions. In a letter to Geo. Whitefield he wrote, "I do not think that thanks and compliments, though repeated weekly, can discharge our real obligations to each other; and much less to our Creator. You will see in this my notion of good works, that I am far from expecting to merit heaven by them. By heaven we understand a state of happiness, infinite in degree and eternal in duration. I do nothing to deserve such a reward. He that for giving a draught of water to a thirsty person should expect to be paid with a good plantation would be modest in his demands compared with those who think they deserve heaven for the little good they do on earth. For my part, I have not the vanity to think I deserve it, the folly to expect it, nor the ambition to desire it."

During his last illness Franklin received a letter of enquiry from Dr. Ezra Stiles of Yale College, asking for his opinions upon religious subjects. In his reply Franklin expressed a belief in the Supreme Being, the creator of the Universe. He stated that he had doubted the divinity of Jesus though he was willing to admit that his code of morals was the best the world had known. Franklin was at this time eighty-five years old and he stated that inasmuch as he expected so soon to know the truth he did not care to speculate on the subject. He lived but a short time after this [See Parton's Life of Franklin].

Washington also believed in one God only. He did not believe in the divinity of Jesus Christ nor any other man. He had little to say upon religious subjects in his intercourse with his fellow men, but those who knew him intimately knew him to be a Deist and that he did not accept the cardinal dogmas of Christianity.

Jefferson wrote in his journal in 1800 and which has been published in his works [vol. iv., p. 512.] that he had it from Dr. Rush and Asa Green that the clergy addressed Washington on his departure from the government that it had been observed that he had never on any occasion said a word to the public which showed a belief in the Christian religion and they so worked their address as to make him give a public declaration of whether he was a Christian or not, but they were not successful. Jefferson writes: "The old fox was too cunning for them. He answered every article of their address particularly, except that which questioned him about his belief in Christianity, which he passed unnoticed." Gouverneur Morris who was intimate with Washington, and said the latter believed no more in that system (meaning Christianity) than he did himself (he was well known as an unbeliever).

The Rev. Dr. Wilson, for many years a pastor in the city of Albany, in a sermon which was printed in the Daily Advertiser of that city in 1829, said, "Washington was a man of valor; he was esteemed by the whole world as a great and good man, but he was not a professor of religion, or not at least until after he was President. When Congress sat in Philadelphia, President Washington attended the Episcopal church. The rector, Dr. Abercrombie, has told me that on days when the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered Washington's custom was to rise just before the ceremony commenced and walk out of church. This became a subject of remark in the congregation as setting a bad example. At length the Doctor undertook to speak of it, with a direct allusion to the President. Washington was heard afterwards to remark that this was the first time a clergyman had thus preached to him, and that he would henceforth never trouble the Doctor nor his congregations on such occasions. And ever after that upon communion days he absented himself from the church."

Robert Dale Owen afterwards called upon Dr. Wilson in Albany and conversed with him upon the subject of his sermon. After reading over the above paragraph, he said: "I endorse every word of it." In relating a conversation he had with Dr. Abercrombie upon Washington, he quoted the Doctor's remarks thus: "As I conceive that truth is truth, whether it be for us or against us, I will not conceal from you any information on this subject, even such as I have not given to the public. Sir, Washington was a Deist. I have perused every line that he ever gave to the public, and I do not find one expression in which he pledges himself as a believer in Christianity. I think any man who will candidly do as I have done, will come to the conclusion that he was a Deist and nothing more."

This was published in "Discussion between Bachelor and Owen," page 367.

There can be no doubt of Jefferson's Deism, or of his lack of faith in the Christian system of theology. Hundreds who knew him best were fully apprised of this. During the time he was running for the office of President his want of faith was charged upon him again and again, and it was not denied. Preachers of the straight schools howled from their pulpits Sunday after Sunday that if he was elected the government would pass into the hands of an Infidel. When he was elected, many of the orthodox sheets were clad in mourning, and when he was inaugurated, flags in some places were at half mast in grief because an Infidel was at the head of government.

Bancroft thus writes of him: "His instincts all inclined him to trace every fact to a natural law, and to put faith in ideal truth. During his later years he watched with deep concern the ceaseless movements of the human soul toward freedom and purity. Dr. Channing became an interesting figure to him, and he hailed with delight the inroads which Channing appeared to be making in what he considered the most pernicious of all priestly devices, the theology of Calvin. It is hard to say which surpassed the other in boiling hatred of Calvinism, Jefferson or John Adams."

In 1822 Jefferson wrote, "I rejoice that in this blessed country of free inquiry and belief which has surrendered its creed and conscience neither to kings nor priests, the genuine doctrine of only one God is reviving."

In a letter to Colonel Pickering he denounced "the incomprehensible jargon of the Trinitarian arithmetic, that three are one and one is three."

After his eightieth year he was very emphatic in denouncing the "blasphemous absurdity of the five points of Calvin and of the hocus-pocus phantasm of a God, created by Calvin, which, like another Cerberus, had one body and three heads."

In a letter to Dr. Cooper, Jefferson wrote: "In our Richmond there is much fanaticism, but chiefly among the women. They have their night meetings and praying parties, where attended by their priests and sometimes by their hen-pecked husbands, they pour forth their effusions of love to Jesus, in terms as amatory and carnal as their modesty would permit them to use to a mere earthly lover." He further said: "The final and complete remedy for the fever of fanaticism is the diffusion of knowledge."

In his "Notes on Virginia" (p. 47) Jefferson wrote: "Difference of opinion is advantageous to religion. The several sects perform the office of censor-morum over each other. Is uniformity attainable? Millions of innocent men, women and children, since the introduction of Christianity have been burnt, tortured, fined, imprisoned yet we have not advanced one inch towards uniformity. What has been the effect of coercion? To make one half the world fools and the other half hypocrites; to support error and roguery all over the earth," etc., etc.

In a letter to his nephew, Peter Carr, who was attending college, in 1787, appear these passages: "Religion. In the first place, divest yourself of all bias in favor of novelty and singularity of opinion. Indulge them on any other subject rather than that of religion. On the other hand, shake off all the fears and servile prejudices under which weak minds are servilely crouched. Fix reason firmly in her seat, and call to her tribunal every fact, every opinion. Question with boldness even the existence of a God, because if there be one, he must more approve the homage of Reason than of blindfolded peace. Read the Bible as you would Livy or Tacitus. For example, in the Book of Joshua we are told that the sun stood still for several hours. Were we to read that fact in Livy or Tacitus, we should class it with their showers of blood, the speaking of their statues, beasts, etc. But it is said the author of that book was inspired. Examine, therefore, candidly what evidence there is of his having been inspired. The pretension is entitled to your inquiry, because millions believe it. On the other hand, you are astronomer enough to know how contrary it is to the laws of Nature," etc., etc.

For want of space, we are unable to give any other radical extracts from Jefferson's writings.

We have understood for many years that Andrew Jackson was an unbeliever in the Christian religion, but we have not sufficient data by us to fully establish it.

By the time the next number of THE TRUTH SEEKER is issued, Lord Amberley's great work THE ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF will be ready for delivery. It will be mailed at once to those who have sent us the pay for a copy. Those who have notified us they would take a copy when issued are requested to forward the money and they shall be promptly served. We also recommend others who would like to become possessed of the work to order a copy early. We regard it one of the greatest works that has appeared for years. It exhibits deep thought and great research. It enters largely into the great religions of mankind; into the "holy books," "holy persons," "consecrated places," myths, mysteries, legends and traditions, at much length. It is a fine volume and is really worth double the price we ask for it. The English edition sold at $15.00. Our edition contains it all and we mail it for $3.00 in cloth, $4.00 in leather and red burnished edges, and $4.50 in morocco, gilt edges.

We see, just as we are going to press, that at the meeting held at Paine Hall, Boston, on the 3d inst, an organization was effected and a board of seven trustees named to whom to deed the Paine Hall property, to wit: J. P. Mendum, Horace Seaver, T. L. Savage, D. R. Burt, B. F. Underwood, Osmore Jenkins, and Thomas Robinson. It is to be hoped that the board will be able to work harmoniously, and that everything pertaining to the hall will move along pleasantly. We cannot help feeling a regret that the propriety of taking this step could not have been seen two years ago. We feel that the correctness of the course we advocated is confirmed by the action just taken.

THE TRUE HEALER.—We see by the Fort Wayne (Ind.) papers that Dr. Ormsbee, who has been West during the winter months, is on his route homeward. The Chicago papers, during his stay in that city, teemed with statements of cures wrought by him, and were all told we should look for greater demands upon his time by the lame, the halt, the blind, the deaf, as well as those afflicted with acute diseases than even now exists. His return to New York will be anxiously awaited by suffering acquaintances of numerous former patients and old-time friends.

Gems of Thought.

As to the existence of a personal God, I affirm that dogmatic assertion in the negative is as unwarrantable as dogmatic assertion in the affirmative. But if there lives a God on high, he will not count their services least who put their shoulders to the wheel to work in the cause of an ampler justice and a wider truth.—Prof. Felix Adler.

For myself, I use the term God in the sense of Nature expressing collectively, the unfathomable infinity of space, force, and life without us. The Theist who subordinates and defames Nature and sets a ruler over it, as though it could not take care of itself, is mostly now a person, like the obsolete words in a dictionary, needful for reference, but not for use.—George Jacob Holyoake.

For myself I fear I am but a cosmist; a student of the order, amazed, awed, but knowing nothing of the origin or direction, or purpose of Nature. I am but as one standing on the shore of an unfathomable sea. Navigators of Science are upon its mighty waters. They will discover new lands. But will the proud and mighty owner think it of consequence to submit his title deeds to any human court?—George Jacob Holyoake.

ALREADY is the world outgrowing the need of Gods and creeds. Fathers and Sons and Holy Ghosts are going with the passing generations, and their names will only be remembered by the historians of the far off future, to be uttered in accents of a language yet unspoken. Christendom is fast losing faith in its Jesus and Jehovah, and they in time are destined to die out of the convictions of the race, as did the gods of Greece and Saxony, China and Chaldea. And as the world moves grandly on, the last of the gods will be left behind with all the dead conceptions of the past.—S. H. Preston.

As the flowers' soft fingers bring into life The fast mould'ring forms of the tomb, And from chill and blight, in beauty again, Uplifts them to fragrance and bloom,— So out of the graves, deep down in our hearts, Where lie in dust and decay, Our hopes and wishes, all blackened and burnt, That lived in life's earlier day, Shall thousands of buds unfold in the light, To gladden and brighten our life, That glides into Autumn secure in love That knows not unkindness nor strife.

—Susan H. Wixon.

It is said Thomas Paine was an infidel. Infidel to what? Infidel to justice? to truth? to human rights? In all these he was a most devout believer. Infidel to the right of king and priest by "divine rights" to crush out the reason and conscience, and trample upon the liberties of their fellow men, he certainly was, but in devotion to his highest convictions of truth, justice, and duty—in faith in the triumph of liberty over tyranny—of truth over error—he will always stand as an illustrious example of that higher reverence, that diviner faith of the incoming religion, a religion based in the common wants of a common humanity.—Prof. M. N. Wright.

WHAT is gained by philosophy? A capacity of conversing, without embarrassment, with all classes of men; the courage to exercise our right of speaking the truth to the world. What pertains to philosophers more than to others? The privilege of living in their accustomed manner, provided all laws were abolished; if there were no laws, a right minded man would live honestly. Philosophy does not consist in denying ourselves the natural enjoyments which pleasantly occupy some moments of our lifetime, and which should be regarded as an equivalent for the troubles with which our path is strewn. To impose upon ourselves useless self-denial, and as it were, to study how to inflict it, is a species of insanity. The business of philosophy is to regulate the senses in that manner which will render them the most productive of pleasure.—Aristippus.

THEY who accept the universal religion can but desire the increase of knowledge, for even though new facts and deeper reasoning should overthrow something of what they have hitherto believed and taught, they will rejoice that their mistakes should be corrected, and their imperfections brought to light. They desire but the Truth, and the Truth has made them free. And as their action will be inspired by the hope of contributing their mite to the treasury of human knowledge, well-being, and moral good, so their death will be the expression of that peaceful faith which has sustained their lives. Even though torn away when, in their own judgment they have still much to do, they will not repine at the necessity of leaving it undone, even though they are well aware that their names, which might have been illustrious in the annals of our race, will now be buried in oblivion. For the disappearance of a single life is but a ripple on the ocean of humanity, and humanity feels it not. Hence they will meet their end, "sustained and soothed by an unflinching trust."

"Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him, And lies down to pleasant dreams."

But the opposite fate, sometimes still more terrible, that of continuing to live when the joys of life are gone, and its purest happiness is turned into the bitterest pain, will be accepted too. Thus they will be willing, if need be, to remain in a world where their labor is not yet ended, even though that labor be wrought through suffering, dependency, and sorrow; willing also, if need be, to meet the universal lot—even though it strike them in the midst of prosperity, happiness and hope; bowing in either case to the verdict of fate, with uncomplaining resignation and fearless calm.—Lord Amberley.

Odds and Ends.

A SERPENT's fang is a little thing, but death is its victory.

A BABY is a wee little thing, but a constable was once a baby.

A LAP dog is a little thing, but he is a very silly thing besides.

A CROSS word is a little thing, but it is what stirs up the elephant.

THE tongue is a little thing, but it fills the universe with trouble.

A STAR is a little thing, but it can hold this great world in its arms.

AN egg is a little thing, but the huge crocodile creeps into life out of it.

A HORNET's sting is a little thing, but it sends the schoolboy home howling.

AN orange peel on the sidewalk is a little thing but it has upset many a giant.

A KIND word is a little thing, but it is just what soothes the sorrows of a troubled heart.

A WORD is a little thing, but one word has been many a man's destiny, for good or for evil.

A SPARK is a little thing, but it can light the poor man's pipe, or set the world to burning.

THE acorn is a little thing, but the black bear and his family live in the oak that springs from it.

A PENNY is a very little thing, but the interest on it from the days of Cain and Abel would buy out the globe.

A MINUTE is a little thing, but it is long enough to pull a dozen aching teeth, or to get married and have your own mother-in-law.

Life is made up of little things. Life itself is but a little thing; one breath less, then comes the funeral.—Josh Billings.

"Pa, I guess your man Ralph is a good Christian." "How so, my boy?" "Why, pa, I read in the Bible that the wicked shall not live out half his days; and Ralph says he has lived out ever since he was a little boy."

TIMES are certainly growing awful close, and the most rigid, pinching economy is being introduced into our best families. A man on North Hill, who for years past has fattened his pigs on the gratuitous contributions of slop which his neighbors were glad to have carried away, has been forced to extend his circuit six blocks, and still he lost two pigs by starvation last week. Pork creature, he says he never saw such hard times at his house before.

It is related that in a certain town in the northern part of Maine the people were holding a meeting, when the pastor remarked that if any present had relatives or friends in distant lands, prayers would be offered in their behalf. No sooner was the sentence completed than a simple looking individual arose and thus addressed the pastor: "I would like you to pray for my brother. He went away two weeks ago, and I haven't heard from him since. I don't know just where he is, but you need not pray below Bangor."

BEATEN BY A LARGE MAJORITY.—A boy aged twelve, whose uncle is a member of the Legislature, was permitted to make a trip to Lansing a few days ago in order to visit the State House. He came home chuck full of importance, and when his little brother ran to meet him at the gate William coldly waved him back and said: "I refer you to the committee on fisheries, bub, and how's my dog?"

His mother was glad to see him, and when she asked if he had enjoyed himself he replied: "Oh, I suppose so, though I now move to strike out all after the enacting clause."

"What sort of talk is that, Willie, dear?" she asked in great surprise.

"Never mind the talk, mother, but move the previous question and bring on the pancakes."

The hired girl came in with the dinner and wanted to know how he liked Lansing. He looked at her with great dignity and replied: "I now move to lay your petition on the table, Hannah, for future consideration."

She got mad about it, and William slyly informed his mother that it was his opinion that Hannah's title should be made to conform to the body of the bill. He went out to see the boys after dinner, and a house painter asked him where No. 657 was.

"We'll have a call of the House and see," replied the boy, as he looked around.

"Whose house?" asked the painter.

"Or you can rise to a question of privilege," continued the lad.

"I don't want no sass," said the painter, who thought the boy was making fun of his red nose.

"Of course not! Let's pass the bill to a third reading, or else go into committee of the whole and debate it."

"I think you need dressing down!" growled the painter, and he banged William into a snow-bank and pushed a heap of snow behind his collar.

"Have the minority no rights?" yelled the boy, as he kicked the painter on the shin.

He would have been walloped had not his mother appeared. The painter moved away at sight of her, but called out:

"I'll see you again, boy."

"I refer the whole subject to father, with instructions to report a bill to walk you into the police court," replied the representative, and he went in to tell his mother the difference between suspending the rules and rushing a bill, or referring it to the committee on cornfields till some one came around with the cigars.—Free Press.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Ota.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	6
4.	Arraignment of the Church. Ingersoll.	6
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	6
6.	Humboldt.	6
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	2
9.	The Story of the Flood.	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	2
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft.	8
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	8
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	6
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snodde. Bennett.	6
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	6
28.	Alessandro di Ogliostro. C. Sothoran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	5
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	3
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	3
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	3
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	1
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	1
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Eliah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	6
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	6
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	6
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	6
52.	Marple's Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	6
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	3
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	6
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	10
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	5
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	2
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	2
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	6
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hoppes, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	2
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	10
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	1
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Jehabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Provisions. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsborg. M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. B. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic B. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth 20 per cent. off; on five dollars' worth 40 per cent. off; on ten dollars' worth 50 per cent. off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

These eight Scientific Tracts are made into a pamphlet of 125 pages, at 20 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

Truth Seeker Leaflets.

Sent, assorted, or as desired, post-paid, at 4 cents per dozen; 25 cents per hundred, or $2 per thousand.

Let them be distributed freely in every town village and neighborhood. Address,

D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth	50
" " with Examination of Prophecies	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27 00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacoliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., svo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 60 and	1 00
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagavad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch. Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diogenes	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Shakspeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols..	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent of Man. (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright.	35 & 60
Evans' History of all Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Furbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frithingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense. D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought. Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
etc.. Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidel's Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. svo.	6 00
John's Way.	15
Kneelands Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Vale.	1 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and
Inner Life, each	1 50
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 40
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts,	3 50
Principles 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peebles' All Around the World.	2 50
Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	20
" Rights of Man.	50
" Theological Works.	2 00
" " and Miscellaneous Works.	2 50
" Miscellaneous Writings; Centennial edition.	2 50
" Political Works. 2 Vols., svo.	5 00
" Complete Works. 3 Vols., svo.	7 00
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D..	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	60
Synagoga. Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature. D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Works.
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus. 2 vols..	12 00
Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols., svo.	8 00
Sexual Physiology. Trall.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall's (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul.	2 00
The Cause against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers.
$3.00, $4.00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions. Bible Stories, etc., 75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and
IV, 60 cents and	1 00
The Outcast. Winwood Reade.	30
Talks with my Patients. Mrs. Gleason, M.D..	1 50
Underwood-Marple's Debate.	40 & 75
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
" New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

THE TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE
& MORALS

FREE THOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 11. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, March 17, 1877. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $2 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

A STORY entitled "Hell on the Wabash" is to be published in the Cincinnati Commercial.

THE proportion of Roman Catholics to Protestants in Ireland is nearly three and a half to one.

THE Rev. John Moody is in prison in Cincinnati for appropriating to his own use money that he had collected ostensibly to build a church.

MRS. JASKAR of Augusta killed herself because, being eighty years old, and fifty years a widow, she despaired of ever getting another husband.

ROBERT COLLIER thinks people had better marry young. A good many think it a childish performance, while every once in a while some folks try to play at it in their second childhood.

A BOSTON girl, when asked to look through a telescope and see "Venus in all her glory," replied frigidly: "I have no desire to look at any member of my sex who dresses as she is represented to."

PORTER O. BLISS is announced as the editor of a forthcoming weekly entitled The Library Table, which is expected to be an American Athenaeum, only a trifle more so. We predict that it will be ably conducted.

JOE COBURN has gone to Auburn and is less satisfied than ever. It is hard to suit that man Coburn. It is doubtful if he is fully pleased during the ten years that he will be detained in that unpopular State boarding-house.

SOMEBODY in Boston said to John Weiss lately: "Do you think that the intelligence of Boston is insulted by this Moody and Sanker enterprise?" "No," replied Mr. Weiss, "for I don't think the intelligence of Boston has been addressed."

THE verdict of the Ashtabula inquest is severe on the defectiveness of the bridge and the culpability of the railroad company. The verdict will help many to recover large damages in the suits now being pressed. It will probably take a considerable portion of Vanderbilt's money to pay off the bills.

THE fearful accident that happened at St. Xavier's church is additional proof of how dangerous it is to go to church. If those unfortunate victims had been almost anywhere else in the city, that accident would not have befallen them. We have about concluded to go to church but very little, especially when hell is the theme.

THE births in France during 1875, according to late returns to the French Bureau of Statistics, numbered 950,975, besides 49,834 of still-born. The deaths were 845,062, and the consequent increase of population was 105,913. The male children were 453,092 legitimate, and 14,180 illegitimate. The females were 431,008 legitimate, and 32,687 illegitimate.

THE Rev. Dewitt Moulton is in great disgrace in Boltonville, Ill., on account of a suit brought against him by a lady church-member, who demands that he acknowledge the paternity of her child. The reverend gentleman is bound over to appear at the next term of Circuit Court, March 18th, in the sum of $500. His brother-in-law, D. C. Church, of Neenah, went his bail.—Chicago Evening Journal.

CLERICAL ELOPEMENT.—A. J. Warner, pastor of a Methodist Episcopal church in North Vernon, Ind., eloped with Sister Stanton, one of the sisters of his flock, carrying with them all the church and Sabbath-school funds of which he could become possessed. He left a wife and four little children. He started ostensibly for the conference to be held at Maysville, Ky., but took good care to go in the opposite direction.

A REMARKABLE FULFILLMENT OF PROPHECY.—The reason why the North Pole is so inaccessible. In Psalms cxviii., 10-12, it reads: "All nations compassed me about; they compassed me about; yea, they compassed me about; they compassed me about like bees; but in the name of the Lord I will destroy them." The most remarkable feature of this quotation is, it was written 2,500 years before the compass was invented.

BISHOP GILBERT HAVEN went to Siberia on a two years' mission, but has already escaped into Southern Europe. He had the chills so badly that he feared his faith, even, would be frozen out of him if he tarried much longer in the cold, and he would have nothing to insure his passport into the heavenly kingdom to join in the endless song of Moses and the Lamb.

IN a Belgian village a man who was seized with an epileptic fit was supposed by the natives to be possessed of a devil. The priest was summoned, and he proceeded to expel the evil spirit by the recitation of prayers. The fit having by this time exhausted itself, its cessation was attributed to his prayers. The priest, however, not content with the credit attributed to him, proceeded to accuse a woman, who kept an inn hard by, of being the cause of the devil's presence, and she is now about to sue the priest for defamation of character.

ANTHONY COMSTOCK, that pious branch of the U. S. Mail Service and the Young Men's Christian Association, and the vigilant watcher of other people's mail matter, has been making a raid upon the lottery dealers of this city, and caused the arrest of some thirty of them. While we have no sympathy with that class of swindling criminals, we cannot see what business Comstock has to be smelling around and poking his nose among their letters and circulars. The good he does accomplish is done in such an underhanded, inquisitive, Paul Pry sort of way as to entirely destroy its worthiness.

THE immense salaries which life insurance companies have been paying their officers tend to make clear why so many of them are failing and passing into the hands of receivers. Just think of $12,000 to the president, $8,000 to the vice president, $3,000 to the secretary, and so on. Would it not take a perfect brigade of simple and confiding patrons to meet such expenses? Men are fast learning that it is better for them to keep their money in their own hands and not consign it to the care of $12,000 antiquated, sinecure insurance presidents.

THE Rev. Mason Noble, of Sheffield, Berkshire Co., Mass., a popular Congregational clergyman, has been formally charged by Miss Belle J. Clark, a former pupil in the Westfield Normal school, and who had been employed as seamstress in the clergyman's family, with making improper advances towards her. The scandal is causing great excitement in the community, and the church authorities are having the matter investigated. The clergyman is young, talented, and popular; but those unfortunate occurrences will happen sometimes. "You can't sometimes most always tell."

FOUR years ago, Mr. Henry C. Bowen subscribed $500 in five annual installments of $100 each to the Bethel Mission of Plymouth church. Last year the church excommunicated him, but it exercised the exquisite meanness to call, through its Treasurer upon Mr. Bowen for his annual payment of $100. He paid it promptly, like a man, and in so doing showed himself far above the mercenary brethren who could call upon him for money to help sustain their church after they had expelled him from it. The Graphic says, "It is a good deal like making a martyr pay for the kindling wood that is to roast him."

OUR daily papers moralize thus upon the sad catastrophe which occurred in St. Xavier's church on Sixteenth street. Herald: "People must have more self-control." Tribune: "Better means of exit needed." Times: "No possible precaution can prevent a crowd of people from becoming panic-stricken." World: "Crooked, narrow staircases—disgrace to the city—shameful for people to lose self-control—shoot the wretch who cried 'Fire.'—Graphic: "A great many people in divers churches must burn and crush before average human nature is proof against panic."—Common Sense: "Cease frightening old women of both sexes with harrowing pictures of hell and the devil."

THE great use of women's skirts is to hide unshapely ankles; to collect mud and filth; to make dresses wear out quickly and benefit the dry-goods man; to make walking a hard task; to make going out of churches, theatres, and crowded halls a matter of fear and trembling to a man lest he put his foot into it or upon it and rip a $100 dress to tatters, and thus ruin the effect of a pious sermon or a pleasing play; to make women the first to stumble on the stairs and choke up passage-ways, as they did at the Brooklyn Theatre fire and at the late panic at St. Francis Xavier's church. When will common sense control the ladies enough to cause them to shorten their skirts so they cannot be trodden upon or dragged upon the street?

EXTRACT from a letter of O. A. Brownson in the N. Y. Tablet, 1870. "If the Pope should declare an oath, imposed by the Constitution, contrary to the Divine law, I held formerly, and I hold now, that I could not take it; or if the Legislature should pass a law, and the Pope should declare that what it required of me as a citizen, is forbidden by the law of God, I could not obey it, and must submit to the consequences of my disobedience, as did the martyrs in reference to the laws of the emperors." This simply means that we must obey God rather than man, and the Pope is the highest authority with every true Catholic for saying what the law of God does or does not forbid."

ON one evening last week at St. Francis Xavier's church on 16th street, Father Langcake held forth to a congregation composed wholly of women on the subject of hell and endless punishment. Of course their minds were wrought up to a fearful state, and upon a lady's fainting and a boy's singing out "Fire!" the greatest panic ensued, and in the rush to get out, seven persons were trampled to death. It must have been a fearful, pitiful scene. If it had been desired to produce such a panic, probably no subject could be so well calculated to bring about the necessary conditions as the orthodox and lovely theory of hell and eternal torment in its flames. If priests wish crazy people to be abundant, let them continue picturing hell, the devil, and an angry, vindictive God, to credulous, weak-minded women.

IN the funeral service of a Spiritualist in Hartford, Mrs. Emma J. Bullene, a medium from this city, preached a sermon in which she said: "In some cases the separation of the spiritual from the physical part is much more speedy and complete at the minute of death than it is in others. In cases of sudden and violent death, in full health, the process is slower, and often, in such cases, the soul has not severed its connection with the body for more than an hour after death has apparently taken place. To the subject himself death is exactly like a deep sleep. There is an interval of unconsciousness, during which the process of the separation of this fine spiritual part from the body is taking place. It rises like a silvery light, or luminous, magnetic mist, out of the brain, and is at first seemingly vague and unformed, but rapidly re-forms above the abandoned body, and develops into a perfectly-formed spirit—the same features we knew in the body, but more refined and beautiful. In cases of wasting sickness, the separation begins much earlier." We are glad to know at last just how this matter is. It is a subject upon which we have felt the slightest bit of doubt, and we are pleased to have it settled. We shall sleep better after this.

"HELL AND DAMNATION" is the title of a work just issued by the Rev. Mr. Humphrey, who is pastor of a Presbyterian church near Pittsburgh, Pa. He says he uses this title because it is exactly what the book is about, and because a mawkish sentimentality prevails on the subject which ought to be put down. The whole of this not very large book is a plea for the fervent preaching of the doctrine that there is a hell, that lost souls go there, and that the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever. This gentleman must be fond of Watt's hymn, which begins:

My soul on awful subjects dwells
Damnation and the dead;
What horrors seize a guilty soul
Upon a dying bed.

Another verse of this precious metrical composition reads thus:

Then swift and awful she descends
Down to the fiery coast,
Among abominable fiends
Herself a frightened ghost.

Although this hymn is in some of the Presbyterian hymn books, it must be said, to the credit of that denomination, that it is not frequently sung. It ought to be sung, if ever at all, very late at night, in a dark cellar, and its singing should be accompanied by the reading, in a sepulchral voice, of a few choice extracts from Brother Humphrey's work on "Hell and Damnation."

Events of the Week.

DESTITUTION and starvation exist in parts of India.

THE rinderpest and the foot and mouth disease are among the cattle in England.

THOMAS HENDERSON of this city has been made insane by religious excitement.

THE State election in New Hampshire on the 13th resulted in a Republican victory.

THE war-cloud in the East is blackening again. Russia is trying to frighten all Europe.

THE planing mill of Turner, Lairsh, & Co., Philadelphia, was destroyed by fire. Loss, $30,000.

THE Astors will reduce their rents ten per cent. on May first. There is a good margin to fall on.

COL. ROBT. G. INGERSOLL delivered a lecture at Steinway Hall, on the evening of the 14th. Subject, "Political Questions and Answers."

CONDUCTOR POWELL was run over and killed by a train at Concord Station, on the Baltimore and Central railroad.

CASPAR AND HENRY JOHNSON, uncle and nephew, were drowned in attempting to ford Laughery Creek, at Friendship, Ripley county, Ind.

THE officers of St. John's Guild waive an investigation of its mismanagement and dishonesty. When men refuse to have their acts duly examined, there are strong grounds for suspicion.

THE friends of Mrs. Phoebe A. Hanaford have raised by subscription the sum of $1,200 for her new church in Jersey City. They have resolved to rent and furnish Library Hall as a place of worship.

FLOODS have occurred in several of the rivers of the adjacent country. In the Mohawk the water rose nearly twenty feet above low water mark. Some of the towns along the banks were partially submerged. The Susquehanna and the Connecticut have been acting much in the same way.

PRESIDENT HAYES has nominated the following members of his Cabinet, and though a temporary opposition was raised in the house of his friends, his nominations were all confirmed: Secretary of State, Wm. M. Evarts; Secretary of the Treasury, John Sherman; Secretary of War, Geo. W. McCreary; Secretary of the Navy, Richard W. Thompson; Secretary of the Interior, Carl Shurz; Attorney General, Charles Devens; Postmaster General, David Key.

DANIEL BRENNARD, a drummer for a Chicago grain house, jumped into the North River from Pier 24 last Saturday evening. He had been in the city nearly a week, and had been drinking heavily. His money was all spent and he had pawned his coat and vest for liquor. Night coming on, and having no shelter, he sought the bed of the river, but a policeman intercepted his plan and dragged him to the shore. It is to be hoped he may learn to do better.

ON Saturday last a furious gale passed over the country. In many places the wind rushed at the rate of sixty miles an hour. Not a little damage was done to the shipping on the coast. In several cities buildings were unroofed, church spires prostrated, signs scattered in the streets, etc., etc. In this city a good deal of this kind of work was done. One large wholesale grocery establishment was so affected by the furious wind that the walls fell and the building and contents all came down in a heap together. The damage is stated to be $50,000.

A GREAT proof of the value of fire-proof safes is given in the numbers of them taken from the ruins of the late Bond St. fire. Several of them were precipitated from the fourth and fifth stories and for twenty-four hours were exposed to a high degree of heat. Upon being opened, the contents were taken out comparatively uninjured. In one case, a lady's valuable shawl, worth $1,500, which was deposited for safe keeping, was taken out wholly uninjured. The owner stood by when the safe was opened, and her joy can easily be imagined when she learned that her valuable shawl had gone through the fire unscorched.

Science and the Arts.

Is America the New World?—Continued.

BY L. L. DAWSON, CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.

When we consider the length of time necessary for man to go through the different stages, to bring him up to a high enough civilization to make such walls and buildings as are indicated by the ruins in Central and South America; it almost staggers the imagination to compute it. First, man is supposed to be a savage or barbarian on his appearance on the earth; he must go through the hunter stage, then the shepherd stage, then the agricultural stage, then enter well into the mechanical and scientific stages, before he is competent to build on so large and architectural a scale as these ruins would indicate. Then, after having put up such massive buildings, their occupancy must have been of long duration, and then, on the decadence of a nation, the remnant would have lived there a long time before they would become untenable, and after the nation has become entirely destroyed it would take a long time for soil to accumulate on the terraces capable of bearing a dense forest, as at Copan, even on the extreme top of the temple; and after the soil had accumulated, we do not know how long it may have been before the wind wafted, or a bird dropped the seed on it that germinated. And then we have to wait for seeds to develop into trees seven feet in diameter. Who can tell how long a time was necessary to bring all this to pass?

Humboldt describes a tree now growing in the famous gardens of Montezuma as more than six thousand years old; and another, in Central America, as but little less than twenty thousand years old (S. J. Finney. Is the Bible Divine, p. 65).

These nations of Central and South America must have existed a long time before they began the large structures of which we see the remains, for after having come up through the different stages of which I have spoken—during the earliest of which they probably led a wandering life—and when they had reached the latter stages they became settled, and formed a government, which must have been strong when they began their national improvements. For a government must be strong that can control so many slaves as were necessary to construct such works, or if not having slaves, can enforce a requisition on their subjects for the necessary number of laborers, or else they had a well-stocked treasury that could withstand so heavy a drainage as would result from remunerated labor. We have no account that the earlier races of America used metal as a currency, neither is it common for freemen to quietly submit to the demands of government for such heavy and protracted labor without remuneration; so we must conclude that they must have held many people in subjection as slaves. This view of the subject is corroborated in the following extract: "When we read of the great national highway of Peru, macadamized or paved with slabs of stone, stretching for more than a thousand miles, and connecting together the most distant parts of the empire; of the princely palaces of the Incas, built of hewn stone, and supplied with water by aqueducts of costly structure; and when we see such cities in Central America as Palenque, Copan, and Uxmal, magnificent even in their ruins, we must admit the former existence of a well-organized government. When in Mexico, we behold such a vast structure as the terraced pyramid of Cholula, one hundred and seventy-two feet in height, with a base of 1335 feet, nearly double that of the great pyramid of Egypt, with its masonry of brick, and covering an area of forty-five acres; and find that the object of this immense expenditure of human labor was to enshrine, in an interior chamber of stone, two corpses, whose living names have long since perished from the recollection of their own people, we are brought to the sad conclusion that the industry of the great mass of the population was at the absolute command of the few" (Foster, Prehistoric Races of the United States, p. 345). "The early condition of Mexico has been partly ascertained by means of Mexican pictures. These pictures contain chronological histories, of which Humboldt gives a description. It commences with the deluge of Coxcox, or the fourth destruction of the world, according to the Aztec cosmogony. Coxcox and his wife having been saved from drowning, the gift of speech was bestowed on their descendants, and fifteen families settled in Mexico. Another Mexican author who wrote shortly after the conquest, divides the history of the world into four great parts: the age of giants, which lasted 5206 years, the age of fire, 4804 years; the age of winds, 5010, and the age of water, 4008 years; (making a total of 19028 years). The Mexican paintings were executed on skins, cotton, cloth, and the leaves of the maguey or agave" (Zell's Encyclopedia, Article Mexicans).

I have also heard that the west coast of America is thought by some to be the Ophir to which Solomon sent his ships for gold, and timber for building. One writer that I have lately read speaks of "California, the land of ancient Ophir." The word Ophir means ashes or abounding with ashes, and there is no portion of the globe that the name would be more appropriate for than the west coast of America, with the many volcanoes that were in active operation at that time, that would take three years to make a voyage to and return—his ships starting from the Red Sea. It is well known that gold exists on the west coast of America, and these various kinds of valuable timber. The Bible says in one place that the timber was algar trees; in another place it says algum trees. Josephus says pine trees. In Central America there are mahogany trees, and in California are the finest pine trees that can be found, five to twelve feet in diameter and one hundred to two hundred and fifty feet long. Who knows but the petrified pine logs found under the bed of the Old Blue River in California were got out by Solomon's artificers, to be floated down to the coast, but by some untoward circumstances were left for the wonderment of future generations. If the west coast of America was the land of Ophir, it would show that communication between the civilized people on each side of the Pacific Ocean was of ancient date, neither can we tell how long that communication existed before Solomon's time. If such was the case, it might not be impossible that a Peruvian vessel was disabled by a monsoon in the China Sea, or the Indian Ocean, and then, being caught in the current that follows up the east coast of Asia between China and Japan, it might have drifted upon the coast of China. And Mr. Brooks' assertion that the Peruvians were those that first imparted to the Chinese the knowledge of the arts and sciences may not be far out of the way; it would, at least, be clothed with an air of probability. And it may be that the Christianity that is supposed to have originated with the people of the Eastern Continent, was communicated to them by the early races of America, among whom has been found, as stated before, the tree and serpent, symbolic of the Garden of Eden; the legends of the Deluge, the building of a tower by the survivors, the confusion of languages and the dispersion of the nations; the story of Moses and the Exodus; the birth and crucifixion of a Savior, etc., parallel to all that is given in the Bible, but at a time far more remote than is claimed for the Bible.

If, then, the Continent of America is the elder one, as scientists have shown, why should we look eastward to Asia, the youngest division of the globe, and reverence it as the favored of all lands, in being the birth-place of man?

We would do better to look right at home and investigate what we find here, and we may change our views on ancient history very materially. We have ruins that are the handiwork of races that I have no doubt antedate the commonly-accepted chronological tables, and I think if proper investigation is made of our early history and the ruins found in our country, a much more satisfactory conclusion could be arrived at than we have now.

I will now close with a poem entitled

Thoughts on the Creation of our Continent.

BY O. H. GILMORE.

It is little we know of the land that we cherish,
When its limits were fixed, and its mission had birth;
What its future will be, how soon it may perish,
Or its atoms begin to combine into earth;

How long it was known as a child to the ages
Watching them come and depart in their course,
Till moulded in form ere the advent of sages,
By the action of pressure and chemical force;

How near to the time which we paint as creation
It woke from its billowy sleep,
Ere the years had a place or the heavens formation,
And darkness alone was abroad on the deep;

Or how long it was known to the flames ere they fell
And were bound in their fury below;
Or the life that was chill enlivened each swell,
And the rocks had begun from the dying to grow.

Still less do we know of the millions of yore,
Who peopled its mountains and tented its shore.
Their names are entombed, their records are east
With the debris of earth in the vaults of the past.

We say it is new, yet we speak but of race—
For its foundations grew, and their strength was imparted
Ere the rushing of waves bore the earth to its place
Where the pyramids stand, works of genius departed.

The marks which were made in those conflicts to be,
And the footprints that accident holds in its breast,
Are all that remain of us mortals to see
Of its changes, convulsions, and rest.

It exists by permission, it stands not by right,
As form is a state submissive to change;
The complete of to-day is the wreck of to-night;
Forces are but to displace and arrange.

It may stand till the cycles grow weary with flight,
And the works of our genius put Nature to fear,
Or a quiver beneath may submerge us from sight,
And the waves of oblivion close over our bier.

The Doctrine of Filiation, or Descent-Theory.

BY PROF. ERNST HAECKEL.—CONTINUED.

CHAPTER V.—CONTINUED.

MEDICAL SELECTION.

To the increasing enervation of modern civilized nations, which is the necessary consequence of military selection, there is further added another evil. The progress of modern medical science, although still little able really to cure diseases, yet possesses and practices more than it used to do the art of prolonging life during lingering, chronic diseases for many years. Such ravaging evils as consumption, scrofula, syphilis and also many forms of mental disorders, are transmitted by inheritance to a great extent, and transferred by sickly parents to some of their children, or even to the whole of their descendants. Now, the longer the diseased parents, with medical assistance can drag on their sickly existence, the more numerous are the descendants who will inherit incurable evils, and the greater will be the number of individuals again, in the succeeding generation, thanks to that artificial "medical selection," who will be infected by their parents with lingering, hereditary disease.

If any one were to venture the proposal, after the examples of the Spartans and Redskins, to kill, immediately upon their birth, all miserable, crippled children to whom with certainty a sickly life could be prophesied, instead of keeping them in life injurious to them and to the race, our so-called "humane civilization" would utter a cry of indignation. But the same "humane civilization" thinks it quite as it should be, and accepts without a murmur, that at the outbreak of every war (and in the present state of civilized life, and in the continual development of standing armies, wars must naturally become more frequent) hundreds and thousands of the finest men, full of youthful vigor, are sacrificed in the hazardous game of battles. The same "humane civilization" at present praises the abolition of capital punishment as a "liberal measure!" And yet capital punishment for incorrigible and degraded criminals is not only just, but also a benefit to the better portion of mankind; the same benefit is done by destroying luxuriant weeds, for the prosperity of a well-cultivated garden. As by a careful rooting out of weeds, light, air, and ground is gained for good and useful plants, in like manner, by the indiscriminate destruction of all incorrigible criminals, not only would the struggle for life among the better portion of mankind be made easier, but also an advantageous artificial process of selection would be set in practice, since the possibility of transmitting their injurious qualities by inheritance would be taken from those degenerate outcasts.

Against the injurious influence of artificial military and medical selection, we fortunately have a salutary counterpoise, in the invincible and much more powerful influence of natural selection, which prevails everywhere. For in the life of man, as well as in that of animals and plants, this influence is the most important transforming principle, and the strongest lever for progress and amelioration. The result of the struggle for life is that, in the long run, that which is better, because more perfect, conquers that which is weaker and imperfect. In human life, however, the struggle for life will ever become more and more of an intellectual struggle, not a struggle with weapons of murder. The organ which, above all others, in man becomes more perfect by the ennobling influence of natural selection, is the brain. The man with the most perfect understanding, not the man with the best revolver, will in the long run be victorious; he will transmit to his descendants the qualities of the brain which assisted him in the victory. Thus then we may justly hope, in spite of all the efforts of retrograde forces, that the progress of mankind towards freedom, and thus to the utmost perfection, will, by the happy influence of natural selection, become more and more certain.

CHAPTER VII.

TRANSMISSION BY INHERITANCE AND PROPAGATION.

The reader has, in the last chapter, become acquainted with natural selection according to Darwin's theory, as the constructive force of nature which produces the different forms of animal and vegetable species. By natural selection we understand the interaction which takes place in the struggle for life between the transmission by inheritance and the mutability of organisms, between two physiological functions which are innate in all animals and plants, and which may be traced to other processes of life—the functions of propagation and nutrition. All the different forms of organisms, which people are usually inclined to look upon as the products of a creative power, acting for a definite purpose, we, according to the Theory of Selection, can conceive as the necessary productions of natural selection, working without a purpose,—as the unconscious interaction between the two properties of Mutability and Heredity. Considering the importance which accordingly belongs to these vital properties of organisms, we must examine them a little more closely, and employ a chapter with the consideration of Transmission by Inheritance. (Gen. Morph. ii. 170-19.)

Strictly speaking, we must distinguish between Heredity (Transmissivity) and Inheritance (Transmission). Heredity is the power of transmission, the capability of organisms to transfer their peculiarities to their descendants by propagation. Transmission by Inheritance, or Inheritance simply, on the other hand, denotes the exercise of the capability, the actual transmission.

Heredity and Transmission by Inheritance are such universal, every-day phenomena, that most people do not heed them, and but few are inclined to reflect upon the operation and import of these phenomena of life. It is generally thought quite natural and self-evident that every organism should produce its like, and that children should more or less resemble their parents. Heredity is usually only taken notice of and discussed in cases relating to some special peculiarity, which appears for the first time in a human individual without having been inherited, and then is transmitted to his descendants. It shows itself in a specially striking manner in the case of certain diseases, and in unusual and irregular (monstrous) deviations from the usual formation of the body.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

California Letter.

SAN JOSE, Jan. 11, 1877.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKER: I wish you not only a happy New Year, but a year fraught with tangible results in the work which you have in hand.

I found on my table, on my arrival home from the lecture field, a copy of the "Sages," etc., for which accept thanks. The book needs no puffing, and yet one needs to see and read it to appreciate its merit. But for the benefit of such as have not had the pleasure of perusing its contents, let me say, I have seldom met with a book that bears upon its face more abundant proofs of true merit. It affords me great satisfaction to be brought face to face with those old sages and thinkers, who have contributed so much to human welfare. It inspires one with high thoughts and a love for the cause of truth and reform.

To many like myself who are not blessed with a large library and plenty of time to wade through its musty volumes, the "Sages," so compact in form, so rich and varied in information, will be found a treasure beyond price, and I can but hope that the friends of Liberalism will not forget to send for a copy of this book.

I see by the last TRUTH SEEKER that its third volume is completed, and I heartily desire its future prosperity—not as an empty compliment, however much encouragement may be found in good wishes, but will send enclosed the money to renew my subscription for the coming year; besides, will do all I can to increase the patrons of THE TRUTH SEEKER in my lecture field.

Friends of Freethought, let me appeal to your high sense of justice and love for the cause of truth, to sustain Brother Bennett, our champion for human liberty, who has ventured his all—money, time and brains—in an enterprise which, I trust, lies near to every Freethinker's heart.

Excuse me, dear friend, for what a few thoughtless people may deem an undue interest in THE TRUTH SEEKER. I love the cause of truth for which this paper is a bold and able exponent—not but that the Religio, Investigator, and Banner of Light are all excellent papers, doing each its own work. So, also THE TRUTH SEEKER is doing a much needed work, for which its editor has marked and peculiar ability.

How zealous Christian believers are! How they tax themselves to build up a false system of religion in the world; with what energy and generosity they sustain their pulpits and priests!

Christian men and women give their hundreds and thousands to support such mountebanks as Moody and Sankey, and strain every nerve in their power to fasten upon the world the dead carcass of an effete system of religion full of paganism.

How much less—or rather how much more—should we do to sustain and build up science and knowledge, and advance the true interests of our kind, by spreading the gospel of Nature and the religion of humanity.

Liberals, friends of Freethought, don't let THE TRUTH SEEKER eke out a precarious, from hand to mouth, existence, through want of means at your hands.

Men build monuments to perpetuate a name; but the pile of stone crumbles to dust, and the memory of it is lost forever. THE TRUTH SEEKER is leaving its mark on the tablets of living monuments, which cannot crumble to ashes, and cannot die.

For when men and women are cured of that disease commonly known as religion, they send their healthful type down through the ages, and only eternity can reveal the multiplied effects of Freethought and free expression in the interest of truth.

Our cause on the Pacific Coast is steadily advancing. I have spent two Sundays in San Francisco since my return from the Upper Coast, and had the pleasure of listening to J. M. Peebles at Charter Oak Hall, who, in connection with the Boy Orator, a recent importation from England, is drawing full houses, under the auspices of the First Society of Spiritualists.

I had also the pleasure of meeting at Social Hall with the Lyceum of Self-Culture, a fine audience of Freethinkers, a large sprinkling of whom are ladies. The order of the meeting is an opening of the subject in hand in a speech of thirty minutes, followed by ten minute speeches by all desiring to participate.

This society has been regular in its meetings during the last eight years with unabating interest. On this occasion, after a piece of music rendered in fine style, the ball was opened in accordance with a previous invitation, by Rev. Dr. Gourd, a Methodist pastor of one of the city churches; the subject, Christ and his Mission.

The Doctor is a fine orator and full of magnetic power, and the subject, although a somewhat stale one to most Freethinkers, was handled in a masterly manner. Wisely avoiding all dogmatism, he confined himself to the humanitarian aspect of the life of Jesus.

I was glad, for his feelings, that he did not refer to the conception or atonement of Christ, as these Freethinkers are remorseless and severe. Sharp as Damascus blades, the dross of orthodoxy had melted as in a furnace of fire.

The orthodox clergy have sounded the bugle of preparation in view of Moody and Sankey's expected visit to this coast; and but for the baneful effect upon the young, who suffer most from the virus of superstition during these wild excitement, we would say send them along; agitation is the life of the world; it infuses new life into the ranks of the Liberals. Let mind rub against mind; let ideas clash; let the two extremes meet, truth will take care of itself.

As Hammond, the gospel clown, gave to Freethought a grand impulse in every town on this coast, so the visit of these jugglers will inspire disgust in the minds of all sensible people, and open the ears of a large class of indifferent people to the obverse side of the question.

I see by the Liberal papers that the subject of organization has been claiming a large share of attention for some time past, and as I am specially interested in the subject, and having organized several societies and children's lyceums within the last few months, and finding a general waking up to the subject, as well as a great diversity of opinion, permit me, for the purpose of calling out THE TRUTH SEEKER or any of its patrons on this subject, to offer a few remarks.

That organization is a great need I have no doubt; but the basis for organization as set forth in the Banner of Light by the Philadelphia Convention, in my opinion, does not meet in the fullest manner the need. In its platform we find a smack of religious clap-trap, such as: "Deep religious nature in man." "Marvels of Jesus Christ." "A religious organization free from unbelieving Atheism."

This smells too strongly of that old "hell-and-damnation" religion, known as Christianity, which has always pushed unbelievers out in the cold.

In its statement of aims it wants a "religious basis upon which to cultivate love and charity, and to stimulate religious effort and faith in God." As though love to each other, and moral duties, attributes of a common humanity, were inseparably related to religion or superstition, which are synonymous terms.

This is the old cry of the church in all times past, that moral virtues are as filthy rags without dogmatism or statements of belief to rest upon.

This august body, assuming to act for the Spiritualists of America, under the head of a "Declaration of Principles," says:

"We recognize Jesus of Nazareth the leader of men, and his two great affirmations of love to God and man as the ground of growth in man, and the only true basis of society."

So says the church:

"Jesus, the name that charms our fears.
And bids our sorrows cease;
'Tis music in the sinner's ears;
'Tis life and joy and peace."

So says the church: "There is no other name given under heaven or among men whereby we may be saved." So says the church: "He is our leader, and ruler of the nations." Hence make room for him in the Constitution of the United States

What principle is set forth in the statement that Christ is the "leader of men." I fail to see any fundamental principle in this statement as a basis for the organization of Liberals. But we think we see in it an effort to join hands in the wholesale robbery of stripping the laurels from every other brow and crowning Jesus of Nazareth supreme leader and ruler. We are not quite sure that this god-man ever lived, and if he did live, as stated in the New Testament, he is but one of the saviors of men, and as such we accord to him rational tribute.

They further state that the object of such society is to "strengthen faith in God." This cry of faith in God has been the watchword of proscription and cruelty in all the past history of the church. Shall we, as Liberals, continue to hold fast to this soiled and threadbare toggery of paganism, or shall we, like full-grown men, dig down through the crust of mere belief to the bed-rock of immutable law, and there find a broad basis in a knowledge of man's nature, and faith in man's perfectability by the natural means of culture and development.

Faith in God, forsooth! What can we know of God? Absolutely nothing. Simply because finitude cannot grasp infinity, as infinity makes us part of that stupendous whole whose body nature is, and God the soul.

The Hindoo skeptic seemed to realize man's weakness in the following scrap of poetry:

"When the fish swims out of the water,
When the bird soars out of the blue,
Man's thought may transcend man's knowledge,
And your God be no reflex of you."

It seems that our people might, as Liberals, "if the word means anything," organize on a basis, for social, mental, and moral culture, in which God, Christ, heaven, hell, or devil, need form no figure or part; not that I have any objection to reverence for Deity, but Deity is an open question to all, and open questions, finding their limit in belief, are at the best a narrow basis. Men are no better for a belief in God, but on the contrary, many are made worse by such belief and trying to hold others within such lines.

Even a belief in a future state should not be a flaming sword to guard the tree of knowledge, and push at arm's length all who do not believe in spirit life. This is also an open question to thousands of good Liberals whose influence and relations we can ill afford to lose. Selfhood, to separate, to crystallize, is good; but to join hands to do a good work is better. For the defense of our free institutions against Romanism we need union among Liberals; for protection against the aggressions of Christianity in all its forms, we need the hearty co-operation of all friends of human progress.

DR. J. L. YORK.

"The Safe Side."

BY HUGH BYRON BROWN.

The following address was delivered in Science Hall, before the Society of Humanity, on Sunday, March 4th.

This is the inevitable dernier resort of the Christian when driven to extremity by the force of his opponent's logic, or when pressed by unanswerable arguments and incontestable facts. The fallacy of this argument, if it may be called such, lies in the assumption that there are but two sides to the controversy respecting the truth of religion; and that it is imperative that we should either believe and be saved by the Christian religion, or doubting, be damned for our sincerity.

Before the "safe side" argument can have any force whatever, it must first be shown that a supernatural religion of any kind is a necessity of man's nature and not a resultant of his ignorance and undevelopment from which knowledge and subsequent culture will entirely free him; and that without it he can not be as good a man morally, and as great intellectually as with it. It must also be shown that the claim of the Christian religion to be the only true religion is founded in truth, and that all the others that now exist and that formerly existed in different ages and countries are false, which, although always assumed is nevertheless not proven.

It must also be first determined which of the many conflicting sects of the Christian Church has the truth; for if it abides only in the Catholic communion, as claimed by the Pope, then the "safe side" is clearly not the side of Protestantism. If the faith of the Universalist be true, then one sect or religion is equally as safe as any other. And if the doctrine of eternal decrees is true, as held and formerly understood by the Presbyterians, there is no telling where the safe side may be found, as safety does not in that case depend at all on anything that the individual can do, or fails to do!

If theology were a positive science (it being the very antipode of that), capable of being proved and demonstrated, like, for instance, the science of mathematics, or were its doctrines self-evident and indisputable like the axiom "a whole is equal to the sum of all its parts," it would be within the power of man to determine which of the various religions or of the different sects is the true one, or the one containing the most truth, and therefore the nearest right.

But as this is impossible, it is simply absurd to assume as Christians do, that all the other religious faiths that have or still exist in the world are, or were false, and that only theirs, the youngest in point of time (except Mohammedanism) bears upon it the stamp of divine authority.

Tried by any criterion of criticism or by the legal rules of evidence, this assumption of absolute truth and perfect safety can be no more established for the Christian than for any other system of religion. All of them have certain fundamental ideas in common, and differ only in detail, and which fundamental conceptions are purely creations of the imagination as the ceremonies, habits and customs of a people are the application of these conceptions to the circumstances and peculiar conditions of those who entertain them.

It is apparent therefore that the argument of the "safe side" can be urged with equal propriety and force by the believers in the Shaster, the Koran, or other sacred writings, as well as by the Christian.

Indeed, were it not for the evident sincerity of those who urge this argument, one might imagine that they were perpetrating a grim joke on their faith, for by popular teachings of orthodoxy, all who die without a saving faith in Christ will be lost eternally, which includes all of those who have never heard of the gospel and most of those who have!

The prospect for safety in the Christian faith, as delineated by a Christian poet, is certainly anything but encouraging.

"Far in the deep where darkness dwells,
The land of horror and despair,
Justice has built a dismal hell,
And laid her store of vengeance there!

Eternal plagues and heavy chains,
Tormenting racks and fiery coals,
And darts to inflict immortal pains,
Dipped in the blood of damned souls."

But aside from this it is illogical to say that one side of a question or one particular religion is any safer or better than another, only as it is nearer the truth, and in harmony with the nature and requirements of man, which, in the case of many of the Christian sects, is at least not proven if susceptible of proof.

It is only the truth that has power to save and bless; an unwavering faith in that which is not truth will no more compensate for its lack, than will hopes built on dreams. If a new world had not existed awaiting discovery the hopes and confident expectations of Columbus of being able to find it, would probably only have terminated in his destruction; and had he listened to the arguments and advice of the Junta of Salamanca, which apparently was decidedly the "safe side," the new world would not then have been discovered.

And so in every great epoch of the world's history, or in the achievement of some great moral, political or industrial benefit to the race, the work is accomplished, and the good done, not by the conservative, nor on the side deemed by popular opinion to be the safe one, but in the way apparently the most unsafe and dangerous; and by those who are denounced as "Knaves and fools, or traitors plotting crime."

That there is such a thing as a safe side, and a side that is not safe, is unquestionably true; but the safety and danger lie in the nature and constitution of things and are inevitable results of the law of causation from which it is impossible to escape, and not from the arbitrary mandate or decree of an omnipotent will acting independent of, and frequently in opposition to, natural law.

One is on the safe side who is in harmony with the laws of his being—who is reconciled to the order of nature, and whose study is to conform thereto; who prefers knowledge to ignorance—loves truth and hates injustice and wrong, and who lives not exclusively for himself but for others; for such are the conditions that will in the nature of things lead to safety, as their opposites tend to evil and unsafety.

The Christian idea underlying the safe side argument is really a monstrous conception. It assumes an infinite and beneficent creator of mind, who takes offense at its exercise if the conclusions arrived at, no matter how honestly and sincerely entertained, are different from those believed to be written in a book, and who for such an honest exercise of the faculty of reason, has decreed a punishment that shall be endless in its duration and excruciating in its nature.

The fact that such an infernal conception, at war with every principle of justice and common reason, should have obtained in the minds of men, shows how the human mind has been perverted and distorted by ecclesiastical teaching.

But the plea of the "safe side" is the argument of the coward, who does not follow the convictions of his reason, or who, too indolent to exercise his judgment, and know for himself what is right, skulks behind popular opinion, and drifts along with the tide, and finds his highest satisfaction in the thought that he is on the "safe side," whatever may become of others.

If the world moves in any direction, it is not because of any help lent by him. He does not know what it is to have the courage of his opinions, if indeed he has any that he would not sacrifice in a moment, if they interfered with either his interest or his pleasure!

No progress in any direction is possible when this argument is accepted as the rule of action. Under its shadow every evil, wrong and injustice flourishes with impunity and would remain forever to curse the race.

No tyranny, however galling; no institution, however corrupt; no monopoly, however oppressive; no creed, however dark and cruel, that has not been sustained, sheltered and defended under the plea of the "safe side."

Catholicism was deemed the "safe side" during the Reformation. The royalist and the tory fought on the "safe side" during the French and American revolution—as did the slave-holder in the anti-slavery struggle, and as do the orthodox Christians of to-day in the war now being waged by the Freethinkers against superstition.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 14.

Great Jehovah, we would now ask thee in reference to thy last begotten son, even he that is called Jesus: Is he more distinctively and peculiarly thy son than those sons of thine mentioned in Genesis, who took the daughters of men for wives? or those mentioned in the Book of Job, who gathered together from various parts of the earth to present themselves before thee? Thou hast called Jesus thy "only begotten son," but how can this be? If those others were thy sons, didst thou not beget them? If thou didst not, who did? If they were begotten by another, could they truthfully be called thy sons?

Was it not, rather, because Jesus was thy youngest son—thy babe, so to speak,—and for that reason, thou hadst a greater affection for him than for thy other sons, that thou caldest him thy "only begotten son"? Would not my "best beloved son" have expressed the truth of the case quite as correctly?

May we ask why Jesus should be regarded as thy best beloved son, or thy only begotten son? Was he better than thy older sons? Was he braver, smarter, or holier? Was he more like thee? or was he more like his mother? Was it because thou hadst a greater affection for his mother than thou hadst for the mothers of thy other sons, the same as thy servant David had a greater affection for the mother of Solomon than for any of his other wives, the mothers of his other children? Did not the holy man David love Bathsheba more affectionately than his other wives, because he had taken her from the honest and loyal Uriah? Were thy affections moved in a similar way towards Mary who was espoused to the simple-minded, unsuspecting Joseph?

Jehovah, as one of the grand systems of religion in the world—one standing third or fourth in magnitude, counting the numbers of its adherents—one that prevails over the parts of the earth deemed the most civilized, rests upon the version of thy intercourse, nearly nineteen hundred years ago, with the young Jewish maiden Mary, permit us to be somewhat particular in our enquiries touching it, as in the Christian system of theology it was a most important event. Is it not most essential, in fact, that we have a correct and explicit understanding of the entire business?

How is it, in consideration of its magnitude and importance to the world of mankind that the manner of the conception and entrance into the world of thy son is so indefinitely disclosed that two of the persons distinguished as evangelists, Mark and John, and who were chosen to give to the world the particulars of the life and mission of thy youngest and best beloved son, should have entirely omitted all reference to those occurrences, which, if the system is true, were the most important events that have ever occurred in the world? Did those writers discharge their full duty in suppressing the recital of such a momentous event, or in neglecting to relate it? Can they justly be regarded as truthful and reliable historians, when they entirely ignore and keep out of sight such important operations? Was not, really, the begetting of a son by the God of Heaven and the Universe upon the person of an obscure, modest Jew girl, one of the most remarkable events that has ever taken place since time began, and since thou thyself had an existence? Was not that very transaction, which though perhaps it took but a few minutes to accomplish, one most momentous to the erring, sinful sons and daughters of men? Has it not more to do with their present and future happiness than all else that has taken place in the world, or anywhere else? Is there any other way made known by which the quintillions of the human race could be saved from thy adversary, the Devil, save by thy son's being begotten and born into the world to suffer and die for them? Can, then, Mark and John be in any manner excused for passing over in utter silence matters and events of such immense and unparalleled magnitude and importance? Does not this very fact greatly detract from the credibility of what they did say? Is not a historian or a chronicler of events, who suppresses most momentous occurrences, or who fails to give them, nearly as unreliable and as unworthy of belief as those who absolutely misstate the truth?

Was that suppression done by thy orders? If not, by whose direction was it done? If those narratives were not written by thy authority, then by whose authority were they written? If the salvation of the human race depends upon the events under consideration, is it not right and just that every human being should have all the facts in the case?

Is it not to be regretted also that the only two persons who seemed to know anything about that interview—that Nason—between the Jewish maiden and thyself, Matthew and Luke, should not have been able to relate it in the same way? Does not Matthew make the whole thing to rest upon a dream which Joseph had, while Luke attributes it all to a vision which Mary had?

Was Matthew present when Joseph did his dreaming, that he should be able to tell the world what it was? Was Luke present when Mary had her vision and talked with Gabriel, that he should be a competent witness to give a recital of it? Is it not unfortunate that the history of the great event of the begetting of a god, which by his life and death was to save the whole world of mankind, past, present and future, should all rest upon a dream and a vision, and both told by second parties who were not present, and had no possible way of knowing anything about the facts they pretended to narrate? As the gospels of Matthew and Luke were not written for fifty or sixty years, at the very least, after the time that dream and that vision were supposed to have taken place, and as the writers had to go wholly by hearsay evidence—common rumor—or as they were under the necessity of drawing upon their imaginations (and one of them at least had an active one), is there not great probability that they have given an unreliable and unauthentic report? Are not the chances far more than equal that they did not give the dream and the vision strictly as they appeared to the dreamer and the visionist? What reliable data would a writer now have, to relate a dream dreamed over a half a century ago, about the advent of a person into the world long since dead and passed out of sight, and all the parties connected with the event dead also? Would he not have to dream it all over again—a dream of a dream or a vision of a vision?

What facilities had Matthew for knowing what Joseph's dreams were two generations before the time of writing? What were Luke's means of knowing what visions young Mary might have had half a century previously? Were they inspired to write what they did write? Did they lay any claim to inspiration? Did they not write simply in the style of a narrative as a writer would now give details of the American Revolution or of the early settlement of Western New York? Were not the chances for errors and misstatements most excellent? and were they not sufficiently improved?

Is this, Jehovah, the foundation upon which the great Christian religion rests—the narrations and stories of four men, written after years of time had passed, and from memory, tradition, and hearsay, or more probably still, not till more than two hundred years had passed away? Is there the slightest proof that the Gospels of Matthew and Luke were known to have an existence till the third century? Was it possible that either of the four writers called evangelists could, of their own knowledge and observation, write one-fourth part of what is accredited to them? Did either of them claim to have any other sources of information save tradition and hearsay? Did either of them claim that they were present and saw with their own eyes all that they stated? Would it have been true had they so related? Are not these simple facts sufficient to shake the confidence of all thoughtful, candid people in the character of the narrations given? Do not errors and mistakes, with the greatest efforts to the contrary, inevitably creep into all narratives, biographies, and histories, especially when the events written of, occurred half a century before the record is made? Has there ever been an absolutely truthful history written, in which every statement was perfectly truthful and without error? Was there a strictly accurate account written of a single battle in our late war? Is it not utterly impossible for any one man to have his eyes upon all parts of a field of battle and be able to state without error the movements of each division, each brigade, each regiment, and note with precision what was done by each general, each colonel, each captain and soldier on both sides?

To come down to the plain truth, have we ever had a perfectly correct account written of any event of magnitude that has ever occurred in the world? Have not some points been overlooked or omitted, and some defects in the statements been made—some bias this way or that—some coloring given not in accordance with the facts? Is it not absolutely impossible to get the full and perfect truth about anything that has taken place in the world, especially when the persons and events under treatment have long since passed away? Are not human testimony and human history at best very uncertain and unreliable? Do we know anything about any other?

But waiving all this for the present, let us return, Jehovah, to the little incident of thy begetting thy son, Jesus, according to the dream which Matthew says Joseph had on a certain occasion. According to that dream, was not the father of the child Jesus the Holy Ghost? Is Holy Ghost another name for thee, or was he only partially thyself and partially not thyself—in one sense thee and in another sense not thee—partly so and partly not so?

Is it not in that account which Matthew gives of Joseph's dream that the name of the Holy Ghost appears for the first time in thy word or book? Is not that the first time he was brought to the knowledge of thy readers? Was not the Holy Ghost wholly unknown to the old patriarchs, prophets, and priests? Did Noah know anything of the Holy Ghost at the time thou gavest him instructions how to build the ark and how to get all the kinds of animal life into it? During all that time did the Holy Ghost ever call upon Noah?

Did the Holy Ghost ever appear to Abraham who was so often favored with visits from thee? Although he was the father of thy future people, and although thou didst enter into a definite contract or covenant with him to carry out certain propositions on thy part, and held interviews with him on numerous occasions, did the Holy Ghost ever go to see Abraham? Did the old patriarch ever know there was a Holy Ghost? Did Isaac and Jacob know anything about a Holy Ghost?

Did Moses, who was so much with thee, who talked with thee face to face; and to whom thou also showed thy back parts, to whom thou didst show thyself in the burning bush, with whom thou didst pass forty days and forty nights on the top of Mount Sinai getting up the Ten Commandments, and who so often advised thee and restrained thee from fits of passion and fierce anger—did he know there was a Holy Ghost? Is it not singular that in thy close intimacy of forty years with thy confidential agent, one who knew all thy secrets, thou never gave him the first hint that there was such a being as a Holy Ghost connected with thee, and was one-third part of thyself, and shared equally with thee in power and glory and majesty? Can there be any good reason for thy being so secretive, so mu with Moses on this very important point?

Did Joshua and Caleb and Jephtha and Samson and Samuel and Nathan know that there was such a being as the Holy Ghost? Did David—that godly man who was after thine own heart, and who, perhaps, pleased thee better than any other man who ever lived—have the slightest idea of a Holy Ghost?

Did Solomon, with all his wisdom, and his thousand wives and concubines, know aught of that mysterious personage, the Holy Ghost? Did any of the kings who succeeded him on either of the opposing thrones of Israel and Judah have the first inkling that there was a Holy Ghost connected with thee?

Did any of thy holy prophets, Joel, Amos, Micah, Hosea, Obadiah, Elijah, Elisha, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Nehemiah, Zechariah, Zephaniah, Nahum, Jonah, Habakkuk, Haggai, or Malachi, have the first hint about the existence of a Holy Ghost? Is it not singular that in all thy interviews with these, thy chosen prophets in all the communications thou hadst occasion to make to them of thy secret will and purposes, thou didst not at any time give them the slightest intimation that thou hadst a partner or counterpart, by name, Holy Ghost?

Is it not very singular that thou shouldst have deemed it necessary to keep this important matter entirely hidden from all thy patriarchs, judges, kings, rulers, prophets, and priests, down to the time of Joseph? Hadst thou a good reason for keeping this great fact from all thy chosen servants? and if so, what was it? If thou hadst no reason to the contrary, why didst thou not impart the information to them? Was it because the Holy Ghost was unknown to thyself even till less than two thousand years ago?

As the name of the Holy Ghost is not even mentioned till the time of Joseph, is it not possible that Joseph dreamed him out at the same time that he dreamed out the paternity of Jesus? If he was not the creation of Joseph's dream, was he not, at all events the creation of the party who invented the story or who wrote it? Is not rather, Jehovah, the whole theory of the Trinity—three persons in one—an idea or myth borrowed by the early Christian Church, not from Judaism or anything that is in the older part of the Bible, but from the older pagan mythologies of India, Egypt, Persia, Greece, and many other heathen countries? Did not the Brahmins have their trinity—Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva? Had not Egypt her Osiris, Isis, and Typhon? Had not Persia or Chaldea her Ormuzd, Mithra, and Ahrimanes? Had not the Grecians their multifarious deities, especially their trias, one, two, and three? Did not Plato teach a trinity long before Christianity had birth? Inasmuch, then, as thy ancient prophets and patriarchs knew nothing of any personage being connected with thee in forming a trinity, does it not look much as though after the idea of a son was entertained, the third person was also added to make up the regular trinity and to correspond with the popular systems of mythology then in vogue in the Eastern world? Under all the circumstances, is not the supposition that the Holy Ghost is a myth—a mere invention of the human mind—a very natural one to be entertained? Is not the Christian absurdity that "one is three and three are one" utterly impossible for any being to comprehend unless he is a lunatic or of unsound mind?

Is it not a historical fact that nothing definite was known or believed about the existence of the Holy Ghost as a personality until late in the fourth century (381) at the Council of Constantinople, when for the first time in the history of the Christian Church, the doctrine of his personality was adopted as a dogma? Was not this after fifty years of fierce contention among the bishops of thy church as to whether thy son was consubstantial with thyself—whether he was the same being with thyself, or a separate personality?

Were not thirty-eight councils held to settle the vexed question of whether thyself and son were one person or two? Did not nineteen of these councils decide with Arius that thy son was not thyself, not equal in age, power, and majesty? and did not nineteen of the councils decide with Athanasius that thy son was equal to thyself and was thyself? Was there not great bitterness and contention at these councils of the bishops of the church in disputing this question? and did not the bishops bring soldiers with them to aid them by force of arms to maintain their views and to put down opposition by military power? Had the quarrelling, fighting bishops any better facilities for knowing about thy personality than had thy patriarchs and prophets who saw thee face to face, back to back, and face to back, and who held converse with thee almost daily?

Was it not until after this warfare had raged fully fifty years that the personality of the Holy Ghost was first adopted? Previous to that time had not the Holy Ghost been regarded as breath? Is not the word in Greek which is translated Ghost, pneuma, which literally means wind or breath?

So is not the doctrine of the Son really older than that of the Holy Ghost? Is it not true, therefore, that the son is older than the Holy Ghost?

Is it not true that although the council of 381 assumed to adopt the personality of the Holy Ghost as a dogma, it did not become the accepted faith of the Church for more than one hundred years afterward?—and was it not by brute force that the doctrine was established?

Is it not true that the famous passage in 1 John, v., 7, "There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one," and which has so often been quoted as proof of the existence of the Holy Ghost, is not found in any Greek manuscript of the New Testament earlier than the fifteenth century? Is it not true also that it is found in no Latin manuscript of the New Testament earlier than the ninth century? Is it not true that the passage is found in none of the ancient versions? Is it not true that it was not cited by any of the Greek ecclesiastical writers in the earlier Christian centuries? Is it not true that it was not cited by any of the early Latin authors, even when the subject upon which it bears was under discussion? Was it not first cited by Virgilius Tapsensis, a Latin writer of little credit, in the latter end of the fifteenth century, by whom it was probably invented?

Is not the passage referred to an absolute, out-and-out forgery. Is it not the basest kind of fraud to palm off that spurious quotation, the production of some zealous Athanasian, as thy word, or as part of the original version of the New Testament? Is it not upon this kind of manufactured testimony alone that the existence of the Holy Ghost as a personality rests? Is it not a sad commentary upon the intelligence of the human race that they have been so easily duped and "bamboozled" by such evidence as this?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

What I Don't Believe.—No. 21.

201. I do not believe that what are called prophecies, and which have been made upon various subjects, are any more reliable or truthful than those already alluded to touching the advent of a Messiah into the world. Like those of the latter class, they are usually vague and indefinite, and when they are definite or minute they have very rarely been verified by the events which afterwards transpired. If they are closely examined, they fail to bear out the great claims that have been advanced by theologians in their behalf, and they certainly fall short in sustaining the claims for the infallibility of the Bible and of its divine origin which have been so vigorously made on the grounds of the prophecies.

202. I do not believe that the prophecies made by Isaiah and Jeremiah respecting Babylon have ever been fulfilled. The former says: "And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation; neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there; but wild beasts of the desert shall lie there and their homes shall be full of doleful creatures, and owls shall dwell there and satyrs shall dance there. And the wild beast of the islands shall cry out in their desolate houses and dragons in their pleasant places; and her time is near to come, and her days shall not be prolonged" (Isa. xiii. 19-22).

Jeremiah states the coming destruction of Babylon in these words: "And it shall come to pass when seventy years are accomplished (the Jewish captivity) that I will punish the king of Babylon, and that nation, saith the Lord, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolation" (Jer. xxv. 12).

"As God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah and the neighbor cities thereof, saith the Lord, so shall no man abide there, neither shall any son of man dwell therein" (Jer. L. 40).

To show how far these prophecies are from being truthful, how far they fall short of showing a divine paternity, it is only necessary to quote a few facts in history. These will show that the site of Babylon did not become desolate and uninhabited, that the Arabians did pitch their tents there, and instead of its not being inhabited from generation to generation, and no one dwelling there, it was inhabited generation after generation and century after century.

Layard, in his celebrated work, "Nineveh and Babylon," which is regarded of the very highest authority, thus gives the most reliable testimony: "After the defeat of Darius and the overthrow of the Persian supremacy, Babylon opened her gates to Alexander, who deemed the city not unworthy to become the capital of his mighty empire (p. 451). "The last blow to the prosperity and even existence of Babylon was given by Seleucus, when he laid the foundation of his new capital on the banks of the Tigris (B. C., 322). Only a few Chaldeans continued to dwell around the ruins of the sacred edifices. Still, however, a part of the population appears to have returned to their former seats, for in the second century we find the Parthian king, Evemerus, sending numerous families from Babylon into Media, to be sold as slaves, and burning many great and beautiful edifices still standing in the city" (p. 455).

"In the time of Augustus the city is said to have been entirely deserted, except by a few Jews who still lingered among the ruins. Amid the heaps that marked the site of ancient Babylon herself there arose (in the seventh century) the small town of Hillah" (p. 455). "Hillah may contain about eight or ten thousand inhabitants. A few half-ruined mosques and public baths are its principal buildings. Its bazaar supplies the desert Arabs with articles of clothing, arms, dates, coffee, corn, and contains a few Manchester goods and English cutlery—around the town and above and below it for some miles, are groves and palm trees, forming a broad belt on both sides of the river" (p. 452).

"Hillah, like most towns in this part of Turkey, is peopled by Arabs once belonging to different tribes, but not forgetting their clanship, in a sedentary life. They maintain, however, a friendly intercourse with the Bedouins, and with the wild inhabitants of the Marshes" (p. 417).

"From the summit of Birs Nimroud I gazed upon a vast marsh, for Babylon is made 'a possession for the bitter and pools of water.' In the midst of the swamps could be plainly distinguished the mat huts of the Kazail, forming villages on the small islands. The green morass was spotted with flocks of the black buffalo. The Arab settlements showed the activity of a hive of bees" (p. 427).

It thus appears that the city which was to be destroyed, whose end was near, whose days, it was declared, should not be prolonged, which was to become a perpetual desolation, never to be inhabited nor dwelt in from generation to generation, where the Arab was never to pitch his tent even, was a large and important city hundreds of years afterwards; that Alexander essayed to found his capital there, and that it declined gradually until the third century in the Christian era when it contained numerous inhabitants and a great many beautiful residences still standing. That at a later date, Hillah, a town of ten thousand inhabitants, arose on the site. Really, if such a prophecy as that requires divine aid to get it up, it would seem hardly worth while for Divinity to put himself to the trouble to manufacture it. Hundreds of common men and women have made far more truthful predictions.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Science Hall.

On Sunday evening last T. B. Wakeman completed his course of instructive lectures before the Society of Humanity, upon the "History of Morals" by devoting an hour to the consideration of the morals of the present and future. In surveying the ground already gone over he repeated that the morals of a people were their habits and customs and that in all the past ages they have kept pace with the degree of civilization attained. The civilization that has been the characteristic of the nations of the past has been closely connected with their religion, their labor and their loves. Their religion has given an impetus, an object, and has led them on to do what they have accomplished. When the nations lost faith in their religion, their purposes became aimless. The nation which once dwelt on the plains of Africa, in the valley of the Nile had receded and gone back and almost ceased to exist, and because it lost its faith, it no longer believed in its religion. The inhabitants of the Grecian Isles and the Grecian cities long since ceased to be great because Polytheism became an impossibility and they lost faith in it. The great Roman nation had failed for the same reason, it lost its faith. The great Christian nations of the earth are destined to the same result and are even now passing through the change: they have lost their faith; their religion is dead.

But a religion will rise up that will be better, more glorious, more enduring, more beneficial to the human race than all that has preceded it—the Religion of Humanity—a religion not devoted to an imaginary unknown being above the stars, but to the great body of humanity, who, despite oceans, mountains and rivers, are brothers and sisters, members of one great family, having interests and objects in common. The religion of humanity is to be a practical faith and one that will not become antiquated and ineffective.

The morals of the present and the future will direct the labors and loves of the race. A radical change will be produced. While in the religions and morals of the past the rule has been the life and the services of the many have been sacrificed for the few. The few have been the masters; the many have been slaves. Kings and priests have been the rulers of the earth and the masses have been their vassals and have devoted their lives to sustain and defend them.

In the morals and the religion of the future the services of the few are to be devoted to the many. The effect will not be to elevate a small number above the rest and give them service and worship, but to elevate and benefit the many. The few—the talented, the able among the race—will give their service and their life to elevate and benefit the masses. This principle will control the system of labor and wages. The many will not work and toil for the benefit of the few, but all shall be the recipients of the benefits derived. A few shall not own and subject the many, but such changes shall take place that the rights and interest of the many shall be subserved. Great changes and reformations must take place in this direction, and when effected, toilers will no longer have to work twelve, fourteen and sixteen hours a day for a mere existence, but six hours of labor per day will be sufficient to secure the comforts of life, and the balance of the time can be devoted to improvement and pleasure.

He dwelt at some length upon the subject of capital, labor and wages, after which he passed to the consideration of what the loves of the future will be. He looked to the day when an elevating love between the sexes should be the governing influence with the race; when prostitution in all its forms, whether it consisted in the yielding the person for a given time for a nominal price, or whether by the mumbling of a priest a life-long prostitute is made of the person of the victim, should be no more. He anticipated a day when love would be free and pure—not free in the objectional sense of lawlessness and promiscuity, but in the higher, purer sense, which, while it recognizes the nobler impulses of our natures, equally disregards the fetters of conventionality and the bonds forged by the priest and the bigot. The distinctive feature of the love of the future will be PURITY. It will be happyfying, refining and ennobling in its nature, and will not drag human beings down in chains, misery and wretchedness.

"There is nothing so good as the new.
There is nothing so poor as the old.
Better the morning's silvery dew
Than the evening's river of gold,
Better, a thousand fold."

THE ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF, by Viscount Amberley.—One of the greatest works of the century, and eminently the book for thinkers and enquirers, is now ready for sending out to patrons. Those who have bespoken a copy, and have not remitted the price, are requested to make such remittance without delay, to help pay the bills that have been incurred in bringing it out. Those who have not yet bespoken a copy are earnestly requested to do so. We assure every one that a mistake will not be made in buying a copy of Lord Amberley. Price, $3.00 in cloth; $4.00 in leather, with red, burnished edges; $4.50 in morocco, with gilt edges. Sent, post-paid, by mail, at these prices. The price is very low; just one-fifth that of the London edition.

JOHN A. LANT.—A communication bearing upon the case of this person will be found upon the next page. We are sure our readers will be glad that even at this late day Mr. Lant has been pardoned out of the prison to which he was so unjustly and so cruelly sentenced. Why he was not favored with this pardon before is difficult to understand. Probably the powers at Washington were too busily engaged in political affairs to give attention to a man who was condemned to prison for committing no crime. Mr. Lant returns to his family in impaired health and with no money. He finds his family also out of money and all of the little comforts which make a home cheerful. Here is a good opportunity for the exercise of that species of Liberalism which characterizes the generous soul. Mr. Lant's address is 626 Sixth avenue, New York.

PHOTOGRAPHS.—We once more thank the kind friends who have sent us their pictures. It is with pleasure that every one is received, and we gladly add them to our growing collection. May we still ask those who have not sent us their pictures to be kind enough to do so? We wish to have one of every reader, every patron, and every friend. We wish to get up the biggest collection of Liberal or Infidel faces in the country. We will send any picture in our list in exchange. If any fail to receive them they will please advise us and we will try again. Come, friends, send along your pictures.

WE have just received at the office of THE TRUTH SEEKER a fresh supply of "The New Gospel of Health," by Dr. Stone, comprising both the cheap edition and the magnificently bound volume. The work possesses intrinsic merit, and should be in the hands of everybody that desires health—and who does not?

A SHORT SERMON ON MANLINESS.—Learn from your earliest days to endure your principles against the perils of ridicule; you can no more exercise your reason if you live in the constant dread of laughter, than you can enjoy your life, if you are in constant terror of death. If you think it right to differ from the times, and to make a point of morals, do it, however rustic, however antiquated, however pedantic it may appear, do it, not for insolence, but seriously and grandly—as a man who wore a soul of his own in his bosom, and did not wait till it was breathed into him by the breath of fashion.—Sidney Smith.

THE LAUGH OF WOMEN.—A woman has no natural gift more bewitching than a sweet laugh. It is like the sound of flutes on the water. It leaps from her in a clear, sparkling rill, and the heart that hears it feels as if bathed in the cool, exhilarating spring. Have you ever pursued a fugitive through trees, led on by a fairy laugh—now there, now lost, now found? We have, and we are pursuing that wandering voice to this day. Sometimes it comes to us in the midst of care or sorrow, or irksome business, and then we turn away the evil spirit of mind. How much we owe to that sweet laugh! It turns prose to poetry; it brings sunshine to flowers, over the darkness of the wood in which we are traveling; it touches with light even our sleep, which is no more than the image of death, but is consumed with beams that are the shadows of immortality.

A poor man who had a large family gave them a very comfortable living while he was in health. But he broke his leg and was laid up for some weeks. As he would be some time destitute of the means of grace, it was proposed to hold a prayer-meeting at his house. The meeting was led by Deacon Brown. A loud knock at the door interrupted the service. A tall, lank, blue-frocked youngster stood at the door, with an ox goad in his hand, and asked to see Deacon Brown. "Father could not attend this meeting," he said, "but he sent his prayers, and they are out in the cart." They were brought in, in the shape of potatoes, beef, pork, and corn. The meeting broke up without the benediction.

A Martyr out of Prison.

MR. EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: The friends of John A. Lant will be gratified to learn that he has just been released, by pardon, from the Albany Penitentiary, and is now with his family at 626 5th Avenue, New York. This is only about three weeks in advance of the expiration of his term of sentence. Although Mr. Lant had been confined to the hospital department for about five months before his discharge, he is now looking very well, although in a debilitated condition, and suffering considerably from confinement in an apartment with deficient ventilation. Mr. Lant contemplates the preparation and publication of the history of his case—if sufficient encouragement be given—including his incarceration in Ludlow street jail, and his observations and experiences of over fourteen months in the Albany Penitentiary, and trusts the friends of legal and prison reform will come promptly forward and aid him in this very laudable work, as he has much information to give that is highly interesting and of great importance, revealing the true internal workings of an institution reputed to be a model prison.

You will excuse me for repeating what I said more than a year since, which I believe will be substantially verified, that although John A. Lant was not large of stature, he would nevertheless prove to be a very large prisoner of state—his size being estimated in proportion to the amount of truth he will be able to publish bearing upon the question of prison discipline and the wrongs inflicted upon the unfortunate criminal, to say nothing of those convicted and imprisoned who are innocent. Again, when the case of Mr. Lant and Dr. Foote together with many others have been fully presented and understood by the public, it will appear to all not devoid of comprehension, that the so-called "society for the suppression of vice," judging from its practical workings, should be called "a society for the infliction of wrong, persecution, injustice and downright infernalism—all through the manifestation of zeal without knowledge, and in the name of Law, Religion, the Young Men's Christian Association and Modern Calvinism. Yours for Justice.

A. S. DAVIS.

New York, March 11, 1877.

Evans' Anniversary.

The third annual celebration of the memory of George Henry Evans and of the Land Reform movement will be held at the residence of Dr. C. S. Weeks, 107 East 28th Street, on Sunday afternoon March 25, at 2 o'clock. The meeting will be addressed by Thomas Ainge Devyr, John Comberford, J. K. Ingalls, Wm. Rowe, H. Beeny, H. Shepherd, Prof. E. Hume, C. S. Weeks, D. M. Bennett, S. H. Preston, E. Newberry, Louis Masquerier, and others. By order of Executive Committee of Land Reform Association.

The Toronto Convention.

SALAMANCA, March 10, 1877.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER—I notice the Free-thinkers of Canada are to hold a mass convention at Toronto on April 14th and days following, to which a general invitation is extended to Liberals of the United States. And will you allow me to say that as Toronto is but a short distance from Buffalo, the Free-thinkers of western New York and western Pennsylvania should be well represented at that convention. Possibly we Liberals of this vicinity may get an inspiration at that convention that shall stimulate us to hold a similar one in western New York.

H. L. GREEN.

THE BETTER GUIDE.—On the evening of Sunday, 4th inst., in Paine Hall, Boston, Mr. W. S. Bell lectured on the following subject: "Which is the better guide for human conduct, Common Sense or the Moody Religion?" There was a goodly audience of ladies and gentlemen present who were evidently much interested in the views advanced. The lecturer discussed both parts of his subject in an able and instructive manner. The origin and nature of religion or theology was dwelt upon; it had its source in human weakness, ignorance, and superstition, and its career has also been marked with bigotry, persecution, and political tyranny. On the other hand, Common Sense had prepared the way for philosophers, reformers, and men of science, the Huxleys, Darwins, Spencers, etc. It had given to mankind Liberalism, Free-thought, and free speech; instructed the race in the duties they owe to themselves and to each other here and now, in this world, and therefore was a far better guide for human conduct than the superstitious vagaries of the Moody religion. The lecture was a very good one, and gave the highest satisfaction to the hearers. Mr. Bell is an excellent laborer in the Liberal vineyard, and we confidently recommend him to the attention and patronage of Liberal societies.—Investigator.

Friendly Correspondence.

LUCY A. MORGAN, East Golden, Mich., writes: I am a Spiritualist, but think your paper is capable of doing more good than any other paper I ever read. Your "Interrogatories to Jehovah" and "What I Don't Believe" are perfect eye-openers. I am particularly interested in the Descent-Theory. I have, ever since I was capable of thinking, accepted the development theory.

JAS. A. REED, Virginia City, Nev., writes: It has been through reading your columns, Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" and kindred works that I have been enabled to get my eyes well opened to the great truths of Science and Philosophy. Like thousands of others, I have been blinded by the errors and myths taught me in early life in an orthodox community in Ohio; but every copy of your paper I read discloses to me new paths of light and truth which I am happy in following. I cannot be without your paper and be happy.

JOHN L. FORD, Independence, Oregon, writes: I am well pleased with the "Underwood-Marples Debate." I think Mr. Marples argued his second proposition much abler than he did his first, but neither successfully. His "design argument" is a failure—very poorly handled, in fact. Mr. Underwood's third speech is a masterly effort; an argument I should like to see Braden, Ditzler, or some competent man meet if they can. Prof. Campbell, of Mammoth Cave, can make an abler defense of the God and Bible question than did Mr. Marples. If Mr. Underwood visits this state during the summer, possibly he may have an opportunity to meet Mr. Campbell again in debate. Our Christian friends round here feel sanguine that the Prof. can "demolish Underwood again," as they say. We Infidels slightly differ from this opinion, and shall use our best efforts to bring about a debate.

DANIEL MASON, Brooklyn, writes: Having carefully perused one volume of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I am gratified in being able to state that I think it a very valuable journal, particularly in its unanswerable course in regard to sectarianism, and the Bible. Its columns are generally furnished with something of a scientific character, interesting and instructive. The subject at present under consideration (Evolution) is, in regard to the future of the race, highly important. Materialists have ever considered Nature in her operations as capable of producing all forms, vegetable, or animal; the fossils of which are found imbedded in the earth's crust, and the theory of the first vegetable or animal form found, being the type of a higher and the second a type of the third, and so onward and ever progressing, until having attained to the development of human intelligence, is I believe universally accepted by Geological investigators. But at this point, the question suggests itself. Does the theory of types continue? Is man the type of a being in the scale of existence, higher than himself? Or is he earth's ultimate product, further development tending to perfection of the lung, physically and mentally, constituting him a spiritual or immortal being. At this point, I conclude my article desiring to convey the idea, that man's existence continues after the death of the physical body. That he is intrinsically an immortal being; that he is so per force of development, and not by divine agency.

JOHN WARR, Patterson, N. J., writes: I want to tell you how much I approve of the new feature in your paper. I refer to the reports of your Sunday visits to the different places where Liberal speakers hold forth. These can not help but be interesting to those who are prevented by various causes from visiting such places; hence I think it a good feature, a decided improvement, and I approve of it ever so much. So I hope that your health and time will permit you to keep on with it. I also desire to state that I have read that very excellent and charming little story, "John's Way," by Mrs. Slenker. Its style is well calculated for the dissemination of Liberal principles and ideas, and it should be in the hands of all Liberals for distribution. I believe it has been put in pamphlet form for that purpose, and at a cheap rate. Let all who can afford it send in their orders for as many as they can conveniently distribute. We owe this not only as a duty to ourselves but to the publisher and writer. Let them see that their noble efforts are appreciated by us all, and then they will be encouraged to go on in the good work. I am very anxious to see Haeckel's articles on the Descent-Theory published in book form, and I have no doubt there are others so too, but in order to have all these good things our friend must be encouraged by our purchases to the extent of our means.

D. R. BURT, Dunleith, Ill., writes: I have been some time about on a business tour, as well as visiting and healing, after the order of Jesus Christ, except that portion of damning those who would not receive and believe, and find but little occasion to use the last cursing appliance, either as a disciple of D. M. Bennett or my healing gifts. I could relate a multitude of those pleasing incidents of relieving those suffering from the painful afflictions usually met, and the surprise and satisfaction expressed on immediate relief. It is an amusement and a pleasure to me. I have become so attached or infatuated that I prize and enjoy it highly. Not a single case have I met in the last thirty days but yielded as readily as could be desired. I sometimes stop for four or five days where I find a patient afflicted with a chronic disease, and in harmony with my temperament, to experiment and more fully reduce this practice to a science. In my last journey I found a lady suffering with the salt rheum, and for the last three weeks could not do house-work, or even sleep nights much of the time. I stopped five days, and left her perfectly cured. Another case, of lung fever, the patient was given over to die. And when I first saw the little girl I was thus impressed. The high state of congestion, the torpid and utter prostration of the patient left but little to hope for. I soon found I could reach her, and entered upon the case for two days with a determination and sympathy seldom reached, and left her restored, or sitting up and convalescent, and a joyful household. One more case, and I am done with this boring. I turned my attention upon a patient more than a mile distant, and in five minutes it fell into a sound sleep for two hours.

A LADY patron in—Penn., who prefers not to have her name given, writes: I am sorry my husband has not been able to renew his subscription for your paper up to this time. But it is the same old story you have heard so many times of late, hard times and little work. You are very kind in continuing to send the paper.

I feel as if we could not get along without it, and you need have no fear but you will receive the pay for it just as soon as the wolf keeps far enough from the door to allow us to think of something else. You are doing a noble work, and ought to be sustained by every honest-minded person. I often wish I had means to help you a little. But I hope and trust that all who have will give willingly, remembering the many subscribers you have who are too poor to give any help. I notice that some of your Spiritualistic friends seem to think you ought to come out boldly in favor of their belief. I, for one, think you are quite right in not doing so, at least, until you are perfectly convinced in your own mind, and have given the subject thought. You are not the kind to jump at conclusions, I am glad to say. Now I will tell you one reason why I don't believe in Spiritualism. When I was six years old my father and mother died, leaving a family of six little children. Up to that time we had a happy, comfortable home; our mother was the most devoted of mothers, but when she was gone our home was broken up, and her little children, that never knew a care, were separated from each other inside of a year, and did not meet again until they were young men and women grown. We were often unkindly, and sometimes cruelly, treated, and I need not tell you of the many heart-broken days I have known in my childhood, or when a child, and lay suffering on a sick bed, in my dreams calling and crying for the dear, good mother whom death had taken from me. But she never came, although my very soul yearned for one sign, one look, or word. I never got. I am sure my mother would have appeared if she could, and that without the assistance of a third person, or medium. I think you are right in not giving much of your valuable time to spirits in another world, while there is so much substantial work already on your hands for the good of this. The departed ones cannot help you to ten or twenty dollars when you need it; you must depend on hard work for that.

PROF. H. C. POWELL, Virden, Ill., sends the following from the San Francisco Post about a clerical adulterer, and also gives the subjoined remarks:

"ANOTHER MINISTER TROUBLED WITH TRUE INWARDNESS.—R. F. Parshall, pastor of the Vallejo Baptist Church, has been called upon to resign his charge, owing to an imputation of immoral conduct preferred against him by a female member of his congregation. His accuser is a widow in poor circumstances, but a person of unsullied character. She has sworn to the particulars of the reverend libertine's advances before a notary public. R. F. Parshall appears to be peculiarly unfitted for the sacred office which he assumes, having been expelled from the Oakland Baptist Church in 1874, for 'lascivious conduct, and language indicating lascivious intent.' He next figured at Healdsburg, which became too hot to hold him, and now he turns up at Vallejo, where he brings disgrace upon the Christian ministry. Parshall is a married man, and lives with his wife."

I am acquainted with the above-named clergyman. Rev. R. F. Parshall is well known in this city; he came here a few years ago and conducted a first-class revival. Many poor, blind, and sin-sick souls found their Savior and drank the blood of Christ until they cried out in their fullness, "Lord, Lord, I am thine and thou art mine." This revival continued until the church book was fairly groaning under the names of nearly two hundred and fifty yahoos who had been warmed up and snatched from the clutches of old Splitfoot. While the revival was at boiling point, some kind friend sent me a pamphlet of particulars concerning Parshall's frequent love affairs while he scattered "heavenly bread" at Sandy Hill, N. Y., and other places where the good Lord had seen fit to set him up in the soul-saving trade. At the time I received this pamphlet of particulars I was the proprietor of Ut's Opera House of this city. I at once assembled a few friends, and the contents of the pamphlet of particulars was soon made manifest to them. They were very much surprised, and some of the gentlemen were inclined to look upon the revelations of the evening as a put up job to injure the Rev. revivalist. So we finally agreed to say but little about it and leave the matter with the good Lord and the members of the Baptist Church of Virden, who were particularly interested in this good man of God. The Rev. gentleman remained with us about two months, and then, after filling up his purse with $600 of repentant yahoos' hard-earned wages, he returned to Green Co., Illinois, where he had previously acted—so report says—badly. Green county became too warm for him, so he skipped off to the country and land of gold, where he has made himself as notorious as he was in the palmiest days of his Sandy Hill exploits.

DR. D. HIGBIE, Mungerville, Mich., writes: Although times are somewhat close for money, I feel that every lover of Free-thought should aid you with pen and money, whether Liberal, Spiritualist, or Free Religionist, all who would aid in the emancipation of the human mind and from the most blighting, debasing, and stultifying dogmas of the self-styled orthodox churches of the present day. Think of it, dwell upon it ye unfettered men and women all over this broad and glorious land. 63,000 priests of all stamps and grades puffing and blowing into the faces of 40,000,000 of people the stale and mouldy myths of ignorant and barbarous nations and races, such as the fall of Adam for eating an apple, and causing death and damnation to strike through and penetrate every lineage and tissue of the entire race, and gangs of crafty devils dorging every footstep to entrap him. Salvation proffered through the blood of bulls, rams, and heifers, and when the parties got sick of this carnage and stench, and had stultified themselves low enough, proffered the blood of a God to smash up the consequences of sin, to stave off and wipe out all penalties of law in heaven, earth, and hell, if people would drink his blood and become tame and stupid slaves and never use their reason and help damn and destroy all who do. Thanks to common sense, all do not teach these soul-debasing dogmas. Only believe everything in theology that defies reason, physiology, and common sense, shut your eyes and stop your ears and run square against the impregnable bulwarks of nature's magnificent structures and fortifications, in the eyes of the initiated ye are glorious martyrs. Only stretch your credulity wide enough to believe that you can violate every law of your being, intellectual, moral, social, and organic, and when you are bankrupt in every quality that constitutes true and noble manhood, then stop and confess in meeting, and say, "I believe."

There is a fountain filled with blood
Drawn from Immanuel's veins,
And sinners plunged beneath that flood Lose all their guilty stains."

and you will escape the penalty of violated laws, and swing to the highest seats in the glory world. Can there be a higher premium offered to crime of every grade and color? Under the blighting and demoralizing influences of this doctrine, intemperance, licentiousness, gambling, political strategy, oppression, injustice and fraud, theological lust, seduction, lying, misrepresenting every discovery that will not play toady at their shrine, and so on through the entire range of human wrongs and misdirection; and yet all indulge in the vain hope that they can escape the penalty of infringing the institutes of nature by penitence and being washed in the blood of a God. How much better to teach all young and old, that they cannot break one law of nature, but if they run against any law it will break them, and the only safety is to find out her beneficent rules and obey them as a sure guarantee to happiness or run counter to them and take the pain, remorse, sickness and decay, until they return to obedience, out-grow in body and spirit the wounds their own hands have inflicted. This is the only gospel of safety to a priest-ridden world. Think of it, 63,000 priests in the United States. Suppose on a low average four persons constitute the family of every priest, making a standing army of 252,000 to be paid, clothed, donated, and fed; and then having the insolence to ask the government to exempt from taxation their $400,000,000 worth of church property and their sectarian colleges, schools, and grounds. No wonder want, starvation, strikes, and wretchedness haunt millions. Liberals, Spiritualists, reformers of every grade, awake, "strike till the last armed foe expires." Take THE TRUTH SEEKER. Send for Bennett's books and tracts, read and circulate them, and help beat back the tide of ignorance and superstition.

PROF. J. EDWIN CHURCHILL, from Jacksonville, Fla., writes: In answer to the many letters I am daily in receipt of, I would say to all the readers of your excellent paper that I am entirely pleased with the climate here, and since I have attended the State Fair at this place, I think more favorably of the agricultural productions and general resources of the State than before. Land is to be had here at Government prices, either from the United States (further south) or from the State. Like all new countries, speculators abound, but when I go farther south I will write more definitely and fully about farming, gardening, and sheep and cattle-raising. Skilled workmen and educated mechanics can always carve out a home and a place. The brethren whom we desire to join us need but small capital and a good deal of industry and perseverance. The richest hammocks will need grubbing, and it takes a good deal of muscle and will-power to dig up the live oak roots and the pitch pine stumps. But we have one great advantage over the North and West—we can work every day of the year in the open air. Again, cattle, sheep, and goats subsist and with a little feeding can be kept the whole year round. The native crab grass which springs up after each crop, can be gathered in sufficient quantities to supply all the demands of every farmer or gardener. The range is good the whole year for stock—cattle, sheep and goats. Corn, oats, peas, and especially sugar-cane and rice, yield a large quantity of forage and will make manure to fill all the needs of a fertilizer. Oranges, lemons, citrons, bananas, guavas and limes will come to bearing in about five years from planting. There is ready market for everything you can raise, either to new corners or in the cities, from our own little city of Jacksonville to New York. The question is often asked, What business is best? I would say, every kind (except getting ice) that is followed with energy and vim. Then, again, I would say to all true men and women who wish a home in a community, write me, and from time to time I shall extend my own knowledge of all needed information, and send it to you through the Liberal press. When you get ready to come bring no heavy luggage like furniture, for we have the finest woods in the world to make it of. We can make all we need. Come with as few things as you can, for we propose to employ every one in their own way to supply our needs. We propose to have a saw and grist-mill, a carriage and blacksmith-shop, in fact, every kind of industry which will be needed in a new settlement. Our power will be of necessity steam, as there are but few streams for water-power. Our object first will be to supply necessity, and every one to be self-supporting, every family owning their own home, without the incubus of debt, and all who can helping those who need their fraternal advice or assistance. Then all who can may prepare to come next Fall, the earlier the better, before the rainy season, or the first of January. All who, when they write, send stamp, I will answer personally as soon as I find time, as I desire to form the acquaintance by letter of as many Free-thinkers as see fit to write me, so I may call on them in my lecturing tour this coming Summer. I desire especially to correspond with some musical people of our faith with a view of establishing a Harmonic Society as soon as possible when we are settled in our new homes. Collect your best books and music and choice works of art, especially rare and valuable curiosities in Nature of your own localities, so we may have a museum to instruct the young. We propose to issue a Liberal paper as soon as we find the right man who is willing to work with us. We desire to have Europeans, in fact, all kinds of foreigners, so that we can be able to profit by the united experience brought from all parts. We will locate on some bay, river or inlet, so we can be able to have a steam vessel to carry and bring what we have to dispose of or need. So as soon as we are able we can bring our own people either from New York, New Orleans, or even from Europe, at our own prices. So we may be able to buy and sell to avoid the perquisites of middle-men. To all invalids (Liberals) I would say, we propose, to have a Hygienic Home (in fact, we expect all to study the laws of health) where they can come and spend the Winter; in fact, stop as long as they find it to their interest and pleasure, at fair co-operation prices. More anon.

Special Notices.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygienic Home is a Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

WANTED.—A young man of liberal mind wants to correspond with an infidel or Atheist lady. A strong-minded and strong-bodied woman, not under twenty nor above twenty-five years of age. Address "The Man who Laughs," Box 52, Seymour, Wis.

WANTED.—AN EXPERIENCED NURSE and house-keeper with approved morals, active, intelligent, and of sufficient age to give character to a Hygienic Institute. Would prefer a lady wishing treatment and board for impaired health, with a view to the position after it is restored. Address J. S. Lyons, M. D., Springfield, Mo.

Dr. J. W. PALMER, formerly of Manchester Hospital, London, England, cures Catarrh, Throat Affection, Bronchitis, and Consumption, Also, a speedy cure for Opium and Morphine Habits, and a Desire for Strong Drink. Price for medicines for any of the above $5.00. A certain Cure for Tobacco Using $1.00, all by mail. Send money at my risk. Address, Dr. J. W. PALMER, Cleveland, Ohio.

CORRESPONDENCE WANTED.—A young man in good physical and intellectual health wishes to engage in correspondence with rationalistic young ladies in a similar healthy condition, between twenty and twenty-five years of age. Defenders of their sex, advocates of Freethought, and those willing to be active co-workers in the reforms of the present and future, especially those pertaining to the vital interests of their sex, preferred. Address PHILIP G. CENNON, 518 Minneapolis, Minn.

To The Afflicted Everywhere.

If you are sick and wish to procure the services of a reliable and skillful physician, it would be well to write to Dr. R. P. Fellows, whose charges will not exceed from $5 to $12 for a thorough treatment of the Head, Throat, Lungs, Heart, Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, Bladder, Bowels, Womb, Genital Organs, or Rheumatic or Neuralgic Difficulties, or Eruptions of the skin, Blood Impurities, Tumors, Cancers, or any Nervous Affections, or Diseases of the Eye or Ear. The Doctor's warranted cure for Spermatorrhoea should be in the hands of those suffering from this life-wasting disease. It is an external application, and has made 800 permanent cures. Address Vineland, N. J.

A Valuable Home Book for Women.

TALKS TO MY PATIENTS

HINTS ON GETTING WELL AND KEEP-ING WELL.

BY MRS. R. B. GLEASON.

Table of Contents:

Growing Girls; Menstruation; Amenorrhoea; Menorrhagia; Dysmenorrhoea; Prolapsus Uteri; Leucorrhoea; Pregnancy; Approaching Confinement; Delivery; After Delivery; care of the Breasts; After Confinement; Bathing of Babies; Dress of Infants; Nursing; Weaning; Feeding of Infants; Infantile Diseases; Diseases of Children; Children's Dress; Confidential to Mothers; Intentional Abortion; Accidental Abortion; Sterility; Nervous Derangements; Sleep; Indigestion; Constipation; Menopause, or Change of Life.

It is a most Valuable Work and should be in the hands of every Lady.

Price, $1.50 by mail. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

Eating for Strength.

A NEW HEALTH COOKERY BOOK

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Which should be in the hands of every person who would eat to retain and regain health, strength and beauty. It contains, besides the science of eating and one hundred answers to questions which most people are anxious to know, nearly one hundred pages devoted to the best healthful recipes for foods and drinks, how to feed one's self, feeble babies and delicate children so as to get the best bodily development. Mothers who do not nurse their children will find full directions for feeding them, and so will mothers who have delicate children, and invalids who wish to know the best foods.

Price, $1, postage free.

For sale wholesale and retail by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319 6th Ave., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters P. O. Box 4229 New York City.

PARTURITION WITHOUT PAIN.

EDITED BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M. D.

Editor of the Herald of Health.

CONTENTS:

1. Healthfulness of Child-Bearing.
 2. Dangers of Preventions.
 3. Medical Opinions as to escaping Pain.
 4. Preparation for Maternity.
 5. Exercise during Pregnancy.
 6. The Sitz Bathing and Bathing generally.
 7. What Food to Eat and what to Avoid.
 8. The Mind during Pregnancy.
 9. The Ailments of Pregnancy and their Remedies.
 10. Female Physician, Anæsthetics.
- To which are added:
1. The Husband's Duty to his Wife.
 2. Best age for Bearing Children.
 3. Shall sickly people become Parents?
 4. Small Families.
 5. Importance of Physiological Adaptation of Husband and Wife.
 6. Celibacy.
 7. Effects of Tobacco on Offspring.
 8. Latest Discoveries as to the determining the sex of Offspring.
 9. Father's vs. Mother's Influence on the Child.
 10. Shall Pregnant Women Work?
 11. Effects of Intellectual Activity on number of offspring.
 12. Size of Pelvis, and its relation to healthful Parturition, etc., etc.

What is said about "Parturition without Pain."

Godley's Lady's Book says: "We give our cordial approbation to this work, and would like to see it in the hands of every mother in the land. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable."

Price, by mail, $1.00, Address

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth Street, N. Y.

Sexual Physiology.

BY R. T. TRALL, M.D.

This work contains the latest and most important discoveries in the Anatomy and Physiology of the Sexes; Explains the Origin of Human Life; How and when Menstruation, Impregnation and Conception occur; giving the laws by which the number and sex of offspring are controlled, and valuable information in regard to the begetting and rearing of beautiful and healthy children. It is high-toned, and should be read by every family. With eighty fine engravings. AGENTS WANTED.

SYNOPSIS OF TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- The Male Organs of Generation.
- The Female Organs of Generation.
- The Origin of Life.
- Sexual Generation.
- The Psychology of Menstruation.
- Impregnation.
- Pregnancy.
- Embryology.
- Parturition.
- Lactation.
- The Law of Sex.
- Regulation of the number of Offspring.
- The Theory of Population.
- The Law of Sexual Intercourse.
- Hereditary Transmission.
- Philosophy of Marriage.

This work has rapidly passed through twenty editions, and the demand is constantly increasing. No such complete and valuable work has ever before been issued from the press. Prof. Wilder, of Cornell University, says it is the best work of its kind published.

Price, by mail, $2. Sold by

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

Save Doctor's Bills!

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

- Sexual Physiology.....$2 00
- Mother's Hygienic Hand-book..... 1 00
- Health and Diseases of Women..... 24
- Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses... 50

Send for a catalogue.

R. T. TRALL, M.D.,

Room 1, Science Hall,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

The Household Treasure;

or, MEDICAL ADVISER.

By Mrs. C. A. VON CORT,

Wife of the eminent Prussian physician,

C. J. VON VORT, M.D.

This volume contains a great amount of information about the diseases which afflict the human race and the remedies that will cure them. It also gives a large number of valuable recipes. The whole is presented in an interesting and comprehensive language. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.00. Sent postpaid by mail on receipt of price.

Address D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., New York.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY. By R. T. TRALL, M.D. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. 25,000 copies of this work have been sold. Finely illustrated, and a very important work. Price, $2.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"

In paper, 50 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

THE NEW RAVEN.

A POEM BY WILL COOPER.

Published in THE TRUTH SEEKER under the title of Plymouth Cantos, from a Bible Standpoint. This Poem has attracted marked attention, and is considered the sharpest thing that has appeared for a long time.

PRICE ONLY TEN CENTS.

Bankrupt Sale of Jewelry.

GREAT FAILURE OF THE MILTON GOLD JEWELRY COMPANY IN LONDON.

Their Entire Stock Consigned to us to Raise Money as Soon as Possible.

Everybody has heard of MILTON GOLD JEWELRY, it having been sold in this market for the last ten years, and worn by the best and richest class of our population. Still it takes an expert to distinguish Milton Gold from Virginia Gold. In order to dispose of this large consignment in the speediest way, we have put up lots which we offer to the public for the tenth part of their value.

FIFTY-CENT LOT.

- One pair elegant sleeve-buttons, retail price $1 00
- One set spiral shirt-studs, retail price..... 75
- One beautiful scarf-pin, stone setting, retail price..... 75
- One elegant gent's watch chain, latest pattern, retail price..... 1 50
- One collar-button, retail price..... 50
- One elegant wedding ring, very heavy, retail price..... 2 00

Total.....$3 50

Remember that we will send you the above-named six articles, which we have retailed for $5 50, by mail, post-paid, for fifty cents, 4 sample lots for $1 50, or 12 sample lots for $4.

ONE DOLLAR LOT.

- One pair gent's sleeve buttons, stone setting..... $1 20
- One set elegant spiral studs to match same 1 05
- One beautiful ladies' band engagement ring..... 2 00
- One gent's large seal ring..... 2 00
- One ladies' long neck chain..... 2 75
- One gent's heavy plate watch chain..... 1 75
- One gent's "Lake George" diamond stud..... 1 00
- One beautiful scarf-pin..... 72
- One pair ladies' engraved sleeve-buttons..... 1 00

Total.....$13 50

The above figures are the prices these goods have been retailed at in our leading cities. We mention these figures to give you an idea of the goods.

A FINE SOLID SILVER WATCH FREE.

On receipt of $15 we will send by express, one dozen 50 ct. lots and one of each of the others; also one elegant Watch, Ladies' or Gents' size, guaranteed to be a good timekeeper. Such opportunity is offered but once in a lifetime.

We want our patrons and the public in general to understand that this is Milton Gold Jewelry and no common Plated Ware. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance or money refunded. Send money by P. O. order or registered letter.

Our Firm and Milton Gold Jewelry are endorsed by all the leading newspapers of the country. Goods sent C. O. D. if $5.00 is sent with the order, not otherwise. Address all orders to

RALSTON JEWELRY CO.

Importers of Watches and Jewelry,

LaSalle and Randolph Streets, Chicago, Illinois.

The Resurrection of Jesus.

A new Lecture by W. S. BELL, of New Bedford, Mass., the able Libera Lecturer. It is an excellent Essay. It costs but ten cents, mailed to any address. Send for a copy. Address

D. M. BENNETT,

SCIENCE HALL, 141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

DR. E. B. FOOT'S PLAIN HOME TALK. A most valuable work on health and disease, with the most rational modes of treatment. It contains over 900 pages and 300 illustrations. As a work on Hygiene, it has hardly an equal. Price, with a beautiful chromo, $3.25.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

SCOTTISH

WESTERN LOAN CO.,

OF LEROY, MINN.

Invest Money in first mortgages on improved farms in Iowa and Minnesota. Interest nine per cent annually in advance. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. Send for circulars to G. L. HENDERSON, President, 141 Eighth street, New York.

"Underwood-Marples Debate."

HELD BETWEEN

B F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First, "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second, "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., New York.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

ALL DISEASES

Diagnosed by Individual Nativity and specially treated in accordance therewith. The time of birth to be given, or as near as may be. Medicines sent post-paid, by mail.

FEE, INCLUDING MEDICINES, $2.

Diseases Treated with Precision, and Scientific Treatment Guaranteed.

Address CHAS. WINTERBURN, M.D., 25 West 26th St., New York.

[We have been personally acquainted with Dr. Winterburn more than fifteen years. We know him to be a gentleman of deep research, wide experience and great reliability. He is very successful in treating diseases of all kinds, and we cheerfully recommend him to the sick and afflicted.—Ed. T. S.]

KIDDER'S

SECRETS OF BEE-KEEPING.

One of the most reliable Bee-Books now in use. It touches on over a hundred points pertaining to Bee-keeping. It is a guide to the Bee-keeper in every department of Bee management. It is gotten up in a condensed form, and contains as much matter as any two-dollar book, and yet we propose to sell it at a much less price. Bound, 75 cts.; Paper cover, 50 cts. Postage free. Address, D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

TWO DOLLAR LOT.

- One set gold front pin and ear-rings.
- One ladies' long neck-chain.
- One elegant locket for the above.
- One ladies' "Pompadour" watch chain.
- One pair stone sleeve-buttons.
- One pair engraved sleeve-buttons.
- One amethyst stone ring.
- One gent's large seal ring.
- One ladies' band engagement ring.
- One set spiral shirt studs.
- One gent's Lake George diamond stud.
- One beautiful scarf-pin.

FIVE DOLLAR LOT.

- One ladies' opera chain with slide and tassel.
- One heavy ladies' neck-chain.
- One beautiful locket for the above.
- One ladies' Cameo pin and earrings.
- One pair (2) elegant bracelets.
- One pair amethyst sleeve buttons inlaid with pearls.
- One pair onyx sleeve-buttons.
- One set studs to match the above.
- One fine gent's watch-chain with charm.
- One amethyst ring inlaid with pearls.
- One topaz ring inlaid with pearls.
- One ladies' heavy band ring.
- One ladies' chemise button.
- One gent's Parisian diamond pin.
- One collar button.
- One extra fine set studs.

THE Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin, Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell Smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT,

Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

EVERY LIBERAL WHO, IN THESE TIMES of Revival and Religious Frenzy, wishes to disseminate convincing truth, should send for an assortment of TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS and TRUTH SEEKER LEAFLETS. They present sensible arguments which religious zealots cannot evade. Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

POSITIVELY

$50.00 WORTH OF INFORMATION

in form of a nice book of over 100 pages, well illustrated, sent post-paid for $1.00

BY A PRACTICAL CLOSE OBSERVER

How to keep the hens, and hen-roosts free from lice. How to feed to get an abundance of eggs, even in mid winter. How to manage setting hens, chickens, &c., and how to preserve eggs a great length of time. Best breeds of hens, &c. Enclose $1.00 with order.

E. D. BLAKEMAN, Circleville, Ohio.

[Mr. Blakeman is a school-boy friend of ours. We know him well; he is entirely reliable, and the information he has to impart upon the poultry subject is valuable.—Ed. T. S.]

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages. "Those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and building ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CRAVEN.

Price, by mail, $1.00. Address

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth Street, New York.

YES WE WANT AN AGENT in every town. YES Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $5 a day to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

THE WORLD'S SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS. A library in a single volume; being the lives, the most important sayings and doctrines of two hundred and seventy-eight of the soundest and most original Thinkers the world has known. It will contain some 1,000 pages, crown octavo, with a steel-plate engraving of the author—D. M. BENNETT—and will be issued in July, 1876. Price, $3. Those wishing a copy, will please send in their names at once. Those who remit in advance are entitled to a premium.

THIRTY DISCUSSIONS, BIBLE STORIES, ES-TAYS AND LECTURES. By D. M. BENNETT. A work of about 700 pages, with a wood-cut portrait of the author. A low-priced volume. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

INGERSOLL'S LECTURES (Cheap Edition) including "The Gods," "Arrangement of the Church, or Individuality," "Heretics and Heresies," "Thomas Paine," "Humboldt," "Paper," 80 cents; cloth, 50 cents. we have also a splendid edition of the same at $1.25.

Gems of Thought.

THE surest road to human happiness is to be good and to do good. And how can we do more good than by teaching people that it is their right and their duty to be happy! Teach this every day by precept and by example. Let our lives be a perpetual song of joy, and our words and looks be ever cheerful and pleasant.—Mrs. E. D. Stenker.

THE body is the palace of the soul. Through its windows the soul looks out, and by the expression of the face we generally tell whether the soul within is harmoniously exercised—whether the intellectual and spiritual predominate. Some faces would be beautiful were it not for a perpetual frown or scowl overshadowing their beauty like a cloud. Perhaps at first it was a temporary passion, or emotion, but by constant repetition, has become permanent. Did not I tell you this house of ours was of very plastic material; that the master within can mould and build, change and perfect?—Mrs. H. C. Garner.

HITHERTO the conceptions of God have been regarded as the property of the Christian, but now the revelations make those from Moses to seem poor indeed. If Science does not make God it makes newer, wider, and nobler, conception of him. We do not know that the old books of alleged Revelations were written by him but we do know that the works of Nature must be by him and that such works we can trust. This trust grows by intelligence, it depends upon no blind or docile faith which dwarfs the mind; the trust of Science retains ever-extending knowledge which expands the understanding.—George Jacob Holyoake.

THE idea you have once spoken, if it ever were an idea, is no longer yours; it is gone from you; so much life and virtue is gone, and vital circulations of yourself and your destiny and activity are henceforth deprived of it. If you could not get it spoken, if you could still constrain it into silence, so much the richer are you. Better keep your idea while you can; let it still circulate in your blood, and there fructify inarticulately innetting you to good activities; giving to your whole spiritual life a ruddier health. When the time does come for speaking it, you will speak it more concisely, the more expressly, appropriately; and if such a time should never come, have you not already acted it and uttered it as no words can? Think of this, my young friend; for there is nothing truer, more forgotten in these shabby, gold-laced days.—Carlyle.

Good nature is a gem which shines brightly wherever it is found. It cheers the darkness of misfortune, and warms the heart that is callous and cold. In social life who has not seen and felt its influence? Don't let little matters ruffle you. Nobody gains anything by being cross or crabbed. If a friend has injured you, if the world goes hard, if you want employment, and can't get your honest dues; or fire has consumed or water swallowed up the fruits of many years toil; or your faults magnified, or enemies traduce, or friends deceive—never mind. Don't get mad with anybody; don't abuse the world or any of its creatures; keep good natured, and our word for it, all will come right. The soft south wind and genial sun are not more effectual in clothing the earth with verdure and sweet flowers of Spring than is good nature in adorning the hearts of men and women with blossoms of kindness, happiness, and affection—those flowers the fragrance of which make life happy.—Anon.

THE Bible why it has bolstered up every injustice—it has bulwarked every tyranny—it has defended every wrong. With toil and pain and bloodshed have the soldiers of Liberty wrung from the reluctant hands of priests and Bible-worshippers every charter of our freedom, every triumph of our cause. Every step in science has been won in despite of the Bible. From the stake where Bruno stood and died, from the dungeon where Galileo knelt and trembled, a voice has rung out that every advance of science has been struggled against by the Bible and the Church. But take heart, you who cling to your Bibles; as soon as women are no longer in subjection, you will be able to claim as the offspring of your Christianity that which, at its birth, you anathematized. Each trophy of advancement, each symbol of triumph, is claimed by the bibliator as his as soon as it becomes popular. You will be able to find in your Bibles a sanction for the free development of womanhood, even as you have found room in the six days of Genesis for the vast aeons of geology, and space in the petty firmament of Moses for the mighty facts of astronomy. The Bible is claimed as the true parent of modern freedom, as the striker-off of the chains of the slave, the guardian of the feeble from the tyranny of the strong. It is the spirit of Christianity that has done it all, you say: when the letter said "kill" it it meant "preserve"; when the letter said "obey," it meant "resist"; when the letter said "enslave," it meant "set free." So take courage, ye worshippers of a book; your idol will be shattered one more, but it can once more be re-mended; it will fall once more before the trumpet-blast of Freedom, but once more can be raised. We mean to set woman free; free to follow the guiding hand of Nature; free to fulfill every fair capability of her being; free to develop every noble intellectual power, and every passionate longing of her heart; free to expand in every direction; free to grow, to strengthen, and to rise. Little care we whether or not our work squares with the rules of an old Eastern civilization; let those who are anxious about it see to that. Our work need not in itself trench on religion; but if Religion and the Bible grapple with us and try to stop and destroy us, then religion and the Bible must either stand aside or else they must go down.—Anna Besant.

Odds and Ends.

THE day laborer must strike for hire wages. A BIT of nonsense—One that will not check a horse. Houses will not go up while rents are coming down. An incalculable weight—The weight of indignation. It is often easier to pick flaws than to do better yourself.

RAILROAD agents are always ready to answer a fare question.

WHEN a man takes a bull by the horns, his chance of getting over the fence is a toss up.

HE—Whooze sweet? She—Boat of us. He—Whooze plum pudding is oo? She—Ooze.

HE MEANT BUSINESS.—This afternoon a young man strolled into Ash's bookstore, with his hands in his pockets, and hung about for a while with no definite object in view. He looked up at the shelves, skimmed over the poets, glanced at some papers, handled a few knick-knacks, and occasionally made his presence felt by blowing through a tin trumpet. Presently, when no one was about, he sauntered up to the valentine stand and motioned to the clerk: "Look-a-here, hist! I want to pick out a valentine for a girl." The clerk came up and the fellow began to inspect the stock. "I want one with some fancy jiggers on and blue posies, yer know." "Here's just the thing," said the clerk, opening a box with a pocket transformation scene inside.

"You bet that's way up, and here's some poetry in red letters:

I always sigh when'er I think of you;
But hope's the sweetest that finds birth in fears—
The rose looks fairest when weighed down with dew,
And eyes the loveliest that are bathed in tears."

"That's the true racket for poetry, but it don't exactly fit my case. Little too much dog in it; sorter snivelling, ye see, and blubbering like. Show me one about gittin' married."

"Here's the thing exactly," responded the accommodating clerk.

"No, that ain't it; one with a couple hugging under some trees, with blue and red woods, Cupids over 'em throwin' down flowers, and a pond in front with lilies and gals all in swimmin'." You know what I mean."

"Perhaps this is the sort you are after," rejoined the clerk, showing him one that opened at the back, with a billing and cooing couple on one side and a buxom baby on the other.

"Now, that's something like. Ye see I mean business. I'm on the marry, I am. That's just the thing I want. My girl were just such a rig as that last summer at the Miner's Union picnic. Did ye see me walkin' round with her? She took the shine off everything you could scare up. Think she'll know enough to turn that flap back and see the baby in the flower basket? I'll put some writin' just under, callin' her attention to it. How much?"

"Seven fifty."

"Cheap enough; just take yer change out of that" (throwing down a ten), after which the delighted youth trudged off with his bargain.

—Virginia City Chronicle.

A SALOON-KEEPER'S CONTRACT.—About eleven o'clock yesterday morning a haggard looking stranger entered a saloon on Grand River avenue and asked for a glass of beer. When his nickel had been raked into the till the saloon man took a seat and began reading a newspaper.

"Here is my last nickel!" solemnly began the stranger. "When I swallow this beer I am a beggar and an outcast. The world does not care for me—why should I care for the world? I will mix poison with this, my last glass!"

Returned to the man with the paper, but the saloonist didn't seem to care.

"Yes; I will poison myself and die in my tracks!" exclaimed the stranger in a loud voice.

The man with the paper did not look up.

"So here goes to end my worthless self!" continued the stranger as he took out a paper and poured a white powder into the glass.

"Farewell, cold world, farewell. Let them bury me in the sunshine or the shadow—I care not!"

He drank his beer, but the saloonist had his nose close to the paper and was spelling out a big word. The stranger started for the door, but too mad to contain himself, he returned and demanded:

"Will you sit there and see me poison myself and never utter a word?"

"Have you taken poison?"

"I have! I just swallowed a fatal dose of arsenic!"

"Good!" chuckled the saloon-keeper, as he rose up. "I have a regular contract with the doctors, and you'll net me twelve dollars! Come in here!"

He grabbed the stranger by the neck and dragged him into a closet at the back end of the room, saying, as he locked the door:

"Glad you took arsenic, as it leaves the body in a moist, limber condition!"

The stranger yelled and pounded, and explained that he had only swallowed a little chalk powdered up, and after half an hour he was let out.

"You have robbed me of twelve dollars!" bitterly exclaimed the saloonist, as he led the man to the door and gave him a lift with his boot. "Yes, you have robbed me, and now—"

But the stranger left without saying good-bye, and was afterward heard asking a boy if he knew of any man who wanted to hire a gentleman to spade up his garden.—Detroit Free Press.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	5
9.	The Story of the Flood.	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	5
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arrangement of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	2
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snodde. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	6
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	3
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	3
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	3
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	1
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	2
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	1
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	1
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	1
42.	Elijah the Fishbite.	1
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	8
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	5
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marple's Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	2
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	5
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vigilant Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	2
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	10
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	2
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	1
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hoppes, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elming D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Eisberg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	5
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	5
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

These eight Scientific Tracts are made into a pamphlet of 125 pages, at 20 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

Truth Seeker Leaflets.

Sent, assorted, or as desired, post-paid, at 4 cents per dozen; 25 cents per hundred, or $2 per thousand.

Let them be distributed freely in every town village and neighborhood. Address,

D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

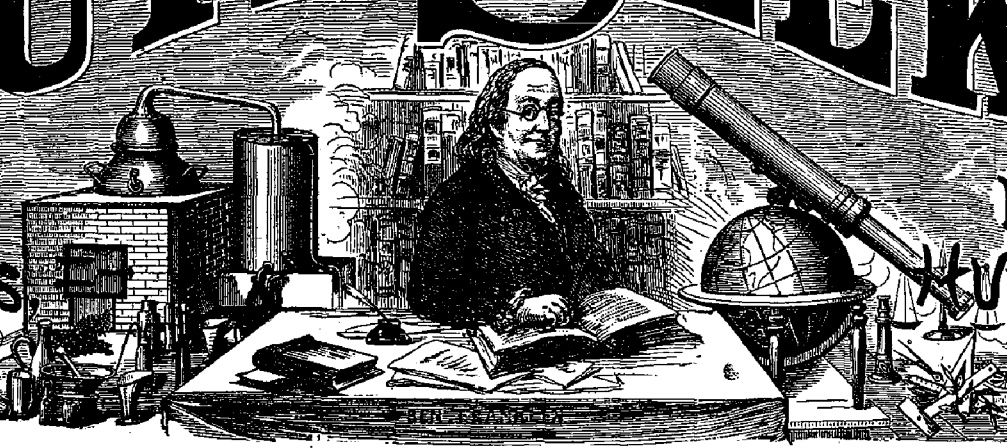

141 Eighth street, New York.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth	50
" " with Examination of Prophecies	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and 4.50	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27 00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacolliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 60 and 1 00	1 00
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and 60	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols..	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible, Wright.	35 & 60
Evans' History of all Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Fuesbach. 40 and 80	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Friththam's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense. D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought. Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and 50	50
" etc.. Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidel's Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jameson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneelands Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Vale.	1 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each.	1 50
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 40
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts.	3 50
" Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peebles' All Around the World.	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man, Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	20
" Rights of Man.	50
" Theological Works.	2 00
" " and Miscellaneous Works.	2 50
" Miscellaneous Writings; Centennial edition.	2 50
" Political Works. 2 Vols., 8vo.	5 00
" Complete Works. 3 Vols., 8vo.	7 00
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.,	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	25
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	50
Synagoga, Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature, D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Works.
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus. 2 vols.,	12 00
Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols., 8vo.	8 00
Sexual Physiology. Trall.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall's (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul.	2 00
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices, Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers.
" $3.00, $4.00, and 4.50	4 50
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 & 1 00	75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker, Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and IV. 60 cents each.	4 00
The Outcast, Winwood Reade.	30
Talks with my Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D.,	1 50
Underwood-Marple's Debate.	40 & 75
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	75
Vestiges of Creation.	20
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
" New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
" taire's Philosophical Dictionary.	6 00

THE TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE AND MORALS

FREE THOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 12. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY } New York, Saturday, March 24, 1877. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year.
BY D. M. BENNETT. NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

PRESIDENT HAYES is said to favor woman suffrage.

WALT WHITMAN has been spending a few weeks in this city, and has been a guest of J. H. Johnson, 113 East Tenth St.

The Moslem pilgrimages to Mecca are every year growing larger. Last year over 140,000 pilgrims reached Mecca by the way of Jeddah.

A LOWELL youth is certain he is a born painter. He painted a picture of a spitz dog on the parlor walls so life-like, that it made his father mad.

As immoral as the French are considered, the Germans have 75 per cent. more illegitimate children than France, and in Austria they have three hundred per cent more.

MRS. LOUISA MCCALL, of Canton, O., has been elected a director of the National Bank, of which her husband was President. She is the second woman chosen to such a position. Mrs. Bradley of Peoria, Ill., being the first.

THE money lost by depositors in savings banks in this country, according to Appleton's Journal, equals only one-fiftieth of the amount paid to depositors in interest by the banks, and is only one-hundredth part of one per cent. of the deposits.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL teacher, holding up the smallest American coin, asked his scholars wherein John the Baptist resembled that coin. His smartest pupil soon replied: "John the Baptist was one sent by God."

A JURY in Northwestern Illinois has found Elder McGee, an honored Methodist pastor, guilty of administering strychnine to his wife, who died in consequence on February 28. This shows how far juries can be trusted.

An unhappy married man of Boston expressed the wish the other day that when he died he would go where there was no snow to shovel, and his wife told him she had no doubt he would. After that the poor man felt a little easier.

A SPECIAL committee of the Rhode Island Legislature has recommended an amendment to the State Constitution, giving unmarried women and widows the privilege of voting on any proposition to impose a fine on them. This is fair and reasonable.

A MOTHER was explaining to her little daughter the great and beautiful faith which Abraham manifested in being willing to offer up his little son, Isaac. The little girl artlessly replied, "Why, ma, I should rather give up some of my faith than to kill a nice little boy."

BEECHER is describing God to the people of Minnesota as a wet nurse, whose business is to nourish and forgive. He has no patience with the belief that God is a God of law and justice, who will hold the guilty accountable. "I would be damned before worshipping such a God," said Beecher in his discourse at St. Paul. He undoubtedly told the truth.

SINCE the sad effects which followed the preaching of the last great sermon on hell-fire in this city, timid husbands are said to carefully absent themselves from church altogether. They deem it a dangerous place to go to, and regard the club-room a safer place, being less disposed to sudden panic, having no hell, and possessing good means of egress.

ST. PATRICK successfully banished the snakes from Ireland, but he was unable to get them out of the whiskey the Irishman drinks. It was a questionable policy of his of driving out the frogs. They are a harmless animal, and withal, very useful. Frogs are fine eating, and if the old saint did drive out the frogs as well as the snakes, it is quite possible he deprived Ireland of a good source of revenue.

THE rain descended, and the floods came, and the wind blew and beat upon the Sea Cliff Tabernacle, and battered that remarkable structure almost to pieces. The settees on which the Saints of Sea Cliff used to sit while they shouted hallelujahs in the Tabernacle have for some time been in possession of the Sheriff. The saints are scattered, litigation and strife have taken the place of preaching and praise, and confusion reigns supreme over all that was sacred at Sea Cliff.

POLITICS make strange bedfellows and often bring extremes together. The President, after appointing David M. Key, a Democrat and ex-Confederate General, as a member of his Cabinet, appointed Fred Douglass, ex-slave and orator, as Marshall of the District of Columbia. The latter has been confirmed and has entered upon the discharge of the duties of the position.

ACCORDING to Usher's chronology, last Saturday—St. Patrick's day—was the anniversary of Noah's escape from the Ark. That distinguished bishop figured out to the great satisfaction of the English Church that the disembarkation on Ararat took place on March 17. The same mathematical bishop could doubtless figure out, if the moon is made of green cheese, just how much milk it took to make it, and also what become of the whey. Bishops are notorious for their figuring proclivities.

BEECHER'S BOOKS AT A PAR WITH OLD METAL.—Testimony in the application in bankruptcy of J. B. Ford & Co. was taken before Register Fitch on the 16th. Ford gave a list of the books of which his firm held the copyrights, among which are Henry Ward Beecher's "Sermons" and his "Life of Christ." Mr. Ford said that the Sermons were worth only the metal they were cast in, and that the "Life of Christ," which cost for the plates, and the contract with Beecher, $27,000, was carried at $5,000.

WHAT a sad fortune has been Mrs. Laura B. Taylor's. Her husband died a few months ago, supposed to be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars. Hungry creditors, and rapacious lawyers with their numerous claims, whittled down the fortune to an extremely small point, and a few days ago nine trunks full of her dresses, furs and underwear, worth $3,000, were seized by the sheriff, and sold at auction for $400, and she is left homeless, and with no clothes save those she wore. In this greatly changed condition she was forced to appeal to friends for aid.

JAMES KINGAN, the old produce dealer and stock operator, worth his half a million, has come to a sad end. A series of bad investments greatly reduced his capital, which he carefully kept to himself; but at length his mind became affected and he considered himself ruined. He wrote his wife a few days ago, saying his fortune was lost and she would not see him again. He loved his wife dearly and the little babe with which she had a few days before presented him. He took a car for Portland, and bought a ticket for Liverpool. While on his way to Halifax he was either murdered or committed suicide. His mangled body, with his throat cut, was found upon the railroad track. His wife, in feeble health, has been rendered nearly distracted. A sad case.

THE United Presbyterian Church on West Forty-second street held a meeting on the evening of the 19th for the election of trustees for the ensuing year. The persons present became greatly excited, being divided into two parties, and bitterly opposed each other. Very harsh language was used from member to member. Such shouts as "Put him out!" "Send for the police!" "That's a falsehood!" etc., were freely made. "You are a dirty, lying puppy," was banded from one member to another. One man, shaking his fist in the face of a brother, said, "If we were not in church I would go through you." In this way did the brethren and sisters pass a pleasant hour or two. "By their fruits shall ye know them."

THE following curious account for restoring a chapel was engraved in French on a watch crystal in the Swiss department of the Vienna Exposition, the whole being placed on a scroll less than an inch square. A painter had been employed to repaint a number of pictures in a convent; he did it and presented his bill in full for francs and centimes, to the curate, who refused to pay it, saying that the committee would require a full detail. The painter produced it as follows: Corrected and revised the Ten Commandments, 5 francs and 12 centimes; embellished and renewed Pontious Pilatus, and put a new ribbon in his bonnet, 3 francs and 6 centimes; put a new tail on the rooster of St. Peter, and mended his comb, 3 francs and 20 centimes; replaced and gilded the left wing of the guardian angel, 4 francs and 47 centimes; washed the servant of the high priest, and put carmine on his cheeks, 5 francs and 12 centimes; renewed heavens, adjusted two stars, gilded the sun, and renewed the moon, 7 francs and 14 centimes; reanimated the flames of purgatory, and restored some souls, 6 francs and 6 centimes; revived the flames of hell, put a new tail on the Devil, mended his left hoof and did several jobs for the damned, 4 francs and 10 centimes; put new spatter dashes on the son of Tobias and dressing on his back, 2 francs; cleaned the ears of Baalam's ass, and shod him, 3 francs and 7 centimes; put earrings in the ears of Sarah, 2 francs and 4 centimes; rebordered the robe of Herod, and readjusted his wig, 4 francs and 4 centimes; put a new stone in David's sling, enlarged the head of Goliath, and extended his legs, 8 francs and 2 centimes; decorated Noah's Ark, 3 francs; mended the shirt of the prodigal son, and cleaned the pigs, 4 francs and 9 centimes; renewed St. Roque's dog, cleaned his leg, and revived his sore, 3 francs; making a new Jesus, and mending Virgin Mary's dress, regilded her crown, 8 francs and 10 centimes; embellished Santa Luay's eyes, 4 francs; mended the nets of St. Peter and brightened the kegs, 5 francs and 3 centimes; brightened the lightning and mended the thundering clouds over the head of St. Simeon, 2 francs and 25 centimes; repaired the carpenter bench, and mended St. Joseph's tools, and refreshed the table, 7 francs and 5 centimes; mended the cobbler's stool and revived St. Crispin's eyes, 1 franc and 15 centimes. Total, 86 francs, 60 centimes. The bill is certainly very moderate, considering the amount of labor performed, and we hope the church committee had the fairness to pay it without a whimper.

REVISING THE BIBLE.—The pious Bible-revision committee are having a difficult and laborious time of it to get the "Word of God" just as it should be. Many passages have to be so much changed—in order to have them correct—as hardly to be recognizable by their most intimate friends, and by this means it is greatly feared much of the reverence which has been felt for the old version will be destroyed. THE TRUTH SEEKER Devil, realizing the embarrassment of the committee, and being a pretty good Bible scholar himself, has given the matter some attention with a view of aiding the labors of the committee aforesaid. Considerable doubt has existed of the correctness of the old rendition of this passage: "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven." Our Devil is in some doubt himself, whether it should not be rendered—it is easier for a needle to go through the eye of a camel than for a rich heaven to enter the kingdom of man; or, that it is easier for a camel to go through the knee of an idol than for heaven to enter a rich king; or, that it is easier for a rich man to go through the knee of an idol than for a camel to enter the kingdom of heaven; or, that it is easier for a rich man to go through the eye of a camel than for the kingdom of heaven to enter a needle; or, that it is easier for a camel to go through the knee of an idle man than for a rich king to enter heaven; or, that it is easier for a rich needle to go through the eye of a man than for a kingdom of camels to enter heaven; or, that it is easier for the kingdom of heaven to go through the eye of a camel than for a rich man to enter a needle; or, that it is easier for a needle to go through a camel than for an easy heaven to enter a kingdom; or, that it is more heavenly for a needle to pass through a rich man than for a kingdom to enter an easy camel; or, that it is richer for the king of a dumb heaven to go through an easy man than for an eye to enter the knee of a camel; or, that it is more needful for an easy man to go through the eye of a camel than for a rich heaven to enter a kingdom; or, that it is easier for a kingdom of camels to go through heaven than for riches to enter the knee of an idle man; or, that it is easier for a camel to enter a rich man's needle than for the eye of a king to go through heaven; or, that it is more heavenly for the knee of a camel to enter the eye of a rich man than for a dumb king to go through an idol; or, that it is easier for a camel to eye through the knee of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven; or, that it is richer for the kingdom of heaven to go through a camel than it is for the eye of a needy man to enter a whole paper of needles. Our Devil has several other versions to offer, if they do not succeed in making a choice from any of the above. He is, in fact, disposed to render the committee all the aid he can. If that committee would secure the services of this Devil of ours he would doubtless save them many days of worry and toil.

Events of the Week.

THE Turks and the Bosnians have been fighting again. The war cloud in that direction is growing still blacker.

THE Fort Pitt Boiler Works at Pittsburgh, Pa., were destroyed by fire on the 18th. Loss, $140,000. Wilson, Snyder, & Co., brass founders, also lost $15,000.

THE weather for the past week has been cold and stormy. The cold has been more severe than in February, and a good deal of snow has fallen in latitudes north of this.

THE steamer Rusland, of the White Star Line, cargo, glass and iron, from Antwerp, and 250 passengers and crew, was stranded on the Jersey coast, near Long Branch, during the storm on the morning of the 18th. Fortunately, all the people were removed to the shore before the vessel went down. The catastrophe occurred within sight of the spot at which the French steamer L'Amerique went ashore some ten days earlier, and where she still lies helpless and unable to get off.

A WIFE'S INSANITY.—There is great excitement in Goshen over a recent attempt of Mrs. Freeborn W. Packard of that town to murder her husband and to take her own life. Mrs. Packard is thirty-one years old, and her husband is a respectable and well-to-do farmer of sixty. She secreted a razor in the bed, and after she and her husband had retired for the night, and the lights had been extinguished, suddenly began to carry out her desperate purpose. The result was that she cut her husband's throat badly and her own worse. Mr. Packard will probably recover, but his wife's fate is doubtful. She had long been in a despondent state of mind, and had attempted suicide before.

A SAD EVENT occurred in Chicago on Thursday, the 15th inst. William C. Pike, a lecturer on phrenology, etc., walked into the editorial room of S. S. Jones, proprietor of The Religious-Philosophical Journal, and shot him dead with a pistol, the charges entering at the back of the neck at the base of the brain. Life and consciousness were at once suspended. Pike gave himself up to the authorities, and claimed that he committed the murder because the deceased had seduced his (Pike's) wife. Mr. and Mrs. Pike were both held, without bail, for trial. The event has cast a shade of sadness over the minds of thousands. Mr. Jones may have had his faults, but he was an enterprising, industrious, successful journalist, who will long be remembered by numerous friends and readers. Insanity is to be Pike's defense, as he has several times been an inmate of the lunatic asylum.

PETER DEGNAN of Newark, N. J., recently returned from California, where he has spent some twenty years, and from whence he brought some $1,500 for his labor, made his home temporarily with his mother and her husband, Michael Matthews. Degnan fell furiously in love with Mary Matthews, daughter of his stepfather, and demanded her hand in marriage. She refused. The demand was persisted in, and as persistently refused. On the evening of the 7th inst., upon being refused, he drew a long knife and attempted to stab her, aiming to strike her heart. She defended herself bravely, and parried his thrusts. Her hands became badly cut, and the ligament of her left wrist was severed so that her arm dropped powerless. He then slashed her across the left breast, and inflicted two severe cuts upon her head. In the struggle a kerosene lamp was thrown over and exploded. Instantly the window-curtains were ablaze, and the floor covered with burning oil. This diverted Degnan's attention for a moment, at which the girl fled from the room and ran down stairs. Degnan quickly pursued and, seeing her about to escape, seized a loaded rifle and placed the muzzle to his head and fired and sank upon the stairs. He was soon found and was made to walk to the police station, and thence to the hospital, in a dying condition. In the meantime the wounded girl fled through the streets for nearly a mile, until she sank exhausted at the door of Rev. Dr. Fish. Here she was found and was taken to the same hospital where Degnan was dying. The flames at the house were extinguished by a policeman.

Science and the Arts.

The Doctrine of Filiation, or Descent-Theory.

BY PROF. ERNST HAECKEL.—CONTINUED.

CHAPTER V.—CONTINUED.

INHERITANCE OF MONSTROSITIES.

Among these cases of the inheritance of monstrous deviations, those are specially interesting which consist in an abnormal increase or decrease of the number of five in the fingers or toes of man. It is not unfrequently observed in families through several generations, that individuals have six fingers on each hand, or six toes on each foot. Less frequent is the number of four or seven fingers or toes. The unusual formation arises at first from a single individual who, from unknown causes, is born with an excess of the usual number of fingers and toes, and transmits these, by inheritance, to a portion of his descendants. In one and the same family it has happened that, throughout three, four, or more generations, individuals have possessed six fingers and toes. In a Spanish family there were no less than forty individuals distinguished by this excess. The transmission of the sixth finger or toe is not permanent or enduring in all cases, because six-fingered people always intermarry again with those possessing five fingers. If a six-fingered family were to propagate by pure in-breeding, if six-fingered men were always to marry six-fingered women, this characteristic would become permanent, and a special six-fingered human race would arise. But as six-fingered men usually marry five-fingered women, and vice versa, their descendants for the most part show a very mixed numerical relation, and finally, after the course of some generations, revert again to the normal number of five. Thus, for example, among eight children of a six-fingered father, and a five-fingered mother, two children may have on both hands and feet six fingers and toes, four children may have a mixed number, and two children may have the usual number of five on both hands and feet. In a Spanish family, each child except the youngest had the number six on both hands and feet; the youngest, only, had the usual number on both hands and feet, and the six-fingered father of the child refused to recognize the last one as his own.

The power of inheritance, moreover, shows itself very strikingly in the formation and color of the human skin and hair. It is well known how exactly the nature of the complexion in many families—for instance, a peculiar soft or rough skin, a peculiar luxuriance of the hair, a peculiar color and largeness of the eyes—is transmitted through many generations. In like manner, peculiar local growths or spots on the skin, the so-called moles, freckles, and other accumulations of pigment which appear in certain places, are frequently transmitted through several generations so exactly, that in the descendants they appear on the same spots on which they existed in the parents. The porcupine men of the Lambert family, who lived in London last century, are especially celebrated. Edward Lambert, born in 1717, was remarkable for a most unusual and monstrous formation of the skin. His whole body was covered with a bony substance, about an inch thick, which rose in the form of numerous thorn-shaped and scale-like processes, more than an inch long. This monstrous formation of the outer skin, or epidermis, was transmitted by Lambert to his sons and grandsons, but not to his granddaughters. The transmission in this instance remained in the male line, as is often the case. In like manner, an excessive development of fat in certain parts of the body is often transmitted only in the female line. I scarcely need call to mind how exactly the characteristic formation of the face is transmitted by inheritance; sometimes it remains within the male, sometimes within the female line; sometimes it is blended in both.

TRANSMISSION OF MENTAL QUALITIES.

The phenomena of transmission by inheritance of pathological conditions, especially of the different forms of human diseases, are very instructive and generally known. Diseases of the respiratory organs, the glands, and of the nervous system, are especially liable to be transmitted by inheritance. Very frequently there suddenly appears in an otherwise healthy family a disease until then unknown among them; it is produced by external causes, by conditions of life causing disease. This disease, brought about in an individual by external cause, is propagated and transmitted to his descendants, and some or all of them then suffer from the same disease. In case of diseases of the lungs, for instance in consumption, this sad transmission by inheritance is well known, and it is the same with diseases of the liver, with syphilis, and diseases of the mind. The latter are specially interesting. Just as peculiar characteristic features of man—pride, ambition, frivolity, etc.—are transmitted to the descendants strictly by inheritance, so too are the peculiar abnormal manifestations of mental activity, which are usually called fixed ideas, despondency, imbecility, and generally "diseases of the mind." This distinctly, and irrefragably shows that the soul of man, just as the soul of animals, is a purely mechanical activity, the sum of the molecular phenomena of motion in the particles of the brain, and that it is transmitted by inheritance, together with its substratum, just as every other quality of the body is materially transmitted by propagation.

When this exceedingly important and undeniable fact is mentioned, it generally causes great offence, and yet in reality it is silently and universally acknowledged. For upon what else do the ideas of "hereditary sin," "hereditary wisdom," and "hereditary aristocracy," etc., rest than upon the conviction that the quality of the human mind is transmitted by propagation—that is, by a purely material process—through the body, from the parents to the descendants? The recognition of this great importance of transmission by inheritance is shown in a number of human institutions, as for example, among many nations in the division into castes such as the castes of warriors, castes of priests, and castes of laborers, etc. It is evident that the institution of such castes originally arose from the notion of the great importance of hereditary distinctions possessed by certain families, which it was presumed would always be transmitted by the parents to the children. The institution of an hereditary aristocracy and an hereditary monarchy is to be traced to the notion of such a transmission of special excellencies. However, it is unfortunately not only virtues, but also vices that are transmitted and accumulated by inheritance; and if, in the history of the world, we compare the different individuals of the different dynasties, we shall everywhere find a great number of proofs of the transmission of qualities by inheritance, but fewer of transmissions of virtues than of vices. Look only, for example, at the Roman emperors, at the Julii and the Claudii, or at the Bourbons, in France, Spain, and Italy.

In fact, scarcely anywhere could we find such a number of striking examples of the remarkable transmission of bodily and mental features by inheritance, as in the history of the reigning houses in hereditary monarchies. This is specially true in regard to the diseases of the mind previously mentioned. It is in reigning families that mental disorders are hereditary in an unusual degree. Thus Esquirol, distinguished for his knowledge of mental diseases, proved that the number of insane individuals in the reigning houses was, in proportion to the number among the ordinary population, as 60 to 1; that is, that disorders of the brain occur 60 times more frequently in the privileged families of the ruling houses than among ordinary people. If equally accurate statistics were made of the hereditary nobility, the result would probably be that here also we should find an incomparably larger contingent of mental diseases than among the common, ignoble portion of mankind. This phenomenon can scarcely astonish us if we consider what injury these privileged castes inflict upon themselves by their unnatural, one-sided education, and by their artificial separation from the rest of mankind. By this means many dark sides of human nature are specially developed and, as it were, artificially bred, and, according to the laws of transmission by inheritance, are propagated through series of generations with ever increasing force and dominance.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug.

Correct account of the origin and compilation of the Scriptural Canon.

BY S. H. PRESTON.

There is great want of correct information concerning the early history of the Bible, even among Christian scholars. The Old Testament is composed of thirty-nine books, exclusive of a number of others called "apocryphal," still received by the Romish Church as canonical; and the New Testament is made up of twenty-seven books. The orthodox or English Bible, therefore, contains sixty-six books; and these are accepted by the Protestant portion of Christendom to-day as the inspired word of God. Without pausing to particularize the numerous forgeries and interpolations of which there is abundant proof, we find mention made in the Bible itself of several books which have been entirely lost. Reference is made to about twenty of these. We have space to specify only a few of these; viz: "The Book of the Wars of the Lord," "The Book of Jashur," "The Acts of Solomon," "The Book of Gad, the Seer," "The Prophecy of Ahijah," "The Visions of Iddo," "The Book of Shemaiah, the Prophet," etc. [See Num. xxi., 14, Josh. x., 13, 2 Sam. i., 18, 1 Kings xi., 41, 1 Chron. xxix., 29.]

There was no proper canon or collection of the books of the Old Testament until about two hundred years before the Christian era; and there was no canonical collection of the books of the New Testament until the middle of the sixth century, A. C. Previous to these respective periods the "holy" books were scattered about, subject to the alterations and interpolations of unscrupulous priests and prophets. The book which one priest rejected, another would accept.

It is a fact which may surprise some that the Jews themselves, even their priests and kings, knew nothing of any sacred writings until the reign of Josias, and that none were known until a priest named Hilkiah said that "he found the book of the law in the house of the Lord" (2 Kings, xxii., 8; 2 Chron., xxxiv., 14). This occurred six hundred and twenty-eight years B. C.

Another fact which may even astonish some learned Bible believers is, that the same "divine book of the law" was burnt during the Babylonish captivity, a few years after it was found in the chest of Hilkiah, the high priest, and that it was never afterwards recovered.

Says Hittel: "The ancient Jews had a tradition that the Mosaic law had been burned at the time of the captivity, and that it had been republished by Ezra; and the tradition was received as trustworthy by Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, Chrysostom, and Theodoret."

The Christian father, Irenæus, says that "they (the books of the Old Testament) were fabricated seventy years after the Babylonish captivity by Esdras;" and Dr. Adam Clarke guardedly says: "All antiquity is nearly unanimous in giving Ezra the honor of collecting the different writings of Moses and the prophets, and reducing them into the form in which they are now found in the Holy Bible."

For a somewhat graphic account of the nature of that divine inspiration with which these writings were composed, the reader is referred to 2 Esdras, xiv.: "And the next day a voice called me, saying, Esdras, open thy mouth, and drink that I give thee to drink. Then I opened my mouth, and behold! he reached me a full cup, which was full, as it were, with water, but the color of it was like fire. And I took it and drank; but when I had drunk of it, my heart uttered understanding, and wisdom grew in my breast, for my spirit strengthened my memory. And my mouth was opened, and shut no more. The highest gave understanding unto the five men, and they wrote the visions of the night that were told, which they knew not; and they sat forty days, and they wrote in the day, and at night they eat bread. As for me, I spoke in the day, and I held not my tongue by night. In forty days they wrote two hundred and four books. And it came to pass, when the forty days were fulfilled, that the Highest spake saying, The first that thou hast written, publish openly, that the worthy and the unworthy may read it. But keep the seventy last that thou mayest deliver them openly to such as are wise among the people."

The above sufficiently shows the manner of writing an inspired book. All that is necessary to show the manner which makes up the books of the Bible is to read them. We thus find it historically established that the Old Testament, as it is now offered to us, was a comparatively modern production, having been written by an old cunning priest named Ezra, only some four hundred years before the time of Christ, and that owing to the carelessness and profanity of the Jews themselves, who not only lost whole books of the Bible, but burnt others, the Christian world to-day is in possession of but a small portion of the "word of God."

We now proceed to examine the history of the New Testament. It has never been claimed that any portion of it was written during the life of the reputed founder of Christianity. Christ himself never wrote a line of the books of which it is composed. He was put to death without having ever written one word of the books of the Bible. The Christian Church was established all over the known world before a single verse of the New Testament, which contains all the doctrines of Christianity, had been written.

The first allusion that is made to the Gospels was by the Christian Father Irenæus, in the year 182, nearly a century and a half after the time of Christ. Even then, the four Gospels were presented to the world upon no other authority than that of the Christian Father himself. At the time Irenæus first introduced the four Gospels, there were many others in circulation, some of which, we are told, had existed nearly a century before, and had actually been read and quoted by the early Christians as the word of God. Among the most important of these may be named the Gospels of St. Peter, St. Thomas, St. Matthias, St. Bartholomew, St. Philip, Judas Iscariot, Thaddæus, and Barnabas; the Acts of St. Peter, St. Paul, St. Andrew, St. John, St. Philip, and St. Thomas; and the Revelations of St. Paul, St. Thomas, St. Stephen, and the Great Apostle. There were upwards of fifty of these Gospels, Acts, and Revelations, which were, at one time, considered the "divine word." During the first three hundred years from the era of Christ there was no collection of the writings of the New Testament. All the above-named writings were circulated and accepted by the primitive Christians as of equal authority.

At length there arose conflicting opinions and serious contentions as to their credibility. It was finally judged necessary to settle the dispute by an authoritative selection of the true from the false books. The division of opinion regarding them and the nature of Christ resulted in such disorder that the pagans ridiculed Christianity upon the stage. For the purpose of preserving order in the empire, Constantine convoked an œcumenical council of the whole habitable earth at the town of Nice in Bithynia. There assembled 248 bishops, all of different sentiments and opinions. The records of the disputes of these fierce and bigoted bishops amounted to forty volumes. The conflict in the council arrived at such a pitch that the Emperor, as moderator, for the purpose of preserving some degree of unity and propriety, was obliged to expel 1730 of the exasperated and contentious bishops. The remaining 318 bishops then proceeded to determine which ones of the various writings were the inspired word of God. "This was done," says Papias, the Christian Father, "by placing all the books under a communion table, and, upon the prayers of the council, the inspired books jumped upon the communion table, while the false ones remained under." But it is related that many mocked at this method, and the religious row continued as fierce as ever. Finally, most of the manuscripts submitted, after being sufficiently fought over, were rejected, whereupon Constantine affixed the seal of the empire to the remaining few, declaring such to be the "word of God." And as such they passed until the year 363, when another council, that of Laodicea, was held, to make a more perfect selection of the holy books. Upon this occasion, the manner of choosing them was by vote. The books of the New Testament were then adopted, nearly as we now have them, except Revelations, which was excluded. We are informed by St. Chrysostom, who died in 407, that the Acts of the Apostles was scarcely known in his day. Other councils were called to settle the sacred canon. There was one in 406 which rejected some books received by the council of 363; but a later council in 680 restored them. And thus contentious priests continued tossing the "word of God," like a battledore, from faction to faction, changing it as the spirit of sect might dictate. As illustrating the spirit which animated the ordained arbiters of the "sacred writings," we give the words of the Christian writer, Tindal. In his work entitled "Rights of the Christian Church," page 195, he says: "That he fled all assemblies of bishops because he never saw a good and happy end of any council, but that they did rather increase than lessen the evil; that the love of contention and ambition always overcomes their reason." Speaking of the memorable council of Nice, at which the Emperor himself presided, Tindal further says: "And if these accusations and libels which the bishops gave in of one another to the Emperor were now extant, in all probability, we should have such rolls of scandal that few would have much reason to boast of the first œcumenical council, where with such heat, passion, and fury, the bishops fell foul on one another, inasmuch that had not the Emperor by a trick burnt their church memorials, probably they would have broke up in confusion. After that council was over, the bishops made so great a bustle and disturbance, and were so unruly, that the good Emperor was forced to tell them that if they would not be more quiet and peaceable in the future, he would no longer continue his expedition against the Infidels, but must return to keep them in order. Indeed," continues Tindal, "the confusion and disorder were so great amongst them, especially in their Synods, that it sometimes came to blows; as, for instance, Dioscorus, Bishop of Alexandria, cuffed and kicked Flavianus, Patriarch of Constantinople, (at the second Synod of Ephesus) with that fury that within three days after he died."

And it is upon the decisions of such fierce and fighting fanatics that the Christian world depends for its creeds and sacred scriptures! The authenticity of divine revelation rests upon the ballots of bigots who often fell foul of one another, and kicked each other to death! So that it is difficult to determine whether it was really the majority vote or the predominant kicking power that finally settled the vexed question which books were God's and which were not. The book of Luke was given to God by one single vote majority, and that may have depended more upon the muscular activity of the voter than upon his ability to discriminate between books of God and books of men.

It is a notorious fact, and one which may well perplex the priesthood, that the books which one body of bishops would piously pronounce genuine inspiration, another council, equally as well commissioned to settle the sacred canon, would condemn and reject as profane forgeries. And it is also pertinent to inquire, in this connection, why the one thousand seven hundred and thirty bishops whom Constantine thrust out of the Council of Nice were not as well qualified to say what writings were the word of God as the three hundred and eighteen who remained? And also, why, or how, or by whose imperative command, is the Christian world justified in believing that the books which were saved and voted into the scriptural canon are any more sacred than those voted out, or which were lost or destroyed? Let Christians learn these facts, and consider them well. Let them realize the absurdity of believing books to be of divine origin which so long lay in obscurity, and were only saved from oblivion through the presumption of unscrupulous priests, and finally decided to be genuine by the ballots of bigoted and bullying bishops.

Let them consider that none of the books of the Old Testament were heard of previous to the translation of the Septuagint, about 280 years before Christ; the means which were taken to separate the true gospels from the false of the fifty forged during the first two centuries of the Christian era; that the Christians of the first three centuries were, of all men of whom we have any record, the most unprincipled liars and forgers; that Origen, Jerome, Eusebius, Chrysostom, and the early fathers of the Church, established the science of pious forgery as a justifiable practice, under the name of Economia; that the present canon of the New Testament was decided to be the word of God by the votes of squabbling and rancorous bishops, and that had the majority voted against the received version, that which is now esteemed divine revelation would have been denounced as "mere fables and lying narrations," as were the rejected copies; that the whole matter of the divinity of their so-called "sacred oracle" depends upon the dicta of whimsical and wrangling priests; that the compendium of religious knowledge, the Bible, is merely a material, man-made book, bound up in sheep skin or calf skin (fit fodder for the sheep and calves of faith), and put in the market and bought and sold for profit precisely like any other human production; let them read it for themselves, the same as they would any other book, with minds unfettered by faith and free from the glamour of early education, and they will realize that, after all, their printed paper fetish is, for the most part, but a false and foolish old volume, entirely unworthy the reverence of any reasonable being—let them consider all this, and that sacred scriptures are but things of yesterday, which, with all else that is worthless, are destined to disappear among the accumulating rubbish of the ages. But the great unwritten gospel of Nature, revealed in the rock and the rose, in the intuitions of the human heart and in the fiery scriptures of circling suns and constellations, and uttered in all the myriad mighty voices of the wondrous Universe, shall never fail. To the bigot who would force upon us a self-contradictory, revolting old book (which men may mangle, rats nibble, and time moulder), we offer the glorious gospels strewn everywhere by the generous hands of our universal Mother, whose sublime lessons speak to the consciences of men in the stars and sunbeams, in the winds and waves and woodlands, and which will be everlastingly taught by the ten thousand tongues of Nature through all the corridors of eternity.

EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER. We are having the wrath of God stirred up in our favor until we fairly see the "smoke of our own torment ascending." But Boston don't scare worth a cent! Moody's revival is a failure so far. He has met with serious opposition. Rev. M. J. Savage, Rev. Dr. Bartol, Rev. H. H. Murray, and the Sunday Times, have all warred against him and his method. And the more radical element has been at work too. Mr. Charles Ellis who got himself an unenviable name among your friends by defending the Waterloo napoleons (a little "n" will do) of Paine Hall, has been and is drawing crowded houses, filling the commodious lower hall in the Paine Building every Sunday with splendid audiences since the Investigator quit praising him. He is becoming popular. Yours truly, H. G. B.

DEATH is said to be but the gateway to life eternal, where the longing soul shall yet find the full fountain of all its unuttered desires. Hope it is so.

"The Safe Side."—Continued.

BY HUGH BYRON BROWN.

That is the only and true "safe side," that is the side of humanity against error, ignorance, slaveries and wrongs of every nature, wherever they are found, or in whatever shape they appear, whether in the pages of a so-called sacred book, or in those of the statute book of the nation; whether in a bigoted church, a despotic government, a corrupt judiciary, a subsidized press, in everything that hinders and obstructs the path of the race toward freedom, happiness and truth.

That is not the safe side that shuns the light, dreads examination and agitation, decries progress and wars on science and human reason, whose ideal is in the dead past, and whose last and best word has long since been spoken!

He is not on the safe side who hides his real convictions when their avowal might adversely affect his interest, who suffers injustice and wrong to exist rather than exert himself for their redress and extinction; who lacks the moral courage to stand up for the right—to think for himself and be true to his convictions, who disregards the laws of society and the rights of his fellow men, and who has no higher aim in life than the gratification of his own selfish desires.

But it is not sufficient to indicate merely what the safe side is not or what acts of individuals are in harmony therewith.

If there be a side absolutely safe, or safer than another, it should be indicated, emphasized and its claims enforced so that none may mistake, or fail to know it.

First, then, the safe side is the side of truth and reason as against error and superstition.

It is not true as asserted by some, that it matters little what one believes, let it be true or false, reasonable or unreasonable, if it be only honestly and sincerely believed. According to this view there is not any difference per se, between what is true and reasonable, and that which is untrue and contrary to reason, and the good is made to lie simply in the honesty and sincerity with which they are held.

Honesty of purpose, and sincerity of belief are unquestionably first-class virtues, the lack of which nothing can compensate, but to say that our characters or happiness will not be injuriously or otherwise affected by erroneous opinions or false reasoning is to deny that cause holds the same relation to effect in the moral as in the physical world; and to fly in the face of the facts of history and of every-day experience.

For, besides the inevitable tendency of truth and reason to assert themselves, thereby unsettling all that has been built or predicted upon the false, there comes to the honest and sincere soul a period of doubt, and despair, in which too often, the moral obligations and duties to society which were supposed to rest for their authority on the now disproved beliefs share their fate, to the injury and sorrow of the individual and to the detriment of society.

Such were the results witnessed at every great epoch of change in the belief of a people—witness the laxity of public and private morals and the gradual decay of the higher and sterner virtues on the one side, and the extravagances, fanaticism, and excesses on the other, which attended the transition of the Roman Empire from paganism to Christianity, and again in the Fifteenth Century during the Reformation.

Indeed is it not apparent that the wide-spread and alarming increase of fraud, speculation, betrayal of trusts and social inharmony in our time and country are the inevitable results of that social and moral chaos that results from the disintegration of the old faiths, before, the new and safer scientific system has taken its place.

Were it necessary for the strength of my denial that systems and beliefs based on error are as safe and beneficial as any if only honestly and sincerely entertained, I have but to point to the countries or districts adjoining each other, and which in blood, climate, origin and the aspects of Nature—every thing but their religion, is the same—that totally different, yet equally as honestly entertained.

But mark the difference; it is apparent in everything—in the countenances of the people—in their modes of thought—in their acts, feelings, manners, customs, habits no less than in their habitations, surroundings and institutions.

Who that has seen these different results as exemplified in the Protestant and Catholic Cantons in Switzerland shall say that the intellectual system and its results in the former are not safer; and better than those of the latter, and that it matters little what is believed if honestly entertained.

Let it not be inferred, however, that we regard Protestantism as the safe side. Our object in drawing the comparison between the results of the intellectual condition of mind, resulting from the teachings of Catholicism and that produced by Protestantism being only to show by their marked and radical defects that it does matter much what a man believes, and that one faith may be a much better and safer one than another, although both may be radically defective, and doomed, as both of those systems are, in the fulness of time to give place to the scientific order which we deem to be the only real safe side.

Second. We hold that the safe side is that of Naturalism as against Supernaturalism.

By naturalism we mean that which is in the order of Nature; that which is cognizant to the senses, and which can be positively known and verified.

By supernaturalism we mean that which is not known to be in the regular order of nature, which is imaginary rather than real, and which cannot be positively known or verified.

The position of these two intellectual states may be respectively stated thus:

To the supernaturalist the material or visible is only the manifestation of the unseen reality. The real entity is the Infinite Spirit, of which the soul of man is an emanation and into whose existence it will be again merged as a snow-flake is dissolved and lost in the boundless ocean. To him the order of the Universe seems an evolution from within outwardly. The unseen becomes to him the real, the seen being only the manifestation of an invisible entity—the body a material casket in which is enshrined an immortal principle. To him life is no longer a riddle. Its meaning and purpose are fully understood. Life, says the supernaturalist, in its relation to human destiny is but as the prelude to the oratorio, the dawn to the day—the rivulet to the ocean. His intuition of the unseen is so strong that he is impatient of the deduction of logic, and scarcely requires proof of that to him, so obvious and plain. To the Materialist, he says: "more in pity than in anger,"

"Alas for him who never sees the stars shine through the cypress trees;
Who hopeless lays his dead away, nor looks to see the breaking day across the mournful marble play;
Who hath not learned in hours of faith, the truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That life is ever Lord of death, and Love can never lose its own."

The Materialist, on the other hand, sees things in a far different light. His habits of thought, temperament and mode of reasoning are the antipodes of the former; to him imagination lends no wings; he prefers the hard pan of the senses to the dreamland of the imagination. He prefers to dig with the scientist rather than soar with the idealist; he prefers the substance to the shadow; the known to the unknown—the seen to the unseen, and who cannot realize the existence of thought and feeling without a visible material organization.

He evolves nothing from his inner consciousness—reasons only from the objective—recognizes only that which is susceptible of proof and demonstration. Such are the gradings of science and the doubting Thomases of society, who will not believe that the Christ has arisen unless they shall see in his hands the prints of the nails, and put their fingers into the print of the nails, and thrust their hands into his side. In a word, the Materialist hears no voice that is not articulated from the vocal organs, sees no object that is not depicted on the retina of the eye, touches nothing that is not of the earth earthy; hopes for nothing that is not on the plain of his senses, and looks upon the cherished beliefs of the supernaturalist as but dreams and phantasies of the imagination.

But on what grounds do we predicate the assertion that naturalism is the safe side?

On the ground that whatever more nearly touches and concerns our present existence and everything relating thereto as compared to that which refers and emphasizes a condition of life of which we know nothing, and which, for aught we know, may prove as baseless as the fabric of a dream, must, because of its practicability and utility, be the safer side.

For is it not apparent that an intense realization of the so-called spiritual has in the past, and must now lead to the neglect of the present, the exceeding glory and eternal duration of the hereafter belittling the affairs of the present, causing men rather to endure the imperfections of their surroundings and the poverty of their earthly homes in the anticipation of "a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

If on the other hand we accept this life as a finality—the "be-all and the end-all" of our objective being, neither seeking, wishing nor hoping for that which is not in the order of nature, we would be far more solicitous to make the most of this, our only life, and would strive to find or make our heaven here and now, rather than in a future state of existence of which we know nothing.

Had the dream of another objective life never entered the human mind, how different the history of the past would have read, and how different might have been the complexion of society and the condition of men to-day!

What an untold amount of energy, wealth, and feeling has been comparatively wasted on that which concerns not the real and vital interests of man in his present, and as we believe, only life! What an ocean of tears and blood would have been saved could the race have attained their present condition without passing through the theological stage—had they been content with simple nature and never have soared on the wings of imagination to things not possible in the order of nature!

Who shall say, looking over the weary path which humanity has traveled, stained and besmeared as it is with tears and blood, that such a baptism of suffering was inevitable from the nature of things—that the cup of human misery, even to its very dregs, must needs have been drank had not the dark cloud of superstition, an emanation from a diseased imagination, obscured for a time the light of reason and repressed the nobler and better part of man's nature?

Useful as those creatures of the imagination—God, Heaven, and Hell—have in a degree been made in the past by kings and priests for the accomplishment of their own purposes, and secondarily for the restraint of human passion and an incentive to human duty, who will doubt that had such fictions of the imaginations remained uncreated that the world would not have been the better for it? Who will say that but for this misdirection of human energy and feeling humanity might have been so ameliorated, improved and enriched as to have in a measure realized the aspirations of the Hebrew prophets when the "desert should blossom as the rose"—"when nations should learn war no more"—"when the lion shall lie down with the lamb, and a little child shall lead them?"

[CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.]

DEATH is the wish of some, the relief of many, and the end of all. It sets the slave at liberty, carries the banished man home, and places all men on the same level, inasmuch that life itself would be a punishment without it.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.
SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 24, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 14.

Great Jehovah, let us return again to the subject upon which we are anxious to gain more light than we now possess—the begetting of thy youngest son, Jesus. Had he an existence prior to the time he was begotten upon the person of that young Jewish maiden? Did his existence begin then? or had he existed from all eternity, with thyself, long before the stars, the suns, and the planets were called into being?

If he always existed, why was it necessary to beget him anew, and cause him to pass through the period of gestation, infancy, childhood and youth? If he always had existed, why bring him into existence again? Is it possible to bring a person into existence who has already existed millions of ages?

As thou didst not say anything about thy son, four or five thousand years ago, when thou wert in the habit of calling upon thy old favorite patriarchs and prophets, conversing with them as a man converses with his friend, and as thou didst never introduce him to those intimate friends of thine, and never even hinted to them that thou hadst a son, is it not very natural for us to conclude that he did not exist prior to the time when thou, or the Holy Ghost didst beget him, according to Matthew and Luke?

Jehovah, is not the begetting of offspring a process of a marked and peculiar character? On such occasions is not the animal passion of love excited to a very high degree? Does not the feeling, in fact, amount to animal lust, especially on the part of the male?

Is it possible for a male being to enter into the process of begetting offspring unless his animal passions are fully aroused? Has any male, whether of the human race or the lower orders of animals, ever had the ability to beget an offspring except by the direct and immediate agency of this sensuous passion of lust? Is what is styled "Platonic love," however pure and strong it may be, whether with the assistance of a female or without, capable of begetting an offspring? Is there anything, any feeling, any impulse, any sentiment, that, in this particular function, can be substituted for, or be made to take the place of, the lustful propensity in begetting children?

If this is true of the animal kingdom, if it is true of the human race, may we ask if the same rule holds not good with the gods? We have heard much of the gods having their loves and sweethearts, of their having intercourse with females, both celestial and terrestrial, and having children by them—are they not governed in this exercise by similar feelings, impulses and passions as those which actuate the human race and the lower animals?

Art thou able to say how it was in this respect with the gods of India and Chaldea and Phœnicia and Greece? When they had sexual intercourse with the goddesses and the daughters of men, were they not actuated by the same sexual desire, the animal passion of love, as mortals are? Would this not have been strictly necessary in all cases to insure an offspring? Could there possibly have been an offspring without it?

To come nearer, now, to thy own experience: as our own eternal salvation depends upon our having the right kind of faith upon this very important subject, grant us the right and true information, and allow us to enquire with some degree of particularity in reference to this very interesting transaction: Wert thou, when thou didst beget thy son Jesus, actuated by the passion of sexual desire? Hadst thou not a strong, impulsive love for that young Jewish maiden?

Was she not remarkably pleasing in thy eyes at the time of that interview? Did she not seem more lovely to thee than all the other women in existence? Hadst thou not sought her from among the thousands of the damsels of thy people, and for this express purpose? Hadst thou not had thine eye upon her for some time previous to that particular interview, and for that special object?

Was thy love for the damsel as much more intense than the love a man feels toward a maiden under similar circumstances, as thy power and ability in other respects are greater than man's?

Was this feeling of love and attraction between the virgin and thyself mutual? Was she actuated by similar emotions with thyself? Was the interview equally pleasurable to both?

Was the effect of thy visit upon the young lady such as to produce a physical change upon her? Was she a virgin subsequent to the interview in the same sense that she was previous to it?

Was she conscious of thy presence? or didst thou throw her into an unconscious condition, as is now often produced by such anesthetics as ether and chloroform?

We trust, Jehovah, that thou wilt not deem us too inquisitive in a matter which may be thought to be no business of ours, but thy priests tell us that this act of begetting thy son was the grandest act thou ever didst perform, and that it was of more importance to the world of mankind than any other act that ever was performed. Are we, then, not justifified in endeavoring to learn the whole truth? If ourselves and the whole world are to be saved by possessing the true faith in the birth, life, and death of thy son, should we not strive to obtain correct information, and all the information that can be obtained? Is there any better way to obtain knowledge of what thou didst than to ask thee about it? Are we not entitled to know all the truth that we can possibly learn? And are there any truths of greater importance than of thy own deeds, especially in all connected with thy great plan of human salvation?

We are not quite clear about the Holy Ghost, whether he was thee or not, whether thou and he are one, or two individuals. According to Matthew, was not the Holy Ghost solely the father of the infant Jesus? Did not thy angel, after the event had taken place, tell Joseph when asleep: "that which is conceived in her (Mary) is of the Holy Ghost"? Are we not to understand by this that the Holy Ghost was the father, and that thou hadst nothing to do with the paternity of the child? As, according to Matthew, Joseph did not dream anything about thy being present, are we not to conclude that thou wert not there, and hence that the child was none of thine?

But do we not get a different statement from Luke? Did not Gabriel, the grand major-general of the angelic forces, appear unto the modest maiden and tell her all about it and just how the business was to be performed? Did he not assure her that she was highly favored among women? that among all the females of the earth she had found most favor with thee and in thy sight? that she should conceive in her womb and bring forth a son that should be great? that he should possess the throne of David? and that to his kingdom there should be no end?

When the little inexperienced girl wished to know how that could be; how she could conceive and have a child, seeing she had not known a man, did not the Archangel proceed to enlighten her by saying, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore, that holy thing that shall be born of thee shall be called the son of God"?

Now if Luke was correct in reporting the interview which took place between Gabriel and Mary; that the operation was carried out as the angel had indicated; if we can be assured that Luke knew precisely what he was talking about, and that he told just how the feat was accomplished; if we can be positive that his narrative of this most remarkable performance was not tampered with nor changed by any of the designing and unscrupulous disciples of Athanasius and other fraud-mongers of the "Fathers of the Church," as unfortunately was the case in thousands of instances—sometimes changing the language, and sometimes adding entirely new matter—if we can be sure that Luke's narration of Mary's vision passed down unscathed and unchanged through the ten succeeding centuries, during which time so much was done at writing, revising, changing, interpreting, forging, and variously modifying hundreds of gospels and epistles, and which were quarreled over and fought over by almost numberless councils of partisan bishops, week after week, month after month, and, we may truthfully say, year after year—if, we ask, we can believe Luke's story to be the exact truth, are we not warranted in believing that both the Holy Ghost and thyself had a part in begetting Jesus?

Did not Gabriel say: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee"? By the Highest did he not mean thee? If he did not mean thee, whom did he mean? Did he not speak of the Holy Ghost and the Highest as being two personages, one coming upon the virgin and the other "overshadowing" her? Does it not follow, then, that there were three different persons engaged in that act of begetting a son—the Holy Ghost, the Highest, and the little black-eyed maiden?

Jehovah, is it not a little curious, to look at the matter squarely in the face, that two members of a triune or three-headed deity, a three-bodied figure, who, we are told, has existed from all eternity, should operate in connection with a young girl to beget the third party or limb of the firm, the Godhead, the bachelor-trinity, or whatever it may be called? Is it not the most singular event that has transpired since the stars of heaven first sang together in blue vaulted space?

Is it not possible that, if the third member of the celebrated firm is eternal like thyself and had an existence from the earliest morning of time, that he also took a part in begetting himself? If he has been ever with thee and of thee, could he have been absent? Is it not enough to confuse the clearest head that lives to understand how a being can beget himself? Is there not vastly more room here for faith than reason; for blind credulity than good sense?

As Luke is the only person who seemed to know anything about the modus operandi by which this little business was accomplished; as he is the only one handed down to us who entered into the subject with the slightest particularity of detail, and he but partially, is it not to be regretted that his gospel came so near being rejected in one of the councils of bishops that was convened in the fourth Christian century to decide which manuscripts were thy word and which were not, as to be admitted by a single vote? Can we be positive that that vote was honestly counted, and that there was no fraudulent "returning board" that manipulated it on the principle of "seven to eight"?

If that one vote had not been counted, in making up Luke's very slender majority, what would we have done about obtaining the facts in the case, about the Holy Ghost and thyself and the girl, Mary, getting up the little Jesus? Would we not have had to depend solely upon Matthew's story about Joseph's dream, and without knowing whether he dreamed it right or not? Is not the entire subject one of a very dreamy, visionary, mythological, improbable character, and such as could not be accepted as truth in this age of the world? If it should be stated now, that a young woman held sexual intercourse with a ghost and was thereby made pregnant, without having connection with a male of the genus homo, would any sane person believe it? Was it any more probable or any more true nineteen hundred years ago? If the word Priest had been used instead of Ghost, would not the story have been far more probable, and far more in keeping with the experience of men, both in the past and in the present?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

What I Don't Believe.—No. 22.

203. I do not believe that Ezekiel was any more successful in prophesying about the downfall and desolation of Tyre when he used this language: "Behold, I will bring upon Tyre Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, a king of kings from the North, with horses and with chariots and with horsemen and companies and much people. With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all thy streets; he shall slay thy people by the sword, and thy strong garrisons shall go down to the ground. And I will make thee like the top of a rock; thou shalt be a place to spread nets upon, thou shalt be built no more: for I, the Lord, hath spoken it, saith the Lord God. I will make thee a terror, and thou shalt be no more, though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again, saith the Lord God." Ezek. xxvi., 7, 11, 14, and 21.

What are the facts in relation to this prophecy? Why, just these: the history of Tyre falsifies the prediction which Ezekiel made in reference to it; and shows that the prophet's indignation against the proud city that long had been more than a compeer to his beloved Jerusalem greatly exceeded his ability to foresee or foretell the vicissitudes of fortune which awaited it.

There is not a particle of evidence that Nebuchadnezzar ever captured Tyre. Josephus, who had access to histories which were in existence before him, many of which are not now extant, never intimated that such an event took place. Not a Greek nor Roman historian mentions any such circumstance; while Christian writers in the latter part of the fourth century distinctly state that no reference was made to such an event in any of the historical writings of Phœnicia or Greece.

In the second place, it is well known that Tyre was a large and important city for centuries after the time of Nebuchadnezzar. Three hundred and thirty-three years before Christ it was besieged for seven months and finally taken by Alexander the Great. It was then a strongly fortified city, and was populous and wealthy. Thirty thousand of its inhabitants were sold as slaves. It was afterwards subject to the Macedonian king of Syria until the Romans took possession of it in the year 65 B. C., down to which time, and long afterwards, it continued to be a populous and prosperous city. From what is said of it by Strabo and Josephus there is no doubt that down to the time of Augustus it was more populous than Jerusalem.

The first great interruption in its prosperity took place in the fifth century. Jerome says (in 414 A. C.) in his time it was "the most noble and beautiful city in Phœnicia."

"During the Arabian revolution that took place under Mahomet it was again the subject of conquest, but its capture by the Khalif Omar did not put a period to its existence."

In 1144 it surrendered to the Christians and it was at that time a beautiful and flourishing city and so continued till nearly the commencement of the fourteenth century or eighteen hundred years from the time when the great Hebrew prophet Ezekiel declared in the name of his God that it should be destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar and never be rebuilt.

"It was re-captured by the Saracens in 1291; since which time it has experienced fitful revivals of prosperity but has gradually declined until it is now reduced to a town of some five thousand inhabitants. It is now known by the name of Sour or Sur."

It must be left for the reader to decide whether Ezekiel spoke for his God or not. If he did, his God was certainly greatly at fault for the predictions which he made about the city of Tyre were never verified. It is far safer to conclude that Ezekiel did not speak for the Supreme Power of the Universe and that he had no authority to prophesy the destruction of Tyre save what originated in his own mind.

It will be proper to give in this connection a few passages from a letter by Dr. Bellows the well-known Unitarian scholar and divine of this city, and which he wrote home while in the country here treated of.

"We thought over the twenty-sixth chapter of Ezekiel, who so boldly and eloquently predicted the ruin of the proud city, which had already, in the prophet's day, become a synonym of luxury, prosperity and worldliness. The book-makers would have us believe that the prophecies in regard to the destruction of these cities that border on their sacred land, were verified with the most literal fidelity, and that every line of them had a special application and specific fulfillment. The real truth is, that the destruction of all great cities is certain, if only time enough is given; and that a thousand years might usually blot out the foundations of any town, or to build them over with a new city. A few cities retain their names, after thrice as long a period, but they retain nothing else. Damascus, the oldest city in the world, is a city a dozen times rebuilt, and very often destroyed. Tyre has been destroyed and rebuilt and revived at least five times. To which of its destructions are the words of Ezekiel to be applied? The noble indignation of the prophet, venting his solemn sense of the destruction that waits on all the pride of this world, upon prosperous Tyre, would have been just as carefully fulfilled if applied to any other sea-coast city which had reached prosperity. It is of the providential nature of civilizations, as the world changes its wants, and starts new types of life on fresh soils, to decay, and no virtue or piety will save them from this fate ultimately. It is as certain as death for every man."

204. I do not believe the following doleful prophecy of Ezekiel against Egypt has ever been literally fulfilled, "And the land of Egypt shall be desolate and waste, and they shall know that I am the Lord. . . . I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste and desolate from the towers of Syrene even unto the border of Ethiopia. No foot of man shall pass through it, neither shall it be inhabited forty years (Ezek., xxix., 9-11).

Ezekiel missed his mark widely. Though Egypt, like Media, Assyria, Chaldea, Phœnicia, Arabia, Greece, and Rome, lost its former grandeur and its nationality, pursuant to the laws which govern all nations, and became largely disintegrated, and reduced in numbers, influence and wealth, it has never been made utterly waste and desolate; there has never, since that prophecy was written, been "forty years" when that country was "uninhabited." There never has been a time when "no foot of man passed through it, and the inhabitants of that country have never "known Jehovah and that he was the Lord." Egypt, like most of the countries of the Eastern world through wars, internal dissensions, losing faith in her mythical religion, etc., lost her former glory but no more so than many of the other countries in that part of the world; for five thousand years and more, that country has been constantly inhabited; the nation has been continued. Within the last century Egypt has greatly progressed in enterprise, wealth and internal improvements. Ezekiel will have to try again or not pass for an infallible prophet.

205. I do not believe that the prophecy of Isaiah relative to the Jews holding in bondage the people who oppressed them in his day was ever fulfilled. He spake thus: "For the Lord will have mercy on Jacob and set them in their own land, and the strangers shall be joined with them and they shall cleave to the house of Jacob. And the people shall take them and bring them to their place, and the house of Israel shall possess them in the land of the Lord, for servants and handmaids; and they shall take them captive whose captives they were, and they shall rule over their oppressors. And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall give thee rest from thy sorrow, and from thy fear and from thy hard bondage wherein thou hast made to serve." (Isa. xiv. 1-3.)

These predictions of Isaiah never came to pass. The Jews never were able to take the people captive which made captives of them, nor did they ever rule over them. Neither were such people ever joined with them as equals or as servants and handmaids. Nothing of the kind ever occurred. The prophecy was a total failure. The Lord, moreover, did not give the Jews rest from their sorrows and their fears. They were constantly in trouble ever after and were filled with sorrow and apprehension and fear.

206. I don't believe the prophecy made by Ezekiel (chap. xxxii. 11-26.) was ever fulfilled, wherein it was promised that the children of Israel should be taken from the heathen and brought to their own land and that the Lord should make them become one nation on the mountains of Israel; that one king should rule over them all, and that they should be no more divided, that they should "dwell in the land of Israel forever, they and their children and that king David should rule over them forever." None of these conditions were fulfilled. The Jews never were fully united. Ten of the tribes composing that people strayed away and were lost, and it is not known to this day what ever became of them. The remaining tribes or the residue of the people did not continue to dwell in Palestine. They became scattered among all the civilized nations of the earth, and they have been driven from land to land, from country to country. For two thousand years, it may be truthfully said, they have had no home. Ezekiel scarcely hit the truth at all.

207. I do not believe that the prophecy of the prophet Nathan was ever fulfilled. "I will appoint a place for my people Israel and will plant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own and move no more, neither shall the children of wickedness afflict thee any more as afore time.

And thine house and thy kingdom shall be established forever. According to all this vision, so did Nathan speak unto David." (2 Sam. vii. 10-16). But Nathan made a wide mistake as we have just seen. The people of Israel were not planted in a place whence they moved no more and where they dwelt forever. Neither were they ever free from the annoyance of the children of wickedness,—the surrounding nations. The house of David and the kingdom of Israel most assuredly did not endure forever. They were completely scattered in every direction and have been for nearly twenty centuries.

208. I do not believe Jeremiah was any more happy in his prediction, "At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord and all nations shall be gathered unto it in the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem. . . . In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come out of the land of the north to the land I have given for an inheritance to your father." Jer. iii. 17, 18). Here again predictions and promises were made which were never performed. The kingdoms of Judah and Israel were never so established at Jerusalem nor did all nations gather into it. The prophecy was emphatically a failure.

So hundreds of other prophecies could be pointed out which were never fulfilled, but it would be too tedious to follow them out. From the first passage in the Bible called a prophecy, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed, it shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel" (Gen. iii. 15)—but which was really no prophecy at all—down through the thousands of passages called prophecies, there is great ambiguity and indirectness, with almost a total lack of circumstantiality of event and directness of statement. Where these have been attempted failures of fulfillment have been the rule. Only when the statements have been so vague as to apply to one time as well as to another, or to one event as well as to another, can a fulfillment be justly claimed.

These predictions of the Jewish prophets, either in point of definiteness of statement or accuracy in fulfillment, will not compare at all favorably with the correctness which marks the predictions in reference to the weather, the storm, and the meteorological changes which daily issue from the office of the Coast Survey and Signal Bureau at Washington. The party familiarly styled "Old Probabilities," who makes so many correct prognostications of the weather on this continent, and in Europe as well, and which are sent all over the country and published in a thousand papers before the fulfillment comes, beats the old prophets of Palestine "all to pieces," and his predictions are a thousand times more of use than all they ever uttered.

Henry S. Cornwell has written the following clever lines upon our distinguished weather prophet:

Old Probabilities.

He wrestles with the weather. He divines
The things that shall be from the things that are;
He knows the occultations and the signs
Of each prognostic star.

From the low murmur of the moonless seas
He learns their deepest secrets, and doth scan
The midnight heaven's moving mysteries.
To publish them to man.

The chariots of the wind, whose wheels outrun
Centaurus, in his flashing course on high,
He stayeth with a sign. The flaming sun
Winks to him from the sky.

His home is in the black domain of storm,
And in the flaming sunset's gold alike.
He laugheth at the thunder, and his form
No lightning dares to strike!

So fancy paints him. Others as a sage Describe him—of a grave, sagacious look,
Deciphering symbols from the antique page
Of some mysterious book.

Thermometers and barometric scales,
Wind-gauges, and machines of strange designs
Surround him as he plans the tides and gales.
And unto each assigns

Its area and its predetermined course,
And scores it in a chart, that we may learn
Its natural law, duration, average force,
And period of return.

But whether man or myth, he turns the mill
That grinds the weather out from day to day;
And when we cannot have it as we will,
We bear it as we may.

Hemans declares, "Leaves have their time to fall;"
To which I add—and thieves their time to rob
Hen-houses, barns, and banks, but thou hast all Times for thine own, Old Prob!

Then go thy ways! old necromancer quaint,
And flash thy prophecies from post to post;
Enduring still our querulous complaint
When thou dost vex us most:

For whether winter's frost or summer's heat
Freeze us or fry us, little heed to man
Thou givest, following still in cycles meet,
The old eternal plan.

Our vote is cast in favor of our own "Old Probabilities," being decidedly a greater and more truthful prophet than those of olden time who used to idly wander over the hills of Palestine.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF.—The printers and binders have delayed us a few days longer than we expected in getting this work out, but it is now ready, and we are prepared to fill orders for it. It is a most valuable work; furnished at a very moderate price, and we hope to have the pleasure of sending it to many of our patrons. We assure those who order a copy that they will not regret it. In cloth, $3.00; leather, red, burnished edges, $4.00; Morocco and gilt edges, $4.50. Sent by mail at these prices.

PROF. H. C. POWELL, of Virden, Ill., has opened a Liberal Bookstore, or at least he keeps a full assortment of the leading Radical, Scientific and Progressive Books. He is deserving of much credit for the zeal and public spirit he is manifesting. The works he is selling in his locality are doing much towards opening the eyes of enquiring people who are still sitting in darkness. We wish success to his enterprise.

THE ARCANES OF SPIRITUALISM, by Hudson Tuttle.—We have received from Colby & Rich, Boston, a copy of this work, which is published by James Burns, London. It has been for some little time out of print, and we are pleased to see a nice edition of this valuable work placed on the market. Mr. Tuttle is a lucid and able writer, and everything from his pen is sure to possess a real value. In this work he claims to be merely an amanuensis, writing what was revealed to him. He treats at length "The Evidences of Spiritualism," "Matter and Force, their Relation to Spirit," "Physical Matter and Spirit," "Spiritual Atmosphere of the Universe," "Relation of the Spiritual to the Animal in Man," "Animal Magnetism, its Boundaries, Laws, and Relation to Spirit," "Spirit, its Phenomena and Laws," "Philosophy of Death—A Review of some Old Theories," "Mediumship," "Heaven and Hell," "The Spirits' Home," "Religious Aspect of Spiritualism," "The Old and the New." There are few more pleasing and instructive writers than Mr. Tuttle. Let this volume be widely read.

What is Clairvoyance?

MRS. JENNIE B. BROWN.

Few persons, even among those who possess this occult quality, find themselves adequate to the task of defining any species of the various phenomena attendant thereon.

Having devoted much time to the investigation and study, and by experimental tests, having acquired a pretty thorough and practical knowledge of its nature, use and abuse, I venture a few hints through the columns of your paper, which I trust may be both useful and of interest to your intelligent and progressive readers.

Using a plain, prosaic, but common-sense term, we pronounce the clairvoyant property, as nothing more or less than simple "animal instinct," carried up from rude and vague beginnings, to the higher creation, where, in a more expansive and largely developed form than we observe when confined to the lower animal kingdom, under the name of "natural intelligence," it meets, but does not end its mission, with general acquired knowledge, and book education, such as is taught in the schools.

Every person who is to a degree above ordinary capacity, conscious of clairvoyant sight or perception, knows full well that he or she is, at times irresistibly drawn, mentally, emotionally, or sympathetically, in the direction of persons, places, objects, or events, proportionably as circumstances connected with these things, assume marked, or in any way unusual importance, more especially if the clairvoyant person, or those persons and things in whom the clairvoyant person may be particularly interested, are individually affected.

In the same way, this same power, when it inheres in the brute animal operates more or less noticeably, in proportion as the brute, may belong to an intelligent species, or otherwise, and the clairvoyant property be largely, or to a limited degree developed.

Let me state a few facts by way of illustration. A fine Durham cow in our possession for several years, was never allowed to keep her calf, it being sold to the butcher at the age of five or six weeks regularly every year. Grieving for three or four days to the extent of scarcely tasting food, our Durham would gradually become apparently reconciled, till two weeks from the day on which the calf was taken away by the butcher. She would then become moody, abstracted, and indifferent to the coaxing and bribing allurements of sweet clover, and fruits, and such things as usually met with unbounded approval. This condition proved invariably the precursor of the wildest, most frantic demonstrations of grief, terror, and indignation possible for a dumb animal to betray.

Watching our cow closely, at first imagining that she was ill, I afterward spoke to the man who bought the calf about her symptoms, he being much accustomed to the care of live-stock. He expressed the opinion that there was nothing the matter with the animal, adding the suggestion that she doubtless pined some for the calf, remarking also that she was a fine, intelligent beast; then, turning the subject abruptly, he asked me to guess the weight of the calf that he bought of us, which, he said, he had slaughtered on the evening of the preceding Tuesday—the very time of the unusual conduct on the part of the cow. This struck me forcibly at the time, and the thought occurred to me that it was possibly an instinctive knowledge of the outrage perpetrated on her young, that had occasioned the apparent mental agony of the mother.

Enquiry elicited the fact that it was the custom of the butcher to feed calves just two weeks from the date of purchase before slaughtering for market. The three following years I watched events and noticed the very same developments, with this exception; the last or third year the poor brute celebrated the second day following that which marked the expiration of the usual two weeks, and subsequent inquiry disclosed the fact that the butcher found it expedient to delay the slaughter of the calf bought of us till that day. Shortly after this we sold our Durham and lost sight of her.

Other wonderful phenomena could be related of several dogs formerly in our possession, but may better be omitted on account of the extreme length they would give to my article should I recite them. Besides, it is universally known that the instinctive intelligence of the canine race is almost invariably of a remarkably unerring quality and quantity.

Every person of constructive mind, who may be given to habits of careful observation and analysis, will doubtless recall instances of exceptional instinctive development in connection with some particular animal which may have offered opportunity for study, or which some extraordinary feat may have brought prominently to their individual notice, thereby inducing more than an ordinary interest.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

So great a man as Bacon denied the diurnal revolution of the earth, and seriously suggested as a subject of inquiry, whether, since the center of the earth is the center of gravity, the concave of the sky may not be the bound of levity.

Loans and Donations

We recently made an appeal to our friends for a loan to enable us to increase our publishing facilities, and while the responses have thus far been fewer than we hoped, we nevertheless fully appreciate the kindness of those who have responded, and hereby express to them our heartfelt thanks. Others have promised us help after a while, and many have written us kind letters expressive of the pleasure they would feel in assisting us were it in their power. We appreciate friendly letters even if they are unaccompanied with material aid.

LOANS.

A. Minski, Milwaukee, Wis.,	$25.00
Joseph Noyes, Richmond, Vt.,	25.00
Wm. N. Bennett, Elgin, Iowa,	25.00
Mrs. Hannah Conklin, Yates city, Ill.,	50.00
Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.,	90.00
Elisha Hyatt, Smithville, N. Y.,	10.00
John Cleminson, El Monte, Cal.,	10.00
J. Straight, Walla Walla, Wash. Ter.,	10.00
J. W. Petty, La Crosse, Wis.,	10.00
T. Goodall, Sanford, Maine,	20.00
John G. Kendall, Southampton, Ill.,	5.00
J. B. Hinkle, Mt. Freedom, W. Va.,	2.50
M. P. Thurston, Burr Oak, Mich.,	10.00
W. N. Bennett, Elgin, Iowa,	5.00
Abram Bronson, Nordhoff, Cal.,	18.00
A. J. Johnson, Georgetown, Cal.,	10.00

DONATIONS.

Wm. Dudgeon, New Hartford, N. Y.,	$8.00
C. E. Butler, Owling's Mills, Md.,	1.00
J. C. J.—, New York,	5.00
Henry Gildemeister, Bunker Hill, Ill.,	5.00
John Chappellsmith, New Harmony, Ind.,	25.00
John Buck, Auburn, Ill.,	10.00
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville, Va.,	2.00
Dr. E. B. Foote, New York,	1.00
George Tappan, Jericho, N. Y.,	1.00
Robert Grantham, Ashby Mills, Ind.,	1.00
Mrs. Sallie J. Miner, Angola, Ind.,	1.00
D. R. Burt, Dunleith, Ill.,	1.00
G. G. Briggs, Davisville, Cal.,	20.00
Lawrence Tuttle, La Harpe, Ill.,	2.00
J. W. Bliss, Fairmount, Neb.,	1.00
E. C. Walker, Florence, Iowa,	1.00
C. H. Hill, Atlanta, Kan.,	2.00
Henry M. North & Son, Palmyra, N. Y.,	2.00
Dr. J. S. Lyon, Springfield, Mo.,	1.00
Fred. Busch, St. Joseph, Mo.,	1.00
James Ramsden, Lonsdale, R. I.,	1.00
James H. Lindsay, Scott River, Cal.,	2.00
Geo. Hendee, Royal Center, Ind.,	1.00
Geo. Schaff, Logansport, Ind.,	2.00
John Germer, Deweyville, Utah,	2.50
D. R. Burt, Dunleith, Ill.,	10.00
Wm. McLean, Chillicothe, Ill.,	3.00
B. F. Stone, Tecumseh, Neb.,	1.50
Geo. E. Hartley, Turners Falls, Mass.,	1.50
Isaac Van Schoiak, Jamesville, N. Y.,	1.00
Henry Weber, Dexter, Minn.,	1.00
Mrs. Hinkley, New Harmony, Ind.,	1.00
A. Minski, Milwaukee, Wis.,	8.00
Fred Busch, St. Joseph, Mo.,	1.00
Mrs. L. Hutchinson, Bishop's Creek, Cal.,	5.00
H. P. Williams, Linwood, Pa.,	1.00

From Salt Lake City (Minn) Sentinel.

Professor Jamieson delivered a lecture at the Academy of Music, Sunday evening on the life and services of Thomas Paine. The audience was very large, and the manner in which Mr. Jamieson handled the subject convinced those present that he understood the history and life of this noted man of Revolutionary times as well as if the great patriot had lived in our own day and generation. Although many differ with the Professor on some points in religious views, it is nevertheless true that his arguments are not without weight, and many speak of him in high terms as a public lecturer.

We clip the following from the Tama County (Iowa) Independent.

THE JOINT DISCUSSION.—The people of this town enjoyed a rare treat in listening to the debate between B. F. Underwood, of Boston, and Clark Braden, president of Abingdon college, in Illinois. It began on Monday eve, the 5th inst., and concluded on Saturday eve, the 10th. We should fail to do justice to both disputants if we did not acknowledge that they handled the subjects skillfully, and we may say, satisfactorily to their hearers. It is gratifying to know that the people of this town and vicinity showed an unusual amount of liberality in listening to these champions, although warned not to attend by the pastors of some of the churches, at least, our court-house being crowded to overflowing every night. Of course the prejudices were in favor of Mr. Braden. Mr. Underwood accredited himself on this as on previous occasions, with entire satisfaction to those having liberal views. While Mr. Braden had all of his matter in manuscript form and principally read his side of the argument, Mr. Underwood handled the subjects extemporaneously, thereby proving him to possess an almost exhaustless amount of learning and skill which compelled the admiration and respect of all his hearers. We should do injustice to this occasion if we failed to state that although some of the churches tried to divert people from these meetings, the house was crowded twice on Sunday to hear Mr. Braden, and again in the evening to hear Mr. Underwood, who, on about an hour's notice, delivered a three hours' extemporaneous answer to Mr. Braden's remarks which was enthusiastically admired by the crowded house he was addressing till 10 o'clock at night. It is gratifying to chronicle that some of the churches had the good sense to close their evening meetings and go to hear Mr. Underwood. But what does this mean? Are we not nearing the millennium? Close up the churches to hear liberal lectures. Verily, we are marching to eternal truth.

The churches of Maine are now compelled to be exceedingly careful as to the fluid they use in their communion services. The new liquor law of the State is far more stringent than the old one. No wine but that which is known as the unfermented kind has any chance for admission into the State. Most of the so-called "unfermented wine" which is sold for sacramental purposes is poor stuff. Yet the Maine Christians must use it, or go without. It is indeed sad that the saints have so much trouble in finding the proper fluid to transform into the blood of their God.

Friendly Correspondence.

Mrs. A. E. BILLINGS, a correspondent, gives the following remedy for diabetes in reply to an article in a back number: Pound and steep the young and tender sprouts of peach tree limbs; drink freely. A sure cure.

JOHN PECK of Naples, N. Y., writes: Keep THE TRUTH SEEKER at its work. If every man could be induced to read it, in five years the churches would "ground arms." They are only shooting blank cartridges now. They don't scare the people any more. All are becoming accustomed to the noise, and brimstone is already at a discount.

GILBERT ARNOLD, Corry, Pa., writes: I have been reading your paper sometime with another man, but I could not have the paper to keep, so I concluded that I must have it alone, for I see that I cannot do without it very well. If I do not get it regularly I miss it almost as much as I would my dinner. It does me good to know that there is one man who will speak out what he believes to be the truth regardless of God, man, or the Devil.

Mrs. R. S. LUCE, Carson City, Mich., writes: Please find enclosed one dollar for which send to my present address, as above, as many copies of "John's Way" as it will pay for, including postage. I think something of that kind will be read by some who are disposed to think for themselves but dare not advance beyond the old beaten track of church discipline, and look for consistency among the friends of Free thought. How many families would be benefited by pursuing the course of education whose effects are so faithfully portrayed by Mrs. Slenker. I am an old woman and cannot do much for the noble cause you are laboring for, but it will afford me much pleasure to hand to a few friends such food for thought as I find in your invaluable paper.

HUDSON TUTTLE, Berlin Heights, O., writes: A correspondent inquires if there is a juvenile paper published adapted for the children of Liberals. We are glad to say that there are two. For young children the Nursery published by John Shorey, 30 Bromfield St., Boston, is everything that is desirable. It is a gem of exquisite beauty, and never alludes to religion or theology. The Little Boquet, published by the Religio-Philosophical Publishing House, Chicago, is designed for more mature readers, and is not only Liberalistic but Spiritualistic in its tone. It should be patronized by every family of Spiritualists in the land, as it is both amusing and instructive, and gently leads the youthful mind in the right direction. We think this subject has not received the proper attention of Freethinkers and Spiritualists, for which they have numerous journals. Their children are suffered to read the mawkish trash thrust into their hands at the Sunday-schools, or left without any reading whatever. Until they feel the necessity of supplying their children with papers distinctively their own, liberal juvenile journals must be sustained at great sacrifice by their publishers.

A FRIEND from a town in Indiana, writes: You will please find enclosed photo. of young Bob Ingersoll, one of the champion centennial boys of 1876. Age four months, weight twenty-four pounds. You will see by his looks that he is a Liberal and without him your collection of Liberals would be incomplete. We have also sent a shadow to his namesake and as yet we have not heard from him, so we have come to the conclusion that Col. Bob don't think much of his "young Bobs," or he would give a fellow a few lines of consolation, as we have a terrible cross to bear under the circumstances. Our neighbors tell us that Ingersoll is a perfect "Infidel" and other bad things, and that our son will come to no good. So you see what danger we run of being gobbled up by their gods. I will send you the last of this week two new subscribers for your paper, and renewal for another. You may wonder why I work for your paper and do not take it myself. I will tell you in a few words: My employer is a pious Christian, and a leader in the M. E. Church and I have to "lay low," and work quietly or I may come to an end like some of the characters in "John's Way." As soon as I can, I will send for the "Sages" and Lord Amberley's book. As I have about two hundred volumes of scientific and historical works, I will content myself for the time being. You will find photo. of myself. Long may you wave, and spread the truth to the thousands who are waking up from priesthood and superstition's grasp to see the dawn of a new age with science and truth for our standard instead of grace and dogmas, creeds and superstitions. You will win, Friend Bennett, so keep your banner unfurled. I will do all I can, and so will all other good Liberals.

JOHN GRABLE, Wathena, Kan., writes: I have read your paper for two years past in exchange for the Investigator and now conclude to take it myself as I like it better than the other. Dr. Joseph Treat has sent me his "Twenty Propositions," or the Human Race Photographed, which is too vast a comprehension of matter and motion for common minds to be brought into practical use. First principles are needed to lay the foundation of mechanical invention and social organization, but not to run or work them, or else every man would have to be a philosopher, as Greek and Latin would help an engineer to understand or run a steam engine; so the people are too ignorant to study or appreciate the great conceptions of Dr. Treat. And even our most advanced scientists would be puzzled to comprehend him as I have. He also sent me notice that he wanted aid to help him pay for some printing he had done, which has induced me to send what money I can spare for your paper as I am also poor. I see that many of the Liberals duly appreciate your able efforts in the cause of human happiness and by both lending and donating to you in your laborious efforts. As Dr. Treat is an able Evolutionist, I might perhaps get him as a partner to introduce a "new equitable system of finance" that I have evolved that I want to introduce to the public by some 20 or 30 illustrations by means of painted views on glass to exhibit on a screen through a magic lantern. I have evolved my equitable finance by a classification of our national credit in banking and currency on a basis of ordinary, secondary, and tertiary. Government greenbacks are on a secondary base of credit, and banking, or specie and bonds are on an independent base of credit. This classification I show by three diagrams, with more than twenty illustrations. This new equitable system can be easily carried into effect and will be worth more to the United States than a thousand million dollars and will do for the creation and distribution of wealth, what the locomotive or railroad does for its transportation, and all this good result will evolve from getting into circulation the honest dollar as a medium of exchange without monopoly. I will shortly have an article published on "Mental Evolution" in the Popular Science Monthly in human progression which I want you to copy in your paper and besides I want to use your paper as a medium to introduce it. I have studied this matter of finance for years and have tried more than a hundred free and independent newspapers to publish it. Among them the New York Tribune and the Scientific American are the freest in the world, the independent Boston Investigator, (so it says) had published one article addressed to Benjamin Skinner. I judged that the Paine Hall debt was the appalling force. This notice is for yours and Dr. Treat's information. I want to raise means enough to get a hundred dollar Magic Lantern with views and screen to lecture and introduce my only true system of finance.

H. L. PINNEY, Mill Brook, Ct., writes: I dislike very much to say those three words so unwelcome to an editor's ear, and I am not going to now, but in the language of your correspondent from Brooklyn, L. L. David Bruce, "With reluctance I thought I should have to discontinue your valuable paper. I have no fault to find with it, only its teachings end where mine begin." This expresses my feelings exactly. The old man stands leaning upon his staff, (Spiritualism) in which he trusts to help him bear the burdens and trials of this life. What doth it avail him to give money and time for that which seeks to knock his staff from under him, and would fain have all his hopes—and himself at last—to tumble into oblivion. What availeth it to any one to be led out of the darkness of old theology, there to be left to starve for lack of that which the soul naturally craves and longs for, the hope of immortality. Better far have remained (we can't go back) among the fleshpots of Egypt; better far have remained and fed upon the husks of bigotry and superstition, if seasoned with but a faint hope of life beyond the grave. The inconsistencies, absurdities, and contradictions of the Bible appear to me to be so self-evident that I feel but little interest in seeing them shown up; but there are thousands in our land that yet need this light, and thus your paper is doing a good work, and I wish it God-speed. It is a pioneer—a John the Baptist, so to speak—going before to prepare the way, for when the scales of Bible theology are once taken from the eyes, few methinks, will rest satisfied with that dawning, but will press onward and upward to a more glorious day. I find much in your paper that interests me, and of course shall continue my subscription; and I feel disposed to encourage it for the good it is doing others, yet I cannot but wish (and that wish I believe will yet become a reality) that it would help its readers to look beyond what your correspondent quoted above called "the oblivious jumping-off place."

REMARKS.—We certainly wish to knock away no props upon which sensible people lean for support. We cannot teach any more than we know about a future existence. We certainly have no objections to such existence, and indulge a hope for it. But we know nothing of it, and shall defer all positive remarks about it until we do know something of it. We know that there is very much that pertains to this life that is still very imperfectly understood, and to such matters we prefer to give our attention. So far as the absurdities and contradictions of the Bible being self-evident, we readily admit it, but so long as thousands and millions all over the land hug those delusions to their breasts, it seems necessary for somebody to hold them up to public view. This seems to us to be our mission. Despite our regrets, we cannot help being somewhat amused at the diverse objections that are raised against it. Some throw our paper aside and refuse to patronize us because we are so Materialistic and do not espouse Spiritualism with sufficient fervor. Others oppose us with equal force because we are so Spiritualistic in our tendencies. Verily, verily, how is it possible for us to please people of such opposite tastes? The only way for us is to pursue the course that appears to us to be the sensible one, and to give such information and truths as the world most needs. If we are appreciated, it will be well, and if we are not appreciated we shall, at all events, have the satisfaction of having discharged our duty.—[Ed. T. S.]

OUR young friend, Miss Winnie V. ALLEN Louisville, Ky., writes: DEAR UNCLE BENNETT—The valiant little TRUTH SEEKER arrived this morning as fresh and cheery as ever. I do not know what I should do without it, it is such comfort. I am glad to see that so many Freethinkers have gotten the upper hand of the old theologians, and to see that so many people will at last listen to truth and reason. It is not pleasant to be the only Infidel in one's immediate community, and most especially so when one happens to be of the feminine gender. The "lords of creation" look at you askance, and tell you you are getting strong-minded; those of your own sex look at you with horror and uplifted hands as if you had committed some great crime, while still another class tell you how sorry they are that you are astray and in the dark, but that they will pray for you, and all that sort of thing. And then there are the "bulldozers" who try to scare you back into the old paths. That class is the one that creates the laugh (on the Infidel side), and work themselves into a passion. A young lady cousin of mine who is a great Presbyterian, heard of my letter that you published, but got the idea that I gave you "particular fits" for being so wicked, and hastened to praise me for the great deed. I was thoroughly astonished that she of all others should encourage me in my great wickedness. Presently we discovered our mutual mistake, and then it was interesting. Between each sentence she would exclaim: "Winnie! how do you expect to die? how do all Infidels die? Look at all the great Infidels; they die calling on the Savior and God they have denied in life; so also will you." I confess I felt wroth, but I could not help but laugh at her. I gave her a polite invitation to come and see me die, and assured her that I should die as I lived. Then you should have heard her bless you; it is a wonder your ears did not tingle. The night before, at her request, I played and sang some hymns for her, and she brought that up, called me a hypocrite, and said I had no business to sing sacred songs when I did not believe in. I told her I did not sing them for the words, but simply for the music that the words were set to, and that for that matter a person could sing a negro minstrel song and not believe the words; but she was deaf to reason and I would not argue with her. And now I want you to tell me how some of the Infidels died. I know that they have not all been cowardly at the last hour. A gentleman said not long since that Voltaire, when he was dying, said: "O my God, if there be a God, and I have a soul have mercy upon it." Is that true? Above all things, how did Tom Paine die? I have been reading those tracts you sent me, and I think they are splendid. I lent some of my papers and tracts to a gentleman who lives next door to me, and he told me yesterday evening that he considered your "Hour with the Devil" the best thing he had ever read, and that he was going to subscribe for your paper and send for some tracts. He complimented you highly. I have just been reading Mr. John Sypher's letter, and had a good laugh over it; there is one thing certain, his paper, if it is like his letter, will succeed in agitating the people who read it to laughter if nothing else.

REMARKS.—We beg to assure our fair young friend that her Christian acquaintances are very much mistaken when they state that Infidels retract and act cowardly at the hour of death. They do not fear death nor what is to come after it. They regard death as a necessary process of nature; that it must inevitably take place, and that there is no more reason to fear what is to come after it than what takes place before it. The same power, the same deity, the same Universe exists in the one state that exists in the other. They do not believe in a vindictive deity who will punish and torment them in a future state of existence any more than in this. We do not know of an intelligent Infidel who died in cowardice or fear. Voltaire and Paine certainly did not. Like Socrates, the old Grecian Infidel, they died courageously and without fear or terror. The old hero unflinchingly took the cup of poison which he had been condemned to drink, and quaffed it without a tremor and laid down and died like a brave and good man as he was. He was not afraid to die. Voltaire and Paine died in the same way. They did not cry out in fear and terror, and every time Christian villifiers assert that they did, those Christians either purposely or ignorantly utter a villainous falsehood. Both Voltaire and Paine believed in the existence of a God; both believed in his goodness and love, and both died cherishing the views and opinions they had maintained through life. While Infidels face death calmly, Christians often die in the greatest terror. Hundreds of cases might be cited where Christians have died in a perfect frenzy of horror and fear. Even their master, Jesus, died cowardly and in agony and terror, crying out, "Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani." "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me."—[Ed. T. S.]

A CHURCH THAT A SCANDAL ALMOST KILLED.—The members of the Rev. John S. Glendinning's church in Prospect avenue, Jersey City, have invited the Rev. O. B. Bidwell of New York to become their pastor. The church is recovering from the blight cast upon it by the Glendinning scandal.

Special Notices.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygeian Home is a Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

WANTED.—A young man of liberal mind wants to correspond with an Infidel or Atheist lady. A strong-minded and strong-bodied woman, not under twenty nor above twenty-five years of age. Address "The Man who Laughs," Box 52, Seymour, Wis. 1t

SPERMATORRHEA.—Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this life-wasting disease. It is an external application, and has made 1000 permanent cures. Charges moderate. Address with stamp, Vineland, New Jersey. 1t12

WANTED.—AN EXPERIENCED NURSE and house-keeper with approved morals, active, intelligent, and of sufficient age to give character to a Hygienic Institute. Would prefer a lady wishing treatment and board for impaired health, with a view to the position after it is restored. Address J. S. Lyons, M. D., Springfield, Mo. 4t7*

DR. J. W. PALMER, formerly of Manchester Hospital, London, England, cures Catarrh, Throat Affection, Bronchitis, and Consumption. Also, a speedy cure for Opium and Morphine Habits, and a Desire for Strong Drink. Price for medicines for any of the above $5.00. A certain Cure for Tobacco Using $1.00, all by mail. Send money at my risk. Address, Dr. J. W. PALMER, Cleveland, Ohio. 4t7*

CORRESPONDENCE WANTED.—A young man in good physical and intellectual health wishes to engage in correspondence with rationalistic young ladies in a similar healthy condition, between twenty and twenty-five years of age. Defenders of their sex, advocates of Free thought, and those willing to be active co-workers in the reforms of the present and future, especially those pertaining to the vital interests of their sex, preferred. Address PHILLIP G. CENNON, 518 Minneapolis, Minn.

PROFESSOR HUXLEY'S

recent address at South Kensington Museum. HENRY EVANS' striking view of the "Origin of Christianity," in five papers. "Religion," "Government," "Pauperism," "Contemporary Myth Making," "Amend the Constitution," and other masterly leaders, by JAMES D. BELL, in the first six numbers of The Evolution. "The handsomest periodical ever published in America," and one of the finest reviews in the language is The Evolution. Send 50 cents for the first six numbers to

ASA K. BUTTS, Publisher, No. 34 Dey Street, New York, 2t12

A Valuable Home Book for Women.

TALKS TO MY PATIENTS

HINTS ON GETTING WELL AND KEEP-ING WELL.

BY MRS. R. B. GLEASON.

Table of Contents:

Growing Girls; Menstruation; Amenorrhoea; Menorrhagia; Dysmenorrhoea; Prolapsus Uteri; Leucorrhoea; Pregnancy; Approaching Confinement; Delivery; After Delivery; care of the Breasts; After Confinement; Bathing of Babies; Dress of Infants; Nursing; Weaning; Feeding of Infants; Infantile Diseases; Diseases of Children; Children's Dress; Confidential to Mothers; Intentional Abortion; Accidental Abortion; Sterility; Nervous Derangements; Sleep; Indigestion; Constipation; Menopause; or Change of Life.

It is a most Valuable Work and should be in the hands of every Lady.

Price, $1.50 by mail. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

Eating for Strength.

A NEW HEALTH COOKERY BOOK.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Which should be in the hands of every person who would eat to retain and regain health, strength and beauty. It contains, besides the science of eating and one hundred answers to questions which most people are anxious to know, nearly one hundred pages devoted to the best healthful recipes for foods and drinks, how to feed one's self, feeble babes and delicate children so as to get the best bodily development. Mothers who do not nurse their children will find full directions for feeding them, and so will mothers who have delicate children, and invalids who wish to know the best foods.

Price, $1, postage free. For sale wholesale and retail by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319 4th Ave., New York. 44 years practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters P. O. Box 4829 New York City. 1y1

TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS (Bound), Vols. I, II, and III, comprising nearly ninety tracts, including the Scientific Series, containing 500 pages each, or 1,500 in all. They embrace a variety of subjects, by different authors, and are very interesting reading. Each volume will contain a wood-cut portrait of the Publisher. Will be ready in January, 1878, and will be furnished at the extremely low price of 60 cents per volume, in paper, or $1.50 for the three volumes; $1 in cloth, or $2.50 for the three volumes.

BURGESS-UNDERWOOD DEBATE, held at Aymer, Ont., for four days, commencing June 20th, 1875. It gives the strongest arguments on both sides on the subject of the Bible and Christianity. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

HOW TO LIVE LONG; or, Health Maxims. Physical, Mental and Moral. By W. W. HALL, A.M., M.D. Price, $1.50.

PARTURITION WITHOUT PAIN.

EDITED BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M. D.

Editor of the Herald of Health.

CONTENTS:

1. Healthfulness of Child-Bearing.
2. Dangers of Preventions.
3. Medical Opinions as to escaping Pain.
4. Preparation for Maternity.
5. Exercise during Pregnancy.
6. The Sitz Bathing and Bathing generally.
7. What Food to Eat and what to Avoid.
8. The Mind during Pregnancy.
9. The Ailments of Pregnancy and their Remedies.
10. Female Physician, Anesthetics.

To which are added:

1. The Husband's Duty to his Wife.
2. Best age for Bearing Children.
3. Shall sickly people become Parents?
4. Small Families.
5. Importance of Physiological Adaptation of Husband and Wife.
6. Celibacy.
7. Effects of Tobacco on Offspring.
8. Latest Discoveries as to the determining the sex of Offspring.
9. Father's vs. Mother's Influence on the Child.
10. Shall Pregnant Women Work?
11. Effects of Intellectual Activity on number of offspring.
12. Size of Pelvis, and its relation to healthful Parturition, etc., etc.

What is said about "Parturition without Pain."

Godey's Lady's Book says: "We give our cordial approbation to this work, and would like to see it in the hands of every mother in the land. The information it contains is most important, and we are fully convinced, reliable."

Price, by mail, $1.00. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y.

Sexual Physiology.

BY R. T. TRALL, M.D.

This work contains the latest and most important discoveries in the Anatomy and Psychology of the Sexes; Explains the Origin of Human Life; How and when Menstruation, Impregnation and Conception occur; giving the laws by which the number and sex of offspring are controlled, and valuable information in regard to the begetting and rearing of beautiful and healthy children. It is high-toned, and should be read by every family. With eighty fine engravings. AGENTS WANTED.

SYNOPSIS OF TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- The Male Organs of Generation.
- The Female Organs of Generation.
- The Origin of Life.
- Sexual Generation.
- The Psychology of Menstruation.
- Impregnation.
- Pregnancy.
- Embryology.
- Parturition.
- Lactation.
- The Law of Sex.
- Regulation of the number of Offspring.
- The Theory of Population.
- The Law of Sexual Intercourse.
- Hereditary Transmission.
- Philosophy of Marriage.

This work has rapidly passed through twenty editions, and the demand is constantly increasing. No such complete and valuable work has ever before been issued from the press. Prof. Wilder, of Cornell University, says it is the best work of its kind published.

Price, by mail, $2. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

Save Doctor's Bills!

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

- Sexual Physiology.....$2 00
- Mother's Hygienic Hand-book..... 1 00
- Health and Diseases of Women..... 24
- Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses... 50

Send for a catalogue. R. T. TRALL, M.D., Room 1, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

The Household Treasure;

or, MEDICAL ADVISER.

By Mrs. C. A. VON CORT,

Wife of the eminent Prussian physician, C. J. VON VORT, M.D.

This volume contains a great amount of information about the diseases which afflict the human race and the remedies which will cure them. It also gives a large number of valuable recipes. The whole is presented in an interesting and comprehensive language. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.00. Sent postpaid by mail on receipt of price.

Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLELT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y50

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY. By R. T. TRALL, M.D. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. 25,000 copies of this work have been sold. Finely illustrated, and a very important work. Price, $2.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'" In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

THE NEW RAVEN.

A POEM BY WILL COOPER.

Published in THE TRUTH SEEKER under the title of "Plymouth Cantos, from a Bible Standpoint." This Poem has attracted marked attention, and is considered the sharpest thing that has appeared for a long time.

PRICE ONLY TEN CENTS.

Bankrupt Sale of Jewelry.

GREAT FAILURE OF THE MILTON GOLD JEWELRY COMPANY IN LONDON

Their Entire Stock Consigned to us to Raise Money as Soon as Possible.

Everybody has heard of MILTON GOLD JEWELRY, it having been sold in this market for the last ten years, and worn by the best and richest class of our population. Still it takes an expert to distinguish Milton Gold from Virginia Gold. In order to dispose of this large consignment in the speediest way, we have put up lots which we offer to the public for the tenth part of their value.

FIFTY-CENT LOT.

One pair elegant sleeve-buttons, retail price $1 00
One set spiral shirt-studs, retail price..... 75
One beautiful scarf-pin, stone setting, retail price..... 75
One elegant gent's watch chain, latest pattern, retail price..... 1 50
One collar-button, retail price..... 50
One elegant wedding ring, very heavy, retail price..... 2 00

Total.....$6 50

Remember that we will send you the above-named six articles, which we have retailed for $6 50, by mail, post-paid, for fifty cents, 1 sample lots for $1 50, or 12 sample lots for $4.

ONE DOLLAR LOT.

One pair gent's sleeve buttons, stone setting..... $1 20
One set elegant spiral studs to match same 1 05
One beautiful ladies' band engagement ring..... 2 00
One gent's large seal ring..... 2 00
One ladies' long neck chain..... 2 75
One gent's heavy plat' watch chain..... 1 75
One gent's "Lake George" diamond stud. 1 00
One beautiful scarf-pin..... 72
One pair ladies' engraved sleeve-buttons.. 1 00

Total.....$13 50

TWO DOLLAR LOT.

One set gold front pin and ear-rings.
One ladies' long neck-chain.
One elegant locket for the above.
One ladies' "Pompadour" watch chain.
One pair stone sleeve-buttons.
One pair engraved sleeve-buttons.
One amethyst stone ring.
One gent's large seal ring.
One ladies' band engagement ring.
One set spiral shirt studs.
One gent's Lake George diamond stud.
One beautiful scarf-pin.

FIVE DOLLAR LOT.

One ladies' opera chain with slide and tassel.
One heavy ladies' neck-chain.
One beautiful locket for the above.
One ladies' Cameo pin and earrings.
One pair (2) elegant bracelets.
One pair amethyst sleeve buttons inlaid with pearls.
One pair onyx sleeve-buttons.
One set studs to match the above.
One fine gent's watch-chain with charm.
One amethyst ring inlaid with pearls.
One topaz ring inlaid with pearls.
One ladies' heavy band ring.
One ladies' chemise button.
One gent's Parisian diamond pin.
One collar button.
One extra fine set studs.

The above figures are the prices these goods have been retailed at in our leading cities. We mention these figures to give you an idea of the goods.

A FINE SOLID SILVER WATCH FREE.

On receipt of $15 we will send by express, one dozen 50 ct. lots and one of each of the others; also one elegant Watch, Ladies' or Gents' size, guaranteed to be a good timekeeper. Such opportunity is offered but once in a lifetime.

We want our patrons and the public in general to understand that this is Milton Gold Jewelry and no common Plated Ware. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance or money refunded. Send money by P. O. order or registered letter.

Our Firm and Milton Gold Jewelry are endorsed by all the leading newspapers of the country. Goods sent C. O. D. if $5.00 is sent with the order, not otherwise. Address all orders to

RALSTON JEWELRY CO.,

Importers of Watches and Jewelry.

LaSalle and Randolph Streets, Chicago, Illinois.

The Resurrection of Jesus.

A new Lecture by W. S. BELL, of New Bedford, Mass., the able Libera Lecturer. It is an excellent Essay. It costs but ten cents, mailed to any address. Send for a copy. Address

D. M. BENNETT,

SCIENCE HALL, 141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

DR. E. B. FOOTE'S PLAIN HOME TALK. A most valuable work on health and disease, with the most rational modes of treatment. It contains over 900 pages and 300 illustrations. As a work on Hygiene, it has hardly an equal. Price, with a beautiful chromo, $3.25.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit $12 and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1y60

SCOTTISH

WESTERN LOAN CO.,

OF LEROY, MINN.,

Invest Money in first mortgages on improved farms in Iowa and Minnesota. Interest nine per cent annually in advance. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. Send for circulars to G. L. HENDERSON, President, 141 Eighth Street, New York. *1y16

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First. "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second. "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., New York.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

ALL DISEASES

Diagnosed by Individual Nativity and specially treated in accordance therewith. The time of birth to be given, or as near as may be. Medicines sent post-paid, by mail.

FEE, INCLUDING MEDICINES, $2.

Diseases Treated with Precision, and Scientific Treatment Guaranteed.

Address CHAS. WINTERBURN, M.D.

25 West 26th St., New York.

[We have been personally acquainted with Dr. Winterburn more than fifteen years. We know him to be a gentleman of deep research, wide experience and great reliability. He is very successful in treating diseases of all kinds, and we cheerfully recommend him to the sick and afflicted.—Ed. T. S.]

KIDDER'S

SECRETS OF BEE-KEEPING.

One of the most reliable Bee-Books now in use. It touches on over a hundred points pertaining to Bee-keeping. It is a guide to the Bee-keeper in every department of Bee management. It is gotten up in condensed form, and contains as much matter as any two-dollar book, and yet we propose to sell it at a much less price. Bound, 75 cts.; Paper cover, 50 cts. Postage free. Address, D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

THE Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-Smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINEON & CO., Portland, Maine. 11

EVERY LIBERAL WHO, IN THESE TIMES of Revival and Religious Frenzy, wishes to disseminate convincing truth, should send for an assortment of TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS and TRUTH SEEKER LEAFLETS. They present sensible arguments which religious zealots cannot evade. Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St. N. Y.

POSITIVELY

$50.00 WORTH OF INFORMATION

in form of a nice book of over 100 pages, well illustrated, sent post-paid for $1.00

BY A PRACTICAL CLOSE OBSERVER

How to keep the hens, and hen-roosts free from lice. How to feed to get an abundance of eggs, even in mid winter. How to manage setting hens, chickens, &c., and how to preserve eggs a great length of time. Best breeds of hens, &c. Enclose $1.00 with order.

E. D. BLAKEMAN, Circleville, Ohio.

[Mr. Blakeman is a school-boy friend of ours. We know him well; he is entirely reliable, and the information he has to impart upon the poultry subject is valuable.—Ed. T. S.]

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CHAVEN.

Price, by mail, $1.00. Address

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $3 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

THE WORLD'S SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS. A library in a single volume; being the lives, the most important sayings and doctrines of two hundred and seventy-eight of the soundest and most original Thinkers the world has known. It will contain some 1,000 pages, crown octavo, with a steel-plate engraving of the author—D. M. BENNETT—and will be issued in July, 1876. Price, $3. Those wishing a copy, will please send in their names at once. Those who remit in advance are entitled to a premium.

THIRTY DISCUSSIONS, BIBLE STORIES, ESAYS AND LECTURES. By D. M. BENNETT. A work of about 700 pages, with a wood-cut portrait of the author. A low-priced volume. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the world? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

INGERSOLL'S LECTURES (Cheap Edition) including "The Gods," "Arrangement of the Church, or Individuality," "Heretics and Heresies," "Thomas Paine," "Humboldt." Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents. We have also a splendid edition of the same at $1.25.

Gems of Thought.

THE inquiry of truth, which is the love-making or wooing of it, the knowledge of truth, which is the presence of it, and the belief of truth which is the enjoying of it, are the sovereign good of human nature.—Lord Bacon.

How many in a generation of men think for themselves? Perhaps a dozen. With such a probable exception, two-thirds of the human race do not know how to think, and the remaining third will not be at the trouble.—Frances Wright.

I ACCEPT no one as my ruler, no Peter, Paul, James, or John, no Christ even. As far as these were right and true I accept their truth, no farther. Is there anything in reason to justify us in calling Jesus or any other—Rabbi?—Susan H. Wixon.

WHAT is an honest man? The world says the man who keeps clear of the constable. The man who goes to church, and pays the preacher. Virtue says, the man whose word is his bond, and whose honor needs not even pledge or promise to bind it.—Frances Wright.

SOCRATES was poisoned because he lacked reverence for some of the deities. Christ was crucified by a religious rabble for the crime of blasphemy. Nothing is more gratifying to a religionist than to destroy his enemies at the command of God. Religious persecution springs from a due admixture of love toward God and hatred toward man.—Ingersoll.

It is said by science that no one alone could be dropped from the Universe by annihilation without destroying the harmony of the whole starry firmament; and that no star could fall from its place into oblivion without annihilating the Universe. If this be true of matter, which is but a breath, how much more must it be true of spirit, which is eternal? How much more must it be true of souls that are linked together.—Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond.

No priest, no Virgin Mary, and no Jesus can forgive sin. Therefore we have no immunity from the penalty of sinning, or from the consequences of any infringement of Nature's sacred laws which are written in human individual organizations, so if we would be happy now and in the future, we must seek to know and obey the divine will as it is recorded on every tissue of our physical, and through every avenue of our spiritual being.—Mrs. S. W. Kent.

THE chiefest authors of revolutions have not been the chimerical and intemperate friends of progress, but the blind obstructors of progress; those who, in defiance of nature struggle to avert the inevitable future, to recall the irrevocable past; who chafe to fury by damming up its course the river which would otherwise flow calmly between its banks, which has ever flowed and which do what they will, must flow forever.—Goldwin Smith.

LET me warn you, let me beg you to believe, that if a man elect to give a judgment upon any great question; still more, if he assumes to himself the responsibility of attaching praise or blame to his fellow men for the judgment which they may venture to express—I say that unless he would commit a sin more grievous than most of the breaches of the Decalogue, let him avoid a lazy reliance upon the information that is gathered by prejudice and filtered through passion.—Prof. Huxley.

IN the science of private morals, which relate for the main part, to ourselves, individually, we have no right to deviate one single iota from the rule of our conduct. Neither time nor circumstance must cause us to modify or to change. Integrity knows no variation; honesty, no shadow of turning. We must pursue the same course—steady and uncompromising—in the full persuasion that the path of right is like the bridge from earth to heaven, in the Mahometan creed—if we swerve but a single hair's breadth, we are irrevocably lost.—Anon.

IT is unwise, therefore, to check human thinking. It is not only unwise, it is a sin to check it. I plant this church, not upon the human mind as stationary, but upon the human mind in motion. I would not anchor it to any one position. Anchors we have; but they are kept on deck, and kept for emergencies of tempest. Sails we have; and these, not anchors, shall be our symbols. Give me your minds, then, and let me weave them into sails, until this ship of ours, from deck to topmast, is sheathed with canvas, upon which the winds may blow and fill them with their invisible pressure, that it may be wafted into the future as upon the surface of a sea whose waves find no shore on which to break, until they crest themselves in music up to the end of time.—Rev. W. H. Murray.

THE whole intellectual dome of the future should be open to everybody alike; there should be no holy of holies in the temple of thought except where dwells eternal truth. The people who now attempt to drive others to their belief by asserting, "We won't burn you, but the Lord will," are animated by the same passions which in other ages found expression, not in a threat, but the thumbscrew, the scavenger's dog, and the rack. All the tortures men have suffered in the past were inflicted because they would not believe something that they had no evidence of. When one man hates another because he differs from him in opinion, he is no better than the men who assisted in the agonizing tortures of the Middle Ages. In those good old times the kings owned the people, and claimed that they were anointed by God. Here in the United States was for the first time in the world proclaimed the great truth that the right to govern comes from the people themselves. Now no man is satisfied with a crown.—Ingersoll.

Quads and Enns.

AFTER thinking the matter over seriously the Boston Post gravely inquires: "Isn't 'Ninety and Nine' short for 'Old Hundred'?"

SOME people are making themselves very uneasy because this country's supply of coal, it is estimated, will not last but a little more than nine million years.

A MAN sixty years of age, and professing to be a lunatic, has been taken into custody in Brooklyn for kissing pretty girls. If craziness is bliss, 'tis folly to be sane.

It is said to be legal to kiss the hired girl if a man can only prove he thought it was his wife; but what shall it profit a man to kiss the hired girl and lose one eye and all the hair on the top of his head?

A WISCONSIN lumberman offers $30 in cash for "a rattling good wife—one who is not too high-nosed to grow fat on bean soup." All females reaching this point have a chance for this young man's money.

PULPIT advertising reached its climax at Halls, when a notice was read from the pulpit last Sunday, stating that the drama "Neighbor Jackwood" would be played in the Town Hall on Tuesday evening.

A FEW evenings ago a lady up town heard some one at the front door about midnight. Thinking it was her son she called out, "Sam! Sam!" The response that came back was, "It is not your Psalm, but another woman's Hymn."

WHEN a boy was asked, "What was the text this morning?" he replied, "It was somewhere in hatchets." "In hatchets! No, it was in the Acts." "Well, I knew it was something that would cut," said the boy, triumphantly.

A GERMAN looked up at the sky and remarked: "I guess a leedle it vill rain sometime pooty quick." "Yees do, eh?" replied an Irishman. "An' what business have yees to purtind to know anything about American weather, ye furriner?"

INSURANCE DIALOGUE.—"Jamie, why do you not be after the getting the life of you insured?" "An' why should I, me honey?" "Ah, indade, that after you are dead and gone you may be sure of a comfortable subsistence for yourself and family!"

THE funny man is willing for church choirs to serenade newly married couples, but he thinks a wise discretion advisable in the selection of music. For instance, "What Shall the Harvest Be?" is too pertinent, and "Ninety and Nine" is objected to on account of being too many.

IT is noticeable that the number of big school-boys who paroxysmally kiss the schoolmarm when she tries to whip them is on the increase. It is also noticeable that this increase is followed by a large increase in the number of schoolmarms who attempt to whip the boys.

WHEN the bill prohibiting the selling of pools, lotteries and other gambling devices was before the Maine Legislature, an amendment was offered to allow churches to indulge in ring-cakes, grab-bags, fish-ponds, and other benevolent devices at their fairs, but was defeated and the bill passed.

AN organ was some time ago introduced into a parish church in the north of Scotland, and some of the members took offense and left. One of these soon after met another member, and inquired "hoo the organ was gettin' on." "O, fine," was the answer; "jist blawin' away the chaff an' keepin' the corn."

"I'm glad they're married. They think alike and just fit each other," she remarked as she came home from the wedding. "I was glad to leave; they fit all day like cats and dogs," she commented, ungrammatically, after visiting them six months later. And so that eternal fitness of things is ever being marred.

A PEDDLER was around the other day with a contrivance which included fifteen things, in one. It was a stoveholder, and a rolling-pin, a cake-lifter, and grate-shaker, and nut-cracker, and a half a dozen others, and the fellow recommended it to women because it was heavier on one end than the other, and hence could be thrown with unerring precision.

AN EDITOR DESCRIBED.—The following is Josh Billings' definition of an editor. An editor is a male being whose business is to navigate a nuzze paper. He writes editorials, grinds out poetry, inserts deaths and weddings, sorts out manuscripts, keeps a waste basket, blows up the "devil," steals matter, fies other people's battles, sells the paper for two dollars a year, and will take white beans and apple-sas for pay, when he can get it, raise a large family, work 24 hours out of 24, knows no Sunday, and gets damned by everybody, and once in a while whipt by somebody, lives poor, dies middle aged, and often broken-hearted, leaves no money, is rewarded for a life of toil, with a short but free obituary in the nuzze papers.

BLUE GLASS VERSUS GREEN.—A gentleman up town complained the other day of being under the weather. Got the blues? suggested a friend. Yes exactly. "Why don't you try a blue glass treatment?" "Well, I'll tell you," said our hypochondriac friend. "I don't believe that blue glass is any better than green glass and I am going to prove my hypothesis to posterity. Here I am affected with neuralgia, pneumonia, and several other blessings, and I am going to rid myself of all these ills, and furthermore I am going to prove that the cure can be applied internally."

Our friend in trouble went down town the next day and swallowed a glass (of gin) and shortly afterwards took a dose of Paris (green) to color the glass. The cure was perfect, he has not complained since. Funeral to-morrow.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Ots.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	2
8.	The Old Snake Story.	2
9.	The Story of the Flood.	2
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	2
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arrangement of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	2
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	For Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snodde. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotherran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	5
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	5
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	3
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	2
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	2
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	1
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	2
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	1
39.	The True Salut. S. P. Putnam.	2
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	1
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	3
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	3
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	3
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	3
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	6
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	1
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	10
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	2
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	2
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	2
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	6
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hoppa, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	2
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	10
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	5
96.	Lebabod Crane Papers.	2
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	10
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsbaz, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	8
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarrroll.	5
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	2
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fliske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

These eight Scientific Tracts are made into a pamphlet of 125 pages, at 20 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

Truth Seeker Leaflets.

Sent, assorted, or as desired, post-paid, at 4 cents per dozen; 25 cents per hundred, or $2 per thousand.

Let them be distributed freely in every town, village and neighborhood. Address, D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., New York.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth.	50
" " with Examination of Prophecies.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and 4.50	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Ani-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27 00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacollot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 32mo and 1 00	1 00
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Krishna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and 60	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch. Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.	1 25
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.	1 75
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors in the Bible. Wright.	35 & 50
Evans' History of all Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Fuesbach. 40 and 20	20
Eight Scientific Tracts.	1 50
Frithingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 00
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense. D. Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought. Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.	50
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and 50	50
" etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jameson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	75
Knoelands Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lesky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Vols.	1 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy. 3 50	3 50
Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology. 770 cuts, 3 40	3 40
" Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Pops. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peeples' All Around the World.	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 20
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	20
" Rights of Man.	50
" Theological Works.	2 00
" and Miscellaneous Works.	2 50
" Miscellaneous Writings, Centennial edition.	2 50
" Political Works. 2 Vols., 1 8vo.	5 00
" Complete Works. 3 Vols., 8vo.	8 00
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man, Ethan Allen.	60
Synagoga. Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature. D. Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.	2 00
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.	12 00
Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols., 8vo.	8 00
Sexual Physiology. Trail.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall (Prof. John) Entire Works.	2 00
The Christ of Paul.	75
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers.	4 50
" $3.00, $4.00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions. Bible Stories, etc.	75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts. Vols. I, II, III, and IV. 60 cts. & 1 00	1 00
The Outcast. Winwood Reade.	30
Talks with My Patients. Mrs. Gleason, M.D.	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	40 & 75
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
" New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE,
MORALS,

FREE THOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 13. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY } New York, Saturday, March 31, 1877. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 5th St., } $2 per Year.
BY D. M. BENNETT. NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

MOODY, speaking on the duty of waking the sleepy fellows who slumber in church, says: "A hunch from the elbow may save a soul."

NOT VERY ENCOURAGING.—The Brooklyn Young Men's Christian Association owes $7,500, and the membership has dwindled down from 3,000 to 900.

A FEW people seem to want office. Postmaster-General Key has received over 15,000 applications for office during the short time he has been in the Cabinet.

THE Rev. W. S. Crow of Hinsdale, Ill., has gone down. He has been in the ministry only six months, having previously been in college, but in that brief period he has broken up a deacon's family.

THIS inscription has been put on a Connecticut tombstone: "Here lies the body of Jonathan Richardson, who never sacrificed his reason at the altar of Superstition's god, and who never believed that Jonah swallowed a whale."

SENATOR HOAR is distinctly remembered in the Massachusetts State House as a disbeliever in catarrhal Christianity, and he shocked the religious sensibilities of his constituents by declaring that he saw no necessary connection between piety and talking through the nose.

THE Sound steamer, Continental, went upon the rocks near Execution Lighthouse, seventeen miles from this city, during the prevalence of a fog. Many of the passengers were taken to the shore in boats, and it was hoped, upon the rising of the tide, the steamer would float without having received much injury.

AMERICAN ART JOURNAL.—We are pleased to see that the number for the 20th inst. of this popular periodical, gotten up in special honor of Richard Wagner the eminent composer is one of great merit. It contains a full page wood-cut portrait of Wagner with some six or eight other excellent engravings. We are glad the Art Journal is being duly appreciated.

THE Rev. Mr. Rainsford, who preached with such great acceptance last summer, in Dr. Tyng's tent, is now making a great stir in Toronto. He is said to be as good a skater as he is a preacher; and, being both handsome and muscular, wins the enthusiastic admiration of the ladies. Like Moody, he positively refuses to sit for his photograph, although eager photographers urgently beseech him.

THE old Pope is said to be near his end. He has had several sinking fainting fits, and must soon be numbered with the two hundred and ninety-three popes who have gone before him. His occupancy of the pontifical chair has been several years longer than any of his predecessors. The elements of discord are already exhibiting themselves, and stormy times may be expected as soon as old Nono breathes his last.

COL. ROBT. G. INGERSOLL gave a very amusing and, the Christian papers say, a very blasphemous lecture on "Ghosts," in the Brooklyn Academy of Music, on the evening of the 23d. We will try and give an abstract of it in our next. Our Bob is making some of the pious, who turn up the white of their eyes so sanctimoniously, feel very uneasy. They wonder in their simple hearts why God does not strike him dead.

A SHREWD old philosopher, now dead and gone, was some years ago asked what he thought of the character of a certain gentleman then and now prominent in railroad matters and in benevolent circles. He replied, "Well, I think that, Godward, our good Brother seems to be all right; but manward, he's a little twistical." The shrewd old man was not only a good judge of human nature in general, but of the doings of this benevolent brother in particular.

THE RELIGIO-PHILOSOPHICAL JOURNAL.—We are pleased to see by the last issue of this popular paper that our friend Col. John C. Bundy is in charge of the paper and is determined to keep it alive and progressing. The colonel is a man of rare executive talent and we doubt not that the paper under his administration will be better than ever before. Even if the departed editor does not aid him at all in running the Journal we have the fullest confidence in the ability of Col. Bundy and his assistants to make the paper a marked success.

DWINDLED DOWN TO THIRTY.—The second secret meeting of the Methodist ministers was attended by only thirty clergymen, the ordinary attendance being more than two hundred. A sentinel stood guard at the ante-room door, and another sentinel stood outside the ante-room, and as the sentinels knew all the preachers well, they were able to exclude the public without making awkward mistakes. It is said that many preachers have declined to attend the meetings on account of the exclusion of the public.

A NEGRO was found dead in Georgia, having fallen and broken his neck while stealing chickens from a high roost. He was a class-leader in a church, and his pastor, in preaching a funeral sermon, was bothered by the question where the soul of the dead brother had gone. "His well-known piety," said the preacher, "indicates that he died a Christian; yet there are circumstances connected with his death that are perplexing. If, after he fell, and before he struck the ground, he repented of his sins, there can be no question but that he is now in glory; but there was mighty little time for him to think of it."

PARKER PILLSBURY, in the Index, in an article on the Moody and Sankey revival, says: "Moody, as a man, I like. He seems earnest, sincere, and always amiable. But without Sankey's songs, and a surrounding of seedy, threadbare, but crafty, cunning clergymen to manage the whole machinery, he would be as powerless as they have long ago proved themselves to be, without him or some other equally absurd and preposterous appliances. Boston will yet be ashamed of the whole of them, or of herself on account of them, until it will hardly be creditable to any one to have been born within her borders."

THE Rev. Dominic M. McCaffray, of the Church of Our Savior, on Third Avenue, is in trouble. A pretty young married woman, Mrs. Leavitt, accuses him of laying his hands upon her, kissing her by force, and attempting a seduction, or something worse, when she called at his study in the church to ask aid for the poor. He protested that he loved her, tried to have her prolong her stay, and when she persisted in going, and resented his familiarity, he begged her not to expose him. The woman's husband caused the arrest of the clergyman, and a partial trial was had. The pastor protested his innocence, and his sister did the same.

A FEW weeks ago the children attending a school kept by a priest at Capria, Italy, were left to themselves a few minutes, and one of them allowed a favorite canary of the master's to escape from its cage. When the latter returned he demanded the name of the culprit, and, on dismissing the other children to their dinner, desired him to stay behind and go down on his knees as a further punishment. The other children, as they passed the butcher's shop of their schoolfellow's father, explained why he wouldn't be home to dinner, and presently his mother went to intercede for him. When she made her way into the room she found the poor little fellow lying dead, crucified on a table, his feet being cut off because the table was not long enough. When her husband came, he discovered the priest in an adjoining room, and plunged a poignard into his heart, killing him.

MORE BROTHERLY LOVE.—The Methodists and the Baptists in Birch Run, Mich., used the same house of worship on Sundays, the former in the mornings and the latter in the evenings. The Methodists resolved to meet in the evenings, too, and a violent quarrel was the result. At the opening of the door, on the first evening after the trouble began, the factions rushed in confusedly. The Rev. Robert Williams, the Baptist pastor, took possession of the pulpit, and began to preach without delay. The Rev. J. L. Thompson, the Methodist pastor, knelt at the chancel rail and began to pray in a loud voice. Brother Williams called for the ejection of his rival, and then there was a fight, ending in all the Methodists being put out; but the vanquished party rallied at the windows and sung "Hold the Fort" so spiritedly that the voice of the preacher inside was drowned.

TELEPHONES have not yet been ordered for any of the Brooklyn churches; but the question of getting them is gravely agitated in certain quarters. So great is the dearth of funds for minister's salaries that the suggestion is made for half a dozen to club, uniting on one really eloquent preacher. This preacher can speak from the pulpit of any of the churches, or, if it suits him better, from his own study. He will not be annoyed by seeing his hearers go to sleep under his ministrations, and they will be free to slumber, if they are weary, without feeling themselves guilty of personal discourtesy to their preacher. The introduction of the telephone will thus systematize public worship to a degree never contemplated in past ages, and at the same time promote economy. The instrument will be found as available for the choir as for the preacher. Five quartettes out of six can be dismissed, and organs can be sold for useless lumber. The quarrels of the music committees can be brought to a peaceful conclusion, and the lion and the lamb can unite in telephoning their chorus of thanksgiving. All that will be done in each church where minister and choir are not personally present, will be to see that the sexton is on hand to stir the fire and the trustees or deacons to take up the collections.

A RESEMBLANCE of Moody to President Grant has been discovered by some of the Boston people, and this is said to add not a little to the satisfaction of being converted by him. He seems to succeed, too, by adopting Grant's military tactics. He does not use spades, but he is executing flank movements on sinners, and his persistency in following up the enemy when he has gained an advantage reminds one of Grant's determination to take Richmond if it took all summer. In the matter of blood there is also considerable similarity. Grant was quite a blood-letter, and the way he drew it from the misguided forces of the South made his generalship notorious. And the way Moody draws blood from Emanuel's veins is a caution to ordinary butchers. In fact, he revels in blood; he sports in blood; he glories in blood; he drinks blood—and the blood of the sweet Jesus at that. In one of his sermons he said, "Blood shall be a token, and the great question is, Have you got the token? If death should come after any of us to-night, are we sheltered behind the blood? That is the point. It is the blood that atones. . . . God demands blood. He demands life. . . . Don't trifle with this subject of blood. If you read your Bible carefully you will find the scarlet thread (blood) running all through it. That book (holding up the Bible) would not be worth carrying home if you take the scarlet thread out of it, and it don't teach anything else; for the blood commences in Genesis and goes clear through to Revelations. That is what the book is written for. . . . Blood has two cries. It either cries for my condemnation, which means damnation—excuse the strong expression—or my salvation. If I make light of the blood, and trample it under my feet, then it cries out for God's condemnation, but if I am sheltered behind the blood, there is no condemnation for me. . . . The blood which flowed on Calvary is there, and I believe God is going to judge the world by the blood—What did you do with the blood? What have you done with the God's blood? If we make light of that blood, what is a-going to become of our souls? . . . I don't believe there is a word in the Bible that Satan is fearing more than the word blood. It is said of old Dr. Alexander, of Princeton Seminary, that as the students left, he would take them by the hand and say, 'Young man, make much of the blood; make much of the blood!' May God help you to make much of the blood of his Son. It cost God so much to give us this blood, and shall we try to keep it from the world which is perishing from the want of it? None will walk the celestial pavement of heaven but those washed with the blood. Sinners, how are you going to get your garments clean unless washed in the blood of the Lamb? Don't make light of this blood. . . . During the American war a doctor heard a man saying, 'Blood, blood, blood!' The doctor thought it was because he had seen so much blood, and sought to divert his mind. The man smiled and said: 'I was not thinking of the blood upon the battle-field, but I was thinking how priceless the blood of Christ is to me as I am dying.' As he died his lips quivered, 'Blood, blood, blood!' Moody is confessedly a good general, but it must also be conceded that he is a bloody one. Blood is his principal stock in trade. Without the blood of his God his sermons would amount to very little, and they don't amount to much with it.

Events of the Week.

We have had a week of miserable stormy weather.

ELIZABETH HINES of New Brunswick, N. J., has gone insane from religious excitement.

GUY KIMBALL of Dalton, N. H., aged sixty-five, went home drunk and with a club beat his wife to death.

TWELVE women received diplomas as Doctors of Medicine in the Women's Medical College in this city, on the evening of the 27th.

WENDELL PHILLIPS, in a speech at Philadelphia, denounced President Hayes and his cabinet. His remarks were very scathing.

The Eastern question still remains unsettled. A rupture between England and Russia seems imminent; should that take place war will be inevitable.

The residence of Henry Selly at Crediton, Ont., was destroyed by fire on the evening of the 26th, and his three children, five, seven and nine years of age were burned to death.

The new pleasure steamer, Rockaway, which had just been launched, and was being towed to this city by the Wyanoke, was caught in a storm washed ashore, and broken in pieces. Her cost when completed would have been $250,000.

The steamer Rusland, which was stranded on the New Jersey coast more than a week ago has during the storms of the last few days suffered severely. Considerable of the freight has been saved but the vessel will doubtless be a total loss.

We regret to announce the death of Mrs. J. H. Johnson, of 113 East Tenth street, which occurred on the evening of the 26th, of Bright's disease. She was a most worthy wife, mother and friend. Her loss will be severely felt by her fond husband, her affectionate children and her numerous friends. Her funeral took place on the 28th.

JACOB STAHL, a driver connected with Kahler & Kamens Brewery in Guttenburg, N. J., while asleep in the brewery suffered an outrageous wrong. Kerosene oil was poured over him and his clothing set on fire. He was shockingly burned, and after a short time of excruciating torture died. No clue has yet been found to the party who committed the offense.

WOULD-BE GOVERNORS Chamberlain and Hampton, of South Carolina, have made a friendly visit to the President. They were kindly received by that officer and the members of his cabinet. The result will probably be, the troops will be recalled from the State and Hampton will be recognized as Governor. A similar result will doubtless take place in Louisiana. Nicholls will be the Governor and Packard will retire.

A DELUGE IN CONNECTICUT.—On the morning of the 27th the Staffordville reservoir dam gave way and a roaring flood rushed through the valley below, from Staffordville through Hydeville, Glenville and Converseville to Stafford Springs, a distance of five miles. The reservoir was a mile and a quarter long and averaged a quarter of a mile in width, being the head waters of the Willimantic river. Many mills and manufactories located below the dam sustained heavy losses. Thirty dwellings and a church were destroyed, and one man, Richard Spedding, lost his life. The aggregate loss is estimated at $1,000,000—a very heavy blow upon the industries of the valley.

The Clinton Avenue (Congregational) Church Brooklyn—Dr. Buddington's—has refused by a pretty large majority vote to attend the dedication meeting of the Tempkins Avenue Church in company with Beecher of Plymouth Church. They refuse to fraternize with Plymouth Church so long as Beecher is pastor of it. This is saying in the most emphatic manner that they believe Henry Ward Beecher to be a guilty man. This may possibly neutralize to some degree the jollity and self-satisfaction with which the Plymouth pastor returns from his successful Western lecturing tour with $15,000 to $20,000 in his capacious pocketbook. Beecher still, however, draws hugely since his return. Thousands rush to see him as they would Brigham Young or the Grand Mogul of Tartary should they travel around for a show.

Science and the Arts.

The Doctrine of Filiation, or Descent-Theory.

BY PROF. ERNST HAECKEL.—CONTINUED.

CHAPTER VII.—CONTINUED.

It is sufficiently obvious from the history of nations how in successive generations of many dynasties, for example, of the princes of Saxon Thuringia and of the Medici, the noble solicitude for the most perfect human accomplishments in science and art were retained and transmitted from father to son; and how, on the other hand, in many other dynasties for centuries a special partiality for the profession of war, for the oppression of human freedom, and for other rude acts of violence, have been hereditary. In like manner talents for special mental activities are transmitted in many families for generations, as, for instance, talent for mathematics, poetry, music, sculpture, the investigation of nature, philosophy, etc. In the family of Bach there have been no less than twenty-two eminent musicians. Of course the transmission of such peculiarities of mind depends upon the material process of reproduction, as does the transmission of mental qualities in general. In this case again, the vital phenomenon, the manifestation of force (as everywhere in nature), is directly connected with definite relations in the admixture of the material components of the organism. It is this definite proportion and molecular motion of matter which is transmitted by generation.

Now, before we examine the numerous, and in some cases most interesting and important, laws of transmission by inheritance, let us make ourselves acquainted with the actual nature of the process. The phenomena of transmission by inheritance are generally looked upon as something quite mysterious, as peculiar processes which cannot be fathomed by natural science, and the causes and actual nature of which cannot be understood. It is precisely in such a case that people very generally assume supernatural influences. But even in the present state of our physiology it can be proved with complete certainty that all the phenomena of inheritance are entirely natural processes, that they are produced by mechanical causes, and that they depend on the material phenomena of motion in the bodies of organisms, which we may consider as a part of the phenomena of propagation. All the phenomena of Heredity and the laws of Transmission by Inheritance can be traced to the material process of Propagation.

THE PROCESS OF REPRODUCTION.

Every organism, every living individual, owes its existence either to an act of unparental or Spontaneous Generation (Generatio Spontanea Archigonia), or to an act of Parental Generation or Propagation (Generatio Parentalis, Tocognia). In a future chapter we shall have to consider Spontaneous Generation, or Archigony. At present we must occupy ourselves with Propagation, or Tocogony, a closer examination of which is of the utmost importance for understanding transmission by inheritance. Most of my readers probably only know those phenomena of Propagation which are seen universally in the higher plants and animals, the processes of Sexual Propagation, or Amphigony. The processes of Non-sexual Propagation, or Monogony, are much less generally known. The latter, however, are far more suited to throw light upon the nature of transmission by inheritance in connection with propagation.

For this reason, we shall first consider only the phenomena of non-sexual or monogenic propagation (Monogonia). This appears in a variety of different forms, as for example, self-division, formation of buds, the formation of germ-cells or spores (Gen. Morph. ii. 36-58). It will be most instructive, first, to examine the propagation of the simplest organisms known to us, which we shall have to return to later, when considering the question of spontaneous generation. These very simplest of all organisms yet known, and which, at the same time, are the simplest imaginable organisms, are the Monera living in water; they are very small living corpuscles, which, strictly speaking, do not at all deserve the name of organism. For the designation "organism," applied to living creatures, rests upon the idea that every living natural body is composed of organs, of various parts, which fit into one another and work together (as do the different parts of an artificial machine), in order to produce the action of the whole. During late years we have become acquainted with Monera, organisms which are, in fact, not composed of any organs at all, but consist entirely of shapeless, simple, homogeneous matter. The entire body of one of these Monera, during life, is nothing more than a shapeless, mobile, little lump of mucus or slime, consisting of an albuminous combination of carbon. Simpler or more imperfect organism we cannot possibly conceive.

The first complete observations on the natural history of a Moneron (Protophytes primordialis) were made by me at Nice, in 1864. Other very remarkable Monera I examined later (1866) in Lanzarote, one of the Canary Islands, and in 1867 in the straits of Gibraltar. I have found some curious Monera also in the North Sea, off the Norwegian coast, near Bergen. Cienkowski has described (1865) an interesting Moneron from fresh waters, under the name of Vampyrella. But perhaps the most remarkable of all Monera was discovered by Huxley, the celebrated English zoologist, and called Bathybius Haeckelii. "Bathybius" means, living in the deep. This wonderful organism lives in immense depths of the ocean, which are over 12,000—indeed, in some parts 24,000 feet below the surface, and which have become known to us within the last ten years, through the laborious investigations made by the English. There, among the numerous Polythalamia and Radiolaria which inhabit the fine calcareous mud of these abysses, the Bathybius is found in great quantities, sometimes in the shape of roundish, formless lumps of mucus, sometimes in the form of a network of mucus, covering fragments of stone and other objects. Small particles of chalk are frequently embedded in these mucous gelatinous masses, and are, perhaps, products of their secretion. The entire body of this remarkable Bathybius consists solely of shapeless plasma, or protoplasm, as in the case of the other Monera—that is, it consists of the same albuminous combination of carbon, which in infinite modifications is found in all organisms as the essential and never-failing seas of the phenomena of life.

In a state of rest most Monera appear as small globules of mucus or slime, invisible or nearly so, to the naked eye; they are at most as large as a pin's head. When the Moneron moves itself, there are formed on the upper surface of the little mucous globule, shapeless, finger-like processes, or very fine radiated threads; these are the so-called false feet, or pseudodia. The false feet are simple, direct continuations of the shapeless albuminous mass, of which the whole body consists. We are unable to perceive different parts in it, and we can give a direct proof of the absolute simplicity of the semi-fluid mass of albumen, for with the aid of the microscope we can follow the Moneron as it takes in nourishment. When small particles suited for its nourishment—for instance, small particles of decayed organic bodies or microscopic plants and infusoria—accidentally come into contact with the Moneron, they remain hanging to the sticky semi-fluid globule of mucus, and here create an irritation, which is followed by a strong afflux of the mucous substance, and, in consequence, they become finally completely inclosed by it, or are drawn into the body of the Moneron by displacement of the several albuminous particles, and are there digested, being absorbed by simple diffusion (endosmosis).

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Lord Amberley's Book.

An Analysis of Religious Belief. By Viscount Amberley. Published by D. M. Bennett, New York. Reviewed by W. S. Bell.

This is a bookish age. All over the civilized world books are being made by the thousand, tens of thousands, and millions. Everywhere books may be had at a small price, and it is therefore one of the greatest luxuries of the nineteenth century that the common people can have access to a great variety of literature. In times past it was only the wealthy who could buy books and read them. Books cost too great a price then for the poor man to invest in them, so he had to go without them. The invention of movable type and the printing press and steam have opened wide the door of knowledge, even to the very humblest man and woman in society. But not all books are of equal value. There are many books written simply to please and not to instruct, many are written to gratify human prejudices. This is the case most generally in books of a sectarian character. Seldom do we find a book written by one who is in his very heart of hearts a truth seeker. And when we do find such a book public opinion tries to extinguish it. This was illustrated in the case of the book before us. Every effort was made to prevent the book from coming before the public. But, happily for us, this effort was thwarted and we have it as our treasure.

The "Analysis of Religious Belief" is a work of permanent value. It treats great questions in a masterly manner. Perhaps there are others who have written as liberally and as ably on some of these questions as has Lord Amberley, but one great drawback to all books written on learned and scientific subjects is that the style in which they are written is too dry, and too much above the reach of the common mind. A good old Scotch minister asked his beadle one day how he liked the sermon, and the beadle replied: "Weel, Weel, it mought be ower gude, but ye hilt it up so high I cou'dna grippel a taste o' it."

Learned books are too often written in a learned style to become popular. But Lord Amberley was not only wise as to what he wrote, but he exhibits also equal wisdom in the manner in which he writes. For this very reason he will have thousands of readers, where he would have had only hundreds had he written only for the D.D.'s. It is, however, very far from being a light book, or a book to amuse a lazy mind. It treats of the world's great problems, and it requires of the investigator or truth seeker who comes to its well of truth, to draw the water of truth and slake his thirst. Or, if we shall change the figure, we may say that it is like a rich gold mine, the more you work it the more gold you get.

Let us take a brief survey of the outline of the work. The table of contents is very brief. There are but two parts in the book. The First Part is entitled "Means of Communication Upwards." These means of upward communication are classified under the following five general divisions: 1. Consecrated Actions. 2. Consecrated Places. 3. Consecrated Objects. 4. Consecrated Persons. 5. Consecrated Mediators.

The Second Part is entitled "Means of Communication Downwards." 1. Holy Events. 2. Holy Places. 3. Holy Objects. 4. Holy Orders. 5. Holy Persons, or Prophets. 6. Holy Books.

"The means by which the wished-for intercourse between man and the higher powers is effected are obviously twofold: such as convey information from the worshipers to their deities, and such as convey it back to their worshipers. In other words, they might be described as serving for communication upwards or communication downwards; from mankind to God, or from God to mankind. . . . Consecrated Actions are such as prayer, praise, sacrifice, ceremonies and rites, offerings, and, in short, all the numerous external acts comprehended under the term, worship."

Speaking of the origin of worship among primitive people he observes: "Reasoning from the authorities of earth, whom he knows, to those of heaven, whom he does not know, the primitive man concludes that the best way of obtaining the satisfaction of his wishes from the latter will be to address them in a tone of humble supplication, intermingled with such laudatory epithets as he deems most likely to be agreeable to his ear. Hence we have the devotional acts of prayer and praise, which in all religions constantly accompany one another, and constitute the simplest, most natural, and most ancient expression on the part of human beings of their consciousness of an over-ruling power, and of their desire to enter into relations with that dreaded and venerated agency.

"Prayer in its original form is simply a request for some personal advantage addressed by the worshipers to their god. . . . Two excellent specimens of primitive prayer are given by Brinton in his "Myths of the New World." According to that writer, a Nootka Indian, on preparing for war, thus expresses his wishes: 'Great Quahootzee, let me live, not be sick, find the enemy, not fear him, find him asleep, and kill a great many of him.' This calls to our minds some things we have heard in revival meetings: "Lord convert him or take him hence."

"Very frequently the notion of bargain between the god and his worshiper appears in prayer. The worshiper claims to have rendered some service for which the god ought in equity to reward him; or he holds the discontinuance of his former devotions as a motive to induce the concession of his desires." Sacrifice must follow prayer. They are but the opposite sides of one thought, namely, the struggle of man to gain and use the good will of the gods." "The sacrificer argues that if he can make acceptable presents to the gods, they will smile upon him and be disposed to promote his ends; whereas, if he keeps the whole of his possession for worldly purposes, they will regard him with indignation, and refuse him their assistance when he may happen to stand in need of it." We need not go far to find people in Christian lands, now-a-days, who contribute to the support of their god in order to be on the safe side, if anything should occur.

"It sometimes happens that the sacrifice, or a portion of it, is consumed by the worshipers in general, or by the priests." This good old custom still exists, and the consuming part is now wholly in the hands of the priests; or, I should have said, in the jaws of the priests.

In Sierra Leone, "when they want to render their devil propitious to any undertaking, they generally provide liquor: a very small libation is made to him, and the rest they drink before his altar." It is wine "which cheereth god and man" that is sufficiently potent to render even the devil propitious."

Under the head of "Ritual" we have an enumeration of the various rites and ceremonies of the different nations and tribes of men. We find most of these rites in some form or other in all religions. The most general are festivals and rites at birth, puberty, marriage, and death. In viewing these primitive ceremonial developments, we see all modern religions in a previous and earlier stage of development. Lord Amberley's method brings before us in plain history the beginnings of religion, and the steps of religious progress. All, all is natural and no hint of the supernatural.

Consecrated Objects. In Sierra Leone, where the natives are devoted to their gods, they make offerings to them of bits of cloth, pieces of broken cups, plates, mugs, or glass bottles, brass rings, beads, and such articles. "This enumeration of consecrated objects reminds us very tenderly of the success if not the superiority of "brass" offerings, even in these days. Brass is a more successful expedient now, oftentimes, than pure gold is. Brazen vessels are still in the temple of God. Probably their greatest capacity consists in their ample receptivity for wine and roast beef.

With a brief notice of consecrated persons, and consecrated mediators, as priests and priestesses, the first part of the book closes. And although the first part is thus comparatively short, yet it is a key to the whole work. We should not be fully prepared to understand the "Means of Communication Downwards," had we not read the "Means of Communication Upwards."

Among the many means of communication downwards are dreams, sneezing, omens, divination, ordeals, miracles, holy places, holy persons and holy books. The discussion of these different methods of receiving communication are especially interesting and instructive because the author gives us so many illustrations from the best writers on these subjects. He gives a very clear statement of the question for consideration, and then quotes the best authorities in a quite happy way.

The holy persons whose characters he discusses at length are: 1. Confucius, the founder of Confucianism. 2. Lao-tse, the founder of Taonism. 3. Sakyamuni, or Gautama Buddha, the founder of Buddhism. 4. Zoroaster, or Zoroaster, the founder of Parseeism. 5. Mohammed or Mahomet, the founder of Islamism. 6. Jesus Christ, the founder of Christianity. "All these men, whom for convenience's sake I propose to call prophets, occupy an entirely exceptional position in the history of the human race. The characteristic marks, by which they may be distinguished from other men, are partly external, belonging to the views of others about them; partly internal, belonging to their own views about themselves."

Unlike some liberal writers who condemn everything Christian and praise everything of pagan character, our author talks as plainly about the imperfections and virtues of Confucius, Mahomet and Buddha as he does of the discrepancies in the character of Jesus. There is a judicial calmness in his discussions which gives them both charm and weight. I have read a great many attempts to outline the character of Jesus, but I think Lord Amberley, in his fresh contribution, has added something new. His estimate of Jesus is broad, catholic and instructive. The calmness of the author, the broadness of his views, make his style of thought and expression such as may not be easily quoted in passages of a review. He makes no appeal to the reader's passions or prejudices. His effort seems to be to place before the reader all the principal facts of history, so far as he may in so brief a work, which bear upon the question he has under discussion. That he has an object in view, and that he presses history into evidence of his thoughts, is doubtless true, as it must be with every man who writes with a purpose, but it is certainly among the signs of better times and nobler men, to read after one who can afford and is disposed to be so fair, impartial, and yet so filled with silent courage.

Nearly one-fourth of the book is devoted to Jesus Christ, and about one-half of it is taken up in the discussion of the Holy Books, or Bibles. The principal bibles, whose merits he discusses, are: 1. The Thirteen King. 2. The Tao-te-King. 3. The Veda. 4. The Tripitaka. 5. Zend-Avesta. 6. The Koran. 7. The Old Testament. 8. The New Testament. "It is the common fate of such works to be made the subject of the most minute, the most careful, and most constant scrutiny to which any of the productions of the human mind can be subjected. The pious and the learned alike submit them to an unceasing study. No phrase, no word, no letter, passes unobserved. The result of this devout investigation naturally is, that much which in reality belongs to the mind of the reader is attributed to that of the writer. Approached with the fixed prepossession that they contain vast stores of superhuman wisdom, that which is so eagerly sought from them is certain to be found. Hence the natural and simple meaning of the words is set aside, or is relegated to a secondary place. All sorts of forced interpretations are put upon them with a view of compelling them to harmonize with that which it is supposed they ought to mean. Statements, doctrines, and allusions are discovered in them which not only have no existence in their pages, but which are absolutely foreign to the epoch at which they were written."

I shall have to refer the reader to the book itself for an adequate conception of its worth. Mr. Bennett has done great service to the Liberal public in getting up this rare work at so low a figure. Doubtless the book will be in great demand.

"The Safe Side."—Concluded.

BY HUGH BYRON BROWN.

Another side that we deem to be a safe one is that of scientific construction, rather than mere destruction.

Ever since the protest of Luther and his co-laborers in the fifteenth century against the abuses of Catholicism, there has existed a growing revolt against not only Romanism but against the fundamental principles of the Christian religion—in fact against all systems of so-called revealed religions.

This protest against the errors and outgrown institutions of the past is growing louder and more emphatic in proportion as knowledge is becoming more diffused among the people.

This mental condition of doubt and disbelief is usually followed by a fierce iconoclasm, which, in its hot hate of the old superstition is often injudicious in its methods, indiscriminating and intemperate in its attacks.

Still it is a stage of growth through which most all who become emancipated from superstition must needs pass. The transition from the old to the new, like all disintegrations, is crude, painful and turbulent.

The iconoclast is a necessity of evolution; but his work, while inevitable and needful is far from being an agreeable one. In point of usefulness and importance the iconoclast bears the same relation to the work of construction that the pullers-down of the old edifice bear to the architects and builders who plan and erect the new.

The old must needs be removed to make room for a better; but the sooner the mere destructionist learns the lesson that to "destroy we must replace," the better for him and for the cause of truth.

Voltaire and Paine were distinguished representatives of that class. They did a noble, though hard and disagreeable work, which must needs be done, and for the doing of which they are entitled to the grateful remembrance of posterity.

But experience teaches us that it is not alone sufficient to remove the noxious weeds of superstition from the mind, for without subsequent culture and the implanting of good seed from which finer and better human fruit shall grow, other noxious weeds, no less injurious to the mind, will take the place of those removed.

That is to say, things do not come right of themselves without effort and direction. It is not enough to remove obstructions; the best and highest results in the realms of mind and heart, no less than in the lower departments of nature, are the results and fruits of care, culture and scientific direction.

Or to change the simile, our old theological house which sheltered our ancestors, and which was bequeathed to us by them is no longer adapted to the changed condition of our minds; a new one must be had, but why remove the old unless we are prepared to erect a better?

Indeed, is it wise or kind to ask men to leave the old until we can offer them better?

Hence we say, that the sooner we can leave off the mere pulling down of the old, which is now being removed as fast as is desirable it should be, and proceed to reconstruct a better religion, better institutions, laws, manners and governments; and, above all—because the source and creator of all the rest—a nobler and more perfect humanity, the better for the world.

Religion, that innocent, though much maligned and outraged word, encrusted as it is with the crimes and ignorance of centuries, must be cleansed from the odium that attaches to it by reason of the crimes perpetrated by theology in its name and come again to mean to all men that which it signifies—the tie which binds each man back to his fellow men—in a word, DUTY. "Only this, and nothing more."

Were it possible for the iconoclasts of our age to blot out the Church as an institution to-morrow, the function that it has ever performed for society, however imperfectly by reason of its superstition and unscientific methods, must still continue to be performed so long as society continues to exist; for though "the gods and god" are dead, humanity ever lives with all its possibilities, needs, relations and dependencies, and demands of all its members the same sacrifice and devotion which, in the days of our ignorance, we paid to the "gods that we know not of."

We remark again that we deem the safe side that of science and humanity, in opposition to ignorance and inhumanity.

Safety and salvation from actual and possible dangers are earnestly desired by all, but all are not agreed as to where safety lies or in what salvation consists. We have been taught from our infancy to believe that there was no safety outside of the Christian Church; that believing as the Church believed, we should be saved, doubting it, we shall be damned; for by the merit and through the blood of Christ, salvation was alone possible, "there being no other name given under heaven whereby we could be saved."

But how the merits of one individual, however great, or how the death of a man, however good, who is said to have died an unjust death eighteen hundred years ago, can save any one now, is one of the mysteries of the Christian faith, which common sense is unable to unravel or understand!

But, leaving that to those who prefer mystery to reason, we proceed to say that we regard science as the true savior of the world, as ignorance is its greatest curse; for in the last analysis this is found to be the root of most of the evils from which we suffer.

Disease and suffering are the results of ignorance or disregard of the laws of health. Mental delusion, narrowness of soul, spiritual despotism, and unreal terrors of the imagination, are the results of ignorance of the laws of nature, of the facts of history, and of science.

Social misery, poverty, and crime are the results of the ignorance or disregard of the laws underlying those things.

From all these evils, so far as it is possible, knowledge will save us.

It is this that distinguishes us from the rudest barbarians—to it, more than to our sacred books, churches, and moral codes, we owe all the progress that has been made, and all the advantages we possess.

Theology set men to speculating and disputing on the unknown and unknowable. Science taught them to think and to work for the here and now. One teaches man how to die, the other teaches him how to live. One makes the chief duty of this life to prepare for another; the other seeks, rather, to perfect and enjoy this. One emphasizes the soul, the other the body. Theology would save us through the merits of another; science, by our own endeavor.

But how is Humanity the safe side? It is the safe side because it is the right side; for safety is ever to be found on the side of truth and right.

The first and highest duty of men among the Greeks and Romans was to their country; among the Jews and Christians the highest allegiance was due to their God. The scientist and the Humanitarian accord that allegiance only to the race.

It is a law inherent in the nature of man, and as true now as in the time of its first utterance, that "He who seeks his life, (and, we may add, his happiness) shall lose it; but he who seeks first that of others shall find it." Egoism is the sign and symbol of inhumanity, as altruism is that of humanity.

This new dispensation of science, which we deem the safe side, is already conceived. The disintegration has already commenced.

What is Clairvoyance?—Continued.

BY MRS. JENNIE B. BROWN.

I will mention the regular habit of a cat which was for many years a conspicuous and somewhat notorious incumbent of my estate.

The largest and most beautiful Maltese I had ever seen came to us as a present from an appreciative friend. I am not an ardent admirer of feline pets, and from the date of her advent into my family, I could but notice that she had evidently taken in the situation with the first glance at my discomfited face. Never, from the first day of her sojourn with me, would she willingly eat any of the food I placed in her basin, but every day, and sometimes twice during the day, also each moonlight evening, when there might be flood tide, and the weather would permit, this sagacious or clairvoyant animal might be seen walking demurely around to the front of the house, and from thence down to the little strip of sand beach, which lies between our sloping bank and the waters of Long Island Sound, then, crouching low, she would suddenly spring upon the little groups of sea minnows, or Indian maume changs, which, disporting in shoal water, afforded a very easy prey.

Now, when it is remembered that the time of flood and ebb tides does not occur at the same hour each succeeding day, but that, dependent upon the changes of the moon, they vary in regular succession accordingly, it will be at once seen that a cat in its accustomed quiet corner of the kitchen or woodshed, out of sight of the water, must be guided by an instinct so remarkable as to leave no room to doubt its clairvoyant nature.

This same cat, in every way intelligent, having usually from four to seven kittens about her, was a source of amusement to me, as, removing one or two from the straw in the woodshed and putting them out of sight while the mother was absent, I noticed how surely and with what speed the anxious Maltese would return and inaugurate a systematic search for the missing kittens.

This cat, born and bred in the centre of a village fifteen miles inland from the sea, with indomitable patience and perseverance, made it a regular habit, also, to educate her young, at least as many as lived to a suitable age, in the art of fish-catching, her attempts in this direction, involving the tact and intelligence displayed, being truly wonderful.

That most extraordinary development of instinctive intelligence forms a distinguishing feature of the higher order of brute creation it is not necessary to affirm; but tracing this characteristic up to the higher creation, the human organism, what do we find evolved? Not only the clairvoyance that is instinctive, but also that quality which renders facts and events, past, present, future, near at hand or far distant, clearly apparent, not only to the mental vision, as in independent clairvoyance, but operating upon the emotional nature and upon the physical senses, as in sympathetic or emotional clairvoyance, one may discover through actual experience and clairvoyant understanding, just what may be transpiring in connection with other persons, and just what mental or physical conditions may be characteristic of those persons with whom they may have been at some time, in closer contact, or with whom they may be able to put themselves en rapport.

The clairvoyant person will not so readily become impressed by antagonistic temperaments, as by such congenial persons as would easily and naturally come into full sympathy with his or her peculiar organism, thereby making an intuitive or sympathetic understanding a natural result, an unavoidable sequence of either premeditated or unpremeditated personal contact; therefore the science which treats of this occult power must make a starting-point of the fact that each positive organism has option or particular attraction for that negative temperament peculiarly suited to its individual scope of action.

Many persons are clairvoyant who do not suspect themselves of being so; and many have doubtless been utterly and irretrievably ruined by the merest accident of unpremeditated contact with individuals or organisms temperamentally adapted to make impression upon or control the susceptible, or clairvoyant subject, but whose moral nature and habits of life were vicious in the extreme, the person thus operated upon not knowing how to account for the commission of acts hitherto foreign to his or her nature, and were these facts better and more generally understood "natural depravity" would become confined to a far narrower limit than by common consent it now obtains.

In his laboratory the chemist ever maintains the most careful vigilance, lest some chance should bring about disastrous results by accidental contact of antagonistic and mutually harmful substances or fluids; but the human being, composed of atoms of matter of various kinds, in which diverse chemical qualities inhere; possessed also of properties the tendencies of which subject to certain conditions must just as surely produce certain results, as the same thing when obtained from other sources, reduced to liquid or solid form and stored on the shelves of some learned professor's laboratory, thrown together hap-hazard, a conglomerate jumble without regard to any scientific classification, or systematized method of juxtaposition, hustled into the world and again out of it, almost entirely by accident, and through supreme ignorance of those things which above all others are important to be investigated and understood, scarcely more responsible for what they do, or fail to do, than the chemical contents of the well supplied laboratory, now so carefully bottled and sealed, would be, were some ignorant persons to toss the whole supply indiscriminately together and stir over a heated furnace. Looking at this subject from the standpoint which years of study, close observation, and careful experiment have brought me to occupy, I can foresee, or at least anticipate the fearful struggle between a hell-creating, and hell-sustaining theology on the one hand, and the developments of scientific knowledge in this direction on the other, for the science which pertains to the material human organism, is the one element which above all others is destined to act an important part in the overthrow of that monstrous fabric of ignorance and superstition on which our false social system now rests.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

An Open Letter.

Mrs. M. E. Lowry, Evangelical Revivalist: In your pious efforts to save souls from hell, has it ever occurred to you how much quicker you could do the work by praying to the "All-Powerful God" to immediately "convert or kill" the Devil, and thus do away with the enormous expense of the Christian religion, the immense waste of time, energy, and talent, which could be so kindly and happily used for the earthly benefit of the ignorant, innocent, starving, suffering millions?

In view of the orthodox teachings and influences, as presented by you, I want to be the last one out of hell, and consequently the last one into heaven; it would be such an eternal joy and comfort to personally know that every one was at last safe and singing! How can you ignore important suggestions, while your talk is so full of religious zeal and revival enterprise?

One good deed is far better than all the faith, belief, preaching, praying, or promises in the world without it. In your present occupation, do not give up hell or the Devil, just so long as it pays over one hundred dollars a week. The greatest motive you have to talk hell with so much vindictive certainty is the love you have for those in danger of its torments, not the profit nor the great peace of mind it brings you.

Now you have forsaken the "pleasures of this beautiful world," it is quite fortunate and useful for you that the idea of an endless misery for the sinner gives you sacred employment.

Your Infidel Friend, T. L. Brown.

It is no merit of ours that we think to better purposes, but rather that of those who have gone before. If we have climbed higher up the mountain, it is because our fathers have led the way, bridging the chasms as they went along.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.
SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 15.

Great Jehovah, perplexed as we are to understand who was the father of Jesus—whether thyself or the Holy Ghost; troubled as we are to comprehend how either could possibly have been such; how an invisible, impalpable, immaterial ghost could fecundate a Jewish maiden, and an offspring be the result; puzzled as we are to understand the mysteries pertaining to the composition of the celestial firm of which thou standest at the head; if to dispel all doubts and to step upon firm and positive ground, we are compelled to accept the teachings of the Christian Church, which claims to be founded upon thy infallible truth; if we are forced to accept the theory which it holds to be simple, lucid, beautiful, and altogether reasonable, that in making up a godhead of three persons one is three and three are one; that each member of the trinity is distinct yet not separate; that thou art "very God," that the Holy Ghost is "very God," that the Son is also "very God," and that all three are absolutely one and the same being, does not the relationship existing between these three partners of thy firm and the Virgin Mary become an interesting study?

If, at the same time, thou art thyself, thy father, and thy son, does it not follow that thou art not only thy own father and thy own son, but also thy own grandfather and thy own grandson?

If the Holy Ghost and the son are both co-existent with thyself in age and power, does it not follow that they are each thy brother, and that Jesus, who is at the same time thy father, thy grandfather, thy son and thy grandson, is also thy brother, and thou his?

If Matthew and Luke were correct in the assertion that the Holy Ghost was the father of Jesus, and the Holy Ghost being thy brother, was not the young Jesus thy nephew and thou his uncle?

Then, in addition to thy being thy own father and grandfather, thy own son and grandson, art thou not thy own uncle and great-uncle, thy own nephew and great-nephew?

What relation, may we ask, did the Virgin Mary hold to thee and to the other members of thy firm? To begin with, as thou art the father of all, didst thou not stand in the same relation to the Jewish maiden? Was she not thy daughter and thou her parent?

As she was thy daughter and Jesus thy son, were they not brother and sister? and as thou and thy son were the same, was not Mary thy sister also? and was not thy connection with an incestuous one?

After thou didst cohabit with her in the sexual embrace, as thou didst love her devotedly, and as she bore a son to thee, was she not thy wife, or concubine?

As she was the mother of Jesus, and as Jesus and thyself are one and the same, was she not thy mother?

Has not this Jewish maiden, Mary, by the magnates of the Church, been a million times called the Mother of God?

If, according to Matthew, and partly according to Luke, it was the Holy Ghost in his individual capacity that had connection with Mary in the process of "overshadowing,"—that it was he who was the father of Jesus—was not Mary thy sister-in-law?

In the same sense that she was the consort of the Holy Ghost, the same being thy brother, and thou being thy own son, was she not thy aunt?

Inasmuch as she was thy offspring, thy child—as are all human beings—and thyself and the Holy Ghost being the same, was she not thy niece?

As we have seen that thou art at the same moment thyself, thy father, and thy son, and as the Virgin was thy consort, or wife, is it not equally true that she was at the same time thy grandmother and thy granddaughter?

As thou art the father of all existences; as the Holy Ghost was thy brother and also thy son; as he and the son were one and the same; as the Virgin was the consort and wife of the Holy Ghost; as the son was also thy brother and thou and he were one—does it not follow that Mary was thy cousin?

If, then, Mary was thy wife, thy sister, thy mother, thy daughter, thy grandmother, thy granddaughter, thy aunt, thy niece, thy sister-in-law, and thy cousin, is not the Catholic Church quite right in virtually placing her in the godhead, and in paying her highest adoration to her?

If she bears all these relations to the members of the godhead, or to a part of them, or to one of them only, is it not perfectly legitimate and proper that deific honors should be bestowed upon her, and that she should be as greatly revered as either limb or branch of the godhead?

Is not the Protestant Church greatly at fault in withholding divinity from this distinguished female? and are they not positively guilty of irreverence and blasphemy in denying her the honor and adoration, to which she is so justly entitled?

If that Jewish maiden was the "wife" of God and the "mother of God," even if all the other forms of relationship are lost sight of, is it not a clear case of gross injustice on the part of thy servants and admirers that they have persistently refused to grant her an equal seat of honor with thyself in the great Christian godhead?

Should not the godhead have consisted of four persons instead of three? and should not the mother of all three have been placed first in position, first in honor, and first in worship?

Should not the term "Trinity," meaning the Christian's God, be changed to quadrinity? Should we not worship four instead of three?

Should thy mother, thy wife, thy sister, and thy sister-in-law be longer debarred a seat on the throne which is so justly her own?

Jehovah, how canst thou, with a tithe of the sense of justice which thou art credited with, placidly consent to see that worthy female who acted to thee the part of a wife, with all that the name implies, a mother, with all that the title is pregnant with, a sister, with all the endearing qualities the relationship possesses, with all her other close connections to thee, how canst thou, we impatiently ask, consent to let century after century pass by without according to this excellent woman the divine honor, position, and distinction which thou willingly takest unto thyself, and which thou positively demandest shall be accorded thee?

Are we not fully justified in the conclusion that there is something wrong in all this divinity business? If there are three members in thy establishment, does not justice and reason require that there should be four?

If the father is represented in the firm, should not also the mother? If the husband, why not the wife? If the son, why not the daughter? Does not eternal justice demand the recognition of the female element in divinity as fully as the male?

Is there any equity, beauty, logic, or sense in having three masculines in one concern—three bachelor gods to rule equally over men and women without any recognition being given or any justice being extended to the female part of existence—the wife, the mother, and the sister element?

In fact, is not the Christian Deity a perfectly incongruous monstrosity—devoid of equality, devoid of consistency, devoid of perfection, devoid of harmony, devoid of beauty, devoid of all that is most lovable and adorable?

Is it strange that there are many thousands who cannot honestly accept the Christian Deity and regard him as a perfectly just, a perfectly consistent, and a perfectly true being?

Are we, who have given much thought to this intricate and mystical subject, and cannot possibly come to the same conclusion that many of those around us do, are we to blame, we repeat, if we are unable to see things pertaining to divinity in the same light as those who gulp down everything that their priests command them to do, without a remonstrance or a word of protest?

Is it not right that our reason should be our guide on this subject as well as on all others which inevitably engage our attention. Is not reason our natural birthright, and is it not proper that we should use it on all occasions and upon all subjects?

Have we not a perfect and natural right to distrust what ever we are demanded to accept as truth and which our enlightened reason cannot approve?

Jehovah, we find it in thy word, and thy preachers often repeat it, that thy Son is a lamb; that he is the "Lamb that taketh away the sins of the world." Are we to understand from this that his father is a ram? that he is the ram that demands a divine sacrifice for the sins of the world?

Is there any animal in existence capable of begetting a lamb, except a ram? Could a woman, under any circumstances, give birth to a lamb?

If thy Son is absolutely a lamb, can we get away from the conclusion that thou art a ram? and was not his mother a ewe? Is this the reason why thy fondness for sheep is so much greater than for goats?

If thy Son is a lamb metaphorically speaking, only, art thou not a ram in the same metaphorical sense? Do not logic and consistency demand this much?

If thou canst not be called a ram, may not that sheepish character have been a real, or an assumed one of the Holy Ghost's? Was he not in the habit of metamorphosing himself in various shapes and styles—sometimes as a bird; again as a dove, sometimes as cloven tongues of fire, sometimes as a precious ointment, sometimes as a breath, sometimes as an inanimate substance, and sometimes as a mighty, rushing wind? Would it not also have been perfectly in keeping with his character to have presented himself as a ram—a heavenly ram?

Did not some of the nations who lived thousands of years ago worship a ram for their deity, and did he not have a lamb for a son? Had not the ancient Hindoos a god, Ram, who had a wife who strayed from him, and did he not pursue her to the Island of Ceylon? Was not this mythology believed in centuries before the world heard aught of thy having a wife or a son? If there is any beauty in originating this grand conception, does it justly belong to thee?

According to many of the mythologies of early times? were not rams and lambs very much mixed up in them? Can it be possible that the idea of thy own existence and of thy son's were derived from such a source?

In fact, is not thy existence, thy history, thy personality, thy godhead, thy relationships, with all the incongruities and absurdities connected with thy celestial firm, proof positive of its imperfect, human origin—that it sprang up in the days when ignorance and crude notions prevailed in the world? Is it not time that intelligent men and women acquired higher, nobler, worthier, and truer conceptions of the Supreme Power of the Universe?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

What I Don't Believe.—No. 23.

209. If, for the sake of peace I admit, for the moment, that the Jewish prophets were all that could be asked for prophets to be; if I admit that they knew everything that was to come to pass for a thousand years or two, and that they never prophesied anything when they did not do it with great clearness, precision and exactitude, and that each prediction never failed to come to pass, exactly as they foretold it; if from pure generosity and magnanimity I yield all this, (which I could not truthfully do,) I cannot possibly admit that the old Jewish patriarchs who were such marked favorites of Jehovah, and who so many times received proofs of his fondness and partiality, were in all cases such models of propriety, holiness and saintly perfection as we might be led to suppose from the great favor with which they were regarded by the king of the upper regions. I cannot admit this because I do not believe it.

210. Let us go back as far as Captain Noah, the patriarch whom God employed to build the ark, and who by some means induced pairs or sevens of all animated nature to take passage in his vessel for the term of thirteen months, and who, with very inadequate stores of provisions, managed to keep that family of some hundreds of thousands of animals, birds, reptiles and insects of every kind and description existing on the earth, for the length of time named, closely shut up in the ark, and in the dark, pitched without and within—minus air, and minus light—without losing an individual insect. The old mariner must have been a very remarkable man, but he was not a first-class model for a modern temperance society. After he retired from a seafaring life he seems to have engaged in the grape culture and in wine making. It is to be supposed he made a good article of wine that was both palatable and possessed good strength, for the old patriarch got excessively drunk and laid in his tent in a drunken sleep, exposing his person in a very indecent manner. While he thus lay exposed his second son, Ham, happened into the tent and saw his father's condition, that he had taken a few glasses too much and that he was exposing his private parts in a ridiculous manner; the irreverent and ungrateful son laughed at the old man and went out and told his two brothers about the condition their father was in. Ham's two brothers seemed to have more pity for the weakness of their sire and more respect for his years than Ham had, and they modestly covered him up and let him lie quietly and sleep off his heavy potatoes.

Although this fondness for wine which Noah evinced may not have been grossly criminal in itself, still such a bad failing would hardly be looked for in a man who enjoyed the special favor of heaven, and who walked and talked with God almost daily. It would not be supposed that an individual so greatly favored would so far forget himself as to become a drunken sot, and when in that condition to expose his person in such a manner as would not now be allowed by our vigilant police in the lowest tramp that hangs around our parks and public grounds.

The worst thing, perhaps, in Noah's character was his getting angry after he had sobered off and become aware that Ham had been making fun of him, and cursing Canaan, the son of Ham, and his posterity forever, to be the "servants of servants" to their brethren for all time. In this way is African ignorance, degradation, and slavery accounted for. It is held that Shem settled in Asia, Japhet in Europe, and Canaan, the son of Ham, in Africa, and that he was the father of all the African races with thick lips and kinky heads. And because their great-grandfather, Noah, got very drunk and conducted himself in such an indecorous manner that one of his boys laughed at him, the old man in his rage cursed not only the innocent son of his son, but, alas! also millions of his descendants who could not possibly, in the slightest degree, be guilty of what Ham had done.

It would have been far better for Noah to have practiced self-denial, temperance and sobriety than to have yielded to folly and then in consequence curse in his anger unborn millions and quintillions of his own descendants and who thus brought down the curse upon them so effectually that they have never been able to escape from it and never will. That is a kind of vindictive justice that abounds altogether too largely in the compilation called the "Word of God."

Noah may have been a very good ship carpenter and he may have been a fair enough sailor in running a craft that had neither mast, sail, nor rudder, but he was intemperate both in drinking and in cursing his own offspring. He did not keep a proper control over himself and I cannot accept him as a model of virtue and excellence. It was wrong in him to curse his unborn offspring for his own weaknesses and faults.

211. There is one little point connected with the settlement of the four quarters of the earth that it is well enough to call attention to. While the settlement of the three "quarters" on the Eastern Hemisphere are provided for no provision is made for the fourth quarter—the Western Continent—and that too when abundant proof exists, that is incontrovertible, that America is not the "New World," but is in truth the old World and has been peopled, probably, thousands of years longer than Asia, Europe or Africa. But the parties who wrote the Bible stories knew nothing of all this and perhaps they should be excused. It, however, being true that America is the oldest quarter of the globe I cannot admit that the old Jewish scriptures were altogether truthful about the primitive races of man.

212. I do not believe that the old patriarch, Abraham, "The Father of the Faithful," was altogether above criticism. He must have been an important personage, if all that is said of him is true; he was the father of the entire Jewish nation. Without him there could have been no Jacob, no Moses, no Joshua, no Samuel, no David, no Solomon, no Jesus, no Christianity, and no salvation for the human race. He surely ought to have been a very good man, but truth compels the admission that he was not. He was guilty of many acts, many sins of omission and commission that a saint of the first water never should be guilty of.

213. I do not believe it was a mark of Abraham's truthfulness and excellence of character to be guilty of falsehood and hypocrisy. After his father, Terah, the image or idol Maker, had died in Haran, Abraham at the age of seventy-five years took his wife Sarah and went into the land of Canaan, which Jehovah contracted to give Abraham as a heritage for himself and his sons forever—a contract, by the by, which has been fearfully broken—and when a grievous famine came upon the land Abraham journeyed to Egypt. Then it was he concocted the lie which he instructed his wife Sarah to tell, that she was Abraham's sister, and not his wife.

The reason given for uttering this falsehood was that Sarah was a very fair-looking woman, and that Pharaoh would fall in love with her, and Abraham thought it would be safer for him to pass himself off as her brother instead of her husband. As he expected, Pharaoh took a fancy to Sarah and took her into his own palace. The result can be easily imagined. It is hard to understand, however, how a woman of near three score years and ten could be so charming as to tempt the lustful passions of a king of Egypt, when there were so many thousands of young, blooming damsels all around him; but so runs the story. Sarah remained in the palace of Pharaoh, and Abraham seemed to be perfectly contented with the arrangement, and day after day lived the lie that he was the brother of Sarah.

All went on smoothly until Pharaoh was smitten with a plague, probably the same kind of plague that David, later on, had very badly—a private disease, now known as syphilis. When Pharaoh became affected in this way his eyes seemed to be opened to the truth of the business, and that Abraham had been playing a false game with him, when he sent the pair away about their business. He seemed to have had enough of Sarah.

As culpable as Abraham was in this game of deception and lies, he managed to make it pay. He left Egypt rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold. He thus exhibited at that early day the faculty of acquisitiveness for which his reputed progeny have ever been famous?

214. There is one little incident in Abraham's history pretty hard to believe, and which it may be well to call attention to right here. In Genesis xi, 26, it says: "And Terah lived seventy years, and begat Abram, Nahor and Haran." (If he begot them all in one year, he probably had three different wives.) A few verses further on it says: "And the days of Terah were two hundred and five years; and Terah died in Haran." Four verses further along, describing what took place subsequent to the death of Terah, it says: "And Abraham was seventy and five years old when he departed out of Haran." Now the matter difficult to comprehend is, if Abraham was begotten when Terah was seventy years of age, and if Terah died at the age of two hundred and five years, how could he be only seventy-five years of age when his father died? There are sixty years of Abraham's life very difficult to account for. Is it to be supposed that Abraham was such a slow kind of coach that his father could live nearly two years to his one—the old man getting away with one hundred and thirty-five years while the young man was scoring only seventy-five years?

These little discrepancies are rather awkward and unpleasant, it is true, in an "infallible book," but probably if we have faith enough they need not trouble us in the least. A little faith and a due degree of blind credulity and gullibility remove all contradictions and absurdities, and will make what otherwise would be cloudy and opaque, as clear and bright as the noonday sun. The world needs a great deal more of faith. There are yet many difficulties to be surmounted, a great many rough places to be smoothed away.

Abraham's virtuous life will be further considered in our next.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Materialistic Prayer.

In the book of forms, hymns, etc., which we are now getting up, we have introduced a number of forms for invocations, to be used, if desired, at the opening of meetings, lectures, etc. These are not used with a supposition that any being outside of the Universe, or the Universe itself, will be changed by such invocations, but it is thought that they may have a beneficial influence upon the persons who utter them and who listen to them, elevating their minds to the contemplation of sublime subjects, and tending to harmonize the feelings of those in attendance, and to bring their minds into a similar train of thought.

The following is our contribution to the "Collection."

INVOCATION TO THE UNIVERSE.

O Substance and Spirit of the Universe! In a feeling of awe and sincere reverence we would address ourselves to thee. We feel and believe that thou art the only Eternal, Infinite, Omnipotent, Omnipresent, Supreme, and Self-existent Power. There is none greater than thee, there is none above thee, there is none below thee, there is none beyond thee, there is none outside of thee, there is none beside thee, for thou art the MOST HIGH, the ALL IN ALL. Thou dost include and comprehend all forms of existence, all forms of being, all forms of force, all forms of life. Thy realm is limitless; thy extent is boundless.

All worlds, all stars, all spheres, all suns, all systems, all constellations are contained in thee, and move and act in keeping with thy eternal laws. We recognize thy presence and thy power in and from the grandest orb that revolves in space to the tiniest mote that floats in the sunbeam. We see thee in all that has existence, and without thee nothing can exist. In thee all life begins; in thee all life extends. All entities emanate from thee, and must ever remain in thee.

As eternal as duration art thou; as limitless as space thou art. Thou always didst exist through all time, thou always must exist through all extent. No bounds can be set to thy domain. Farther than the mind can think, farther than thought can soar, dost thou exist. Wherever space is, art thou.

We are a part of thyself. Our origin, our parentage, and our existence are solely in thee, and must ever be. Thou art the great Uncaused Existence. Thou hadst no designer, no creator, no overseer. Thou art the Source of all sources, the Cause of all causes, the Force of all forces, the Life of all life.

We adore thee, Most Glorious Universe, and we feel grateful for our connection with thee. We are grateful for all the powers, potencies, and possibilities that exist in thee. We venerate every form and expression of thy existence, whether in the mountain of granite, the beds of clay, the strata of gravel, the laminated rocks, the stratified carboniferous deposits, the sand, the oceans, the lakes and rivers of limpid water, the gushing springs and generous fountains, the life-giving atmosphere that surrounds the earth, the oxygen, the hydrogen, the nitrogen, and all the primaries that make up thy substance. We are duly grateful for all the aërial and ethereal forms of matter and force, including electricity, magnetism, all the subtle fluids, forces, attractions, and affinities which ever permeate thee and are parts of thy existence. We are grateful for these sources of organized life, as are seen in the minute green-mould that forms on cheese and in the stateliest monarchs of the forest; from the invisible monad, scores of which disport in the minutest drop of water, to the leviathans of the Northern oceans; from the tiniest insect that the eye cannot perceive, to the majestic elephant; from the mite up through all the intervening gradations to intellectual man. All these forms of life alike have their source in thee, for there is no other source whence they can emanate.

We revere the systems of suns and revolving spheres which stud the blue vault of space and move in harmony with thy eternal laws, and to whose extent there can be no end. We duly appreciate the glorious light and heat which these millions of blazing suns are ever dispensing through the broad expanse of thy realm, diffusing organized life in all directions. Especially do we revere our own glorious orb of light in this solar system; from it we receive warmth, life, health, and blessings innumerable.

We view with profound admiration thy grand mountains, thy beautiful valleys, the undulating landscapes, the broad plains and prairies, the sombre forests, the pleasant groves, the teeming meadows, the luxuriant fields, the grand old oceans, the expansive lakes, the smaller sheets of water, the majestic rivers, the lovely streams, the grand cataract, the laughing cascade, the sparkling springs, the gentle rill, the violent storm, the lightning flash, the reverberating thunder, the rushing wind, the gentle breeze, the portentous clouds, the descending rain, the silent dew, the re-appearing sun, the beautiful rainbow, and every expression alike of thy power and beauty. We admire the ever-recurring seasons as they pass—lovely Spring, genial Summer, fruitful Autumn, and even frosty Winter. All are alike manifestations of thy power—all parts of thy grand economy.

We view with admiration every form of animal and vegetable life, but most grateful of all are we for the existence of the Human race, our Brothers and Sisters in the great and grand Family of Humanity.

We are grateful for the pleasures and enjoyments which existence affords us, and we desire to acquire such knowledge of thy laws as will enable us to shun the ills and disorders which we might otherwise fall into.

We are grateful for the riches which Science is conferring upon the world, and with which she is blessing our race. We regard her teachings with more veneration than we do all the myths and fables that have come down from the dark days of superstition. To Science we hopefully look for still greater light to lead the sons and daughters of men to higher degrees of knowledge, and to enable them to secure a greater degree of happiness and to confer a greater amount of good.

We revere the steady and reliable light which Reason imparts, and hail it as the surest guide to mankind while making the journey of life.

We venerate the genius of Truth, and desire ever to walk in her lovely paths. If we have Truth with us, the mysticisms and errors which have so long cursed the world can have no blighting influence upon us. In Truth is confidence, freedom, and happiness. Let us woo the spirit of truth; let us strive to secure her constant attendance and seek ever to walk in her cheering light.

We are grateful for all the good that exists in the family of man; for the spirit of devotion to the welfare of the race which thousands have evinced. Believing that the greatest amount of happiness we can attain is derived by conferring benefits upon our fellow beings, we desire to make the performance of kind acts and good deeds to our brothers and sisters in the great family of Humanity the governing principle of our lives. We desire to see this great family grow wiser, purer, better, happier; and to encouraging the good and discountenancing the opposite in this great brotherhood of man may the best energies of our lives be devoted.

May we strive to occupy our proper position in the scale of existence, while performing the journey of life. May we wisely gather up the treasures which Nature has so bountifully scattered on every hand, and may we learn to perform the worthiest of all labors, to practice the greatest of all arts—making ourselves and those around us happy. AMEN.

The Coming Discussion.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 3d inst. we published a short article in which the Rev. G. H. Humphrey of this city challenged Col. Robt. G. Ingersoll or B. F. Underwood to a public discussion on these propositions:

1. Did unbelievers in the Bible do as much for American Independence as the believers in it?
2. Has Infidelity done as much as Christianity to promote learning and science?
3. Is there a stronger probability that Infidelity is true than that the Bible is divine?

We said to the reverend gentlemen that it was doubtful whether either Col. Ingersoll or Mr. Underwood could find it convenient, with engagements already existing, to enter into the discussion with him, but remarked that, if he failed to enlist them in the debate, rather than that he should want for an opponent, we would undertake to discuss the questions with him through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Not hearing from either of the gentlemen named, he has concluded to accept our offer, and will discuss the questions with us, as proposed, in the columns of this paper. Mr. Humphrey will probably open the discussion in our next issue, giving the first installment, to which we will reply in next paper following. We shall probably continue the discussion, an article appearing alternately from each, until closed by mutual consent.

The Rev. Mr. Humphrey is a graduate of college. He belongs to the Presbyterian church, is the author of one or more books, and is a gentleman and a scholar. If it proves in the outcome that our metal is of too light weight for him we trust our friends will at least give us credit for trying to do the best we could.

LORD AMBERLEY'S BOOK.—We would call especial attention to Brother W. S. Bell's able review of the "ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF," by Viscount Amberley, which will be found on another page. He gives a very correct and comprehensive description of the valuable work, which he shows himself so able to review. It is indeed a work of rare merit, and we are glad to be instrumental in laying it before the American public. We have done this at a pretty heavy expense, and we trust our efforts will be duly appreciated. We have already sent away a large number of copies and will be glad to send it to large numbers more. It is a work of unsurpassed merit, and ought to be in every Liberal library. The price, let it be remembered, is but one-fifth the price of the London edition, and it is republished complete. In cloth, $3.00; in leather, red edges, $4.00; in morocco and gilt edges, $4.50. Sent post-paid by mail at these prices.

HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY?—A pamphlet of one hundred pages, containing four essays by Charles H. Whipple, M. J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett, the subjects treated being respectively, 1. "Sunday in the Bible;" 2. "Sunday in Church History;" 3. "Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws;" 4. "The Workingman's Sunday;" published by the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington St., Boston, has been placed upon our table. It is only needful to give the names of the four authors of these papers to assure our readers of the ability of the work. Those who wish for the most able thoughts on the Sunday question should send for a copy.

THE NIGHT SIDE OF NATURE, or Ghosts and Ghost Seers, by Mrs. Catherine Crowe. W. J. Widdleton, New York; 451 pp., 12mo. The publisher has presented us with a copy of this curious work, giving accounts of many remarkable apparitions and similar phenomena. Let those who enjoy remarkable ghost stories, visions, trances, apparitions, strange appearances, etc., etc., send to us for a copy. Price, $1.50 by mail.

THE only divine revelation which we recognize as true is written everywhere in Nature, and to every one with healthy senses and a healthy reason, it is given to participate in the unerring revelation of this holy temple of Nature, by his own inquiry and independent discovery.

THE sluggard says a little more rest. He feels not the sweet influence that comes with the morning sun. So mankind trifle away the most precious moments of their earthly existence—vainly seeking for that state of rest that comes only to those who cultivate pure and holy aspiration.

The throb of no battery ever has stirred
The world's mighty heart like some stout English word,
Wherein a brave utterance, sandaled and shod,
Has marched down the ages independent of God.

Trials, griefs, and troubles come to us all, and so do hours of bliss and joy unutterable; hours when we seem to feel a pure and holy happiness—when it is bliss only to live. Such happy hours come to the Infidel as well as to the Christian; not because of belief, but aside from any belief. They come because our natural human life is so constituted,

W. S. Bell.

I want to say to the Liberals of the Eastern part of Ohio that I shall pass through that portion of the State in the latter part of April, and am now prepared to make arrangements for lectures. My address will be after April 7th until April 18th, in care of J. IOK EVANS, Toronto, Canada. W. S. Bell, 73 Fourth street, New Bedford, Mass.

HUGH BYRON BROWN addressed the Society of Humanity upon the subject of "Duties Proportional to Destinies." He showed from a geological chart that man was an epitome of nature, related to all below him, and that it was this, his ascertained place in nature, that determined his rights and duties. He maintained that ethics were not based on the supposed will of God, as taught by the theologian, nor were they found in the nature and constitution of man as taught by the metaphysicians, but solely in the relation of man to his fellow men. The quality of an act was determined by its effect for good or evil on the society in which he lived. He defined the relation of men to the lower animals and to savage man, and claimed for both as much kindness and consideration as was compatible with the interest of man, to whom the services of the lower animals must ever be subservient. He insisted on pre rather than post natal reform, pointed out the great progress made in every education, especially in the matter of religious belief. The lecture was followed by excellent remarks from T. B. Wakeman, giving in a pertinent, graphic manner the nature of the Religion of Humanity, holding its allegiance to the duties and needs of this life rather than to an imaginary world in the skies.

Blue Glass.

A REPLY TO THE CRITICISMS OF THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN.

SCIENCE HALL, NEW YORK, March 17.

The Scientific American has been sending forth to the world a series of articles called "The Blue Glass Deception," and then holds up Gen. Pleasanton as having led the public into a delusion from having advocated the potency of combined blue and sunlight. I have studied the articles of this able journal, and have come to the conclusion that the public have been misled, not by Gen. Pleasanton, but by the Scientific American, a paper whose influence is such that it should be doubly guarded against all ill-weighted statements. I am not acquainted with Gen. Pleasanton, nor do I regard his work as a systematic or scientific statement of the potencies of color, but he has demonstrated to the world the fact that certain remarkable powers are presented by the combination of masses of blue color in juxtaposition with masses of ordinary sunlight. He has given a multitude of facts in proof, facts which have excited great interest among French, English, and American scientists. He quotes examples of many remarkable cures wrought, of animal and vegetable life stimulated into a growth entirely unprecedented, and shows that the temperature within his graperies was raised to 100 degrees F. when it was only 35 degrees on the outside. More than that, reports are coming in from various quarters of similar effects upon those who have tried his method. How does the Scientific American meet these facts? Most of the article does not meet them at all, but fires quite wide of the mark. It goes on to show the deficiencies of blue and violet when taken alone, quite contrary to Gen. Pleasanton's plan which is to combine them with the white light. It takes much pains to show that other colors in the warm end of the spectrum can produce chemical effects. Does that invalidate the power of blue? It shows that blue does not give as much light as some other colors. Who pretends that it does? Does it make blue any the less electrical because the yellow is luminous and the red warm? What would be thought of the man who, in speaking of the oxygen and hydrogen which constitute water, should say oxygen is of no importance, because hydrogen has a vast amount of specific heat? But the combination of darkness in the Scientific American may be found in the following: "In some instances where it is desirable to diminish the intensity of light, blue glass may be used; but any other mode of shading the light, as by ground glass, thin curtains, etc., would without doubt serve equally as well." In other words, blue is simply an element of shadow. What a pity that nature made such a blunder as to give us blue at all, when the same point could be so easily subserved by a little more darkness! But joking aside, it is too bad to have the public misled by such a perversion of established scientific fact. Does not this editor know of the special and remarkable power of blue or violet to promote phosphorescence, to transmute the salts of metals in photography, to penetrate far below the soil and develop germination? Can the red or yellow do anything of the kind? Can shadow do anything of the kind? Throw a shadow upon a glass bottle of hydrochloric acid, or strain the light through red or yellow glass upon it, and no effect will be produced. Send light upon it through blue glass, and it will be shattered into a thousand pieces. More than that, it can be proved by an overwhelming array of facts, that the blue, indigo, and violet colors act on the law of electricity, while the red, orange, and yellow green are directly opposite in their nature, acting on the thermal or warming principle. It can be shown that the electrical colors are cooling and stimulating to the nervous system, soothing and anti-inflammatory, while the red is stimulating to the arterial system, and is especially suited to cold extremities, the yellow to dormant bowels, and the purple to impaired digestive organs. It can be positively shown that chemical action is utterly impossible without some grade of electricity, and that the electrical colors on the one hand must affiliate with the thermal colors on the other. The reason why the blue is so effective in connection with the white light is that it selects the affinitive or warm colors, and thus arouses an immense action. I am confident that if Gen. Pleasanton had put a red strip of glass each side of his blue panes, and then clear glass beyond this, he would have aroused a still greater action, as I have learned that the red forms the chemical affinity of blue, as the yellow does of the violet.

The special potency of the violet end of the scale has long been a settled fact among scientists, although they are still back of what they might be in the knowledge of their atomic relations and their law of movement. Prof. Hunt long ago stated before the British Association that "Light prevents the germination of plants; actinism (blue and violet action) quickens germination, and the calorific rays promote the flowering and reproductive principle of plants." Gen. Pleasanton has been too one-sided in putting so much stress upon blue to the neglect of other colors, but the one-sidedness of the Scientific American in pretty much ignoring the great healing and chemical power of blue and violet is still more dangerous. It thinks the colors as God has placed them in light are admirable. Of course they are. But shall we cease to develop the special electricities and potencies of things just because nature has not done it? Water is good as God made it, but shall we have no hot water for certain chemical operations or diseased conditions? and shall we have no cold water for opposite conditions? Light is good, but shall not our sick world have the warm part of it, like the red for the cold extremities, or the exquisitely fine, penetrating, and cool portion of it, like the blue, for a hot brain? It is quite remarkable that people can, perhaps unconsciously, employ so much error in their own language while professing to expose error in others. The finer forces are safer, more powerful, more penetrating, more refining, and more enduring than the coarser elements, and while the whole community are turning their attention to them in the form of light and color, even though their ideas may yet be crude with regard to their use, it is a public calamity for influential journals to make war upon them, as other journals which do not pretend to make science a study, copy their opinions, and thus pervert the public mind on the subject.

E. D. BABBITT, D. M.

Friendly Correspondence.

WM. DUDGEON, New Hartford, N. Y., writes: Viscount Amberley's book is just received and promises to be profitable reading. The mechanical part of the work is beautiful.

WM. POLIART, Torkio, Mo., writes: I sent by D. M. Outler for a copy of your "Sages and Infidels," and was highly pleased with it. I now wish you to send me "A Few Days in Athens" and "The Heatseas of the Heath." I also wish a copy of your "Church Dignitaries" when you publish it. When I moved here I was the only infidel in this neighborhood. There are now some sixteen. We have organized a society for investigation.

CLAY C. CLINTON, Baltimore, Md., writes: I have just finished reading THE TRUTH SEEKER for the week ending March 17, 1877. I consider it the best number I have yet received. Two months ago I did not know there was such a glorious sheet in existence. Could your paper be seen by every sound thinker in America, your weekly issue would reach a million. Five persons here read the paper beside myself, after which I send it to my brother, a young school teacher in Pennsylvania.

W. H. PEARCE, Camargo, Ill., writes: I am pleased with your paper and your "Sages," and I hope to be able to take a copy of every book you may publish on the subject of freethought, as I never let an opportunity slip of dropping a word whenever I have a chance that may set some one to thinking upon the inconsistency of orthodox Christianity, and to save them from superstition and its consequences. I am well aware that such a course does not make one popular with bigots, but knowledge must save mankind if they are ever saved; and without reason and freethought they never can obtain knowledge.

DR. A. SHERMAN, Champaign, Ill., writes: Please find enclosed $1.50, for which send me one dozen of "John's Way." I do think they are the best tracts I ever read. I like your paper the best in the world. I shall not be without it hereafter if I can raise money enough to get it. I shall want Lord Amberley's work and a good many other works before I am through with you. I want the leather bound. I am doing all I can. They give me hell here. They tell me my business will not be so good if I persist in advancing that sheet. I tell them if I loose all of my practice for advocating truth they can go. I don't want any one's work that has such a small brain. I am honest in my belief, and shall stick to you, my old friend Bennett. All right, go ahead with THE TRUTH SEEKER. You are doing grandly.

G. W. BRONSON, Streator, Ill., writes: Your paper comes to us regularly and is ever welcomed with pleasure. This with the "Sages," furnishes us with plenty of good reading. We have, however, now added another good book, entitled, "The Science of the Bible," written by Dr. M. Wooley, of this place. It is the topic of the day among all classes, particularly the religious. It certainly marks a new era in the progress of freethought and Liberals everywhere should hail it with a hearty welcome as marking the certain and speedy downfall of superstition. The author's system of analysis is new, being the result of much study and the discovery that the zodiacal constellation Aries is the God of the Bible. With this key, each successive myth of the Old Record is readily resolved into its constituent parts; these consisting, in every instance, of natural phenomena only. That this book will be a valuable addition to the library of the Liberalist, none on reading can entertain a doubt.

CHARLES E. TOWNSEND, Locust Valley, N. Y., author of "Essays on Mind, Matter, Force, Theology," etc., writes: I received your well-appearing volume of Lord Amberley's book, and am pleased with its opening introductions and general plan of the work, in its enlarged comprehension of so many theisms, for comparison. Your paper I esteem to be the most valuable issue in our country, in its keen analysis and bold opposition to existing religious superstitions—the Christian, in particular, deserving the strongest condemnation, as being fostered by so large a class of intelligent but uninvestigating and undiscriminating dupes to religious dogmas and dicta of priests, against which your efforts are gradually instructing the people to throw off the power of the priesthood, most of whom are now well aware that they know no more than their dupes about God, the devil, or a future life, though we may all hope to attain the latter, and by studying the Book of Nature gain some comprehension of the future.

Mrs J. C. BALL, Melvern, Kan., writes: All right in Melvern. THE TRUTH SEEKER comes to us once a week to relieve the monotony of this solemn Christian village. We have three denominations of Christians fighting and quarrelling for the ascendancy. They have just got through with their week of prayer. Of course each one had to bow around separately, so that the Lord might understand what each one wanted. So for three weeks we have been deluged with songs and praise to God. Than the powers that be, it is over for they have held their meetings in the school-house and not having coal handy, they borrowed of the district, as the Egyptian, with the intention of not returning it, but never mind, it is for Christ's sake, and to save poor sinners' souls. So mote it be. One of the divines paid me a short visit, and inquired about the condition of my soul etc. I gave him my opinion—and introduced him to some Liberal tracts, and a copy of your paper. He was simply horrified and exclaimed "My dear sister, if you don't give up such a damnable belief you will be eternally lost." But however he took a copy of your paper. I have not seen him since.

A. P. BRADY, North Hannibal, N. Y., writes: Week after week your paper makes its welcome appearance and we as often have a feast in perusing its well-filled pages of good sound reasoning. We think aside from the editorial part, the column devoted to "Friendly Correspondence" is the most attractive. I was taught in my earlier days to look upon skeptics and infidels as the very worst kind of people. I thought them to be worse than thieves and robbers, but I have come to know by observation and experience that they will compare favorably with church members, or with the so-called world's people. I find that what nature has done for a person and the society in which he moves, has more to do with his life than his religious belief. Henry Ward Beecher hit it exactly when he said: "We should not judge people by their religious belief, but by their individual worth." In our intercourse with society, we will find some good noblesouls among all classes and shades of beliefs, and, as a rule those orthodox people, who are the best neighbors and of good to society, are the most charitable and liberal in their views; at least it seems so with my observations. I believe that knowledge and truth are fast taking the place of error, ignorance, and superstition. People are becoming more broad and charitable in their views, and consequently more neighborly and generous. May the bright star of truth shine on, and may success crown your labors, and much good be done in the name of your paper.

P. B. WILLIAMS, Linwood, Pa., writes: Although I am unable to respond to your call for aid in the shape of much cash to promote the great cause of right and truth, you have my best wishes and strongest desires for your success. I hate priesthood and religious superstition with every drop of my blood; and if the time should ever come that I am able to assist you and the glorious cause with more substantial aid than mere words, I will cheerfully do so, for the sake of spreading your valuable paper broadcast over our superstitious and priest-ridden land. Linwood and vicinity, although numbered with the oldest settlements of this country, is in an appalling condition in regard to truth. Its ignorance of science, and what is right, is totally beyond description. And this condition is not due to poverty, for thousands upon thousands of dollars have been spent by religious hypocrites who make the air resound with their hideous cries for mercy, from an imaginary God, especially at this season of the year. I was a strong believing Baptist bigot before your paper educated me. I often thought what a fiery hell I had to avoid. But to the invaluable TRUTH SEEKER—to our western giant and god-slayer, R. G. Ingersoll, and a fearless scientist and freethinker of this badly bedeviled community—I owe my mental liberty and permanent happiness so far as a future existence is concerned. I send my little, and would wish that it was more; and as it is a small seed, and you will have the sowing of it, see to it that it falls in good ground, so that it may bring forth an hundred-fold. I believe that no person is truly free and happy, who is devoid of mental liberty and charity. How true and grand that great mental hero of the West states it when he says, "There can be but little happiness on earth, while men worship a tyrant in heaven." I fully believe that if the religious bigots had the same power to persecute as in olden times, I should perish at the stake like Bruno, Servetus, and a host of others who died because they dared to disbelieve what cruel and ignorant priests had taught. I believe that there are those in this section who would nearly die of regret if it was demonstrated to them that no sulphurous hell existed to eternally torment the damned infidels in. One good Christian in this section made the remark not long ago, that he could not worship God if there was no everlasting hell for such men as Tom Paine, Voltaire, etc. We have a number of Infidels and Free-thinkers here, but most of them dare not speak right out in-school, owing to public opinion. If they were not so poor in pocket they would make the sanctified holy ones howl, or else take a back seat, though not by persecution, but by the good strong weapons of logic and reason.

H. H. RICE, Hamburg, Mich., writes: Seeing so many good things in your paper, I cannot read and pass them by without feeling that, to a certain extent, I am doing you injustice by looking quietly on and saying nothing, when I ought to take my pen in hand and, to the extent of my limited ability, do all I can to help encourage you on in the noble cause that you are building up and nobly defending. It has been both very interesting and amusing to follow you through some of your positions, such as, "What I don't Believe," for instance. It hardly seems possible that any person who has arrived at the years of understanding could read such clear and logical arguments without being convinced that they have a foundation upon which to stand, and are backed by sound reasoning, directly the reverse of that given to us in the so-called Holy Bible. It does seem as though it was full time that people should allow kind reason to rule instead of being led willing captives of unbridled passions, blind superstitions, fear of hell, fear of not being popular, and other fears I know or care not what. I feel, Mr. Bennett, that you are doing a great kindness to your fellow-beings by lifting the veil from the eyes of those who are groping in darkness in search of light. I think that an article in your paper of last November, entitled, "A Prayer under Pressure," in and of itself should be sufficient to open the eyes of those who desire the use of those beautiful organs. It is beauty and harmony from beginning to end. It is worth all the Orthodox prayers that have ever been offered up since the day Cain went into the land of Nod to get him a wife. Prayers of this class I believe we appreciate. With pleasure I have read some of the letters that are being showered in upon you by friendly correspondents. They plainly show that their hearts are in the cause, and that they are disposed to think and act for themselves, regardless of the book called the Bible, with all of its Godology, Christology, and thus saith the Lord. I see some of your correspondents have already proposed that the Liberalists should form themselves into organizations, the same as do those who term themselves followers of Christ, to worship God, however, each according to the dictates of his own conscience. The above proposition I cordially indorse, and will venture to go further and suggest that we erect good and substantial buildings, but not costly and extravagant ones, with great spires running up heavenward for the good Lord to shiver with his lightning or be blown down by his winds, but plain, well-ventilated structures in which to meet at appropriate set times for noble purposes. The following I would offer as our object: That we one and all shall look about us and make ourselves acquainted with the circumstances of different families in our respective localities who may be poor, lame, blind, or otherwise unfortunate and in destitute circumstances. And that instead of bowing down upon our knees and petitioning Almighty God to grant them aid and comfort, we ourselves put our hands into our pockets, and give them means to make themselves comfortable. That we shall do all we consistently can to aid and comfort in different ways, and as circumstances may direct, such of our fellow-beings as are needy and deserving succor. In other words, to render unto our fellow beings assistance and happiness in the various appropriate forms that may present themselves. I would have as our grand object, to pray through our acts, as our motto; and to make the world the better from our having been in it, our great aim. With a foundation of this kind, I sincerely feel that we could fast build ourselves up and become to the world what the light-house is to the storm-beaten mariner, a welcome and reliable guide. I can but feel that something of this kind is needed. We need not meet on every Sabbath; Monday, Tuesday, any day of the week will answer for us, just as we may see fit. And at times when we shall have discharged our duties we can discuss the topics of the day; we can discuss the business of the farm, or any other subject that shall have a tendency to advance us in virtue and happiness. In short, to worship God, (I do not mean a personal God, for I have no faith in such,) as we may see proper. I have never been a subscriber of your paper, but have had the privilege of reading that worthy sheet through the kindness of a kinswoman who is a near neighbor; one who is decidedly a Liberalist at heart and a woman of sterling integrity. And besides, with the views therein advanced, I have been somewhat acquainted from boyhood. In fact, my honored father has spent the best years of his life in getting up a work of Liberal characters, and I take pleasure in stating that the work is completed and now ready to take the field to battle with ignorance, superstition, bigotry, intolerance, and error, in all their different forms. The work contains 400 pages. Its title is "Departure," and, as general agent for the sale of the book, I will send the same, postpaid to any address in the United States upon receipt of $1.50. As stated in the commencement, I feel that you are doing the world a great service by standing boldly up and proclaiming what is supported by reason, and in denouncing that which has no foundation upon which to stand. The day is not far distant, in my humble opinion, when the Liberalists will step boldly to the front, where they justly belong, and lead off in a religion that will enlighten and elevate mankind; not a stand-still religion, resting upon miracles, by any means, but a religion based upon facts; and hence a religion that shall keep pace with the growing intelligence of a constantly advancing world. Inclosed find $2.00 for which please send me your paper for the coming year, beginning with this date. It is not because I cannot have the reading of the paper by merely the asking, but because I wish to contribute my mite toward aiding you in pushing forward the great and glorious cause of religious reform.

Special Notices.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygeian Home is a Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

Spermatorrhoea.—Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this life-wasting disease. It is an external application, and has made 1000 permanent cures. Charges moderate. Address with stamp, Vineland, New Jersey.

WANTED—AN EXPERIENCED NURSE and house-keeper with approved morals, active, intelligent, and of sufficient age to give character to a Hygienic Institute. Would prefer a lady wishing treatment and board for impaired health, with a view to the position after it is restored. Address J. S. Lyons, M. D., Springfield, Mo.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine, Paine's Monument, Paine's Bust, Voltaire, Rousseau, Humboldt, Goethe, Schiller, Aug. Comte, Heine, Alex. Pope, John Milton, Goldsmith, Shelley, Byron, Burns, Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, John Adams, J. Q. Adams, Madison, Jackson, Lincoln, Lincoln's Monument, Gerrit Smith, Henry C. Wright, J. S. Mill, Sumner, Edgar A. Poe, Greeley, Castellar, Tennyson, Darwin, Tyndall, H. Spencer, Huxley, Proctor, Draper, Bradlaugh, Holyoake, Ingersoll, Underwood, Mendum, Seaver, L. Colby, Dr. Hare, F. E. Abbot, Frothingham, Wendell Phillips, Emerson, Garrison, Henry Bergh, Peter Cooper, D. R. Burt, S. P. Andrews, Walt Whitman, Proude, Max Muller, Warren Chase, Jas. Parton, Wm. Denton, Dr. Slade, A. J. Davis, Foster, J. M. Peebles, Frances Wright, E. V. Wilson, G. L. Henderson, Prof. Fiske, Fred Douglass, N. P. Banks, P. V. Nasby, Beecher, Tilton, Moulton, G. W. Curtis, Th. Nast, J. G. Bennett, Chas. A. Dana, Phoebe Carey, Alice Carey, Elizabeth C. Stanton, Susan B. Anthony, Lucy Stone, Julia Ward Howe, Chas. Cheney, Paulina Davis, Mary F. Davis, Emma F. Britten, Lizzie Fowler, Mrs. Slenker, Susan H. Wixon, D. M. Bennett, and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc. at 20 cents each singly, or six for one dollar. Neat Albums, by mail, holding 30 photos., 80 cts., holding 50, $1. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St. New York.

WINTER'S

WONDERFUL HAIR RESTORER

is now offered to the people in the form of a recipe, sent post-paid to any address for $1.00. It is made of simple ingredients. No sulphur. No sugar of lead, nor any other poisonous substance. Restores faded, dry, harsh, and falling hair to softness and natural color. Restores hair to the prematurely bald-headed where all other hair restoratives have failed. Removes all unpleasant irritation, itching, and scaly dryness. Three Reasons why every one who has lost or is losing their hair should buy this valuable HAIR RESTORATIVE RECIPE. Firstly, it is the best and most successful hair restorative ever discovered. Secondly, it contains no poisonous substances. Thirdly, Every purchaser of this Wonderful Hair Restorative Recipe can make his own remedy at trifling cost. Address J. O. WINTERS, Circleville, Pica-way Co., Ohio.

MONKS, POPES, and their Political Intrigues. By JOHN ALBERGER, containing an interesting history of the Crimes, Corruptions and Vices of the two hundred and ninety-seven Popes that have professed to fill the chair of St. Peter. Price.

Chronic Diseases of Both Sexes

INHERITED OR ACQUIRED, A SPECIALTY.

Twenty-five years' experience justifies the undersigned in offering his medical services to those afflicted, of both sexes, who, before they resign themselves as incurable, are sincerely invited to consult.

Dr. T. R. KINGET, Of 125 East Thirteenth street, N. Y., and to send for his large pamphlet, 32 pages, "MEDICAL GOOD SENSE," mailed free on receipt of stamp, also for his "QUESTIONS FOR INVALIDS." The medical fees, to suit the times, are moderate. The Doctor has been eminently successful in the treatment of diseases affecting the Head and Throat, the Heart and Lungs, diseases of Liver, Stomach, Bladder, Kidneys, and Bowels; also, diseases of the womb and generative organs of both sexes. Dr. Kinget's warranted treatment of SEMINAL WEAKNESS and IMPOTENCE has effected over 1,000 permanent cures within twelve months. Offices, MANHATTAN MEDICAL INSTITUTE, 125 East 13th street, N. Y., and HOME FOR INVALIDS, Manassas, Va. Office hours from 9 till 12 A. M., and from 2 till 5 P. M.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319 5th Ave. New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters P. O. Box 4329 New York City.

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3.00; Leather, $4.00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4.50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth St., New York.

PROFESSOR HUXLEY'S

recent address at South Kensington Museum. HENRY EVANS' striking view of the "Origin of Christianity," in five papers, "Religion," "Government," "Pauperism," "Contemporary Myth Making," "Amend the Constitution," and other masterly leaders, by JAMES D. BELL, in the first six numbers of The Evolution. "The handsomest periodical ever published in America," and one of the finest reviews in the language is The Evolution. Send 50 cents for the first six numbers to ASA K. BUTTS, Publisher, No. 34 Dev Street, New York.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath," "The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'" In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

The Household Treasure;

or, MEDICAL ADVISER.

By Mrs. C. A. VON CORT,

Wife of the eminent Prussian physician, C. J. VON CORT, M.D. This volume contains a great amount of information about the diseases which afflict the human race and the remedies that will cure them. It also gives a large number of valuable recipes. The whole is presented in an interesting and comprehensive language. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.00. Sent postpaid by mail on receipt of price. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1750

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY. By R. T. TRALL, M.D. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. 25,000 copies of this work have been sold. Finely illustrated, and a very important work. Price, $2.

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

TRALL'S

New York Hygienic Institute,

No. 21 EAST TWENTIETH STREET.

R. T. TRALL, M.D., REBECCA L. TRALL, M.D., } Physicians.

Vapor, Electrical, and "Blue Ray" Baths. Swedish Movements, and all the appliances properly belonging to the Hygienic System, together with a first-class Hygienic Table for those who desire to board in the Institution. Prices moderate.

Persons residing in New York and vicinity, and those who desire treatment or advice in the city, have now an opportunity. Patients visited at their homes on short notice.

Prescriptions, with full directions for home treatment, sent on receipt of letter containing full description of complaints, symptoms, etc., and ten dollars fee. Subsequent letters of advice two dollars.

Address for circulars, information, etc., R. T. TRALL, M.D., 21 East 20th St., New York.

PARTURITION WITHOUT PAIN.

EDITED BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M. D.

Editor of the Herald of Health.

CONTENTS:

1. Healthfulness of Child-Bearing.
2. Dangers of Preventions.
3. Medical Opinions as to escaping Pain.
4. Preparation for Maternity.
5. Exercise during Pregnancy.
6. The Sitz Bathing and Bathing generally.
7. What Food to Eat and what to Avoid.
8. The Mind during Pregnancy.
9. The Aliments of Pregnancy and their Remedies.
10. Female Physician, Anesthetics.
- To which are added:
1. The Husband's Duty to his Wife.
2. Best age for Bearing Children.
3. Shall sickly people become Parents?
4. Small Families.
5. Importance of Physiologic Adaptation of Husband and Wife.
6. Celibacy.
7. Effects of Tobacco on Offspring.
8. Latest Discoveries as to the determining the sex of Offspring.
9. Father's vs. Mother's Influence on the Child.
10. Shall Pregnant Women Work?
11. Effects of Intellectual Activity on number of offspring.
12. Size of Pelvis, and its relation to healthful Parturition, etc., etc.

What is said about "Parturition without Pain." Goden's Lady's Book says: "We give our cordial approbation to this work, and would like to see it in the hands of every mother in the land. The information it contains is most important, and we are fully convinced, reliable." Price, by mail, $1.00. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y.

Bankrupt Sale of Jewelry.

GREAT FAILURE OF THE MILTON GOLD JEWELRY COMPANY IN LONDON

Their Entire Stock Consigned to us to Raise Money as Soon as Possible.

Everybody has heard of MILTON GOLD JEWELRY, it having been sold in this market for the last ten years, and worn by the best and richest class of our population. Still it takes an expert to distinguish Milton Gold from Virginia Gold. In order to dispose of this large consignment in the speediest way, we have put up lots which we offer to the public for the tenth part of their value.

FIFTY-CENT LOT.

One pair elegant sleeve-buttons, retail price $1.00
One set spiral shirt-studs, retail price..... 75
One beautiful scarf-pin, stone setting, retail price..... 75
One elegant gent's watch chain, latest pattern, retail price..... 1.50
One collar-button, retail price..... 50
One elegant wedding ring, very heavy, retail price..... 2.00
Total.....$6.50

Remember that we will send you the above-named six articles, which we have retailed for $6.50, by mail, post-paid, for fifty cents, 4 sample lots for $1.50, or 12 sample lots for $4.

ONE DOLLAR LOT.

One pair gent's sleeve buttons, stone setting.....$1.20
One set elegant spiral studs to match same 1.05
One beautiful ladies' band engagement ring..... 2.00
One gent's large seal ring..... 2.00
One ladies' long neck chain..... 2.75
One gent's heavy plate watch chain..... 1.75
One gent's "Lake George" diamond stud. 1.00
One beautiful scarf-pin......72
One pair ladies' engraved sleeve-buttons.. 1.00
Total.....$13.50

The above figures are the prices these goods have been retailed at in our leading cities. We mention these figures to give you an idea of the goods.

A FINE SOLID SILVER WATCH FREE.

On receipt of $15 we will send by express, one dozen 50 ct. lots and one of each of the others; also one elegant Watch, Ladies' or Gents' size, guaranteed to be a good timekeeper. Such opportunity is offered but once in a lifetime. We want our patrons and the public in general to understand that this is Milton Gold Jewelry and no common Plated Ware. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance or money refunded. Send money by P. O. order or registered letter.

Our Firm and Milton Gold Jewelry are endorsed by all the leading newspapers of the country. Goods sent C. O. D. if $5.00 is sent with the order, not otherwise. Address all orders to RALSTON JEWELRY CO.,

Importers of Watches and Jewelry, LaSalle and Randolph Streets, Chicago, Illinois.

The Resurrection of Jesus.

A new Lecture by W. S. BELL, of New Bedford, Mass., the able Libera Lecturer. It is an excellent Essay. It costs but ten cents, mailed to any address. Send for a copy. Address D. M. BENNETT,

SCIENCE HALL, 141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

DR. E. B. FOOTE'S PLAIN HOME TALK. A most valuable work on health and disease, with the most rational modes of treatment. It contains over 900 pages and 300 illustrations. As a work on Hygiene, it has hardly an equal. Price, with a beautiful chromo. $3.25.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit $12 and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1750

SCOTTISH

WESTERN LOAN CO.,

OF LEROY, MINN.,

Invest Money in first mortgages on improved farms in Iowa and Minnesota. Interest nine per cent annually in advance. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. Send for circulars to G. L. HENDERSON, President, 141 Eighth street, New York. *1916

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First, "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second, "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., New York.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

ALL DISEASES

Diagnosed by Individual Nativity and specially treated in accordance therewith. The time of birth to be given, or as near as may be. Medicines sent post-paid, by mail.

FEE, INCLUDING MEDICINES, $2.

Diseases Treated with Precision, and Scientific Treatment Guaranteed.

Address CHAS. WINTERBURN, M.D., 25 West 26th St., New York.

[We have been personally acquainted with Dr. Winterburn more than fifteen years. We know him to be a gentleman of deep research, wide experience and great reliability. He is very successful in treating diseases of all kinds, and we cheerfully recommend him to the sick and afflicted.—Ed. T. S.]

KIDDER'S

SECRETS OF BEE-KEEPING.

One of the most reliable Bee-Books now in use. It touches on over a hundred points pertaining to Bee-Keeping. It is a guide to the Bee-keeper in every department of Bee management. It is gotten up in condensed form, and contains as much matter as any two-dollar book, and yet we propose to sell it at a much less price. Bound, 75 cts.; Paper cover, 50 cts. Postage free. Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

TWO DOLLAR LOT.

One set gold front pin and ear-rings.
One ladies' long neck-chain.
One elegant locket for the above.
One ladies' "Pompadour" watch chain.
One pair stone sleeve-buttons.
One pair engraved sleeve-buttons.
One amethyst stone ring.
One gent's large seal ring.
One ladies' band engagement ring.
One set spiral shirt studs.
One gent's Lake George diamond stud.
One beautiful scarf-pin.

FIVE DOLLAR LOT.

One ladies' opera chain with slide and tassel.
One heavy ladies' neck-chain.
One beautiful locket for the above.
One ladies' Cameo pin and earrings.
One pair (2) elegant bracelets.
One pair amethyst sleeve buttons inlaid with pearls.
One pair onyx sleeve-buttons.
One set studs to match the above.
One fine gent's watch-chain with charm.
One amethyst ring inlaid with pearls.
One topaz ring inlaid with pearls.
One ladies' heavy band ring.
One ladies' chemise button.
One gent's Parisian diamond pin.
One collar button.
One extra fine set studs.

THE Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-Smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $6 free. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine. 11

EVERY LIBERAL WHO, IN THESE TIMES of Revival and Religious Frenzy, wishes to disseminate convincing truth, should send for an assortment of TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS and TRUTH SEEKER LEAFLETS. They present sensible arguments which religious zealots cannot evade. Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St. N. Y.

POSITIVELY

$50.00 WORTH OF INFORMATION

in form of a nice book of over 100 pages, well illustrated, sent post-paid for $1.00

BY A PRACTICAL CLOSE OBSERVER

How to keep the hens, and hen-roosts free from lice. How to feed to get an abundance of eggs, even in mid winter. How to manage setting hens, chickens, &c., and how to preserve eggs a great length of time. Best breeds of hens, &c. Enclose $1.00 with order.

E. D. BLAKEMAN, Circleville, Ohio.

[Mr. Blakeman is a school-boy friend of ours. We know him well; he is entirely reliable, and the information he has to impart upon the poultry subject is valuable.—Ed. T. S.]

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CRAVEN.

Price, by mail, $1.00. Address

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you, $3 a day sure to all. SIMMONS & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

THE WORLD'S SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS. A library in a single volume; being the lives, the most important sayings and doctrines of two hundred and seventy-eight of the soundest and most original Thinkers the world has known. It will contain some 1,000 pages, crown octavo, with a steel-plate engraving of the author—D. M. BENNETT—and will be issued in July, 1876. Price, $3. Those wishing a copy, will please send in their names at once. Those who remit in advance are entitled to a premium.

THIRTY DISCUSSIONS, BIBLE STORIES, ESSAYS AND LECTURES. By D. M. BENNETT. A work of about 700 pages, with a wood-cut portrait of the author. A low-priced volume. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUIP, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

INGERSOLL'S LECTURES (Cheap Edition) including "The Gods," "Arrangement of the Church, or Individuality," "Heresies and Heresies," "Thomas Paine," "Humboldt," "Paine," 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents. We have also a splendid edition of the same at $1.25.

Gems of Thought.

HE will be the most religious man who most conforms to his nature.—Parker.

LIVE as though you were going to die to-morrow and as though you were going to live a thousand years.—Ann Lee.

As the gods falter and fade before the broad gleams of Science and Truth, humanity, no longer enslaved, rises to its own level.—Susan H. Wixon.

As the science, literature, art, philosophy of a people are, such will be the religion, crude and ugly when they are, noble and beautiful when that character belongs to them.—Frolingham.

THE adoption of fraud and sophistry in the defense of revelation too often reminds us of the injudicious conduct of those poets who load their invulnerable heroes with a useless weight of cumbersome and brittle armor.—Gibbon.

ONE-HALF of Europe anathematizes the other on the subject of the Eucharist; and blood has flowed in torrents from the Baltic sea to the foot of the Pyrenees, for nearly two centuries, on account of a single word, which signifies gentle charity.—Voltaire.

IT is unwise to tell me not to reason but to believe. You might as well tell a man not to wake but sleep. And then to bully with torments, and all that! I cannot help thinking that the menace of hell makes as many devils as the severe penal codes of inhuman humanity makes villains.—Byron.

EVERY mode of religion, to make a deep and lasting impression on the human mind, must exercise our obedience by beginning practices of devotion, for which we can assign no reason; and must acquire our esteem by inculcating moral duties analogous to the dictates of our own hearts.—Gibbon.

AFTER all that has been so plausibly written concerning "the innate idea of God," after all that has been said of its being common to all men, in all ages and nations; it does not appear that man has naturally any more idea of God than any of the beasts of the field. Whatever change may afterwards be wrought, he is by nature a mere Atheist.—John Wesley.

WERE everything susceptible of proof, all people would then think and believe alike, for all want the truth. All wish to believe and know only the truth. But while there is so much ignorance and error to contend with, we shall have to be continually warring against wrong opinions, and constantly against wrong deeds, which are their legitimate results.—Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

IT always seems to me a want of reverence, a sort of spiritual impertinence in priests to declare they are on the track of God. God is not a riddle which we must guess, nor a conundrum which we are required to explain, nor a secret which we have to find out. Is it not truer piety to respect his Silence? Is it reverential to chase Deity by inferences, or to stretch him upon the rack of argument, to extort confession from him? If God meant that we should know him personally, he would not dodge us in the mazes of his works. If there is a scheme of human life which we can feel sure of, it is that our natures are meant for wise happiness, that the business of life is the improvement of humanity—and that we should wait with quiet trust the new knowledge which may come by death—that last venture upon untried existence—the one charm which invests the unknown future with poetry.—George Jacob Holyoake.

WHEN the time comes for the bridge to go down it goes down, and the sweet singer who is coming to the Tabernacle is crushed and consumed as inevitably as the poor rogue who is going to State Prison, as I see them going now and then up that road. Bridges solid as the arches under the world bear you over safely though an Atheist build them. Bridges with faults in their designs or weaknesses in their staying frames go down, though they are baptized in prayers by the holy saints. Churches burn as well as theatres, and factories as well as churches; and the poor creatures would die in the one as in the other dismally, and without distinction of sinner or saint, but for human insight, honesty, and care. The one thing God will not do is to draw a line of special favor between those who are crushed by the tower of Siloam and those who escape on the ground that these are better and those worse, or that we can do good things by merely saying good words, or find safety in faith when we work with bad material.—Rev. Robert Collyer.

A BELIEF in special providence does away with the spirit of investigation, and is inconsistent with personal effort. Why should man endeavor to thwart the designs of God? "Which of you, by taking thought, can add one cubit to his stature?" Under the influence of this belief, man, basking in the sunshine of a delusion, considers the lilies of the field and refuses to take any thought for the morrow. Believing himself in the power of an infinite being, who can, at any moment, dash him to the lowest hell or raise him to the highest heaven, he necessarily abandons the idea of accomplishing anything by his own efforts. As long as this belief was general, the world was filled with ignorance, superstition and misery. The energies of man were wasted in a vain effort to obtain the aid of this power, supposed to be superior to nature. For countless ages, even men were sacrificed upon the altar of this impossible God. To please him, mothers have shed the blood of their own babes; martyrs have chanted triumphant songs in the midst of flame; priests have gorged themselves with blood; nuns have foregone the ecstasies of love; old men have tremblingly implored; women have sobbed and entreated; every pain has been endured, and every crime has been perpetrated.—Ingersoll.

Odd and Ends.

A PITTSBURGH paper speaks of a young man "who shot himself in the West End one evening last week."

AN Irish lover remarks: "It's a very great pleasure to be alone, especially when yer sweetheart is wid yel."

"We find that he came to his death by calling Bill Jackson a liar," was the verdict of a coroner's jury in Missouri.

A SHIRT dealer advertizes a bosom warranted to wear longer than a shirt. But who wants a bosom longer than a shirt?

"THIS insurance policy is a queer thing," said Dobb, reflectively. "If I can't sell it, I can't sell it; and if I can't sell it, I can't sell it."

A CORONER's verdict in Arkansas: "We find that he came to his death from trying to cut out Joe Willett in courting Susie Jackson."

THE old saying that "there is more pleasure in giving than receiving," is now supposed to refer chiefly to kicks, medicine and advice.

AN English female witness promptly defined courtship to be, "Looking at each other, taking hold of each other's hands, and all that kind of thing."

IF you have a good sister, love and cherish her with all your heart; if you have none, why then cherish the good sister of some other man with all your heart.

A LADY who had seven gentlemen callers one Sunday evening, quietly remarked that she was inclined to appoint a "Returning Board," and count some of them out.

AN exchange says that a Michigan man dreamed recently that his aunt was dead. The dream proved true. He tried the same dream on his mother-in-law, but it didn't work.

MANY a young lady suffering from blighted affection and a resolution to die at once, has been jerked from the brink of the grave by reading the announcement of a Spring opening.

AN Irishman on board a vessel when she was on the point of foundering, being told to come on deck, as she was going down, replied that he had no wish to go on deck to see himself drowned.

"JOHNXY, have you learned anything during the week?" asked a teacher of a five-year-old scholar. "Yeth'm." "Well, what is it?" "Never to lead a small trump when you hold both bowers."

A YOUNG lady, writing to her swain, is said to have indited: "Dear M—: Come and see us soon. We have just got a new lamp that will turn down and make it deliciously dark. Your affectionate—"

SOLOMON said there was nothing new under the sun. And yet here is Alexander Stevens, who has just escaped death by a hair's breadth, in a protracted wrestle with pneumonia? Precious little Solomon pneu about it.

TWO ladies contended for precedence at the court of the Emperor Charles V., and appealed to that monarch to decide the matter. "Let the oldest go first," said the monarch. He was never troubled with such a dispute again.

A DOCTOR was discovered holding a young lady in his lap the other evening, but he states that he was examining her for an affection of the heart, and she remarked that there was nothing wrong in laying her head on her pillow.

AN old negro, poorly clad, carrying a heavy bacon on a very cold day, was asked why he did not buy a coat instead of meat, thus replied: "Massa, when I ax my back for credit, it gibs it; when I speak to dis" (laying his hand upon his stomach), "it calls for de cash."

"THE sentence of the Court is," said Judge Porter, a popular Irish magistrate, to a notorious drunkard, "that you be confined in jail for the longest time the law will allow; and I hope you will spend the time in cursing whiskey. 'Be jabbers I will, and Porter, too," was the reply.

A FASHION magazine says: "If the feminine forehead is longer than the nose, it should be shortened by the hair." And if, on the other hand, the masculine nose is longer than the forehead, we suppose the man ought to let his moustache grow up over the end of it and half way to his eyes.

CONUNDRUM.—Why are the self-styled Evangelical Revival Preachers while making converts like Hull's manufacturers of Vulcanized India Rubber Goods?

Because they require considerable sulphur, a high degree of heat, and soft stock to accomplish their purpose.—Herald.

AN enterprising Chinaman of Gold Hill, Nev., recently mounted the following sign, handsomely painted, on his newly-established wash-house: "Ah Charlie washing done dam cheap." Virtuous public opinion soon obliged him to take down the sign and put up one with less Scripture in it.

A WIT was awfully bored by a stupid fellow who persisted in talking to him on natural history. "There's the oyster," at last, said the bore, "what's your notion as to the idea that the oyster is possessed of reason?" "I think it may be true," said the wit, "because the oyster knows enough to shut its mouth."

A MANUFACTURER in England, who employed a great number of hands, told them that if they attended church on Good Friday morning they would be paid as though they had been at work. Subsequently he received from the foreman the gratifying information that if paid for over-work they would be happy to go to the Methodist Chapel in the evening of that day as well.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Ots.
1.	Discession on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arraignment of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	2
9.	The Story of the Flood.	2
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	2
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	2
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	8
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snodde. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	5
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	2
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	1
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	2
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	1
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	1
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	1
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	5
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	3
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vigilant Attestation. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. O. A. Godman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	3
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	2
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	1
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsborg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	3
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	2
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fluke.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 60 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

These eight Scientific Tracts are made into a pamphlet of 125 pages, at 20 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

Truth Seeker Leaflets.

Sent, assorted, or as desired, post-paid, at 4 cents per dozen; 25 cents per hundred, or $2 per thousand.

Let them be distributed freely in every town, village and neighborhood. Address,

D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., New York.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth	50
" " with Examination of Prophecies	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth,	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jaccolit.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols.. 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 60 and	1 00
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch. Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diagesis.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet. Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" " Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" " Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Snakespeare's Text. God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" " Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols..	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent of Man. (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright.	35 & 60
Evans' History of all Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" " Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" " Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" " Safest Creed.	1 50
" " Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" " Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" " Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" " Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought. Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" " Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" " Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" " etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	6 00
John's Way.	16
Kneelands Review.	1 00
" " Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" " History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Vale.	1 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" " Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each.	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" " Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology. 770 cuts.	3 40
" " Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Beade.	3 00
Peel's All Around the World.	2 50
" " Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	20
" " Rights of Man.	30
" " Theological Works.	2 00
" " and Miscellaneous Works.	2 50
" " Miscellaneous Writings, Centennial edition.	2 50
" " Political Works. 2 Vols., 1 8vo.	5 00
" " Complete Works. 3 Vols. 8vo.	8 00
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	60
Synagma. Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature, D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" " New Life of Jesus. 2 vols..	12 00
Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols., 8vo..	8 00
Sexual Physiology, Trall.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul.	2 00
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers.
" " $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions. Bible Stories, etc., 75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and
" " IV, 60 cts. &	1 00
The Outcast. Winwood Beade.	30
Talks with My Patients. Mrs. Gleason, M.D.	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	50 & 80
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
" " New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE,
MORALS,

FREETHOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 14. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY }
BY D. M. BENNETT.

New York, Saturday, April 7, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year.
NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

THE baby show in St. Louis adjourned but the Pope telegraphs that he is resolved to maintain his nuncio at Vienna.

A MOTHER and four children were burned to death in a house that was consumed at Rhinecliff, Dutchess County, New York.

REV. C. HALL, of Staten Island, once a Baptist, has joined the Methodists. It is only a few weeks since another minister went vice versa.

A FRENCH writer once carried an article to M. Buloz on "God." "I do not want it," said the crusty publisher. "God is not contemporary literature."

MR. BEECHER expresses very strongly his opinion that "the communion of soul with soul ought not to be reported." As a general proposition this is probably true.

THE utter destruction caused by the late freshet in Staffordville, Conn., may be realized when it is stated that ten Mills there are not worth one cent, and many of them are not worth a dam.

ELDER EVANS is said to be in favor of burying bodies in cemeteries twenty feet apart, with a tree planted by the side of every grave. He does not prescribe the kind of tree; what would he say to the Elder?

REV. MR. PHRANER, of the Reformed Church, kept a Jersey City ferryboat in commotion two or three days ago by preaching about Oakley Hall and Beecher, varied with occasional attempts to jump overboard.

MUDDY & SINKER have converted nearly all the Boston people who are convertible, and about the first of May will be turned out to grass. There are others who stand ready to take them to their bosoms.

ISN'T it curious? The word Cat is not found in the Bible once, though the word roof is in eleven times, longs five times and hurl three times. The boot-jack had not been discovered at the time the book was written.

JAMES PARTON has been saying some hard things in connection with the Roman Catholic clergy and their fondness for wine, brandy and ale. Are we to understand from this that he objects to their coming to their bier?

BISHOP LEE, who was shot in Utah for his participation in the Mountain Meadow Massacre, leaves sixty-four children behind him to mourn his untimely end. He seems to have been an industrious patriarch as well as a pious bishop.

"ANOTHER DAM DISASTER" is the Boston papers announcement in display type of the freshet calamity in Connecticut. If they had applied the same to Moody, who is still performing in their city, they would have been equally as correct.

REV. DR. DUDLEY, Theodore Parker's successor in Boston, must be a very interesting person. He is described as a four-sided man with a window in each side. We are not told whether the windows are of blue glass, but in any case the poor man must have an uncommon quantity of panes.

DR. CUMMING, the London End-of-the-worldist has been prophesying again. He is a smart hand at prophesying. It will take the slow-coach-world half a million years at least to fulfill all that he has laid out for it. The best part of his prophecies, however, is that none of them come to pass. Notwithstanding all he says about the world's coming to a stand-still, it revolves right along just as though nothing had been said.

DR. E. B. FOOTE, JR., gave a very entertaining and instructive lecture on "Blue Glass," before the Liberal Club, on the eve of March 3d. He reviewed Gen. Pleasanton's book of alleged discoveries, and pointed out very forcibly the unsatisfactory nature of the General's deductions, owing to the loose manner in which the experiments were conducted, according to the accounts given by the General himself. He did not deny that the General was entitled to no little credit for his ingenuity and industry, and he acknowledged that beneficial results have followed from the interest that has been awakened upon the subject, and in regard to sun-baths. It will doubtless be found that under the ruling excitement many person afflicted with various ills will be induced to take sun-baths, sitting under blue glass, who would not have otherwise done so, and in this many will be benefitted by the agitation of the subject. He said the great benefit of sunlight as a curative agent has long been known to the medical faculty, and is therefore not specially new or startling.

A GREAT scandal has been created in the village of Wellow, near Bath, England, by the refusal of the vicar to grant the rites of burial to the remains of a boy named Francis Packer, who recently committed suicide by hanging on account of his father chiding him for not going to work earlier. When the body was brought for interment the vicar refused to allow it to be taken into the Church, but walked unsurprised to the grave and simply read the Lord's prayer.

DIVERSITY OF OPINION.—Rev. Joseph Cook declares the Moody revival an unbounded success, and says Boston is on its knees for the first time. On the other hand, Rev. W. H. H. Murray, who preaches to the largest congregation in Boston, says the revival has not succeeded for the want of lifting power. Cook may not desire lifting as much as Murray. On a physical "lift" Moody ought to be pretty good. He would make a very fair head-man in a stone quarry.

THE investigation into the expenses of our life insurance companies shows very plainly that the officers are too much inclined to use the money of the policy holders with a degree of extravagance which would not be allowed to prevail in a private business concern. It is a bad business this, of officers drawing large salaries and receiving bonuses besides; and their turning over their bills of expenses on European trips, to be paid by the companies, is particularly wrong and suggestive.

"THE spicy breeze blows soft o'er Ceylon's isle," according to the hymn, but famine also is stalking abroad there, according to the despatches. Not only are the Ceylonese suffering themselves, but multitudes of the starving people of South India are dying there, in the vain hope of relief. Ceylon is a possession of the British Government, which has within the last half year expended millions of dollars in relieving the famine-stricken natives of India, and which will now have another field to look after.

A CLERGYMAN CONVICTED OF ARSON.—The Rev. Martin Hoernlein of Buffalo, has been convicted of arson in the second degree, the charge being that he set fire to his house for the purpose of obtaining a large amount of insurance on fictitious and worthless furniture. The defense was that members of Hoernlein's congregation had set fire to his house from malicious motives. The penalty for arson in the second degree is not less than seven years, nor more than ten years' imprisonment in the State Prison.

THE most exciting topic of a local character that has occurred within two weeks has been the sudden disappearance of ex-Mayor A. Oakley Hall. It was thought at first that he had suicided, or that some revengeful or mercenary wretch had murdered him; but now the public has settled down to the conclusion that he has sailed for Europe. His connection with the thieving rings of this city has, since the return of Peter B. Sweeney, made his position an unpleasant one. He probably feared a reopening of the whole question, and possibly exposure and disgrace. He will likely engage in the practice of law in London.

THE Rev. West Pearson, the talented Baptist preacher of Pittsburg, Pa., has had a sad time of it. Before a court of his own church he has been proved guilty of lying, drunkenness and adultery. He commenced his clerical career in England, preaching as a Presbyterian at Blackburn, from which place he eloped with a young lady, whom he deserted at Liverpool; after which he came to this country and practiced law at Salem, Mass. He moved to Montreal and joined the Baptists, after which he began preaching again at St. Charles, where he got into some trouble. Drunkenness and falsehood were charged against him. He moved into the States and had a call at Lafayette, Ind., which place he was forced to leave by his bad deeds coming to light. He next moved upon Pittsburg, where he has been preaching sensational sermons for some time. "Blue Glass" and "old shoes" are some of the subjects he has advertised as themes for his sermons. But it is now thought his days of usefulness there are over. Some of the members of his church testified that they had seen him so drunk in the streets that he could not find the house he was looking for, and repeated falsehoods have been proved upon him.

THE following is an extract from the Modern Athenian, an Edinburgh weekly. The story goes that a sect once confined to an old man called Jock, and an old woman called Jean, all the other quondam members of the sect having been successively dismissed as unworthy. "Well, Jean," said a Broad Churchman, "I suppose you and Jock form the true Church on earth now?" "Deed ay, sir," answered Jean, "but whyles I'm no sae sure about Jock."

IT is announced that Mr. Moody will positively leave Boston on May 1st with no postponement on account of the weather. It is also suggested that those persons in Boston and vicinity who have neglected the means of grace and wish to secure an interest in Jesus during the engagement of this distinguished performer and have a desire to be converted before the season closes, should no longer defer to put in an appearance and apply for a thorough ticket which will take them to the plains of Paradise several stations on the other side of the fiery lake whence the sulphury fumes arise. All such will please call at Capt. Moody's place of business within the next three weeks.

REV. J. HUMPHREY (not the Rev. G. H. H. holding a discussion with the editor of this paper, but a colored herald on the walls of Zion, of this city) deemed it his duty, a few days ago, to chastize an ungodly step-daughter of his with a suspender. Mr. Pleasanton, who was an unwilling witness of the flagellation, deeming it too severe, essayed to interfere and prevent the effusion of blood or the raising of unsightly "welts" on the young offender's back. This interference was indignantly resisted by the reverend gentleman, who, with both knife and pistol, made furious demonstrations towards Pleasanton. There was no peace to be had with the pious defender of Jesus until he was lodged in prison.

MR. BEECHER TALKING ABOUT WOMEN.—Speaking of Mary Magdalene's joy when the angel told her that the Lord had arisen, Mr. Beecher said in his sermon last Sunday, "Who can understand the tropical whirlwind of a woman's soul when a dead love is about to have resurrection?" At the close of his evening sermon he said; "There is nothing for which I thank God more fervently than for the unwavering faith he has given me in the purity, the virtue the honor of women. I have had it from my youth, and now, at the end of a long life, I can say that I have not lost a particle of that chivalrous trust. Therefore, when I hear young men yelping their impertinences, middle-aged men cynically criticizing, infirm old men mumbling their obscenities, I am utterly disgusted. My soul communes not with such men." It is quite possible he would rather call and see Elizabeth. His estimate of the purity and virtue of woman is truly beautiful, but unfortunately there are exceptions to all general rules.

THE Mormon bishop, John D. Lee, paid the penalty of his participation in the Mountain Meadow massacre, by being shot, on the 23d ult., near the scene of the fiendish murders twenty years ago. He died with a good deal of bravery, and took the pains to declare that he was no infidel but did a firm believer in the Christian religion. We are quite willing to concede that he was a Christian, and that the murderous business he was engaged in twenty years ago was of a similar character. He and his comrades professed to be acting in obedience to God. The most bloody and shocking crimes that have been committed in the world have been claimed to be carrying out the commands of God. The most cruel persecutions and the most relentless wars have been perpetrated in the name of God and religion. Had Lee and his companions been Rationalists or infidels it is not at all likely that they would have committed the diabolical crimes they did. Previous to his death he made a confession of his participation in the bloody deeds, and implicated the leaders of the Mormon Church in the same shocking crimes.

Events of the Week.

THE weather for the past week has been mostly rainy and cheerless.

JOSEPH P. CLARKSON, lawyer of Chicago shot himself by accident and died.

A TOBACCO warehouse at Suffield, Connecticut, was destroyed by fire. Loss, $20,000.

CLINTON, N. C., was nearly destroyed by fire. All the business houses consumed. Loss $50,000.

HEAVY floods have prevailed in nearly all the rivers of Maine. High water is the cry all over the State.

MISS ANNA DICKINSON commenced an engagement at the Eagle Theater in this city on Thursday evening the 4th inst.

MARTIN FARQUAR TUPPER, the Proverbial Philosopher who has been sojourning for a few months in this country, sailed for England on Thursday last.

A LARGE fire occurred in West Randolph, Vt., by which several business houses were destroyed. Total loss, $40,000. Two persons escaped barely with their lives.

AT a powder mill at Santa Cruz, Cal., nine tons of powder exploded, killing one man, injuring several others and doing not a little damage to the town two miles distant.

ALFRED COX of West Rawdon, Maine, aged 14 years, shot his father and killed him. Both had just been to church. O what a good thing it is to go church and get heavenly-minded.

SEVERAL milkmen in this city have been fined recently for putting water into their milk and calling it all milk. If they would change their base, put milk into their water and sell it all for water the courts would take no notice of it.

WADE HAMPTON of South Carolina seems to win in the game of Who shall be Governor? which he and Chamberlain have been playing for a few months. Both have been to Washington to have an interview with the President. That functionary has decided to withdraw the United States troops from the State, and that practically lets Hampton Wade in, and so Chamberlain will have to swim out.

THE "protocol" has been signed by Russia, Turkey, England, & Co., but full security is not yet felt in continued peace. Russia has it in her own hands to make her own constructions and to act as she sees fit. It is a leaky kind of arrangement and the Russian bear will doubtless pounce down upon the "sick man" whenever he thinks he can make a good haul by doing so.

A STATEMENT has gone the rounds of the press to the effect that our missing ex-Mayor A. Oakley Hall, who has been missing two or three weeks, has arrived in London, having sailed from Boston in the Victoria, under the name of Sutcliffe, who cracked jokes and perpetrated puns all the way across the Atlantic. It is not admitted by all that Oakley and Sutcliffe are the same, and it is still a matter of doubt with many where our Oakley has gone.

THE Yorkville Police Court has been investigating the case of the Rev. Dominick McCaffray, the pastor of the Church of our Savior. Mrs. Adelaide Leavitt a pretty young married woman twenty-three years of age swears that she called at the pastor's study to solicit aid for a poor person when he followed her to the stairs, kissed her forcibly and made love to her, and told her that he loved her tenderly. He swears that he did not follow her to the stairs and that he did not kiss her nor tell her he loved her. Her sister corroborates this; but Mrs. Leavitt swears Miss McCaffray was not there. Mr. McCaffray swears that when he visited the lady's house he saw the husband and a Mrs. Bennett and that certain remarks were made on each side. Mr. Leavitt and Mrs. Bennett swear that nothing of the kind was said. There is positive perjury on one side or the other and the judge seemed troubled to decide which side it is. On Mr. McCaffray, his sister, or Mrs. Leavitt, Mr. Leavitt and Mrs. Bennett, rests this heavy charge, but as they are all good Christians perhaps it does not matter much which. It is a Christian quarrel and about Christian practices.

Career of Religious Ideas.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.—Copyrighted.

CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCTORY.

That matter called the Christian religion was in existence among the ancients; it has never been wanting since the beginning of the human race.—St. Augustine.

Change rides upon the wings of Time—
A regal artist, dumb and still,
Who visits God's remotest clime,
And sculptures matter to her will.
—Emma Tuttle.

History yields no example of a motive actuating man stronger than religion. To it all the most holy and sacred emotions of the heart bow in abject servitude. Love of friends, of family, of country, is as nothing compared with religious faith. The tender appeal of childhood, the fond embrace of conjugal affection, the pleading voice of fraternal ties, are at once cast aside by the devotee blind to all perception, and calloused to all the influences which usually sway the human heart. Bound to the stake, the martyr smiles at the excruciating pain, and his soul ascends in the lurid flames chanting hymns of victory. It is one of the first faculties awakened in the mind—Protean in its forms, and ever triumphant. The hero who unwavering rushes against serried ranks of bayonets, or unappalled storms the redoubt crowned with deep-throated cannon, condemned by his religion, quaking with fear, falls prostrate, and with white lips cries frantically for pardon to an offended God. Religion demands monasteries filled with monks, and convents with nuns, vowed to celibacy; and thousands rush to their lonely cells, and suffer through their mortal lives the imposition of the most revolting requirements. It asks the wife to ascend the funeral pyre of her husband, and she herself applies the torch. It asks its devotee to cast himself into the Ganges, or beneath the Car of Juggernaut, and its voice is obeyed with joy. It destroys the humanity of its recipient, transforming him into a blind fanatic, and too often an avenging fiend who will sacrifice all the human heart holds dear on the altar of its faith.

Such being its wonderful power, we ask, What is Religion?

The world gives a multitude of diverse answers. In the sense in which the word is usually employed, it means the peculiar beliefs in the form and essence of God, and the ceremonials of his worship, entertained by any particular people. In this sense it is distinct from morality, which relates to actual life. Each great race of mankind, by organization evolving a different mentality and a varying moral code, answers the question after its own manner. The Hindoo says religion consists in believing on Christna and the Holy Books, in keeping caste with the scrupulousness of olden times, observing the ceremonies prescribed, repeating long prayers, pilgrimages to holy cities and rivers, and blind obedience to the priesthood.

The Persian answers that belief in Zoroaster and the sacred Zend Avesta, the repetition of prayers, and the feeding of the sacred fires, are all essential.

The Chinese would have us believe in Confucius; the Moslem, in Mohammed; the Jew, in Moses and the Prophets. The Hindoo has his Shaster; the Persian, his Zend Avesta; the Mohammedan, his Al-Koran; the Jew, his Old Testament; the Christian, his New Testament—all claiming divine and infallible inspiration. All have their divine men—their saviors—to believe on whom is sufficient for salvation. Each has a supreme God jealous of other people's gods. Brahma, Ormuzd, Jehovah, apparently all rest on the same foundation—blind faith. Christianity is not a unit in its answer. There is a wide disparity between Catholic and Protestant, and the sects into which the latter is divided reply with countless discordant voices.

The Mother Church replies: Belief in the divinity of Jesus and the virginity of Mary, crucifixion of the body, punctual attendance at church, and hearty belief and coöperation in the forms of its fantastic worship.

The Protestants cry: Faith, grace, baptism, belief in this or that impossibility, until in the confusion it is impossible to decide. If baptism is essential, either immersion or sprinkling is wrong, and the followers of one or the other of these modes are not fulfilling God's law. If good deeds are worthless and faith is everything, those who rely on an upright life have built their house on the sands. Should good deeds prove of more avail than faith, the opposite host must eternally suffer.

All—Brahmin, Buddhist, Persian, Moslem, Jew, Catholic, Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist, down to the smallest and most obscure sect—are equally willing to sanctify and prove their dogmas with their lives. Martyrs are the cheapest product of mankind, and the most meaningless. They have sealed with their blood the greatest follies with a zeal which proves nothing but their ignorance and fanaticism.

Ah, Religion! are you only a name, changeable to the varying requirements of the time—the convenience and selfishness of men? Broad and deep has been the gulf between religion and morality, and a designing priesthood has ever sought to deepen and widen it, and break down any bridge adventurous thinkers might seek to throw across. Obedience to all moral commands, unless such obedience has special reference to the Divine will, is not religion, which is "real piety in practice, consisting in the performance of all known duties to God and our fellow men, in obedience to Divine command, or from love to God and his law."

The questions arise: What is obedience? How are we to know the will of God? What duties do we owe to him? What is piety?

This definition is as broad as the world, and as narrow as the most selfish bigot can wish. It applies to the pow-wow of the Red Indian as well as to the prayers of Christians—the pilgrimage to Mecca as well as that to the Holy Sepulchre. To be religious is to observe the methods of worship of one's country. A Mohammedan may be very pious at Constantinople, but he would be an Infidel in New York. At Constantinople the Pope himself would be an Infidel dog. The pious Trinitarian does not consider the Unitarian better than an Infidel. Religion is, then, the worship of Joss-sticks—not for ourselves, but to please God.

God is a caricature. The Infinite One becomes offended and displeased if we do not sink our selfhood in him. Infinite selfishness is his predominant quality. Let oblivion conceal from the blushing day this detestable sham! Bury deep this Christians' God, to be unearthed in future centuries, and studied as the geologist now studies the fossil monsters of the primeval time!

Out of this slough there is one method of escape—by another assertion. The Bible furnishes a code, God-given, which man must obey. This satisfies until other races produce their several sacred books, with equally positive evidence of their truthfulness; and it is learned that all the vital moral precepts were well understood before these sacred books were written, and that unless the capabilities for morality exist in the mind, there can be no revelation of moral obligations even by a God.

The religious views entertained by the Christian world are a stupendous chain of unwarrantable, insupportable, and baseless assertions. Getting lost from God, getting saved, getting nearer to God, being restored to God, and being lost from God, form a mass of verbiage, meaningless and false. Can a man be lost from an all-pervading, infinite Father?

Not only is such a religion humiliating—it is absolutely immoral. The ceremony quickly comes to stand for the practice of virtue; the ritual takes the place of deeds; the man is encased in impenetrable formulæ, and truth departs.

The Bible is interpreted by the sects very differently. If our eternal salvation depends on obeying the laws of God for our own sake, the choice of the sect with which we cast our fortunes, and the interpretation we accept, are fraught with momentous consequences—no less than our eternal happiness or misery. Yet are we left to stumble in darkness and doubt, and find it impossible to decide from the evidence furnished us. Whose fault is it—the Infidel's who cannot receive the evidence, or the Infinite God's who furnishes it in so imperfect a manner? If God has made a revelation, it is because he saw its necessity, and a part of that necessity is that it must be in such a form as will be received; otherwise it answers not the ends designed, and is useless.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

What is Clairvoyance?—Concluded.

BY JENNIE B. BROWN.

But to go back, restricted to the brute creation, we call the clairvoyant property "animal instinct," inherent to a degree not particularly marked; in the human organism we recognize it as "intuition"; while more strikingly developed, when properly understood, it receives the distinctive appellation "clairvoyance." But these three supposed separate and distinct characteristics of the animal organism are but so many different stages of development of one and the same thing.

The author of "Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense," after alluding to the phenomena as instinctive knowledge, very truthfully remarks that "in proportion as actual (or acquired) knowledge creeps in, the instructive (or intuitive) perception of things dies out"; and that this is so, we affirm is due to the fact that this quality not being by educated people justly appreciated, like all uncultivated natural gifts, slowly dies a natural death, under the pressure of increasing acquired knowledge, though in some few exceptional cases, intuition and education under advantageous circumstances become so beautifully and harmoniously assimilated as to combine in producing those rare and royal characters whose genius stamps the ages with immortal glory, reflecting deathless luster upon each individualized name.

The uneducated clairvoyant may look deep into the sea, and behold its hidden mysteries, but lacking scientific nomenclature, cannot give to the world the benefit of such occult ability. He may gaze upon the face of Nature, and be impressed with real, and yet to be scientifically discovered and attested facts, but through lack of technical knowledge, and on account of the scantiness of his vocabulary he cannot forestall the scientists.

He may gaze upon the human countenance, may discover the marvelous and beautiful operations of human organisms in their living and normal condition, but through lack of correct apprehensive ability, and educational ability, and educationally developed reasoning faculty, this perceptive consciousness will not enable him to render an intelligible or coherent diagnostic theory regarding the revealings of Nature to the clairvoyant sight, and it is the constant failure on the part of educated humanity to get at the true value—the highly important nature of the clairvoyant property that degrades this most honorable, noble and God-given gift—divine endowment of Nature—to the basis of a superstitious imagination, or mere abnormal fancy dependent upon an epileptic constitution.

The very fact that a supreme contempt on the part of the educated classes generally for the word "clairvoyance" prevents the recognition and cultivation of this divine element as a legitimate ingredient of the human organism, regarding it rather as an enemy to the progress of social refinement, naturally confines its exercise mostly to the lower classes, where we find it invariably represented by persons who do not know how to use it, and having no opportunity to cultivate other mental gifts, not being educated as to the true nature of this, rely entirely on what they call "second sight" for everything, ignorantly supposing it to be special and supernatural dispensation.

What wonder they are often themselves betrayed, or that they frequently betray their patrons into the most ridiculous absurdities and blunders, through their inability to exercise intelligently the clairvoyant property.

There are the noted "obeah women" of the West Indies. No doubt they possess genuine clairvoyance, but the logical reasoner and the reasonable logician might with just as much propriety expect a newly-imported native of Central Africa to perform correctly a selection from Beethoven on the pianoforte, or condemn the instrument as the product of cloven-footed ingenuity for not operating harmoniously under his untrained fingers, subject to his crude understanding, as to set the intuitive insight of these people down as a superstition not to be tolerated, because they do not comprehend that which they clairvoyantly perceive, and therefore give expression to crude and grotesque caricatures of ideas, as the sum total of clairvoyant perception.

To conclude, whether it is the dog that realizes present or approaching danger to his master who may be miles away; whether it be the horse that "scents the battle afar off," or instantly divines threatening disaster near at hand, or the human being whose clear-sighted genius impels his "bright far-seeing soul" to march "three centuries in the van" of generally accepted scientific developments, that may be involved in the discussion of psychological phenomena, let us study out the true nature and use, and, divested of all possibility of abuse, cultivate as an honorable means of human advancement and elevation, the instinctive, intuitive, or clairvoyant property evolving from the brute, and through the principle of analogy carried up through its several consecutive stages of development, till it becomes the brightest jewel that glitters in the crown of intellectual endowment.

Then human society shall become possessed in good time of the real interpreter of all natural problems, social, moral, political, or even religious enigmas, as also of the true pioneer of scientific attestations of established facts and finalities, if, in this world of constantly changing continuity of natural processes, there be such.

"Ghosts."

BY COL. ROBT. G. INGERSOLL.

A lecture delivered at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, N. Y., Friday evening, March 23, 1877, the following abstract of which is taken from the city papers of March 24.

Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, of Illinois, lectured on "Ghosts" last evening, in the Academy of Music. Among those noted in the parquet were General B. F. Tracy, Mr. Thomas Sullivan, Mr. John F. Henry, General Isaac S. Catlin, Corporal James Tanner, ex-District Attorney John Winslow, Mr. A. J. Perry, Alderman Burnet, ex-Judge S. D. Morris, Hon. W. W. Goodrich, Colonel Stegman, Colonel James Cavanagh, Mr. Dwight Johnson, Supervisor Strong and Captain W. L. B. Steers. Rev. D. A. Goodsell, pastor of the Washington street Methodist Episcopal Church, was the only clergyman visible to the writer. A large portion of the audience was composed of ladies. It was a little after eight o'clock when the lecturer appeared upon the platform. He was accompanied by Mr. Franklin Woodruff, who introduced him, and United States District Attorney Tenney. The appearance of the orator was the signal for an outburst of hearty applause, which was acknowledged by a bow.

HOW HE LOOKS.

Colonel Ingersoll, or Bob Ingersoll, as he is more familiarly known, is a fine looking man. He is a good type of masculine physical perfection of the West. Rather above the medium height, his body straight as an arrow, and round and robust, with broad shoulders squarely set, and mighty arms and limbs, his physique is really imposing. A full throat and neck is surmounted by a well-shaped head of unusual size. The forehead is very high, conveying the impression at first sight that Bob is bald, but he yet retains a reasonable quantity of rich dark hair which is carefully brushed. The face has a rosy flush as though the breath of the prairies yet lingered upon it. The eyes are dark, deep set and of piercing brightness. The nose is firm and prominent, and the mouth rather large and furnished with good natural teeth. The entire countenance is round and full, with a jollity always lurking about the lips and mirth sparkling in the eye. But these expressions are so well subdued and carefully controlled that you might at any time mistake Bob for the occupant of some flourishing prairie pulpit.

His language was terse, and his style full of vigor, and while there was no apparent effort at eloquence, his language, voice, and manner all united to form one of the finest exhibitions of eloquence ever presented to an audience, the occasional outbursts of deep feeling offering a telling contrast to the keen sarcasms and the gushing humor that now and then set the auditors in a roar of laughter.

The lecturer apologized in advance to those whose feelings might be wounded, and set out with the proposition that men account for all phenomena upon two theories; the natural and the supernatural, and that there is a perpetual war between them. For four thousand years, he said, it had been believed that man's happiness or misery, fortune or misfortune, were only arrows shot from the quiver of ghosts; that they send or withhold the sun and rain, give prosperous voyages or send the wild storm that strews the shore with wrecks. It has been believed that these malignant ghosts can be appeased by sacrifice and prayer, by building temples and cathedrals, by forms and ceremonies, by flagellations and tortures. In the good old times the ghost theory solved all problems. All diseases were produced by the devils; the sick were possessed by ghosts; and the science of medicine consisted in knowing how to persuade those ghosts to go away. It was believed that two sticks held up cross-wise before the wicked spirit would cause it to flee away in fear and dread. It was believed by our ancestors that all law derived its force from being communicated to man by ghosts. It was only communicated to a few, and the people paid them well for their trouble. There was a city of refuge to which a murderer might fly; but for worshipping the wrong ghost, or saying that wine was not blood, or bread was not flesh, death in all the forms that hatred could devise was the penalty. "I have read a story," he said, "and I don't remember where, about how the first man fell asleep, and, as the French express it, a cutlet was taken from him, and the woman was made. [Laughter.] She was brought and handed to him, 'Here is your property.' I never liked that story quite, about how this woman tempted this man to do wrong, and then the man sneaked out of it." He went on to say that he had read in another book another story. He would not say which was true, but only which he liked. He read that the Supreme Brahma made a man, and then he made a woman—not out of any scrap, but a clean job—and he put them on the island of Ceylon, and allowed them to become acquainted. It was splendid—no neighbors, no mother-in-law. It was delightful courtship. It was the will of the Supreme Brahma that love should always precede marriage. But the ghost or the gods were always pointing out to him the main land, which was beautiful in the distances, and telling him, "You can do anything you like." "Unity in essentials; in non-essentials, liberty." And finally he urged his wife to go to the main land with him. She said no; this was good enough—satisfied, like all good women, to let well enough alone. But he wanted to go West [laughter] and when he reached the main land he found nothing but rocks and desolation. He turned back toward the island, but that had disappeared. He fell down and wept, but when Brahma came from the skies to curse them he got up like a man and told the supreme Brahma that it was his fault and not hers. "Now that," said the Colonel, "is a thing that suits me better in the first man." Then supreme Brahma said, "For her sake you may live and regain your heritage in the skies." "I don't say," the Colonel added, "which is true; I simply say that I like this one best." [Applause.]

They tell us that investigation leads only to misery in this world, and misery in the next. The more you think the worse you are. To keep your mind undisturbed by a solitary thought, that is what they call being anchored on something. [Applause.] For ages men had been educated to the miraculous. Anything that really happened was not worth telling. The natural was considered entirely too common place and attracted no attention unless it was accounted for in some miraculous way. Upon this world rested the awful shadow of another, and priests stood at the portals of death and filled the future with devils and angels.

This world, he said, was not well adapted to raising good folks. It hasn't much soil, and the climate is poor. In the Southern half of the world no man of genius was ever produced; and you can't raise people in the Arctic regions any more than you can corn. There is only a narrow zig-zag belt around the earth in which people of genius have been produced. People don't amount to much only where there's a good winter. You can't make good bed clothes out of clouds; and so the family will amount to nothing. [Laughter.] Where the good family is, there you can make good government. Civilization and liberty blossom only where there is snow. For this reason he had opposed the annexation of San Domingo. We don't want to go any more in the direction of Mexico. Take five thousand ministers, and five thousand ruling elders, and five thousand professors of theology and send them out there, and give them every advantage, and the second generation would be seen riding on mules barebacked, with their shoes off and hair sticking through a sombrero, with a rooster under each arm going to a cock-fight. [Laughter.]

Upon one question, he said, I stand about "seven to eight," [laughter], which, for all political purposes at least, amounts to a certainty, and this is I have a notion that man came up from the lower animals. I can't account for his meanness in any other way. [Laughter.] He would rather himself come from the lowest animals that ever swam in the dim seas of the Laurentian period, and keep getting better every year, and coming through the vertebrates up to the high water mark of human intellect, than be made perfect in the first place and lose money every day since. [Laughter and applause.]

If he worshiped anything it was liberty. It was his only altar. It was about time for the malignant ghosts to fold their wings about their fleshless bones and vanish from the haunts of men. He had looked back over the past and fancied himself in the tortures of the rack, while the white, hypocritical faces of the priests stared at him, and he had sworn by all the ghosts to do what little he could to make men really and truly free. [Applause.]

Those who did not pretend to believe that prayer was answered claimed that it did good to him who prayed, like a man trying to lift himself by the seat of his breeches. He never lifts himself, but he gets muscle by trying it. If thought, he said, will give us truth, let the ghosts go. Let us exorcise them, and worship them no more. Let them cover their eyeless sockets with their fleshless hands and flit forever from the imaginations of men. [Applause.]

How sweet and blessed the experiences born of the consciousness that life's duties are faithfully performed day by day. How sacred and how full of meaning the words, love and duty! They comprise the whole range of human action, and compass the boundless realms of all that heaven of happiness the soul can ever know.

THE LATEST GOOD THING.—Everybody who desires an article extremely serviceable in connection with pocket papers, etc., or in office or store or at home, should send twenty-five cents to W. N. Clapp, 8 Oakland ave., Jersey City, N. J., for a package of his Duplex Gusset-End Paper Wallets—a perfect vade mecum. We have seen it, are using one, and appreciate its assistance and reliability.

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

THE SERVICES OF INFIDELITY AND CHRISTIANITY TO AMERICAN LIBERTY.

NEW YORK, March 29, 1877.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: As we have agreed to discuss some matters relative to Infidelity and Christianity, and as we are both alike in being quite indifferent to ceremony and red tape, I will at once proceed to prove the affirmative of the following proposition:

THAT BELIEVERS IN THE BIBLE HAVE DONE MORE FOR CIVIL LIBERTY IN THE UNITED STATES THAN UNBELIEVERS IN IT.

By "believers in the Bible" is meant those who recognized the infallibility and divine authority of that book; and by the "unbelievers" is meant those who denied that infallibility and repudiated that authority. You will scarcely object to this definition of the word "Infidel." Webster defines Infidelity as "disbelief of the inspiration of the Scriptures, or the divine origin of Christianity." No standard lexicographer differs from this definition.

Having thus explained terms, we will proceed at once to show that the services of Infidels to American liberty has been infinitesimally small compared with that of Christians. I am well aware that this is exactly the reverse of the persistent representations of Infidel speakers and writers; but it can be demonstrated nevertheless.

1. This is shown by the fact that the struggle for independence originated among the Puritans of New England—yes, among the hated Puritans. It is true they did not start out with the conscious and avowed intention of securing their independence. But it is noteworthy that they were the first to resist British oppression. Samuel Adams, the leading spirit in this resistance, was a member of the Congregational Church. His was a house of prayer. He was a strict observer of the Sabbath (Bancroft's History of the United States, vol. iii., pp. 418-420, Centenary Edition). As far back as the year 1768 John Hancock had named one of his sloops "Liberty," indicative of the spirit of the man, and, perhaps, of the unexpressed wish of his soul.

The Boston Town Meeting, held in Faneuil Hall, Sept., 1768, was an assemblage of religious people. In that meeting it was resolved that "the inhabitants of the town of Boston will, at the utmost peril of their lives and fortunes, maintain and defend their rights, privileges, and immunities; and they recommended that a day be set apart for fasting and prayer." This shows that the first citizen's meeting to remonstrate against tyranny was a meeting, not of Infidels but of Puritans.

We read often of the clergy of that period inspiring their congregations with patriotism, courage, and hope. Bancroft says "the Calvinist ministers nursed the flame of piety and of civil freedom" (Bancroft, vol. iii., pp. 499, 587). Where is the account of a "Liberal Club" doing a similar service?

The Old Continental Congress, held in 1774, was composed almost entirely of Christian men. Rev. Jacob Duché, an Episcopalian, was invited to act as chaplain. Franklin testified afterwards that those early Conventions and Congresses were opened every day with prayer (Parton's Life of Franklin, vol. ii., pp. 573-4).

The battles of Lexington and Concord were fought by brave Puritans. The warning of the approaching foe was given from a church tower. Paul Revere revered Paul. He was a believer of the Gospel. The march from Cambridge to Charlestown Neck under Col. Prescott was preceded by prayer by Mr. Langdon, then President of Harvard College (Lossing's Field Book of the Revolution, vol. i., p. 539).

The strictly first declaration of independence—the Mecklenburg Declaration—was made in May, 1775, in the highlands of North Carolina by a convention of "sturdy Presbyterians" (Bancroft, vol. iv., p. 575).

All this, and much more of the same import, had transpired before Thomas Paine published his "Common Sense" in Jan. of 1776. It is cheerfully admitted that that pamphlet had a wonderful effect on the Colonists. But it did not create the thought of independence, as is sometimes claimed. Along with a great many other essays and pamphlets of the same kind, prepared by "the ablest persons in America" (Lossing's Lives of the Signers; p. 246), it helped to precipitate an idea that was already in solution in the public mind. It touched off the magazine. As John Adams remarked, it "singularly fell in with the temper of the moment" (Life and Works of John Adams; Boston, 1854; vol. i., p. 204). "The idea of independence was familiar among the common people much earlier than some people pretend" (Ibid; vol. ix., p. 598). Patrick Henry—who, though not a church member, was so far a Christian that he relished Butler's "Analogy" and Doddridge's "Rise and Progress," and published at his own expense Jennings' "Internal Evidences of Christianity" (Sparks' Am. Biography, vol. xi., p. 384)—as early as 1763 and 1765 had given utterance to sentiments that caused the royalists to cry out "Treason! Treason!" Samuel Adams, Richard Henry Lee, Benjamin Franklin, Rev. Timothy Dwight (Lives of the Signers, p. 244), Gen. Greene, Gen. Washington (Bancroft, vol. v., p. 63), and many others, had talked of absolute separation from the mother country before Paine's pamphlet ever saw the light. In the words of Bancroft, "The Declaration of Independence was silently but steadily prepared in the convictions of all the people, just as every spire of grass is imperaled by the dew, and reflects the morning sun" (Bancroft, vol. v., p. 165).

2. The affirmative of this proposition is confirmed by the fact that the foreigners who came to our assistance were nearly all believers in the Holy Scriptures. De Kalb was a Protestant (Bancroft, vol. iv., p. 40). It is well known that Lafayette, Pulaski, and Kosciuszko were Catholics. Steuben was a Lutheran (Sparks' American Biography, vol. ix., p.

84). But where was the Infidel that crossed the sea to lead the provincial patriots against the British troops?

The Englishmen who advocated the cause of the Americans in the presence of the Crown were all believers in the Christian religion. I refer especially to Col. Barré, Chatam, Camden, and Burke. No Freethinker in the House of Lords or in the House of Commons raised his voice in our behalf.

3. In further proof of my position I will remind you of the fact that the masses of the Colonists were believers in Christianity. An avowed Infidel in the American army was regarded as an exception and a monstrosity. The battles of the Revolution were waged by soldiers who read their Bibles in the camp, and exercised faith in God.

The best generals of the Revolution accepted the Bible as the word of the Lord. This is notably true of Prescott, Warren, Putnam, Greene, Knox, Morgan, Wayne, Lincoln, and their commander-in-chief, George Washington. We have already named Lafayette, Steuben, Pulaski, Kosciuszko, and De Kalb. Who was the Infidel general that rendered any service to the Colonies? Benedict Arnold, who was irreligious, was a traitor. Charles Lee, the Freethinker, proved unfaithful.

Robert Morris, the great financier of that period, had an unswerving faith in the principles inculcated in Holy Writ. So had his eminent friend, Gouverneur Morris.

The signers of the Declaration of Independence were religious men. Benson J. Lossing, Esq., the well-known author, who has been for many years a careful student of American history and biography, said recently in a private letter: "I believe, from internal evidence, that every signer of the Declaration of Independence was a practical Christian, such as Christ accepts as his worthy children. They, of course, differed in their theological notions, but not in their religious convictions. Some of them were church members, and some were not." That this is true, without excepting Franklin and Jefferson, I will show in my next.

Soon after the close of the war, Congress appointed Dec. 13, 1781, as a day of "Thanksgiving to Almighty God for the signal success of the American arms." Previous to that "when the letters of Washington announcing the capitulation reached Congress, that body, with the people streaming in their train, went in procession to the Dutch Lutheran church to return thanks to Almighty God" (Bancroft, vol. vi., p. 429). Most assuredly, then, the American people were in the main religious.

These remarks are suggestive rather than exhaustive. The service of Christians to the cause of independence, as compared with that of Infidels, was as a thousand to one.

I have given many references, as I intend to continue doing, in order that you and our readers may verify every statement. I shall endeavor to give, as I shall demand, authority and proof. Yours, very respectfully,

G. H. HUMPHREY.

Are Ministers better than Others?

ST. JOHN'S, MICH., March 19, 1877.

Was Brother Bickford of the Congregational church working for the Lord, or for the Devil, when he, under an assumed name, tried to destroy the good name of his brother minister, Elder Colby? Was not the attempt to build up himself and his church by trying to rob a brother of his good name a low, mean, underhanded, dishonest trick? Has not his church indorsed his act by permitting him, with his license in his pocket, to go to other fields for the purpose of teaching men to be upright and honest?

Was that St. John's Methodist minister better than a thief and a robber when, not satisfied with the liberality of the railroad, which carries ministers at one-half fare, he bought a ticket to the D. & N. junction only? If he did not mean to cheat the Railroad Co. out of their honest dues, why did he not buy his ticket to St. John's? Was it not because he could not get through the gate at Detroit without showing his ticket, and a ten-cent one would pass him, which was all that he cared for?

Was Elder Russell more virtuous than others? If so, why did his hired girl charge him with improprieties? Did not his acts, and the acts of other ministers who were so very active in prosecuting our liquor-sellers, prove a curse instead of a blessing? Has not moral suasion and the Red Ribbon proved to be better than their legal suasion and large piles of costs for others to pay?

Did not the great temperance reformer, Dr. Reynolds, show great wisdom, and that he well understood the intrigue and nature of ministers when he so wisely, when here, refused to let a single minister join as a member of his Red Ribbon Temperance Club? Has it not been proved that the evangelist, the Rev. Mr. Graves, by pocketing such letters as contained money, and throwing such as contained no money unread into the woodbox, was the Prince of Humbugs, and, judging from the amount of money that he makes, hard to beat as a confidence operator. Did the representative of our Baptist church, Elder Rose, with another minister, ascend the judge's grand stand at the time of the St. John's great "Hoss Race"? Did they design or expect to be called upon to open the exercises by singing and with prayer? In the very midst of half a dozen gambling-hells, and a ten-cent dance-house in the rear, did not they indorse by their conspicuous presence, and were they not responsible for some men's betting on the wrong horse? and if they secretly prayed the Lord to aid and assist any particular horse, as consistent and honest Christians ought, should not they have stated to the public which one?

Did not our Methodist clergyman, Rev. Mr. Hamilton, say from the pulpit that he would not marry a couple unless they, or at least one of them, were members of a church? and did not such an assertion show him to be a bigoted fool?

Was the prospect of losing marriage fees the reason that induced him, one or two weeks afterward, to proclaim from the same pulpit that he had changed his mind?

Does not the changing of his opinion so soon, if honest, give evidence of a very weak mind? In writing for the press may he not yet learn that he, too, like Brother Bixford, greatly mistook his calling?

Ought not our transient, intermeddling, non-taxpaying, Methodist, Congregational, and Baptist ministers let the taxpayers and supporters of our public schools determine for themselves whether they wish to pay for Bible-reading in school or not? Were they in God's service when they held special church meetings for drilling purposes so that they might lead their hearers by the nose to the school-meeting for the purpose of trampling upon the opinion of our State Superintendent of Public Instruction and the constitutional rights of others by forcing men, in addition to schooling their children free, to give them religious instruction also?

Was not the bulldozing and determination to interrupt at the school-meeting evidence that the Church considered that they had the weak side of the argument, and that their only chance of success lay in their preventing discussion? Did our St. John's lawyer state the truth when he said that he had been retained no less than three times by Clinton Co. ministers who had played too much with the ewe lambs of their flocks?

Is it true that one of our high-toned St. John's ministers within the last four months has paid a hundred dollars to one of our professional men to induce him to commit murder? I ask are these things true?

A leading minister has just been tried for lying. Mason, Midland, Chesaning, and Grand Rapids have each convicted its minister of adultery, and the ministerial record throughout the whole land goes to show that ministers are less to be trusted and four-fold more licentious than any other class of professional men. Parties who may wish to know the names and particulars of two hundred ministers who, within the last few years, have been convicted of crimes, should get, at the St. John's depot, the little ten cent book entitled "The Arraignment of Priestcraft."

Believing that we have some good and true men among our clergy, I wish to say that, in my opinion, Elder Chapin of the Episcopal church is one of the best; always minding his own business, and preaching Jesus, and him crucified, instead of trying to run a school-meeting.

In my next I shall ask Elder Ross very respectfully why he declared, at the meeting, in favor of the Bible in the schools, when he had said all along that he was opposed to any such measure. Was he psychologized? And what did he mean by saying that the meeting had been gotten up in the interest of free-love and polygamy? Subscriptions for THE TRUTH SEEKER and single copies at the News Office.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.
SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 16.

Great Jehovah, in connection with the subject of thy incarnation and thy intercourse with an earthly female, with thy permission, may we spend a little time in examining the mythological beliefs which were taught and maintained by various pagan nations on the earth many hundreds of years before the story of thy own incarnation was ever mentioned by mortal lips?

Was not the doctrine of the descent of Deity from heaven, of his cohabiting with daughters of men, particularly with virgins, thus producing an offspring that was an incarnation of himself and to thus become a savior of the world, strenuously taught by many of the ancient religions of the world? and did not that theory in one form or another enter into the mythologies of many of the older pagan nations from three to five thousand years ago?

Was not the symbol of a virgin and child, and also the legend or tradition that the child was begotten by the great king of heaven, familiar in India, in China, in Chaldea, in Thibet, in Siam, in Phœnicia, in Egypt, in Syria, in Greece, in Scandinavia, and in many others of the older nations long, long ago, before Christianity was heard of in the world?

In ancient India was it not taught over three thousand years ago that their God, Vishnu, one of the trinity with Brahma and Siva, descended from heaven and cohabited with a virgin and produced a semi-celestial son? Was it not held by the Brahmins that this incarnation of divinity took place several times? Was not Christna held to be the eighth incarnation, or Avatar, of this Hindoo God?

According to the Brahminical legends which appear in the ancient sacred writings of the Hindoos, as brought to light by the studies and investigations of such Sanscrit scholars and philologists as Sir William Jones, Max Müller, J. Cockburn Thompson and Louis Jacolliot, was it not held that the mother of Christna, called Devanaguy, a virgin, was specially prepared by divine care for a visit from the God of heaven, Vishnu? Was it not said that Vishnu appeared to her in a dream, and did he not declare to her the glory and distinction that awaited her?

Does it not appear in the ancient Sanscrit that after the virgin had been duly prepared, and after she had been cruelly persecuted by the wicked Rajah of Madura, that Vishnu passed through the walls of the prison where she was confined, and did he not proceed to incarnate himself in connection with the virgin? While she was engaged in prayer, were not her ears agreeably charmed with celestial music? Was not her prison suddenly illuminated with the glory of heaven, and did not Vishnu appear to her in all the clat of his divine majesty? Did not the virgin fall into a profound ecstasy? Was she not "overshadowed" and did she not conceive?

Was not the period of gestation one of continued delight and enchantment to the virgin? After her accouchment had taken place was she not removed by the power of Vishnu to a sheepfold belonging to a relative of the virgin named Nanda, and were not the shepherds apprized of the birth of the young child? Did they not prostrate themselves on the ground before the young demi-god and worship him?

Was it not also held that when the tyrant of Madura learned of the birth of the remarkable child, and that his own throne would be in danger by the new comer, he took measures to have the young child destroyed? Was it not held that the tyrant passed an edict that all the children within his states, that were born on the night that Christna was born, should be put to death? To escape this cruel decree did not the virgin flee with her babe to the river Ganges, where the child was comparatively safe and beyond the reach of the wicked tyrant?

Were not many miracles and wonderful works ascribed to Christna during the years of his youth and early manhood? and was he not a favorite deity with the women of the country? Before he arrived at his majority did he not commence his mission in traveling over the country preaching to the people? Did he not have active and frequent contests with the evil spirits which rose up to oppose him?

Did he not surmount dangers, and did he not show by the numerous miracles which he performed that he possessed divine power? Did he not gather round himself a band of disciples who followed him as he traveled to and fro over the country? and were not his disciples greatly devoted to him? Did he not teach the populace excellent morals and the most elevated maxims commendatory of upright conduct and a good life?

Finally, was he not basely put to death by bad men who were his enemies, and was his body not crucified upon a tree near the river Ganges? Was not his memory fondly and affectionately revered by numerous thousands who believed in him in all parts of that populous country?

Jehovah, was it not much the same with Buddha, the great Reformer and Savior, who is held by his followers to have lived in India some twenty-five hundred years ago? After numberless incarnations under different names and titles, is it not held by his disciples that, after great preparation on his part, as well as on the part of his mother, Maya, she was impregnated in a miraculous manner without the aid of a male of the human race?

Did not Maya have a remarkable dream, in which the deity from heaven descended in the form of a white elephant and entered her womb, when she conceived, and, ten months afterwards, without coming in contact with a man, gave birth to a son, who, upon coming to maturity, proved to be the greatest being that had ever lived?

Did not this personage, to whom was given various titles and appellations, as Bodhisattva, Sakyamuni, Gautama Buddha, etc., lead a most remarkable life? Did he not withdraw himself from the world, and, by a severe course of abstinence, penance, ascetic habits, fasting, humiliation and devotion, prepare himself for the great mission he had to perform—the teaching of the truths of salvation and happiness to the nations around him?

Did he not spend a long life in teaching the most beautiful morals? Did he not inculcate the strictest self-denial and abstinence from vain and earthly pleasures?

Did he not, according to the belief of his ardent and devout admirers, perform numerous miracles and deeds which an ordinary human being could not perform? In a fierce contest with the evil spirits of darkness did he not signally triumph over them, although they opposed him in immense numbers?

Did not the holy life and teachings of this remarkable character secure a greater following than has ever been known in the world before or since? Did he not have millions of disciples and followers in India, China, Tartary, Mongolia, Siam, Burmah, Thibet, and Ceylon?

Though he may have been a myth, though many of the events claimed for him in his career were purely imaginary, did he not absolutely establish one of the most remarkable systems of religion that the world has ever known? Has it not been a peaceful, beneficent religion, imparting happiness and consolation to many millions of human beings, without showing a disposition to engage in the business of shedding blood and spreading war and desolation over the face of the earth?

If numbers, devoutness, sincerity, peacefulness, and perseverance on the part of its devotees are marks of genuineness and truthfulness of a system of belief, is not the religion of Buddha the most truthful and the most perfect of any that has yet been devised by man? Does the system said to have been inaugurated by thy Son begin to compare with it?

In the enumeration of believers and followers, has not Buddhism greatly outranked all the other systems of religion that the world has known? After having for twenty-five centuries the greatest following by far of any system, are there not on the earth to-day fully four hundred millions of human beings who devoutly believe in the purity of the life and teachings of their adored Reformer, Savior and Redeemer?

Has not this religion, while its influence has been peaceful and humane, exercised a more potent and extensive rule over the lives and conduct of men than any other system of religion that the race has ever embraced?

Canst thou say, Jehovah, that a purer code of morals, a life of greater self-denial, or a greater devotion to the human race, was taught and lived and enjoined by thy own son Jesus, than was at least five hundred years earlier—and during a much longer life—lived and taught by Buddha?

In view of the miraculous birth and the humble, devoted life of this wonderful personage, of the purity of his life and doctrine, of the unprecedented influence which his doctrines have exercised in several of the most populous nations of the world, and which has been continued without interruption for nearly three thousand years, may we ask, Jehovah, whether thou hast personally ever had much to dowith that religion or with the people who have believed in it?

Where wert thou, Jehovah, through all those thousands of years? Wert thou so occupied and annoyed with the Jews, first, and then with the Christians, who were almost constantly engaged in war, bloodshed and carnage, that thou hadst but little time or attention to give to the Mongolians and Indians, or to the numerous millions who acknowledged the religion of Buddha, that thou hadst to leave them to the tender care and protection of the pagan gods? Hast thou ever been known among them? During the passing centuries that they have existed hast thou ever revealed thyself to them, or did they ever hear the name of Jehovah mentioned?

Is it not singular how such a continued prosperity, such a peaceful rule, such a long continued reign of one system of faith should for thousands of years prevail in a large portion of the most populous parts of the earth without any attention or supervision from thee or from thy Son?

Does not this striking fact go far to prove that thy presence and supervision are not absolutely necessary, either in the continuance of nations or in the success and perpetuity of a grand system of religions?

Have not the pagan religions and the pagan nations been as well preserved, and have not their religions been followed out quite as peacefully and as successfully as have the religions and nations which thou hast taken under thy immediate control and guidance? In short, have not those nations who have managed to get along without thy aid and presence succeeded about as well as those which have been favored with both?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

What I Don't Believe.—No. 24.

215. I do not believe Abraham was governed by a spirit of truth and honesty when he played the fraudulent game with King Abimelech that he had tried with Pharaoh, passing Sarah off as his sister. Now-a-days such conduct would be called downright lying, and it is hard to see how it was anything else then, though practiced by the Father of the Faithful.

It seems a little incredible how an old woman ninety years of age could so stimulate the passions of a king as to make it necessary for the husband to perpetrate falsehood and lies to prevent his being put to death or being subjected to personal injury on her account. It appears that the old Patriarch was willing that the king should take his wife into his own house or palace and use her as a mistress or a courtesan rather than have it known that she was his honest, lawful wife, and that, as her husband, he would defend and protect her virtue and honor as long as he had a drop of blood left. It was the same twenty-five years earlier, when he went into the dominion of Pharaoh of Egypt and there pretended his wife was his sister that he might escape personal injury on her account. He did not object to her being put to any use the lustful king might desire so that his person was safe. What miserable, contemptible conduct! What unmanly and dishonorable subterfuges for a person who was selected to be the father of God's special people, and to found a nation and kingdom that should endure forever, to be guilty of! Pshaw! who can sufficiently despise the meanness of a mere thing who would actually barter away his wife's honor and her personal charms for his own individual safety, or for cattle, sheep, and gold! This is what Abraham did, and he is called the "Father of the Faithful;" and the highest glory and ambition that Christians aspire to is to get into his bosom and to nestle there a few million years. I never want to lodge in his bosom, and I give notice now that I respectfully but firmly decline the favor. If I have to get into anybody's bosom, I much prefer Sarah's or Hagar's, or one of that kind. No Abraham's bosom for me if you please. I prefer not to herd with the crowd that is supposed to congregate there.

In this instance of King Abimelech, Abraham managed again to make it pay. For the indignity that the king thought to do unto Sarah, Abraham took from the king sheep, oxen, men-servants, and women-servants; and he went away richer still than he came. I count such, ill-gotten gains.

216. I do not think it was meritorious conduct in Abraham to turn Hagar, his "bondswoman," and her child, his own son, too, Ishmael, out into the wilderness to perish. This was after Sarah, at the age of ninety years, and when Abraham was one hundred years of age, had given birth to Isaac and she became jealous of Ishmael and his mother, Hagar, and ordered that they should be sent forth into the wilderness to perish with hunger and thirst. It was a cruel piece of business to send a poor woman and child out in that way, and it does not make it any nobler or more humane to charge it upon God. Any being or person who could authorize such an unfeeling measure must needs be hard-hearted. It appears that Hagar had been a faithful concubine to Abraham, and had borne him a son who, it was also promised, should become the father of a numerous race of people. I cannot envy the disposition that any person must have to turn out such a mother and such a child to rove in the dreary wilderness and die of destitution. It seems that a miracle had to be performed to save the child's life, which story needs confirmation.

217. I do not believe that Abraham acted the fatherly or the honorable part when he made up his mind to put to death his little son, Isaac, the pet boy of his old age, the child that Sarah miraculously bore him after she had got to be a hundred years old, and long after it had ceased to be "with her after the manner of women," the boy, too, from whom was to spring the most remarkable people ever known upon the earth, the special recipients of God's favor and partiality. This was the little bright-eyed boy that the old Patriarch deliberately set about to murder with a big knife, and then roast on a green-wood fire, and all to please his God.

The old man must have been crazy. It is the most charitable view that can be taken of his conduct. He must have lost not only his senses, but all natural, parental instincts, all human incentives, and all the finer feelings of a man. Just think of it, a venerable man, over a hundred years old, with a sprightly, hopeful son, in whom all his hopes and all his pride were centered, that should deliberately go about piling up wood to make a hot fire to burn that little fellow to ashes after cutting his throat with a butcher-knife. Why, the thing is perfectly horrible to contemplate. Who but a crazy old fool could decide to commit such a crime?

I know how it would be with me if I had a bright, active, affectionate little son, and any god, or any priest, any big mogul, or any Mumbo Jumbo, should come along and command me to slay that son and then burn him to a cinder in a big fire, and all to please him. I should immediately reply: "Look here, Mister God, or whatever your name is, I shall do nothing of the kind. I shall not murder nor burn my beloved child to please you or anybody else. You may put your own son to death, to get yourself into a good humor, as much as you please, but I shall do nothing of the sort. I love my little child too well to perform so base an act upon him. Nor would I serve any other little boy in that way; and I can not think you are a good being if you wish me to do such a base deed."

The little girl of whom I recently read showed better sense than Abraham did. When her mother told her the story of how the good old Patriarch was willing to put his own beloved son to death to show his faith and confidence in his God, she artlessly replied: "Why, Ma, I should rather give up some of my faith than to kill a nice little boy."

It is confidently hoped that the time will never come when the example of Abraham will be followed, or that the prediction which the Rev. Mr. Wells of northern Ohio made two or three years ago will be fulfilled, that "the time is coming and not far distant when parents will love God so intensely that they will freely put their own children to death to please God, or if their children hold heretical opinions." What a monster the God of the Rev. Wells must be, indeed!

It fails to make Abraham's murderous intention consistent or honorable to say that God was only trying him to see if he would be faithful and do as he was commanded. What a puerile, childish, insipid idea of God it must be to think for a moment that he would be under the necessity of resorting to such a miserable subterfuge to find out whether his man Abraham would be obedient or not. If he was really God, and knew all things, he would need to try no such experiment. He would know it without any absurd nonsense. If he did not know whether Abraham possessed the element of faithfulness, he did not know enough to be God; and if he did know, it was frivolous trifling on his part to cause Abraham to make all the preparations to slay and burn his little boy when he did not really intend to let him.

After this farce was all over, it appears that good old Sarah died at the very respectable age of one hundred and twenty-seven years, and her husband buried her in the cave of Machpelah, which he purchased for the express purpose. But the old Patriarch had not seen enough of the pleasures of this world, and after he had been a widower but a short time, and after he had got to be about one hundred and fifty years old, he went a-courting again and married a wife by the name of Keturah, who bore him six strapping boys. What a brave old Patriarch he was, to be sure! To his credit it can be said: there is no record of his slaying either of them as he would a calf, or of his trying to cremate them to please his God. At the good old age of one hundred and seventy-five years the Patriarch was gathered to his fathers, and he turned over the business of begetting sons and daughters to his offspring, and they seemed to have prosecuted it with commendable industry. He was buried in the Cave of Machpelah, with his favorite wife Sarah.

218. In bidding good-bye to Abraham I will state that I regard him as a myth. I do not believe that such a man ever existed. His was a character that was invented and fixed up more than a thousand years after the date at which he was said to have lived, the fabulous father of a wild nomadic semitic race, which for centuries were mere barbarians, with no literature and no history, and who dwelt in tents, having no cities nor organized society, who lived by herding, hunting and brigandage, as their brother Arab tribes have done for thousands of years since. As they evolved into a nation, and came to have a language and a status among the races and nations of the earth, they needs must have a history, an origin; and Abraham was invented to stand as father and founder of their race. That is my belief upon the subject. According to the teachings which philologists give us, Abraham as a real character has a slight claim upon our attention. They tell us that Brama and Abraham are alike corruptions of Abba Rama, or Abrama, and that Sarah is identical with Saravti, showing pretty conclusively that Abraham and Sarah were mythical characters, borrowed from a nation reaching much farther back into the early dawn of antiquity than the Hebrew race. Abram is a Chaldean compound, meaning the "father of the elevated," or "exalted father." Abraham is a compound of Chaldean and Arabic, signifying "father of a multitude." In Part V. in his work on the Pentateuch, Bishop Colenso makes the statement that Adonis was formerly identified with Abram, "high father," Adonis being the sun, personified.

Those who have given much study to what claims to be ancient Jewish history, and have traveled and explored in Palestine and Syria are decidedly of the opinion that there is vastly more of fiction and fable in the old stories than fact. There is no proof that any part of the old Jewish Scriptures now known were in existence, or were written even, at a period earlier than two hundred and fifty to five hundred years before the Christian era. The first claimed record, called the "Scriptures" or the "Law of the Lord," was pretended to have been found in the house of the Lord by a priest named Hilkiah. These manuscripts were made more or less use of by the priests, until the Babylonian captivity, during which they were burned. After the restoration, Ezra or Esdras, Nehemiah and seventy scribes got up a new history, new scriptures and a new word of God then made to order. It is contended again by other good authorities that a considerable proportion of the books of the Old Testament were written as late as the time of the Maccabees some two and a half centuries before the Christian era. It is left for each student of history and for each independent thinker to decide for himself how much God had to do with the writing of those old books and manuscripts, and whether there is anything in them superior to human talent, and that a man of ordinary ability could not write. Why is it necessary to ascribe to a god a production that is not above the average capacity of man?

It is not a little curious to note how much of our juvenile literature—our nursery tales and mythical legends, come down to us from the ancient Chaldeans. "Jack the Giant Killer," "Jack and his Bean Stalk," "The House that Jack Built," and many others of the bewitching stories which interested us in childhood are an inheritance from the Chaldean nation. The story of Creation, the story of the Flood, and many other of the Bible legends are of the same character, as the recent excavations and discoveries of George Smith and Rawlinson of the cuneiform inscriptions at Nineveh and other points have fully demonstrated. The Jews, during their seventy years' captivity in that country, had ample opportunities to become familiar with the Chaldean and Babylonian literature and all the old legends and traditions that had been in existence there for hundreds and perhaps thousands of years. And when they returned to their own country and essayed to get up a national history and sacred writings of their own, it was the easiest thing in the world to weave in the myths and legends they had learned in Babylon. Thus are we indebted to pagan Chaldaea for much that we have for hundreds of years revered with blind adoration as the word of God.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

"Is Atheism in Harmony with Phrenology?"

This question has been propounded to us by one of our patrons, and should have received earlier attention. We have but little space to discuss the question, and will let our remarks be brief.

We think Atheism, or the disbelief in the existence of an anthropomorphic God, is in harmony with all truth, hence with Phrenology, for we regard that as a truthful science.

The Universe, as we have said before, contains and comprehends all matter, all forces, and all existences. Whatever is, whether visible or invisible to our organs of sight, is directly connected with the material Universe and cannot be separated from it.

Phrenology is a science of the mind and its functional organization. The brain is the organ of the mind and consists of a series of small organs, each having its special duty to perform in the economy of life. The brain in connection with the digestive, the assimilatory, the circulatory, and the nervous functions of the body does the thinking, the same as the muscles do the lifting and walking, the eye the seeing, the ears the hearing, etc. The food which the stomach digests sustains all these functions; and hence the meat, bread and potatoes we eat, by action of the stomach, the digestive and the circulatory apparatus, are duly converted into thoughts or mind.

The measure of an individual's mind depends upon the size, activity and quality of his brain in connection with the temperaments, and the general physical organization. This is all in keeping with the laws of the Universe, precisely as much as the growth of a spear of grass or the leaf of a tree. One needs a supervising deity to watch it and direct it as much as the other. If a kernel of wheat can sprout and mature without the immediate attention of a personal God in human form, so can a man. We believe the Universe and its laws are sufficient for all existences and all results.

Volume IV. of Truth Seeker Tracts.

We have now in press, and soon will be ready for sending out to patrons, Volume IV. of THE TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS. It contains over 530 pages, or some thirty different Tracts, as follows: Christmas and Christianity, Bennett; The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah and the Virgin Mary, W. E. Coleman; Address on Paine's 189th Birthday, Bennett and others; Hereafter, or the Half-Way House, John Syphers; Christian Courtesy, Bennett; Revivalism Examined, Dr. A. G. Humphrey; Moody's Sermon on Hell, Rev. J. P. Hopps; Matter, Motion, Life and Mind, Bennett; Freethought Judged by its Fruits, B. F. Underwood; David, God's Peculiar Favorite, Mrs. E. D. Slenker; Logic of Prayer, Chas. Stephenson; Biblio-Mania, Otter Cordates; Our Ideas of God, B. F. Underwood; The Bible, is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter; Obtaining Pardon for Sins, Hudson Tuttle; The New Raven, Will Cooper; Jesus Christ, Bennett; Ichabod Crane Papers, P. M.—; Special Providences, W. S. Bell; Snakes, Mrs. E. D. Slenker; Do the Works of Creation Prove a Creator? Sciota; The Old and the New, Robt. G. Ingersoll; 140th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday; The Old Religion and the New, W. S. Bell; Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett; Evolution of Israel's God, A. L. Rawson; Decadence of Christianity, Caphro; The Unseen World, Prof. John Fiske; The Evolution Theory; Prof. T. H. Huxley's Three Chickering Hall Lectures.

These constitute a volume of value and interest which will compare very favorably with the three preceding volumes. The series are excellent and very low-priced Liberal reading matter. Probably nothing has been presented to the Liberal public so reasonable in price and which has given better satisfaction. THE TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS have become a popular institution, and they have exercised a marked influence as "eye-openers" and "proselyters" in various parts of the country. Bound in volumes, they are very convenient for preservation and reference, as well as general reading. They are bound in paper covers and in cloth. In paper the price is 60 cents per volume, or $2 for the four volumes. In cloth, $1 per volume, $3 for the four volumes, postage included. 2,100 pages for $2. Where can cheaper reading matter be found? Every Liberal in the country ought to have a set of THE TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS. Those who have had the first three volumes will of course want the fourth. Now is the time to send in the orders.

B. F. UNDERWOOD will speak at Bourbon, Ind., March 30 and 31, and April 1; at Hanna, Ind., April 2 and 3; at Hudson, Mich., April 5 and 6; at La Rue, Ohio, April 9, 10, 11; at Toronto, Ont., April 14 and 15.

ATTENTION is called to the able review of Lord Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief" from the New York Sun of the 1st inst., which appears on the following page.

We commence in this number to lay before our readers in serial form "The Career of Religious Ideas," by Hudson Tuttle, revised by the author. We feel sure our readers will appreciate the clear, forcible, concise, outspoken and finished style that Mr. Tuttle uses. We hope none among our readers will neglect to pay especial attention to "The Career of Religious Ideas."

To give place to this valuable series of articles we will have to suspend for a while, "Haeckel on Evolution," but this will be resumed again as soon as we can find room.

We again ask contributors to be patient. We would be glad to give place to all who favor us with communications, but it is utterly impossible for us to do so. We shall continue to do the best we can in this respect, and we don't know how we can improve much upon this.

THE STANDARD SILVER PLATING COMPANY.—On our advertising page we again give their advertisement. Their prices are so low and their bargains so tempting that many friends have written us to know whether the company is reliable and their goods of the quality advertised. On account of such enquiries we visited their place of business and examined their ware. So far as we are able to judge their plated goods are of good quality, and the persons we saw seemed to be fair, straightforward business men. It is our belief that those who send orders to them will be fairly dealt with and that the stipulations of their advertisement will be fully carried out and that buyers will receive the full worth of their money. They assured us the goods they advertise are strictly triple-plated ware on nickel body. They warrant them to wear at least two years in constant use before the plating will become defective.

We take this occasion to say that we do not endorse every advertisement that appears in our columns. We frequently take advertisements in the way of business for one or more insertions without knowing anything about the goods or wares advertised, nor have we time to inform ourselves. Our readers must be their own judges. A few months ago a land advertisement appeared in our columns which we were sorry to afterwards learn was "bogus," and that some of our patrons had been swindled to some extent by it. We had no means of knowing anything about its character and expected it would stand upon its own merits. When we recommend any party advertising, our friends may understand that we endorse the same, but when nothing is said by us we hope our endorsement will not be inferred. We dispose of some space in our advertising columns to help pay the expenses of the paper and it must not be expected we can look up and approve every article advertised.

Lord Amberley's Work.

The following able review appeared in the N. Y. Sun of April 1, 1877:

AN ENGLISH NOBLEMAN'S SKEPTICISM.

About a year ago, Viscount Amberley, the eldest son of Earl Russell, died at the early age of thirty-three, leaving in course of publication a work entitled "An Analysis of Religious Belief." Efforts were made by his family to suppress the book, because of its skeptical character, but they were unsuccessful, and after duly appearing in England, it has been reprinted here (D. M. Bennett). It forms an octavo volume of more than seven hundred pages, and apart from the high social standing of its author, has merits of its own deserving of consideration.

The task which Lord Amberley set himself was nothing less than to examine the religions of the world, to describe their origin and characteristics, and from these to deduce the truth common to them all and constituting the bond of unity between them. The preparatory labor involved in such an undertaking is evidently immense, and the dedication of the book pays a touching tribute of thanks for aid in performing it to the wife of the author, who, like him, died before the full completion of their joint work. A prefatory note gives the titles of eighty-seven publications in English, German, and French, which are most frequently referred to, and there are, besides, many others mentioned but once or twice. The facts derived from these sources, with the author's comments upon them, fill the first six hundred pages of the volume. They form, indeed, a small cyclopædia of religious creeds and practices, and bring within a short compass a mass of information valuable in itself to the lover of knowledge. The remaining pages only are occupied with the author's conclusions, and give his own personal views of the subject.

In arranging his preliminary matter, Lord Amberley assumes that the underlying principle of religion is "the desire felt by the human race in general to establish a relationship between itself and those superhuman or supernatural powers, upon whose will it supposes the course of nature and the well-being of men to be dependent." This desire, he says, gives rise to the employment of means, first, of conveying information upward from the worshippers to their deities, and, second, of conveying it downward from those deities to their worshippers. Under the first head he classes not merely prayer, sacrifices, and ceremonial worship, but the consecration of places, such as shrines and temples; objects, like idols and votive offerings; persons—that is, ascetics and monks; and mediators or priests, who are regarded as official mouthpieces of the god they serve. In the second division he includes holy events—that is, dreams, omens, and miracles; holy places, of which the ancient oracles are a specimen; holy objects, such as relics; holy persons, or priests and others (also embraced in the first class); and finally, holy books. After a brief but comprehensive account of the religious ceremonies of all nations, he takes up and discusses in order the founders of the various great religions of the world: Confucius, Lao-tse, Gautama Buddha, Zoroaster, Mohammed, and Jesus Christ—and then gives an analysis of the chief books revered as holy by their followers, namely, the Thirteen King of the Chinese, the Vedas, the Tripitaka, the Zend-Avesta, the Koran, and the Old and New Testaments. The views he represents are those of the extreme rationalistic school. The points of resemblance between the character and deeds of Jesus Christ and those attributed to the other personages grouped with him are brought into prominence, and so are the leading features common to the Bible and the sacred writings of other religions. The real Jesus Christ is assumed to have been the son of Joseph, and to have perished on the cross, while upon him has been built up a mythical Jesus, who, in the view of our author, never existed save in imagination. All the usual infidel objections against the Old and New Testaments are likewise marshalled anew, and it is but fair to acknowledge, candidly and temperately. An occasional phrase, however, reveals a feeling of contemptuous bitterness for some of the saints of the Biblical history, and jars upon the mind.

The main interest of the book, it will readily be seen, centers in the short concluding portions, in which, as we have said, the author expresses his own opinions. If, as he undertakes to show, all religions have a common origin, and are alike unworthy of adoption by intelligent thinkers, and if all holy books are alike of human composition and marked by human imperfection, is or is not the essence of religion itself a delusion, resting upon no solid basis, and destined to disappear before the advance of science? Lord Amberley considers this question at length, and, after his fashion, answers it in the negative. His argument is this: There are three fundamental postulates involved in the religious idea: that of a hyperphysical power in the universe, that of a hyperphysical entity in man, and that of a relation between the two. The universal adoption of the first postulate by all peoples, nations, and kindreds is a proof that it embodies a truth which satisfies a permanent need of the mind. As men always have been, so they always will be, irresistibly impelled to conceive of an unknown power hidden behind sensible phenomena, and to clothe this power with the attributes of deity, and thus religion will always exist in some form or other. Science never has and probably never can dispense with the assumption of a permanent force dwelling in matter and giving it quality, and hence science cannot destroy the idea of God. Equally ineffaceable is the contrast between mind and matter, or the second of the three postulates of religion. "Between that which thinks, perceives, and reasons, on the one hand, and that which is felt, thought about, and reasoned, there is no community of nature. The distinction between these two, though it need not be ultimate in the order of things, is absolutely ultimate in the order of thought. In their own undiscoverable nature these two manifestations may be one; in their relation to us they are forever two." In like manner the third postulate, that of a relationship between the unknown power called God, on the one side, and the human soul, on the other, is proved by its universal acceptance. If it were not true it could never have been invented, since nothing in nature suggests it. There are no analogies from which it may be inferred. "It is one of those primary constituents of our nature, which are incapable of proof because they are themselves the foundations on which proof must be erected." Thus, while the various forms of religion are unessential and temporary, its uniform substance is essential and permanent.

But, although conceding the reality of the underlying substance of religion, Lord Amberley is none the less decided in his rejection of all the forms in which it has hitherto been embodied. Science, he says, shows the imperfection of all the concrete expressions which have been found for the Unknowable. It proves that we cannot think of the Unknowable as entering, in any peculiar sense, into special objects in nature, dwelling in special places or speaking through special channels. And he continues:

"Thus, while scientific inquiry tends to diminish the intensity of religious ideas, it tends to widen their extension. They do not any longer cling to partial symbols. They do not attach themselves with the same fervor to individual embodiments. But, in becoming more abstract, they become also more pervading. Religion is found everywhere and in everything. All nature is the utterance of the idea. And as it gains in extension, while losing in intensity its reference to the external world, it goes through a similar process in relation to human life. No longer a force seizing on given moments of our existence, at one time inspiring devotional observances, at the next forgotten in the pleasures or the business of the day; at one time filling men with the zeal of martyrs or crusaders, at another leaving them to the unrestrained indulgence of gross injustice or revolting cruelty, it becomes a calm, all-pervading sentiment, shown (if it be shown at all) in the general beauty and spirituality of the character, not in the stated exercises of a rigorous piety, or in the passionate outbursts of an enthusiastic fervor."

To the objection that so abstract and cold a faith as this can afford no satisfaction to the moral sentiments, the reply is that this is a necessary loss, and one no greater than that which the early Christian suffered when he gave up the Greek mythology with its gods and goddesses, or which the Protestant has to endure by his rejection of the worship of the Virgin Mary, and of prayer to the saints:

"It is, in fact, the very condition of progress that, as we advance in knowledge and in culture, we give up something on the road. But it is also a condition that we do not feel the need of that which we have lost. Not only as we become men do we put away childish things, but we can no longer realize in thought the enjoyment which those childish things brought with them. Other interests, new occupations, deeper affections take the place of the interests, the occupations, and the affections of our early years. So, too, should it be in religion. Men have dwelt on the love of God because they could not satisfy the craving of nature for the love of their fellow-men. They have looked forward to eternal happiness in a future life because they could not find temporary happiness in this. It is these reflections which point out the way in which the void left by the removal of the religious affections should hereafter be supplied. The effort of those who cannot turn for consolation to a friend in heaven, should be to strengthen the bonds of friendship on earth, to widen the range of human sympathy and to increase its depth. We should seek that love in one another which we have hitherto been required to seek in God."

Even those who cannot accept this opinion as true, will admit the spirit which animates it, and the honesty which impelled its utterance. The youthful author had everything to lose and nothing to gain by renouncing the faith of his childhood, and setting himself against the social as well as the religious prejudices of his class. For, in England, to be unorthodox is to be both unfashionable and heretical. Even a dissenter is looked upon with dislike, and practically excluded from good society; much more an infidel. That a young man like Lord Amberley, therefore, should have written and commenced the publication of this book, and thus incurred the risk of outlawry from the circle in which he was born, proves him to have been one of those heroic inquirers who, in all ages of the world, have preferred to meander objects what they conceived to be the truth, and have not been deterred by fear of the consequences from speaking their convictions.

Evans' Anniversary.

The third Anniversary meeting in commemoration of Geo. H. Evans, was held at the residence of Dr. C. S. Weeks, 107 East 26th street, Sunday afternoon, the 25th inst. The audience was chiefly composed of the surviving associates of Evans in the Land Reform movement in this country. Most of those who participated in the exercise were aged agitators and co-laborers with Evans in the cause connected with his name. J. K. Ingalls was called to the chair and S. H. Preston was appointed secretary. Able and appropriate addresses were made by J. K. Ingalls, John Cummerford, Lewis Masquerier, Wm. Rowe, Thomas Davis, Col. H. Beener, Dr. Shepard, Dr. Weeks, Mrs. R. W. S. Briggs, and a eulogy of Evans and brief review of the Land Reform was read by S. H. Preston. Col. Beener read an enthusiastic and encouraging letter from A. H. Wood of Lunenburg, Mass. Propositions for effecting a practical and permanent working organization were discussed, and a committee was chosen to select a proper place for regular meetings. It was unanimously resolved to carry on the movement by tracts and missionary work. All the proceedings were pervaded by an earnestness and a self-sacrificing spirit such as characterize real reformers. Nearly all the speakers gave interesting incidents and reminiscences of their intimate association with the man to whose memory they had met to pay their tribute of respect. It is proposed to publish the minutes of the meeting in pamphlet form for circulation.

"Lincoln Memorial Hall."

FREE LIBRARY AND ASTRONOMICAL ASSOCIATION, JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

Despite the slippery condition of the pavement and the inclement state of the weather, a goodly number of earnest, thoughtful ladies and gentlemen assembled at Allen's Opera House Tuesday night to take measures toward erecting a Spiritual Hall, in Jamestown, N. Y., to be known as "Lincoln Memorial Hall, Free Library and Astronomical Association."

Mr. E. Mitchell was called to the Chair, and the following officers were appointed:

President—E. Mitchell.
Treasurer—Mr. O. G. Chase.
Building Committee—Messrs. E. B. Jones and E. Mitchell; with power to select others.

Constitutional Committee—Messrs. E. R. Bootey, H. Smith, 2nd, and H. W. Watson, with power to select others.

Corresponding Secretary—A. C. Douthitt.
The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

1st. Resolved, That inasmuch as we desire to see this Institution speedily furnished, therefore we solicit aid from liberal and scientific lecturers; and while this hall will be free, in every pure and lawful sense of the word, to said lecturers, we do offer special monetary privileges whenever (Sunday's excepted) they may desire a hearing therein.

2d. Resolved, That the Treasurer of this Association be required to deposit a bond, endorsed by a responsible person, in some bank in Jamestown, as security for all funds placed at his disposal.

3d. Resolved, That the Constitutional Committee shall frame a Constitution in accordance with the principles of perfect freedom, and that said instrument shall be presented for ratification at the next meeting of this Association, and that a two-third ballot will be required to amend or ratify.

4th. Resolved, That this Hall shall be kept open every evening during the week, either for Religious worship, Scientific instruction, free reading, free discussion, Musical instruction, or any pure amusement.

5th. Resolved, That while willing that this Institution, designed for free scientific instruction and religious worship, shall be taxed, we, members of Lincoln Memorial Hall, Free Library and Astronomical Association, do pray the Legislative bodies of this land that all church property in these United States shall be made to share the burden of taxation.

Many earnest words were spoken by those present, and the meeting will not soon be forgotten by the disciples of Reason. Subscription papers were opened and, although they were not circulated, the sum of seven hundred dollars was voluntarily subscribed, and a site donated whereon to construct the building. It is intended that this hall shall have a seating capacity for 2,000, a telescope and all scientific instruments wherewith to study the Infinite.

The Investigator, Index, and Religio-Philosophical Journal, please copy and send bill to this office.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER—Dear Sir: At a business meeting of the Toronto Liberal Association, the following resolution was passed, moved by Mr. J. T. Hawke, seconded by Mr. Green:

That a cordial and hearty vote of thanks be conveyed to the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER for his kindness in publishing the circular calling a convention of Freethinkers from all parts of the Dominion of Canada and the United States to meet in Toronto in the Albert Hall on Saturday, April 14, 1877, at 10 A.M.

Carried unanimously.
All Liberals who can make it convenient to attend this convention at Toronto on the 14th will do well to do so.

Acknowledgment.

We have received an article from John A. Lant acknowledging the kindness of friends through THE TRUTH SEEKER in aid of his family during his imprisonment, too late for this issue. We have room for this much this week. He says: "I hope to be off the stocks soon. Meantime I am making all human effort to get my tools together for work. I will resume my publication at an early day. I want to show the people just how they are 'protected' by law. I will place the Judge's bench side by side with the auction block of the slave, just where it belongs in 1877. I shall not have a trying task to put the 'humanity' and 'civilization' of the century in which we live to shame."

JOHN A. LANT,
"Editor Sun and Investigator."

626 Sixth Ave., N. Y.

Friendly Correspondence.

A. B. BRADFORD, Enon Valley, Pa., writes: I have received Lord Amberley's book, and have read it with deep interest. I hope a second edition will soon be called for.

ISRAEL BETZ, Oakville, Pa., writes: Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief" has arrived. I congratulate you on your success in this direction. I will speak more in detail of it after I have had time to peruse it.

DR. J. CREIGHTON, Dunleith, Ill., writes: The copy of Amberley's book you sent me has arrived. It is handsomely gotten up and from the cursory glance I have given it I am sure I shall value it highly. It is certainly furnished at a very moderate price.

JAMES S. BEDEL, Hudson, Mich., writes: I have been perusing the copy of Lord Amberley's book which you sent me, and must say that I am very much pleased with it. It is one of the finest expositions of "the mythical Christ" I have ever read. I trust every Liberal in the land will have a copy who can.

DANIEL WARD, Chief Engineer on Steamer Shinkang, Shanghai, China, writes: Enclosed I send you in American Postal stamps $9.00 for which please continue your paper to me another year and also send me a copy of the "World's Sages" in Morocco. What is left over you can keep for the good of the cause. Your honest writings please me very much and I wish great success to the cause you advocate.

W. N. BENNETT, Elgin, Iowa, writes: With pleasure I acknowledge the receipt of Viscount Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief." It is even more than I expected. I find it a Library within itself. It seems to me it ought to be in the library of every Liberal in the country. I believe it will prove elevating and instructive to every person who will peruse its pages. Money can hardly be invested better than in the purchase of such a work as this. I cordially recommend it to all Liberals throughout the country. The copies of "John's Way" you sent me went off like hot cakes. The story teaches a moral that is not soon forgotten and is well appreciated.

CHRIS. BROWN, Burlington, Kansas, writes: Bro. Bennett, you deserve the thanks of the Liberal public for the labor you have performed in bringing out Lord Amberley's great work, "The Analysis of Religious Belief." You have consumed but a short time in getting it up and it is certainly a very creditable piece of work. I am much pleased with the copy I have received and hereby tender you my warmest thanks for placing it before the American public. My wife and myself have both looked it over and we pronounce it a most excellent work. We cannot help wishing that every family in the land had a copy of it, for it is a work calculated to do a great deal of good.

A CORRESPONDENT in Indianapolis sends us the following: Elder W. F. Black, who has been pastor of Central Christian church in this city for several years past was caught "nest hiding" with one of the fair lambs of his flock a few weeks ago. The Church appointed a commission to investigate, and after going through their regular white-washing formula, they sat the Rev. Gruteman (?) up before the public to dry. But there were a few prominent members in the Church who had enough faith in science and plain facts to make them a little skeptical on the subject of making Black white. The question was discussed rather freely one evening in the church, and not a few of the "dear sisters" and sons of the brothers grew rather wrathful. One of the bon ton sisters vowed that she "would fight for Bro. Black until hell froze over, and then give them a tussle on the ice."

E. S. BECKLEY, Toledo, Iowa, writes: The debate between B. F. Underwood, and the Rev. Clark Braden, Abingdon, Ill., commenced on the 5th of March, and continued till Saturday 10th. Great interest was manifested throughout the whole debate. On Sunday Mr. Braden lectured twice and Mr. Underwood in the evening. I think there were nearly seven hundred people in attendance. Several of the churches were closed so the people could hear the "Champion Infidel" deliver one of the grandest lectures ever delivered in the State. The debate was perfectly satisfactory to the Liberals and harmonious. Mr. Braden is a fine speaker and is considered the champion debater in his denomination. It was a grand intellectual contest. This was their seventh debate. I heard they had a four days debate at Norway in Linn Co., since they left here. Liberalism is on the increase here, and the truth begins to make them free.

GEO WEIDEL, Miamisburg, Ohio, writes: I received your tracts and papers yesterday and am glad you were so prompt in sending them. They came just in time for me to show them to a very religious hypocrite. There was a friend brought them from the office to my shop. He laid them down on the vice-bench, and this religious friend of mine picked one up and began to read it. I looked around from my work and the first thing I saw was two eyes about as large as two full moons. The first thing he said was, "Where did you get those papers?" I told him where I got them and asked him if he didn't want to subscribe for it. He said I had better not, I asked his reason, and he said they hurt the church. I told him that's just what I wanted it to do. "What," says he, "don't you believe the Bible?" "Bible, h—l," says I; "I don't believe in spooks or witchcraft, hunting for water with a forked stick or anything else of that kind." Then he began to get mad; he swelled, frothed at the mouth, and went on at a fearful rate. He asked me what I thought God Almighty would think of me when I came face to face with him. I told him I thought he would deal with me right if there was a God. "My God," says he, "don't you believe in a God?" I told him I didn't take much stock in him. "Well," says he, "you are certainly lost." I told him I supposed so. We had a long talk after he had cooled off, and I showed him all the tracts—your "Prayer to the Devil" included. Mr. Bennett you may consider me one of your life-long subscribers. I will send you the money enclosed in this envelope. You don't say how to send money, but I will run the risk myself. I will try my level best to get more subscribers for you; I think I can get several in this neighborhood. Mr. Bennett, please answer these questions if it's not too much trouble: Where did Mary the mother of Jesus die, if she died at all? How old was Samson when he died? What is the reason so many Christians are notorious liars?

REPLY.—The three questions can be easily answered but perhaps not fully to our friend's satisfaction. 1st. We do not know where the mother of Jesus died. All that is known of her and her son is contained in the four narratives attributed to Matthew, Mark, Luke, John. Neither of them tell where she died, nor whether she died at all. If she ever lived she undoubtedly died, and somewhere in Palestine. 2d. We are also unable to give the age of Samson at his death. According to the reckoners of Bible chronology he was between forty and fifty when he pulled the temple down. Samson however is a myth. He was the Hebrew Hercules. If our friend can ascertain the precise age at time of death of Jack the Giant Killer, Sinbad the Sailor, Baron Munchausen, and Robinson Crusoe, and will take the average of their ages, and conclude that Samson's was about the same, it will be near enough for all practical purposes and as near as he can arrive at it by any other process. 3d. As to the lying proclivities of Christians, while it must be admitted they are very considerable, we do not know that they greatly transcend all other men in this particular. Lying is a weakness or fault that is pretty widely spread over the world. If Christians are really worse than others in this direction, it possibly arises from the ease with which they expect to obtain pardon for their faults and evil practices, and possibly in part from the false character of their entire institution, every rite, sacrament, and dogma of which is borrowed or stolen from older pagan systems.—Ed. T. S.

Special Notices.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygeian Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

SPERMATORRHOEA.—Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this life-wasting disease. It is an external application, and has made 1000 permanent cures. Charges moderate. Address with stamp, Vineland, New Jersey. t12

WANTED—AN EXPERIENCED NURSE and house-keeper with approved morals, active, intelligent, and of sufficient age to give character to a Hygienic Institute. Would prefer a lady wishing treatment and board for impaired health, with a view to the position after it is restored. Address J. S. Lyons, M. D., Springfield, Mo.

A DAILY-SERVICEABLE NOVELTY—A PERFECT VADE MECUM.

Duplex Gusset-End Wallet.

(Size, closed, 3½x9 inches.)

To compactly hold bills, papers, etc., usually carried about the person; for reliable use at Store Office and Home; with valuable Tables, Statistics, Calendar, Measuring Gauges, etc., upon it. Contents cannot work out. NEEDED by every Professional and Business Man and Woman in the country. Satisfaction guaranteed to all who will send 25 cents for a package.

W. N. CLAPP,

8 Oakland Ave., Jersey City, N. J.

Agents will do well to address, enclosing as above. 3t4

COPY YOUR LETTERS

Excelsior Copying Book,
Made of Chemical Paper.

Quickly copies any writing WITHOUT Water, PRESS, or BRUSH, used at home, library or office. For Ladies wishing to retain copies of letters, every business man, clergyman, correspondent, traveler it is invaluable—sells at sight. Send $3.00 and we will send a 300 page Book, letter size, BY MAIL paid to any address. We refer to any Commercial Agency, and stamp for Agents' Circular. EXCELSIOR MFG. CO., 110 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ills. 5000 AGENTS wanted. 6t14

WINTER'S

Wonderful Hair Restorer

is now off red to the people in the form of a recipe, sent post-paid to any address for $1.00. It is made of simple ingredients. No sulphur. No sugar of lead, nor any other poisonous substance. Restores faded, dry, harsh, and falling hair to softness and natural color.

Restores hair to the prematurely bald-headed where all other hair restoratives have failed. Removes all unpleasant irritation, itching, and scaly dryness.

Three Reasons why every one who has lost or is losing their hair should buy this valuable HAIR RESTORATIVE RECIPE.

Firstly, it is the best and most successful hair restorative ever discovered.

Second, it contains no poisonous substances.

Third, Every purchaser of this Wonderful Hair Restorative Recipe can make his own remedy at trifling cost.

Address J. C. WINTERS, Circleville, Piquette Co., Ohio. 3m06

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319 6th Ave., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters P. O. Box 4829 New York City. 1y1

The Resurrection of Jesus.

A new Lecture by W. S. BELL, of New Bedford, Mass., the able Libera Lecturer. It is an excellent Essay. It costs but ten cents, mailed to any address. Send for a copy. Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., New York.

DR. E. B. FOOTE'S PLAIN HOME TALK. A most valuable work on health and disease, with the most rational modes of treatment. It contains over 900 pages and 300 illustrations. As a work on Hygiene, it has hardly an equal. Price, with a beautiful chromo, $3.25.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Ouzt & terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1y0

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3.00; Leather, $4.00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4.50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,
141 Eighth St., New York.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"

In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

SCOTTISH

WESTERN LOAN CO., OF LEROY, MINN.

Invest Money in first mortgages on improved farms in Iowa and Minnesota. Interest nine percent annually in advance. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. Send for circulars to G. L. HENDERSON, President, 141 Eighth Street, New York. 1y16

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B. F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First, "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second, "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y50

KIDDER'S

SECRETS OF BEE-KEEPING.

One of the most reliable Bee-Books now in use. It touches on over a hundred points pertaining to Bee-Keeping. It is a guide to the Bee-keeper in every department of Bee management. It is gotten up in condensed form, and contains as much matter as any two-dollar book, and yet we propose to sell it at a much less price. Bound, 75 cts.; Paper cover, 50 cts.

Postage free. Address, D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

THE

Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-Smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

Eating for Strength.

A NEW HEALTH COOKERY BOOK.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Which should be in the hands of every person who would eat to retain and regain health, strength and beauty. It contains, besides the science of eating and one hundred answers to questions which most people are anxious to know, nearly one hundred pages devoted to the best healthful recipes for foods and drinks, how to feed one's self, feeble babes and delicate children so as to get the best bodily development. Mothers who do not nurse their children will find full directions for feeding them, and so will mothers who have delicate children, and invalids who wish to know the best foods.

Price, $1, postage free.

For sale wholesale and retail by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS (Bound). Vols. I, II, and III, comprising nearly ninety tracts, including the Scientific Series, containing 500 pages each, or 1,500 in all. They embrace a variety of subjects, by different authors, and are very interesting reading. Each volume will contain a wood-cut portrait of the Publisher. Will be ready in January, 1876, and will be furnished at the extremely low price of 60 cents per volume, in paper, or $1.50 for the three volumes; $1 in cloth, or $2.50 for the three volumes.

Bankrupt Sale of Jewelry.

GREAT FAILURE OF THE MILTON GOLD JEWELRY COMPANY IN LONDON

Their Entire Stock Consigned to us to Raise Money as Soon as Possible.

Everybody has heard of MILTON GOLD JEWELRY, it having been sold in this market for the last ten years, and worn by the best and richest class of our population. Still it takes an expert to distinguish Milton Gold from Virginia Gold. In order to dispose of this large consignment in the speediest way, we have put up lots which we offer to the public for the tenth part of their value.

FIFTY-CENT LOT.

One pair elegant sleeve-buttons, retail price $1.00
One set spiral shirt-studs, retail price. 75
One beautiful scarf-pin, stone setting, retail price. 75
One elegant gent's watch chain, latest pattern, retail price. 1.50
One collar-button, retail price. 50
One elegant wedding ring, very heavy, retail price. 2.00

Total. $6.50

Remember that we will send you the above-named six articles, which we have retailed for $6.50, by mail, post paid, for fifty cents, 4 sample lots for $1.50, or 12 sample lots for $4.

ONE DOLLAR LOT.

One pair gent's sleeve buttons, stone setting. $1.20
One set elegant spiral studs to match same 1.05
One beautiful ladies' band engagement ring. 2.00
One gent's large seal ring. 2.00
One ladies' long neck chain. 2.75
One gent's heavy plate watch chain. 1.75
One gent's "Lake George" diamond stud. 1.00
One beautiful scarf-pin.72
One pair ladies' engraved sleeve-buttons. 1.00

Total. $13.50

TWO DOLLAR LOT.

One set gold front pin and ear-rings.
One ladies' long neck-chain.
One elegant locket for the above.
One ladies' "Pompadour" watch chain.
One pair stone sleeve-buttons.
One pair engraved sleeve-buttons.
One amethyst stone ring.
One gent's large seal ring.
One ladies' band engagement ring.
One set spiral shirt studs.
One gent's Lake George diamond stud.
One beautiful scarf-pin.

FIVE DOLLAR LOT.

One ladies' opera chain with slide and tassel.
One heavy ladies' neck-chain.
One beautiful locket for the above.
One ladies' Cameo pin and earrings.
One pair 2 elegant bracelets.
One pair amethyst sleeve buttons inlaid with pearls.
One pair onyx sleeve-buttons.
One set studs to match the above.
One fine gent's watch-chain with charm.
One amethyst ring inlaid with pearls.
One tonaz ring inlaid with pearls.
One ladies' heavy band ring.
One ladies' chemise button.
One gent's Parisian diamond pin.
One collar button.
One extra fine set studs.

The above figures are the prices these goods have been retailed at in our leading cities. We mention these figures to give you an idea of the goods.

A FINE SOLID SILVER WATCH FREE.

On receipt of $15 we will send by express, one dozen 50 ct. lots and one of each of the others; also one elegant Watch, Ladies' or Gents' size, guaranteed to be a good timekeeper. Such opportunity is offered but once in a lifetime.

We want our patrons and the public in general to understand that this is Milton Gold Jewelry and no common Plated Ware. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance or money refunded. Send money by P. O. order or registered letter.

Our Firm and Milton Gold Jewelry are endorsed by all the leading newspapers of the country. Goods sent C. O. D. if $5.00 is sent with the order, not otherwise. Address all orders to

RAILSTON JEWELRY CO.,

Importers of Watches and Jewelry,

LaSalle and Randolph Streets, Chicago, Illinois.

FOR NINETY DAYS

FROM THE DATE OF THIS ISSUE OF THIS PAPER

Elegant Table Silverware

Can be secured by all who receive a copy of this week's paper, on compliance with the following conditions:—The Standard Silverware Company, 9 & 11 Maiden Lane, New York City, manufacturers of Pure Coin-Standard Silver Plated Ware, will send to any one entitled to receive the same a Set of Double Extra-Plated Silver Spoons, and engrave on each spoon any desired Initial. You are required to cut out the following Silverware Coupon and send it to the above Company, with your name and address, as a guarantee that the order comes through this paper. You are also required to enclose with your order the nominal charge of 75 cents, to pay cost of engraving initials, packing, boxing, and express charges. The Spoons will be sent by express (or mail, if you have no express office) and delivered in your hands without further cost. As the 75 cents barely covers express and engraving charges, the Spoons will cost you nothing. These Spoons are guaranteed to be of the best material, and equal to the best Silver-Plated Ware made, as the following letter from the Standard Silverware Company will testify:

OFFICE STANDARD SILVERWARE COMPANY,
9 & 11 Maiden Lane, New York City.

To Whom It may Concern.—The Spoons sent out under this arrangement we guarantee are of best quality, first, heavily plated with pure nickel (the hardest white metal known), and a double-extra plate of pure Coin-Standard Silver added on top of the nickel, thus rendering them the very best Silver Plated Ware manufactured. In no case will they be sold at retail by us for less than $3.50 per set. Our lowest wholesale price is $65 per gross (twelve dozen). We will honor no order which does not contain the Silverware Coupon, and we will not honor the Coupon after ninety days from the date of this paper.

(Signed) STANDARD SILVERWARE CO.

SILVERWARE COUPON.

On receipt of this Coupon, together with 75 cts. to cover express or mailing, engraving and boxing charges, we hereby agree to send to any address a set of our Pure Coin-Standard double-extra plated and on each spoon engrave any desired initial. All charges are to be prepaid by the 75 cts. sent in, and the spoons will be delivered at destination free of any other charge.

SILVER SPOONS.

Good for ninety days from date of this paper, after which this Coupon is null and void.

(Signed) STANDARD SILVERWARE CO., 9 & 11 Maiden Lane, New York.

Should it be desired, any one of the following articles will be sent in lieu of the spoons, on payment of the following charges: Six solid steel knives, blade and handle one solid piece, best steel, double nickel and silver plated, $2; retail price, $3. Six forks, double nickel and silver plated, $2; retail price, $4.50. If all these goods are desired, enclose the total charges, which will be $6. for spoons, $2 for knives, and $3. for forks; total, $11.75, thus securing for $7.50 what would cost you $14 in any other way. Remember, under this arrangement each article, except knives, will be engraved with any initial desired without extra cost.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

By the terms of this contract this liberal arrangement holds good for only ninety days from the date of this paper, therefore it is to the interest of all who are entitled to its benefits to see to it that they are not deburred by reason of the expiration of the time specified. All letters ordering Silverware should be addressed direct to the STANDARD SILVERWARE CO., 9 & 11 Maiden Lane, New York. Letters containing subscriptions must be sent direct to the office of this paper.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine. 11

POSITIVELY

$50.00 WORTH OF INFORMATION

in form of a nice book of over 100 pages, well illustrated, sent post-paid for $1.00

BY A PRACTICAL CLOSE OBSERVER

How to keep the hens, and hen-roosts free from lice. How to feed to get an abundance of eggs, even in mid winter. How to manage setting hens, chickens, &c., and how to preserve eggs a great length of time. Best breeds of hens, &c. Enclose $1.00 with order.

E. D. BLAKEMAN, Circleville, Ohio.

Mr. Blakeman is a school-boy friend of ours. We know him well; he is entirely reliable, and the information he has to impart upon the poultry subject is valuable.—Ed. T. S.]

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CRAVEN.

Price, by mail, $1.00. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

INGERSOLL'S LECTURES (Cheap Edition) including "The Gods," "Arrangement of the Church, or Individuality," "Heracles and Hercules," "Thomas Paine," "Humboldt." Paper, 80 cents; cloth, 50 cents, we have also a splendid edition of the same at $1.25.

EVERY LIBERAL WHO, IN THESE TIMES of Revival and Religious Frenzy, wishes to disseminate convincing truth, should send for an assortment of TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS and TRUTH SEEKER LEAFLETS. They present sensible arguments which religious zealots cannot evade. Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you, $3 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 36

THE WORLD'S SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS. A library in a single volume; being the lives, the most important sayings and doctrines of two hundred and seventy-eight of the soundest and most original Thinkers the world has known. It will contain some 1,000 pages, crown octavo, with a steel-plate engraving of the author—D. M. BENNETT—and will be issued in July, 1876. Price, $3. Those wishing a copy, will please send in their names at once. Those who remit in advance are entitled to a premium.

THIRTY DISCUSSIONS, BIBLE STORIES, ESSAYS AND LECTURES. By D. M. BENNETT. A work of about 700 pages, with a wood-cut portrait of the author. A low-priced volume. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION: or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY. By R. T. TRALL, M.D. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. 25,000 copies of this work have been sold. Finely illustrated, and a very important work. Price, $2.

Gems of Thought.

ERROR of opinion may be safely tolerated where Reason is left free to combat it.

—Thomas Jefferson.

HE who begins with loving Christianity better than truth, will end by loving himself better than either.—Coleridge.

THE day of days—the great day of the feast of Life—is that in which the inward eye opens to the unity of all things and the omnipresence of law.—R. W. Emerson.

PHILOSOPHY, wisdom and liberty support each other. He who will not reason is a bigot, he who cannot is a fool, and he who dares not is a slave.—Sir W. Drummond.

WHOEVER is afraid of submitting any question, civil or religious, to the test of free discussion, seems to me to be more in love with his own opinion than with the truth.—Bishop Watson.

HOWEVER it be it seems to me.

'Tis only noble to be good.

Kind hearts are more than coronets.

And simple faith than Norman blood.

—Tennyson.

THE candid begin to surmise of late

That the Christian faith may be false, I find.

For our "Essays and Reviews" debate

Begins to tell on the public mind.

And Colenso's words have weight.—Browning.

ARTISTS are you all whom your own souls are given to mould into beauty? Happy ye will be if you labor through life and seek no recompense save the artist's recompense—the joy in his work—the work of perfecting himself—and that shall be your reward.—Felix Adler.

THE majority of the people are wrapped in the gray cocoon of superstition, and have no knowledge of the great world of thought and science surging and beating around them. Their minds are narrowed down to their own little domain, and they will not look beyond it.—Susan H. Wixon.

THE ideal life is to have clear thought, far and fine vision. It is to see the meaning and the true relation of all things. It is to be free, unprejudiced, unawed by custom. It is to be open to all light, and sincere in the reception and expression of it. It is to have an inward life forever tending to the outward. It is to have the outward forever made splendid by inward illuminations. It is to be independent, centered in ourselves, getting the grandest truths from ourselves, yet eagerly yearning for and recognizing the help of others.—Anon.

LEARN from your earliest days to endure your principles against the perils of ridicule; you can no more exercise your reason if you live in the constant dread of laughter, than you can enjoy your life if you are in a constant terror of death. If you think it right to differ from the times, and to make a point of morals, do it, however rustic, however antiquated, however pedantic it may appear, do it, not for insolence, but seriously and grandly—as a man who wore a soul of his own in his bosom, and did not wait till it was breathed into him by the breath of fashion.—Sidney Smith.

FIRST of all, let us maintain freedom of speech; let us encourage honest and fearless inquiry in all things. Let us recognize no higher standard than that of Reason, and dare to summon to its bar all books, customs, governments, institutions and laws, that we may prove them, and render our verdict accordingly. Whatever in this great universe is above our reason, with that we need have no controversy, nor should it give us any anxiety; whatever is contrary to our reason, that let us promptly reject, though a thousand books deemed sacred should declare it to be true—though ten thousand councils should affirm it to be right—though all nations should pronounce us to be guilty of a terrible heresy in rejecting it.—William Lloyd Garrison.

SLOWLY, beautifully, like the coming of the dawn, came the grand truth that the Universe is governed by law; that disease fastens itself on the good and the bad; that the tornado cannot be stopped by counting beads; that the rushing lava pauses not for benedictions; that the lightning for clasped and uplifted hands, nor the cruel waves of the sea for prayer; that paying tithes causes, rather than prevents famine; that pleasure is not sin; that happiness is the only good; that demons and gods exist only in the imagination; that faith is a lullaby sung to put the soul to sleep; that devotion is a bribe that fear offers to supposed power; that offering rewards in another world for obedience in this, is simply buying a soul on credit; that knowledge consists in ascertaining the laws of nature, and that wisdom is the science of happiness. Slowly, grandly, beautifully, these truths are dawning upon mankind.—Ingersoll.

WHAT tender, loving, cultured mind can read and take in all the horrid barbarities authorized and commanded by the savage and heartless God of an ignorant, brutal race of Jews and sanctioned by his equally savage and revengeful vicegerent, Moses the meek, that are recorded in that holy, blessed Book of books, and not shudder at the thoughts thereby evoked? Yet it is all divine, sacred, sublime, grand, and good; God's own word; and must be swallowed as law and gospel ere one can be called Christian and be deemed fit to enter the kingdom of heaven, where all is love, tenderness, peace, and happiness. Can evil produce good? Can a code so cruel, brutal, and ferocious, and inhuman create good, pure, and virtuous sentiments? We Infidels say, No! And therefore we refuse to acknowledge it as the emanation of any great, wise, or good mind, and condemn it as a "guide and rule of action."—Mrs. E. D. Stenker.

Odds and Ends.

"Pat, do you understand French?" "Yes; if it's shpoken in Irish."

THERE is room for 5,000,000 more farmers in Texas, and each one can have a farm with a race course on it.

MRS. JENKINS complained that the turkey she had eaten, didn't set well. "Probably," said Jenkins, "it wasn't a hen turkey."

"Do you want to buy a trunk, Mike?" "Arrah what for?" "To put your clothes in, of course." "Ah! an is it to go naked, I am?"

JOSH BILLINGS says he don't know what Jonah did when he was in the whale's society—"but if I had bin in his place I'd a rowed him to shore and then struck ile."

"Pat, give us a toast." "Bedad that I can, and here it is: 'That you may live to ate the hen that will scratch over your own grave.'"

IRISH EPIGRAPH.

Here I lies at my aise is,
With the tips of my toes turned up to the daises,
For a cough carried me off,
And then a coffin they carried me off in.

BOY with apples enters car—"Apples." Fashionable lady beckons to boy and asks: "Have you any fine specimen of the genus pomum?" Boy, "Who mum? pomum? no mum."

LUKE had it in the beginning, Paul had it at the end; girls have it, boys never have it; a square never has it, an angle has it in one spot, and a parallelogram has it three times. But there is no use making a fuss about it, it is simply the letter l.

A LADY at her toilet was making use of the powder, which ladies know so well how to use to beautify their complexion, when her husband remarked that she ought to have married a miller. "In that case, my dear," the lady in good humor replied, "I should have sacked you."

SHE came into an Eighth avenue car and as she made two or three efforts was able at last, with a frown of distress, to sit sideways. Old lady sitting next: "Anything the matter miss?" "No mam." "Oh yes," said the old lady, "bless, I reckon, I've had em myself; I know how it is."

MRS. SMITH calls to ask Mrs. Murphy if she will do a day's washing for her, and as she observes the baby playing near the swill pail, she exclaims, "Why, Mrs. Murphy, your baby is drinking that dirty water." Said Mrs. Murphy, "Oh, no matter sure, clean water never fattened a hog."

THE author of the phrase, "Invincible in Peace, Invisible in War," which has been ascribed to Ben Hill, was the late Captain George H. Derby, better known as "John Phoenix," who, while in San Francisco, at a public dinner of the State militia, gave as a toast: "The California Militia, Invincible in Peace, Invisible in War."

THEY were sitting together and he was ardently thinking what to say when finally he burst out in this manner: "In the land of noble achievements and undying glory—why is it that women do not come more to the front—and climb the ladder of fame?" "I suppose," said she, chewing her apron-string, "it's on account of their pullbacks."

AN EPIGRAPH ON JOHNNY'S TOMBSTONE.

When Johnny lived,
He lived to please us,
And when he died,
He went to Jesus.

A wag added:
But you can't most always sometimes tell;
Maybe Johnny went to hell.

DINAH and Sally went to Moody and Sankey's meetings. Sally got religion and gave vent to her ecstatic feelings in the following language: "O Lor, I'se so happy, if I had de wings of a June bug I'd fly right away to heben." Her more prudent sister says: "Why, Sally, don't you know if you had de wings of a June bug, an' undertuck to fly off, de woodpecker would fly after you, and catch you fore you go half way dar."

JOSH BILLINGS says, "Wimmen is the pertick-lest animals uv the creation." He says, "I know'd wun woman who was so clean and pertickler that she chased up stairs and down stairs after wun little cockroach till her legs were wore off clear up to her stomach."

HE says, "Yes, Newfoundland dogs are very sagacious animals. Their chief use is in saving children from drowning. In order to be able to keep a Newfoundland dog, you must first have stamps to buy beefsteak—next you must have a pond of water and a lot of children lying around loose."

A RECOMMENDATION.—Old Si was asked by one of our merchants:

"Si, do you know a darkey by the name of Davis?"

"Cisero Davis wid de red eye dat got burn'd in de powder 'sploshin'?"

"Yes, he's the man."

"Well, I knows him."

"Is he reliable?"

"Gin'ally, but hit 'pends moughtily on de bizness dat he's 'gaged in at de time!'"

"What business would he suit best in as a porter?"

"Wel, to tell yer de flat-footed onsophisticated trufe, sah, dar's one place whar dat nigger cou'd wuck an' be ez hones' ez de day—an' dar's az porter in er real 'state sto'! In dat case de o'ner 'ud be lieble fer ter fine de propupity allus jess whar he let 'hit."

The gentleman named Davis was not engaged.

—Atlanta Herald

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Ots.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	2
9.	The Story of the Flood.	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	5
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arrangement of Priestcraft.	5
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	5
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snodde. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Capigliostro. C. Sothoran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	1
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	2
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	2
39.	The True Saint. S. F. Putnam.	1
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	1
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Fishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	8
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	3
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	5
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	1
56.	Bible Contradictions.	8
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Buth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Stenker.	2
70.	Vigilant Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	2
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	10
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	3
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	5
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hoppe, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Stenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Gordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Stenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsborg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	5
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	2
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10

Truth Seeker Leaflets.

Sent, assorted, or as desired, post-paid, at 4 cents per dozen; 25 cents per hundred, or $2 per thousand.
Let them be distributed freely in every town village and neighborhood. Address,
D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall,
141 Eighth St., New York.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth	50
" " with Examination of Prophecies	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
An Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27 00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacollot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 60an d	1 00
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diagnosis.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. DeJuge.	2 00
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself. What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True. Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.	1 75
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols..	8 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
" Descent of Man. (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmltdt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright.	35 & 60
Evans' History of all Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Fuenbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense. D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hidden Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought. Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.	5
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Indides' Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johanson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	6 00
John's Way.	15
Kneelands Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lack's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Vile.	1 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology. 770 cuts.	3 40
" Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peck's All Around the World.	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	20
" Rights of Man.	50
" Theological Works.	2 00
" and Miscellaneous Works.	2 50
" Miscellaneous Writings, Centennial edition.	2 50
" Political Works. 2 Vols., 1 8vo.	5 00
" Complete Works. 3 Vols. 8vo.	8 00
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D..	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	60
Synagoga. Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature. D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Stenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.	2 00
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesu. 2 vols..	12 00
Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols., 8vo..	8 00
Sexual Physiology. Trail.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall (Erof. John) Entire Works.	2 00
The Christ of Paul.	75
The Cause against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers.	4 50
" $3.00, $4.00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions. Bible Stories, etc., 75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts. Vols. I, II, III, and IV. 60 cts. &	1 00
The Outcast. Winwood Reade.	30
Talks with My Patients. Mrs. Gleason. M.D..	1 50
Underwood. Marples Debate.	80 & 80
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE
& MORALS

FREE THOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 15. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY
BY D. M. BENNETT. }

New York, Saturday, April 14, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year.
NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

THREE-fourths of the applications for post-masterships come from unsettled clergymen.

THERE is said to be a special providence in the fall of a sparrow, but there isn't any in the fall of a man on a muddy crosswalk.

DR. BELLOWES says the infinite divisibility of matter is proved by the way small societies divide and subdivide until the pieces become invisible.

THERE are seventy-two communities or communistic societies in the United States, of almost as many varieties of thought and methods of association.

A LIST of clergymen who have fallen from grace within a year, in the United States, is published in the Jewish Times. The number of convictions for crimes is given at forty.

IT is calculated that a change of one degree Fahrenheit takes place in the temperature for every three hundred feet of vertical height, and for every sixty miles as we travel northward on a level.

THE Rev. Phillips Brooks of Boston, who is said to have received more worked slippers than any other man in the ministry, has now been conducting a prayer-meeting in a slipper factory. What could be more appropriate?

MR. TALMAGE prayed last Sunday that the Lord would put a hook into the noses of the Wall street bears, and drown them in the Hudson. Will somebody tell us whether there is the slightest danger of the Lord's acting upon this reverend request?

EUROPEAN scientists are said to have discovered that an illuminable gas can be extracted from a corpse. There are some millions of people in this country who would doubtless yield a large percentage of gas, and who could hardly be put to a better use.

WHEN the Pope heard that Bismarck had stepped down and out, he sat up on his elbow and said he felt better. "Yet," whispered his boss Cardinal, "he hasn't gone far yet!" Then the old Vicegerent sighed heavily and laid down to meditate upon the great strength of the power of evil.

GEO. FRANCIS TRAIN thinks language is going to be bulldozed. Words will be compressed, useless letters will be squeezed out of time, unnecessary syllables will be cut off; signs will be substituted for sentences; and for a man to have more than one name of one syllable will be a state prison offense.

HIRAM ARBUCKLE of East Montpelier, Vt., shot George Short twice, then went to the blacksmith shop of his brother-in-law, Baneroff, and shot him. Baneroff ran and Arbuckle pursued and shot him again, killing him; then Arbuckle went to his own house and shot himself. It is thought Short may recover.

A CLERGYMAN was preparing his discourse for Sunday, stopping occasionally to review what he had written and to erase that which he disapproved, when he was accosted by his little son, who numbered but five summers: "Father, does God tell you what to preach?" "Certainly, my child." "Then what makes you scratch it out?"

INSANITY.—It is an alarming state of things when we are assured that insanity in this country within the last ten years has greatly increased, and the cures performed largely decreased. Many more women go insane from religious excitement than men. It is from excessive joy that they have the love of Jesus, or excessive grief because they have not got it.

A CITY pastor and a penitentiary chaplain were comparing views as to the drawing near of the millennium. City pastor said, "I feel that the millennium is near at hand; the world is getting better; I see it in the increase of my congregation." Penitentiary chaplain responded, "Well, perhaps it is so; but I notice that my congregation, too, is on the increase." The two ministers agreed to drop the subject about the millennium.

DR. POTTER of Griffin, Ga., has a new motor which promises to lay Keely's entirely in the shade. With it, it is said, he can generate electricity in quantities heretofore unparalleled, and with this he proposes to decompose water into a vapor or gas many times more powerful than steam, which is to be used in propelling machinery. By the same motor he proposes to generate a burning gas which will make the illumination of streets and houses nearly as cheap as moonshine.

GOV. PILLSBURY of Minnesota, having great confidence in prayer as an anti-grasshopper remedy, has appointed Thursday the 26th as a day of special prayer, that the grasshoppers may be removed. Why certainly, if prayer will remove the pests let it be used by all means; it is the cheapest remedy that can be applied. It is to be hoped that the saints who pray will have faith enough to remove a mountain (of grasshoppers). If praying will remove the ills mankind groan under, why is there an annoying influence left still troubling the world?

THE story is told of a clergyman, who, after preaching an interesting sermon on the "Recognition of Friends in Heaven," was accosted by a hearer who said: "I liked that sermon, and I now wish you would preach another on the recognition of people in this world. I have been attending your church three years, and not five persons in the congregation have recognized me at all.

ALGER REVERSES A SCRIPTURAL PROVERB.—The Rev. Mr. Alger said Sunday in the Church of the Messiah: "The author of the book of Ecclesiastes was a defeated and morbid man, and it was his own experience and character that he put into the falsehood which he uttered when he said, 'The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong.'" Mr. Alger argued that in the experience of mankind the race is to the swift, and the battle is to the strong, the reverse being exceptional. "The law of things everywhere and forever is that the costliest prizes are won by the doughtiest champions."

ANOTHER SWIMMING LEANDER.—It is stated that under the ministrations of Peter Dwyer, the ignorant revivalist who has been holding forth some months in this city, that a Leander Scott—who was an infidel—has become a convert to Christianity. We have enquired of several Liberals who have lived in this city for many years if they knew Leander Scott, but we have not yet seen a man who ever knew him. In speaking of his experience he says he now finds God to be back of everything. He has faith and is happy. Whenever anything is dark to him he "plunges into the New Testament and swims for Jesus."

ONE of the knottiest of all questions has just been taken in hand for discussion by the Baptist ministers. They are going to try and find out whether the heathen to whom no gospel is preached go to heaven or to hell when they die. The solution of this question, in whatever way it may be decided, will be hailed with satisfaction by great numbers of good people, who are in doubt as to whether it is better to give money for missionary purposes or to withhold it. If the heathen can be just as well saved without missionaries as with them, the vast sums of money spent in missionary effort may be saved. On the other hand, if the millions of benighted foreign population are in danger of everlasting perdition, without the gospel, a great many ship loads of missionaries should be sent to various quarters of the earth.

ADLER ON JEWISH REFORM.—Prof. Adler lectured Sunday on "Reform in Judaism." He said "The pillars of the reform movement to-day are: The belief in the Monotheism of the prophets; and the Messianic mission of the Jewish people. The movement at present lacks magnetism and vitality. The old leaders are passing away, and their successors have not even scholarship. True, they have handsome temples and wealthy supporters, but outward pomp is often the sign of inward decay. [Applause.] Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob no longer arouse our enthusiasm, and as for the story of the Red Sea miracle, why even the children in the nursery have ceased to believe it. Look at the wealthy Jewish merchant of the reform school, sitting in his counting-house on Saturday discoursing of the sanctity of the Sabbath, which he refuses to change, forgetting the old saying of the rabbis that the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath. The people are tired of hearing the deeds of Moses and Joshua rehearsed from the pulpits, and demand the consideration of the live, practical questions of the time."

THE rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church in St. Louis gives "political readings" on Sunday afternoons, interspersed with selections by the choir. Bryant's "Thanatopsis" and Willis' "Leper" have both been delivered from this gentleman's pulpit. Severe criticism has been indulged in by some people who object to this sort of innovation, but Rector Berkeley thinks his course is not half so objectionable as that of the clergymen who intone the services and who have a troop of surpliced boys to do the singing and chanting. It is proper to add that Dr Berkeley is one of the finest elocutionists in Missouri.

CANADA has got a preacher who out-Talmages Talmage. His name is McDonough, and he preaches at Paris, on the Great Western railway. His latest sensation was a sermon on dancing, which is too bad to quote in a paper that circulates in the homes of cultivated Christian people. It was interrupted with cries of "Shame," "Put him out," and "You know how it is yourself," with commotion, twittering, cheers and laughter. He said, "I'll show you what dancing is. I looked through a window at a dance in this town the other evening, and I saw a young fool of a fellow approach a young lady, and I'll show you what followed." Here he tripped across the pulpit platform, and bowing politely to an imaginary young lady, said, in soft tones, "My dear Miss M—, can I have the pleasure of a dance with you?" Then he tripped back as if bearing a young lady on his arm, an exhibition which produced prolonged applause. It is gratifying to know that the Synod will consider whether the Rev. McDonough would not be more congenially employed in the circus than in the pulpit. At any rate the Presbyterian church does not propose to be compromised by his antics and vulgarity.—Exchange.

RELIGION AND ETHICS.—In a recent discourse by Prof. Adler at Standard Hall, he said: "We are living in the age of transition. The old forms are passing away and new ones are continually being called into existence. It is a period of struggles. New facts are constantly appearing. Science and knowledge are invading ground they formerly would not dare to venture upon. The churches recognize this, but argue that this state of affairs is only temporary and that after a little time will pass away. The anxiety, however, shown in this direction betrays the fears of the creeds. What has religion done for science? Religion is of the conscience; science does not harm it. Religion itself is all right; it is the irreligion of religion that is at fault. The appeal for freedom of thought is the aspiration of the democratic masses throughout the world to-day. Religion has arrayed itself against the intellectual progress of the age. It is laying its heavy hand on our intellectual institutions. Science will have proof at all hazards—religion pursues a narrow path; science forges ahead—religion lags behind in the march of progress. The extent of human suffering this winter in this city shows how little has been done to meet the great problem—the relief of our fellow men. Philanthropy, instead of being the luxury of the few, should be the business of the many. What has religion done in this regard? Tract and other kindred societies do a great deal of good in their way, but they do not feed hungry bodies, and heaven's reward in the future life is the rich promise they give to the suffering poor." The lecturer was convinced that religion does not lead to the highest ethics of our time; that we cannot be at peace unless we obey the moral law. The Ten Commandments needed no divine inspiration to add to their force. Morality is a part of our nature. The outer and inner world should harmonize. They do not, but they will in the end. The fundamental defect in the old Catholic movement in Europe is the want of men of souls imbued with love to preach the doctrine. There was plenty of brain, but no heart. The liberal movement in Italy is open to the same charge. One of the great social needs of the day is the help of the suffering masses. Our charities are only on the surface—they are not broad enough. Prevention of suffering, not the cure, should be the grand aim. A number of model tenement houses like those erected by Peabody in London, would do more to put down grog shops than all of the temperance societies. The question of all questions in sound reform is the moral question, and it is the province of ethics to solve this great problem.

Events of the Week.

THE Southern Hotel at St. Louis burned to the ground. Fifty lives lost.

Two small children of M. N. Houghton, Clinton, Mass., were drowned on the 10th.

EVERY family in Boston is to be visited by religious workers under the direction of Moody.

THE protocol on the Eastern question is virtually rejected. Turkey is indignant and defiant.

SIXTEEN children were burned to death in a school-house in the village of Ellingsbo, near London.

WE have had windy and cloudy weather several days the past week. Towards the close it grew pleasanter.

BISMARCK resigned his chancellorship, but the Emperor refused to accept it; but granted a long furlough in place.

FIFTEEN tons of iron fell from a roof in a mine near Highland Falls, N. Y., and crushed Henry Matthews instantly.

A RAILROAD bridge near Malvern, Ohio, gave way by which a train was thrown from the track, and two persons killed and several badly injured.

TWELVE bales of cotton while standing on a truck in this city on the 10th, suddenly burst into flames, and it was with difficulty the driver could save his horses and truck.

THE steamship Rusland, which was stranded near Long Branch two or three weeks ago broke in two in a late storm; while the French vessel Amerique has been safely gotten off.

THE Rev. Mr. Opdyke, pastor of the Bethel Methodist Church at Tottenville, N. Y., has been arrested on a charge of conspiracy. He has been working in an under-handed manner against several liquor dealers.

An event which has created great excitement in our community within the last week is the Burling Slip tragedy. A rich firm, John Jewett & Sons, dealers in white lead and oils, did not get along harmoniously. Several disagreements had taken place, and a withdrawal of one member of the firm was agreed upon. Orville D. Jewett was to receive some $200,000 for his interest. The transfer was to be consummated on Tuesday, the 5th. He and his two partners, G. W. Jewett, his uncle, and Joseph A. Dean, were in the business office. It is stated that loud words passed between them. Soon a terrible explosion occurred and several shots were heard. Those who rushed into the room found it filled with smoke, George W. Jewett dead or nearly so, Mr. Dean badly injured and trying to get out of the office, and Orville D. Jewett lying upon the floor shot in five places on his body and in a dying condition. He and his uncle were lying near together, and it is thought they had engaged in a conflict. The explosion was from a hand-grenade, but how it is not known. It was probably in the possession of the younger Jewett, but whether discharged purposely or by accident is a matter of debate. Two pistols, with empty chambers and blood upon them were found near the dead men. Their contents were in the body of Orville D. Jewett, but who discharged the pistols is undecided. Some insist that Jewett shot himself, while the medical men who have examined the direction the balls took, etc., pronounce this to have been impossible. Charles Taintor, book-keeper in the establishment, and son-in-law to the deceased uncle Geo. W. Jewett, one of the first to visit the room after the occurrence of the tragedy, has made different statements of the matter, one of which was that he saw O. D. Jewett shoot himself. This statement is decidedly discredited by many. There are those who sooner think he himself had a hand in the shooting. If the two Jewetts were in a life and death struggle, and the uncle called upon his son-in-law to come to his aid, he might have done so, and he may know just who fired those shots. Probably there is no person who had more interest in young Jewett's being put out of the way, as he was to have an interest in the firm upon the retirement of O. D. Jewett. It is said that the latter stated before he died that the whole affair was an accident. As we go to press the result of the coroner's inquest is not known. Hints are freely thrown out that the coroner has tangible reasons for suppressing the facts.

Career of Religious Ideas.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.—Copyrighted.

CHAPTER I.—CONTINUED.

On the Bible, as an absolute inspiration from God, the Christian Churches found their claims. As they discard reason, they have no right to use it in determining the character of this revelation. By their acknowledgment that man cannot gain a knowledge of truth by other methods, they are compelled to base their systems on its authority. Having thus planted themselves, they one and all arrogate dictatorship in religious matters. They claim the power of commendation and denunciation. Even the most liberal in their creeds and dogmatic formulae make this claim. They are right; all who disagree are wrong, and subjects for hell. Religion consists in belief in these peculiar tenets. The Catholic regards all Protestants as led astray by the Evil One, while the Protestant feels assured that the Catholic Church is the Scarlet Woman of Babylon. Both summarily condemn the Freethinker, the philosopher, and the scientist, as hopeless Infidels. Such is the force of education, that the arrogance of the Church has been in a measure acquiesced in, and a tacit admission of her right granted; but we ask how and when the Church received such power.

What is the Church? An aggregation of individuals for the object of religious instruction and propagation of religious ideas. The Christian Churches gather around the conception of Christ an incarnation of God. Their authority is the Bible. But the Bible nowhere even mentions a church in the modern sense. Jesus, so far from being a model of, was the antipodes of church spirit. He gathered a few fishermen around him, and taught wherever he found a willing mind to receive. He cast aside all ceremonies and rites. The observance of the Sabbath was to him an idle tale. He abolished the sacrifices, the prayer at set times and seasons, leaving only the absolute principles of morality. He bestowed no power on his disciples that the most ordinary men did not possess. The most successful missionary in his cause was one of those sent forth. Is the whole strength of argument confined to the text founding the Church on Simon Peter? Its spurious origin is too well proven to leave a doubt.

Nowhere in the Gospels has Christ sanctioned anything but pure and exalted morality. Baptism and the Supper were only accidents, and nowhere recommended as essential. Where, then, can the Church found its claims to infallible direction of the beliefs of men? Not on the Bible; not on anything Christ said or did. His life is a plain denial of all they claim.

The Church has acted from the commencement of its existence as though it held a commission from God to scourge all who opposed its exactions, and torture them into the road it said led to heaven. The Protestant sects, having lost the irresistible power of the Pope, still rely on the withering influence of excommunication, and the social pressure they wield. They cannot place the Infidel on a rack and tear his limbs to pieces, but they can torture his spirit by social ostracism, the influence of which lies in the prejudices they create.

When a thinker walks out on the breezy highlands of untrammelled thought, and would gladden the world with the spectacle of a beautiful life devoted to noble aims and lofty endeavors, how rave the sectarian winds over the theological marshlands below! and how ten thousand tongues run swift to defame his fair name! The calm soul will let them prate, as the unnoticeable anger of children.

We learn, then, that the claims of the Church to authority in matters pertaining to religion are without the least foundation. They are not sanctioned by the Gospels, nor authorized by any word or deed of Christ, but everywhere condemned. Nor can it, as an aggregation of individuals, claim authority over any individual who does not consent to such dictation. All authority thus gained is that bestowed by the brute strength of numbers.

It may be answered: These numbers are not individual aggregations, but they gather around a centre—that centre the God-man, Christ. The power of the Church arises from its holding this being as a model for human action. If Christ were a veritable incarnation—if he were God clothed in flesh—he could not be a model for finite man. His example would be useless and wholly incomprehensible. If he were simply a good and perfect man, it would be well for us to follow his example, and so would it be well to learn lessons from all exemplary men.

Thus, as a God or as a man, no power is conferred on his followers, by accepting him as a model, to enforce their views on others, or to reject what they may consider as conflicting with their established beliefs.

All authority that the Church has is that of brute power: nothing divinely delegated, but human and bestowed by might.

This right is admitted, not because it is supported by evidence, but by that blind obedience men pay to the old, which grows out of fear, admiration, and a sense of duty, the result of education.

The Church has the appliances to create fear in an eminent degree. Added to those usually attending leaders, political or theological, it holds the keys of hell and eternal damnation in its hands. The soul that bravely submits to physical torture is appalled at threats of eternal anguish. This element is chiefly relied on and is largely used in all revivals, and its thunder tones are heard in excommunications and anathemas. Mankind are loyal to their leaders, whether those leaders direct them right or wrong, and once imbued with certain notions, they are ready to sustain those leaders, from admiration of the success with which they carry forward their measures. One generation having submitted, the next is educated into submission, or, in other words, they have a sense of the moral duty of obedience.

Having, by these means gained supremacy, the Church has attempted to preserve her power by two quite different methods. Thoroughly comprehending that knowledge is power, it has either sought to check its diffusion altogether, or only to disseminate such ideas as it pleased.

The universal dissemination of knowledge, it was held was not only useless, but led to discontent, sedition, and revolution. The masses, if allowed to be informed in the arts and sciences of the ruling classes, would become turbulent and uncontrollable. The High Church party in England maintained this view until a recent date, and the supporters of slavery upheld it with most stringent laws. The other method, the deeper and more insidious, introduced by the more ultra leaders of Protestantism, and by the Jesuits into Catholicism, is to compel all to become educated, making it even compulsory with parents to instruct their children. At the same time, while opening the doors of the mind, care is taken of the mental food supplied. An injunction is served on the press and the author. No book or paper is issued until examined by the theological power, and if containing anything displeasing, it cannot appear. Authors who write in accordance with prevailing ideas are encouraged to occupy the public mind, the press thus becoming a power in the hands of the Church to disseminate its doctrines and maintain its authority. It vomits forth tracts and religious books by the million, but to every call from any conflicting idea is silent. It is not only gagged, it is made a slave, and all its giant energy compelled to labor for darkness instead of light.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

THE SERVICES OF INFIDELITY AND CHRISTIANITY TO AMERICAN LIBERTY.

BENNETT'S REPLY.—NO. 1.

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Dear Sir: I have never thought for a moment, nor do I think any intelligent Liberal has ever claimed, that a majority of the officers, or of the rank and file engaged in the Revolutionary struggle were Infidels or unbelievers in the divine origin of the Bible. If a census had then been taken on that question, or a vote given, the Bible worshipers on the one side and the unbelievers on the other, I admit that the believers would have had a very large majority—perhaps ninety or ninety-five per cent of the whole number. Unfortunately, since the earliest history of mankind, the believers in fetishes, myths, superstitious mysticisms, fables, and errors of all kinds, have far outnumbered the opposite class. Truth has ever been in a minority. It was so one hundred years ago. It is so today. But, thanks to the light of science and the inherent love of the Right which exists in man's nature, the truth is gaining ground. The myths and superstitions of former centuries, with their tyrannous rule, are retiring to the rear, and truth, reason, and mental liberty are coming to the front and assuming control. They are unmistakably gaining ground, and in another hundred years it is confidently hoped that theological delusions and errors will have far less sway, not only in this country but in the civilized world, than they had one hundred years ago. The powers of light and truth are potent, and we have much to hope for from them.

I freely accord patriotism, love of liberty, and hatred of tyranny to thousands of zealous Christians who were engaged in that struggle. They fought bravely for American independence, and I would not take one laurel from their brows. I honor them for what they did in the cause of human liberty. They were impelled by the noblest impulses that move the human heart. If the same credit was generously awarded to the unbelievers that were engaged in the same struggle, this discussion would hardly be necessary. We would hear much fewer aspersions and slanderous assertions about "Tom Paine" and the "Infidel crew," and they would be cheerfully credited on all hands with the great deeds they performed, and a nation's gratitude and honor, to which they are so justly entitled, would be extended to them, instead of being grudgingly and meanly withheld as now.

While I yield that Bible believers greatly predominated in point of numbers in the American struggle, I claim that the leading spirits, the men who did the most to arouse the people of the Colonies, to stimulate their courage and resolution after the conflict was inaugurated, and when dark despair settled over the land; who directed the armies; who made personal sacrifices to keep up the struggle, and who gave form and direction to the Constitution and policy of the new government when the war was over, were Infidels, or men who did not believe that the Bible was written by the finger of God, or by his immediate dictation. I allude to such men as Benjamin Franklin, George Washington, Ethan Allen, Anthony Wayne, Thomas Paine, John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, Gouverneur Morris, Benjamin Rush, Aaron Burr, Alexander Hamilton, James Madison, etc., etc. These men did not accept the Christian dogma that Jesus Christ is God and the Supreme Power of the Universe; hence they were Infidels.

While I admit that Christians acquitted themselves nobly in that glorious struggle, I claim that Infidels did the same, and did more in proportion to their numbers than did the believers, and this is all that ought to be demanded of them. I claim, too, that the war for American independence was not a Christian struggle, and that the impulses and sentiments which actuated the infant nation—hatred of tyranny and oppression, the spirit of freedom and independence—are not peculiar to Christians. They are the natural, spontaneous impulses of humanity. Man, in all ages of the world, in all countries, and under all systems of religion has fought and bled and died for liberty and the right of self-government.

While men of all castes and colors have aspired to freedom, while they have fought for liberty; while men of all creeds have detested tyranny in their very souls, the distinctive inculcation of Christianity has been "submit" and "obey." Its principal teachers have enjoined rules like these: "Servants obey your masters," "Obey the magistrates," "Obey them that have rule over you," "Let your soul be subject to the higher powers," "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's," "The powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever, therefore, resisteth the powers resisteth the ordinance of God, and they that resist receive unto themselves damnation. Wherefore, ye must be subject, not only for wrath but also for conscience' sake. For this cause, pay ye tribute also, for they are God's ministers, attending continually upon this very thing" (Rom., xiii., 1-6). "Submit yourself to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake, whether it be to the king, as supreme, or unto governors" (1 Peter, ii., 13).

According to these imperative injunctions, the American colonists were not only in a state of rebellion against the parent government, but also against heaven. They had practically ceased to be Christians. They had become Infidels, for to question or doubt what the priesthood declares to be the will of heaven is infidelity of the rankest kind. When they dared to raise their hands and strike for their liberties, they were opposing the will of God. Every king, every tyrant that ever reigned over an oppressed people, either under the Hebrew or the Christian regime, claimed to rule by the express command of God. They were the anointed of heaven, and to rebel against them was to rebel against God. The American colonies, when they resisted the power of Great Britain, opposed such a power. They opposed the first Christian power in the world—a nation whose kings and queens reigned by the "grace of God." I repeat, it was an un-Christian war to oppose the first Christian nation on earth, whose monarchs ruled by a divine commission from on high, and whose coronations were presided over by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the highest Christian dignitary in the realm. I tell you it was the rebellion of Infidelity that made the American people raise their arms against such a divinely-commissioned power. True, Catholics and Protestants came over to help us, but they came to fight the battle of Infidelity against Christian tyranny, and this truth cannot be successfully denied. Most truly did Ingersoll exclaim, "Infidelity is liberty; all religion is slavery. In every creed, man is the slave of God; woman is the slave of man, and the sweet children are the slaves of all!"

While the Christian government of Great Britain was sending over its thousands of creed-bound serfs to crush into the chains of bondage a youthful and struggling people who dared aspire to be free, the first Infidels of England and France sympathized with the colonists and did all they could for their cause by pen, money, and valor. While this was true, how was it with the great light of Christian Protestantism in England, John Wesley? He opposed the American struggle with all his power. He wrote against it, he preached against it, and he labored against it publicly and privately. England had no deadlier foe to American freedom than was John Wesley, the pious apostle of the Church, and the founder of Methodism.

You mention instances of marches and other operations during the war being preceded by prayer. Doubtless it was so, but that does not prove very much. A devout Mohammedan prays regularly six times a day, and always with his face turned towards his holy city, Mecca. Many of the acts of his life-time are preceded by prayer. Does that make him a Christian? The pious Hindoo mother who throws her infant to her crocodile-god in the Ganges always precedes the act by prayer. Does that make her a Christian? When two opposing Christian armies are about to engage in a bloody conflict, and both precede the sanguinary work by prayer asking for victory, and both beg for God to help them, is it not calculated to embarrass their God to decide how to answer the prayers of both, and to determine which side to help the most?

Bonaparte used to insist that God was on the side of the strongest battalions, and other observing persons have come to the same conclusion. If Col. Prescott had preceded his march from Cambridge to Charlestown Neck by a lively game of "old sledge," or had he induced his men to join lustily in singing "Yankee Doodle," is it not barely possible that it would have answered just as good a purpose as Mr. Langdon's prayer? Would not the soldiers have made the march just as cheerfully and as expeditiously?

Among the generals, patriots, and statesmen who were in the Revolutionary struggle, it is not claimed that all had arrived at the same degree of unbelief or Infidelity. It is conceded that Jefferson and Paine were more pronounced and outspoken in their radicalism and unbelief than were Franklin and Washington, but all disbelieved and denied the dogmas upon which the Christian Church is founded—that Jesus Christ is God, the Supreme Power of the Universe—and that he penned or dictated the Jewish and Christian Scriptures. They denied that one person could be three, and that three persons could be one, and that three and one are the same. Rejecting these cardinal tenets in the Christian Church, they, of course, could not be Christians, and must, of necessity, be ranked among the Infidels.

You may attempt to prove that these were all Christians because in some respects they acted with the Christians, not even excepting Jefferson. We hope, at all events, that you will leave us Ethan Allen and Thomas Paine. I ask you not to make Christians of them. It seems, too, that after Thomas Jefferson has been a thousand times denounced as an Infidel, from almost every pulpit in this land—both before and after his election as President—you will find it a little laborious to make it clear to the common perception that he was a Christian in full communion. If you can make a clear case of it, I shall watch your efforts with interest. He was quite as decided an Infidel as Paine, and was never afraid of having his views upon theology known. There will be no trouble in showing this from his own writings. I have not room in this article to go into these quotations, but will in my next, when I think I can also show that Washington entertained the same theological views that Jefferson did, and that the Rev. Dr. Abercrombie, rector of the church in Philadelphia which Washington frequently attended during the time that that city was the seat of government, and who was acquainted with Washington's views, admitted that the General was a Deist. Deists, of course, are Infidels. Thomas Paine was only a Deist. I think I can show that Franklin was also a Deist.

I am well aware that Christian biographers and pious adulators have made great efforts to show that Washington was a Christian; that he was a sanctimonious man, and that he preceded his engagements on the battle-field by prayer; that it was discovered that upon a certain occasion he retired into a thicket to pray; but the stories lack confirmation, and is too much like the Sunday-school story about the cherry tree and his little hatchet, in which it was impossible for him to tell a lie—a story, by the way, first told by a clergyman.

The truth is, Washington has been so far deified by an admiring American people, and we have grown up from our infancy with the impressions implanted upon our minds that he was a model man, a great and good personage, far superior to any other who lived at the same time, that he is exalted into a demi-god who could not tell a lie, who could not use a profane word, and who was almost perfection itself. This is all an error. The truth is, he had his faults and failings like other men. He could not only use duplicity and strategy when necessary, but he could swear "like a trooper." Those who were well acquainted with him pronounced him a profane man who often gave way to passion, who was aristocratic and almost unapproachable to his inferiors, and who often showed a species of tyranny and cruelty. Still, the eminent services which he rendered this country should be duly acknowledged and remembered, but not on the false ground that he was a Christian.

D. M. BENNETT.

A Sensible Sermon.

The Rev. M. J. Savage, of the Church of the Unity, Boston, in a recent discussion on the revivalism of Moody & Co., used the following language:—

I propose broadly to outline three contrasts between the revivalists and ourselves. These will bring out clearly our necessary attitude toward them, and also the line of our own proper work. And—

1. Contrast the difference in the ends which we propose to ourselves. It is something worse than a faulty and inadequate use of language for us to deceive ourselves into the idea that we are working for the same results because we apply the word "salvation" to them both. They seek the world's salvation, and so do we. But the real things we seek are as wide apart as the east is from the west.

The objective point of the revivalists is to save men's souls; by which is meant so arranging the affairs that, after death, these souls will escape the necessity of going and will be permitted to go to another place called heaven. This salvation has nothing directly to do with character. It is, indeed, held in a general way that "saved" persons will have better characters than those who are "impenitent" and "lost," but these better characters do not constitute the essence of the "salvation." If any so-called "liberal evangelicals" teach a more reasonable doctrine, they have no logical right to, for it does not belong to the system. Martin Luther, in his zeal for "salvation by faith," said that, though a man committed murder and adultery many times a day, yet if he had faith enough he would still be saved. And that this is not an ancient and outgrown doctrine is apparent from recent Brooklyn teachings to which the entire body of evangelical churches gives its assent. At any rate, I have heard of no protest. Mr. Moody said recently that a man might be honest and pure and upright and true, but that all this had nothing to do with the question of his being "saved." To be saved, then, is to so arrange matters that the soul will escape hell; and this arrangement has nothing directly to do with character.

TO A PLACE CALLED HELL,

Now, what "the soul" is, apart from the whole man, living, thinking, feeling, acting, we do not profess to know, and we do not believe anybody else knows. And what "salvation" means, apart from the general soundness, health, and development of the whole man, body, mind, and spirit, we do not profess to know, and do not believe anybody else knows. Salvation, then, with us, is something chiefly present, and means the deliverance of man from evil, internal and external, and his growth and culture in all high, true, pure, sweet, and manly things. If we can only save a man now from wrong and defect and ignorance and superstition and arrested development, and make of him a living, loving, growing man, reaching out after, and gradually attaining, better and still better things, of body and head and heart, we have no fears for the future.

WE BELIEVE THAT HOLINESS MEANS WHOLENESS.

He who comes to the border-land of the future complete and fresh and sweet in a true manly life, having sincerely tried to be true to himself, his neighbor and his God, him we believe to be the best fitted for whatever the future may have in store for him. The ship that is sound and staunch in timber and build, and that is full-rigged from top-gallant to keelson, is the vessel in which we would trust our precious freight and our lives, as she sails out over the harbor to face the unknown and untried scenes of the measureless ocean beyond. And, if her hull be shaky and her rigging rotten, we do not believe she is any the safer, though her hold were piled full of certificates claiming to assure her safe arrival in port.

We believe that happiness and heaven are so much a matter of healthy capacity for knowing and loving all true and beautiful and divine persons and things that nothing can take the place of these. God cannot make a deaf man hear music except by curing his deafness. So God and all the angels could not make a man see and hear and enjoy heaven except in so far as he is healthy and developed in those faculties that fit him to take hold of and appreciate the knowledge and truth and beauty that constitute what we mean by heaven.

Our object then, is to train and develop

TRUE MANHOOD AND WOMANHOOD.

It is a present object; and it concerns itself about the future only as it believes in the divine order of cause and effect, and holds that a good to-morrow is best assured by a good to-day.

2. The contrasts between our methods is quite as marked as the distinction of our aims.

The revivalists hold that this life is insignificant, and that devotion to it is delusive and dangerous. The logic of their system still sings:—

"This world is all a fleeting show,
For man's illusion given."

This life is to be sacrificed to the next. The voice is constantly uplifted against "worldliness." The "one thing" to be done is to be sure that your own soul is saved—"make your calling and election sure"—and then to do all you can to make sure the saving of the souls of others. The practical outcome of all this order of things is to make hell very full of victims of the devil's successful cunning and of God's wrath, and to make heaven a place where a selected few perpetually thank God and sing his praises, because he chose to illustrate his grace and mercy by saving them from the horrible fate that has overtaken the most of their friends and neighbors. The old monasticism, when it fled from practical life, and refused to have anything to do with home and marriage and the bringing of children into the midst of so dangerous a world, was the only consistent outcome of this theory. The Universe is a horrible engine for the production and torture of souls.

We hold that this world is the best one we know anything about; that we are to make the most and best of it while in it. So and we believe in invention and improvement and art and learning and the development of all the divinely-ordained possibilities of this world-life of ours. We hold that there is a most intimate relation between the moral and religious condition and external environment. We see that ignorance, and lack of sanitary regulations, and filthy tenements, and the relations of the laborer to his work, and ten thousand other outside things, produce and accompany conditions of morals and religion. So we believe we help on civilization in the most speedy way possible when we help on the souls of men than many of the world's preachers.

WE BELIEVE IN SCIENCE AND CIVILIZATION,

While, then, the revivalists make the least possible of this life, we make the most possible of it.

They hold and teach that the one only efficient means and method of salvation is faith in the bloody sacrifice of Christ on Calvary; that he died in our stead; and that if we believe this fact, and accept his substitution, we shall, for his sake, escape the everlasting death that else awaits us. We believe this to be because nothing that any one else can do can ever stand instead of, and take the place of, what a man is in himself. We believe it to be false in morals and faithless to true righteousness, because justice can never be satisfied by punishing the innocent for the guilty; and because only a vengeful tyrant, who will have his "pound of flesh," and cares not whom he gets it out of, could ever think of accepting such a substitution. We believe it to be false to Christianity, because there is not a shadow of a hint of it in any well-authenticated teaching of Jesus; so that, if he knew what his mission was to the world, he failed utterly to deliver his message, on this theory; and because it is perfectly easy to trace this doctrine to fanciful discussions of the relations of Christianity to Judaism, on the part of those who wished to prove that the one was only the logical outcome and completion of the other. Jesus teaches that a man who forsakes his sins and turns to God is accepted of him; and that a man is to be known by his fruits; and that the judgment is to turn on questions of character and practical life. Nowhere has he said one syllable out of which can be tortured the horrible, unjust, and repulsive doctrine of atonement by the substituted sacrifice which is the main staple of the revivalist's preaching.

FALSE IN PHILOSOPHY,

There is the broadest possible contrast between the theory of the Universe and of man's nature and relation to God, out of which the doctrines of salvation and the methods of salvation necessarily grow.

The revivalists hold that every word of the Bible is

THE INSPIRED AND INFALLIBLE WORD OF GOD.

They hold, further, that this Bible teaches that the whole race fell from perfect innocence through the sin of one man; and that he has thus become totally depraved and incapable of good. And that it follows from this, and is divinely taught, that all men are thus under condemnation to endless punishment in hell. Out of these premises comes the necessity for the substituted death of Christ, and a salvation limited to those who accept by faith his sacrificial work.

Now, what do we hold in these points? In the first place, we know—not simply believe—that man was on the earth ages before the Bible says he was created; and we regard as wholly fanciful the attempts of anxious commentators to reconcile Genesis and geology. And we find in those early traces no signs of the innocence and happiness that the popular thought associates with Eden. Rather do we find the lowest barbarism, and distinct traces of a development from animality up to his present condition of civilization.

Thus the foundation of the whole system—fall, depravity, atonement—is knocked away at one blow. And the rationalizing Orthodox who accepts these results of positive knowledge and still tries to keep his orthodoxy, has a building, like a mirage city, all in the air.

But, even though we knew none of these things, the whole theory is so repulsive to the very moral nature that God has given us, that no amount of evidence were sufficient to prove it. Proof enough to establish this would be capable of proving that

THE GOD OF THIS UNIVERSE IS A DEVIL.

For with reverence, and yet with fearlessness, I dare to say that the human mind can conceive no greater crime than the creation of the world on the orthodox theory. To make a system, the outcome of which is irremediable misfortune to the majority, is something of which only fiendishness is capable. Here we are, enmeshed and involved in this network of evil, all for the fault of a man who lived thousands of years ago, with no provision for the salvation of any but the few millions of Christendom, and with the certainty that only a few of these will be saved; and yet God is sovereign and able to save whomsoever he will; and on his sovereignty revivalism is based, and men cry and plead and agonize in the endeavor to induce him to save a few more; and he hears a church and takes pity on a dozen or two, when their other engagements permit the court favorites, Moody and Sankey, to be present. Merciful heavens! are men with hearts, and moral natures and brains, expected to believe such stuff as this? Are they expected to work to get others to believe and accept it? It is mild language to say that no blackest Nero or Borgia of all history was ever charged with the guilt of such infamy? If there is such a God in the Universe, and if he has thus treated humanity, it is for him to ask pardon of man, and not for man to bow down and supplicate his Almighty injurer.

But from such

A HORRIBLE NIGHTMARE OF THEOLOGY

the light of modern criticism, coming in to awaken us, gives us blessed escape into the daylight of reason and truth. The Bible, from whose contradictory and distorted texts this system has been constructed, is found, by enlightened scholarship, to be not the infallible "word of God." It is only the human literature of a nation's religious life. And though you find beneath its covers teachings that can be twisted into such shapes of evil and fear, you may dismiss them as only the child-world's thoughts about the mysteries of the Universe. The Bible is a wondrous book, because it is a history of a nation's religious life and thought and growth. But crude ideas of God, mistaken thoughts about man, false notions concerning the world, low theories of society and morals, errors in history, in geography, in science, fierce hatreds, vindictive passions, narrow prejudices, unauthorized and inconsistent dreams of the future—all attest that it is a work of humanity, containing the ordinary human mixtures of gold with iron and clay.

We differ, then, with the revivalists at every point.

OUR SALVATION IS NOT THEIR SALVATION.

Our methods cannot be their methods. Our theories, and what we believe to be our facts, cannot be made to live alongside their theories. We believe their teaching is not inadequate only, but pernicious, because it stands in the way of a higher and better one. If they can indoctrinate the world in their views, they are giving men possession of thought and prejudice and falsehood concerning God and man that they must get rid of before they can look with clear and open vision upon the facts of life and destiny. It is not then a matter of indifference to us whether or not they succeed. We stand for what we believe to mean the facts of life, and what will bear the light of civilization. We stand for the highest manhood, and the highest hopes of the future. And we cannot consistently keep still for the sake of peace. "First pure," and true, and "then peaceable." True peace can come in no other way.

While, then, we believe Messrs. Moody and Sankey to be honest and sincere, we believe at the same time that they are wronging and perverting the religious nature and the religious life of those they influence. And though, like Socrates in Athens, like Jesus in Jerusalem, like Savonarola in Florence, like Luther at Worms, we stand up alone, a minority of one in the midst of the fierce enthusiasm and opposition of the great orthodox majority that, now as then, calls all who do not agree with them anti-Christ and Infidel, still stand up we must, and hold aloft our flag, on which is inscribed, "GOD, LIBERTY, LIGHT, AND CIVILIZATION."

—Boston Sunday Times.

SUPERSTITION is intolerant, and persecutes; superstition vaunteth itself, behaves itself unseemly; superstition compasses sea and land to make proselytes; superstition makes and sets up an image, and commands and exhorts people to fall down and worship it; superstition does not abide in the secret chambers, it roars, and strives and cries, and men and women hear its voice in the streets and tabernacles. Superstitionists in Athens caused Socrates to drink the hemlock and die the death; they nailed Jesus to the cross in Jerusalem; and in Boston, the home of the Puritans, not forty years ago they sentenced Abner Kneeland, a virtuous, upright, and intelligent man, and an honest seeker for further light and truth, as a felon, and imprisoned him in the common jail. In these instances, and in all others of like character, the accused were innocent; the blasphemy existed only in the eyes of their accusers.—Alfred E. Giles.

W. S. BELL will lecture in Utica April 11th; Penn Yan: 12th; Buffalo, 19th; Linesville, Pa., 21st; Canton, O., 24th; Leesville, O., 29th.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.
SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 17.

Great Jehovah, let us return to the subject of gods and virgins—of their intercourse with each other—and make a few further inquiries of thee upon this heavenly theme. Were not the virgin Isis and her god-begotten child Horus worshiped and adored in Egypt three thousand to five thousand years ago?

Was not the virgin Ishtar greatly revered in Babylon hundreds of years before the introduction of Christianity into the world, and did not the legend hold that she was impregnated by a god from heaven, and among her titles was she not called "Mother of the Gods," and "The Celestial Mother"? Does not Gen. Rawlinson, the distinguished English antiquarian and explorer give an account of this?

Had not the Assyrians a goddess—a virgin greatly adored by them—by the name of Ri (nearly the same as the last syllable in Mary's name)? Was she not believed to be the mother of a child who was begotten by a god, and without the assistance of a masculine of the human race? Was she not also called "The Celestial Mother"? Was not this hundreds of years prior to the Christian era?

Was not the virgin Myrrha held by the Grecians to have become the mother of Adonis by having sexual connection with one of the gods? Was not her son in many respects fully equal to the son of thy favorite, Virgin Mary?

Was it not held by the ancient Egyptians, more than three thousand years ago, that their demi-god Æsculapius was begotten by a god upon the virgin Coronis, and was he not for many centuries held in high veneration? Was it not held that, after he was born, his virgin mother secreted him on the Mount of Myrtles, and that he was found by a shepherd or goat-herd Aristhenes, and that the goat-herd would have conveyed the infant to his own home had he not perceived, in lifting the infant from the ground, that his head was encircled with fiery rays, by which he knew the child was of divine parentage?

Was not Ceres in a similar manner held to be the virgin mother of Osiris, and that he was begotten by the "Father of all Gods"?

Was not the figure of a virgin with a divine child in her arms found sculptured in the ruins of the ancient temples thousands of years ago? Have not such figures, commemorative of the worship of the virgin, been found among the antiquities in nearly every ancient nation?

Was not Celestine held to be the virgin mother of the crucified Zulis, or Thulis? Was not Semele in the same manner held to be the virgin mother of the Egyptian Bacchus?

Was not Prudence thus the mother of one of the Herculese, Shing-man of the demi-god Yu, in China, and Mayenne of Hesus of the Druids? Were these not all pure and chaste virgins?

Did not Æschylus, more than five hundred years before Christ, write about the virgin Io, chaste and pure, who gave birth to a son without holding connection with a male of the human race?

In the Grecian mythology, were not many of the old gods greatly distinguished by their fondness for females, and were not their amours and their acts of sexual connection the subjects of poems and songs for many centuries?

Did not the god Saturn, with the goddess Ops, on Mount Ida, beget Jupiter, Neptune, Juno, Diana, Ceres, and others, male and female?

Was not the supreme god Jupiter particularly distinguished for his love attachments and for the number of children he begot by various females? Did he not beget Apollo by the virgin Latonia, who bore him twins; Mercury, his favorite messenger, by Maia; Vulcan, Mars and Hebe by his sister and wife Juno; Bacchus by Semele; Æolus by Aceso; Hercules by the Virgin Alemena; Amphion by Antiope; the Grecian Æsculapius by Danaë; and the nine heavenly muses by Mnemosyne, besides other offspring too numerous to mention?

Did not this amorous god evince as much fondness for the female sex as do males of the human race? and did he not, in carrying out his schemes in this direction, exhibit as much craft, intrigue and perseverance, as men often do when seeking to gratify their sexual passions?

Did not the other gods pattern faithfully after their king and ruler? Did not Sol and Clymene beget Phæton? Was not Latonia the daughter of Cæus and Phœbe? Did not Cingras get Adonis of Myrrha? Was not Aurora the daughter of Terra and Titan? Were not Cælus and Hecate the parents of Janus? Was not Triton the offspring of Neptune and Amphitrite? Were not Cæson and Alimede the parents of Jason or Theseus? Was not Orpheus the product of Apollo and Calliope, and Achilles of Peleus and Thetis?

Was not the uncomely Pan the child of Mercury by Penelope? Did not Mercury and Venus produce Hermaphrodites? Did not Mars cohabit with Cistones and procure Tereus? In the same way was not Momus the son of Nox and Somnus?

Were not all these gods, with the stories or legends about their connections with celestial and terrestrial females and of their begetting sons and daughters, almost without number, all taught and strongly believed in from five hundred years to fifteen hundred years before thou hadst connection with the Virgin Mary and begat thy son Jesus?

Jehovah, in view of the many nations in the old pagan world who, for five hundred years, for a thousand years, and for fifteen hundred years before the day when Matthew and Luke say thou hadst intercourse with the Jewish virgin, Mary, when thou didst consummate the grand plan of salvation of the human race, which from the most remote ages thou hadst meditated and cogitated upon, is it not very singular how completely thy grand scheme was anticipated by those same superstitious pagans?

As they preceded thee by many hundreds of years in the business of incarnation, and with the coöperation of a daughter of earth, to beget a celestial son, partaking of the character of deity, does it not appear that the heathen world got the start of thee in the matter, and that thou wast under the necessity of copying from them?

Are not the accounts of the heathen gods holding sexual intercourse with the heathen virgins, and thus producing heathen sons of gods, more full, more definite, and equally as authentic, to say the least, as are the accounts of thy own exploits in the same line?

Are not the legends in relation to the manner in which Christna, Buddha, and the other sons of God which were miraculously brought into existence, fully as reliable as the dream which Matthew says Joseph had, or as the vision which Luke says the Virgin had?

Is there not a great amount of vagueness, mysticism, unreasonableness, improbability, and impossibility, as well as similarity in all these myths and fabulous legends that detracts very greatly from their credibility and reliability?

Is it not evident that, like the various systems of religion which men have believed in—each one being more or less like those which preceded it, possessing much the same mysticisms, fabulous legends about miraculous origin, having the same or similar dogmas and points of belief—this dogma of an immaculate conception, of a god holding sexual intercourse with a young woman and begetting another god, as in the case of the Christian religion, like the previously existing systems, has been borrowed or taken from the earlier creeds?

Is it not far more probable that the earlier Christians appropriated this darling theory than that thou shouldst be under the necessity of following in the same steps which thy competitors had pursued for more than a thousand years before, and to be indebted to them or to their inventors and creators for a model by which to form thy own plans and purposes?

Does it not argue a lack of originality, a great want of the inventive faculty, both on thy part and on the part of those who devised and compiled the system of religion called Christianity to take almost the same means to get up a son, agent, and representative that had been used by thy predecessors of the superstitious and unenlightened pagans?

Is not this more apparent and striking when we discover that in Christianity, not only the idea of a begotten son of God is a borrowed one, but also that every dogma, every creed, every sacrament, every ordinance, and almost every rule and regulation which the Christian Church possesses to-day, or has possessed within the last eighteen hundred years, has been absolutely borrowed or stolen from those older pagan systems?

Is not the belief in a trinity in the godhead a pagan dogma which had an existence in heathen nations for thousands of years, but did not exist in Judaism? We have seen most clearly that the begetting of a divine son upon the person of an earthly woman was decidedly a pagan invention, and was not the belief in the crucifixion of the son of God as a penalty or a propitiation for the sins of the world equally as much of pagan origin?

Are there not distinct accounts of more than a dozen Redeemers, Saviors, or Sons of God, who have been crucified for the good of mankind, to secure the pardon of their sins, or to appease the anger of an offended God? And did not all these crucifixions take place, or purport to have taken place, hundreds of years before thou wast said to have begotten a son and caused him to be put through the same cruel process?

From the investigations of Godfrey Higgins, Sir William Jones, Sir J. Cockburn Thompson, Dr. Thomas Inman, Max Müller, Louis Jaccoliot, and others, do we not find that it was claimed that Christna, the son of the Hindoo God, was crucified for the benefit of mankind from five hundred to one thousand years before thy son was placed upon the cross?

Was not the same legend held also by millions of people of the divine Sakia of the Hindoos, the Chinese, the Siamese, the Thibetians, and other Asiatic nations, fully five hundred years earlier than thy own son?

Was not Thammuz of Syria crucified, or held to have been, more than a thousand years before Jesus was?

Was not Wittoba of the Tilingonese, according to the traditions, crucified between five hundred and six hundred years before the crucifixion on Calvary? Were not the nail holes in the feet and hands of this demi-god often portrayed and held up for the pious adoration and sympathy of his worshippers? Was he not believed in Lombardy, Travancore, and other sections of Southern Italy?

Was not Prometheus held to have been crucified in Greece? Did not Æschylus put the entire legend in a poem, and was it not as a drama played upon the stage in Athens—a representation of the crucifixion of the god Prometheus being given in view of the audience—and this five hundred years before thy son was said to have been crucified?

Was not Quirinus of Rome, according to tradition, crucified over five hundred years before the birth of thy son?

Was not the divine Hesus of the Druids held to have been crucified more than eight hundred years before the Christian era?

Was not Quexalcote of Mexico represented as having been put to death on the cross for the good of mankind? In the story of his life-sufferings are there not most striking correspondences between him and thy son?

In a similar manner was it not held that Thulis of Egypt, Indra of Thibet, Iao of Nepaul, Attys of Phrygia, Crite of Chaldea, Bali of Orissa, Mithra of Persia, not to mention others, were severally crucified as redeemers or saviors of men; that they gave up their lives in this way to placate the wrath of God and to atone for the sins of the human race? Were not all these crucifixions held to have taken place more than five hundred years before thou caused thy dear son to be put to death in this cruel manner?

Whether these crucifixions ever actually took place, or whether they were only mythical theories and traditions on the part of those who taught them, is not one thing made most clear, that the crucifixion idea is decidedly pagan in its origin; that it was taught by the priests of pagan systems, and believed in by many millions of confiding pagan worshippers many centuries before it is claimed that thou and thy son decided to use the same means for the eternal good of mankind? Is it not most singular that in this most important of all dogmas, the crucifixion of thy son, thou wert also compelled to take up the worn-out and antiquated theories of the pagan world? Is it not possible that thou or the designers of the system were unable to get up something new and original with which to save the world and to plant a new system of religion?

Are we not forced to believe that thou couldst not devise a better and more rational system, and wert compelled to pattern after and adopt the obsolete and crude vagaries of ignorant pagans away back in the dark, crude ages of antiquity?

If thou wert actuated by the desire and purpose to take some steps by which thou couldst find it possible to forgive the human race for falling into the trap which thou didst set for them, in the matter of the forbidden fruit and the wily serpent, is it not passing strange that thou couldst devise no way except to follow in the track which the devotees of paganism had pursued a thousand years before?

Would it not be naturally expected that a deity who possessed originality and inventiveness sufficient to plan and execute a boundless Universe, to enact all the laws pertaining to matter and force; of attraction, gravitation, chemical affinity, of light, heat, electricity, magnetism, sound, color, and of the innumerable forms and combinations of matter and force, in invisible and visible conditions, comprising all the varied forms of vegetable and animal life, could devise as well, a feasible plan by which he could restore friendly relations between his creatures and himself without finding it necessary to take at second hand an old crude, monstrous, repulsive, barbarous, pagan system of first begetting a son upon the body of a female, and then putting him to a cruel death to produce a spirit of forgiveness in his own mind? Is not this a fair presentation of the case according to the representations made by those who claim to speak in thy name? Canst thou deny a word of it?

On the other hand, is it not far more probable and far more true that thou hadst nothing to do with all this plagiarism of pagan myths and absurdities, and that the entire business of getting up the Christian system was performed by a designing priesthood who, in building a new religion, used for the structure the debris and waste timber which had been employed in similar structures, and who, in order to make the new system popular with those who still adhered to the old, incorporated into the new many of the creeds, rites, forms, and sacraments which existed in the older systems?

Now, Jehovah, if these things are so; if it be true that the principles of the Christian religion are borrowed from paganism (if it is not so, wilt thou be kind enough to tell us), is there the slightest harm in the people's knowing it? Is it not far better for men to know the truth, regardless of whatever system it may effect, than that generation after generation should pass away indifferent to errors and falsehood?

The Christian religion is either original or it is borrowed. Is not the proof positive that it is the latter? Do not the facts we have cited, and many others of a similar character, prove it to be a borrowed system?

We ask again, ought we not to know the truth and look it boldly in the face? Can there be any good in keeping truth in the background, and setting up myths and fables in its place? In this age of increased knowledge, ought we not to understand as fully as possible the facts about the system of religion which demands our adhesion and adoration? If we find that we have been in error, and that our teachers have told us falsely, ought we not to turn to the truth and embrace it with all our hearts?

Does not the crude idea that thou art an anthropomorphic being, with all the passions and impulses possessed by physical man, occupying but a single point in the Universe at a given time, with crudity and human attributes sufficient to engage in sexual intercourse with mortal females, and thus beget offspring, illy comport with the progressive idea of Deity that is a universal principle or power that pervades alike all parts of the limitless Universe—as much in the orbs so distant that they cannot be described by the most powerful telescopes as on our own globe?

Is it not absolutely impossible and crudely absurd to think that this universal power or principle which pervades all space, and hence cannot be a person or an individuality, should cohabit with women and become the father of sons and daughters?

Do not those who hold this crude conception of thee greatly wrong thee? Are they not virtually blasphemous and sacrilegious? Do not these retain much of the old spirit of fetishism and idolatry to which men were bound in the ages of darkness thousands of years ago?

Is it not time that these crude ideas were discarded by intelligent people, and that they had grander and truer conceptions of the Supreme Power of the Universe than they have hitherto entertained?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

What I Don't Believe.—No. 25.

219. I do not believe that the old patriarch, Lot, was a saint of the first class, or of the highest degree of purity. He might have been too good to burn up with fire and brimstone in the wicked cities of Sodom and Gomorrah at the time God came down to inspect their status and condition, that he might decide whether it was advisable to bring on an extensive shower of sulphurous pyrotechnics, but he was not too good to get drunk two nights in succession and commit incest with his own daughters.

Among the crimes men commit there is scarcely one that is more heinous, more monstrous, than for a man to debauch his own virgin daughter; but this old patriarch, not willing to stop at one offense of the kind, repeated the operation until he had got both his young daughters into a situation that is considered very disreputable for unmarried ladies to be brought into.

It may be urged in extenuation of his crime that his daughters got him intoxicated to such an extent that the old toper was not conscious of what he was about; but in the familiar language of the day, that is "too thin." When a man is so drunk that he does not know what he is about, he is too far gone to perform the act which is attributed to old Lot. Not to put too nice a point upon it, a man who is so stupefied with liquor that he does not know where he is or what he is doing, is too drunk to beget an offspring. He would lose his virile power to such an extent that he would be imbecile and impotent. Ah ha! it is useless to falsify the facts; if the old man did, on that occasion, what he is charged with, he knew what he was about, and he must have taken pleasure in it. And the first offense of the first night, so far from producing remorse and contrition, seemed only to whet his appetite and make him ready for the second night's entertainment.

220. The Lot family were truly a bad lot—Mr. Lot and the Misses Lot. I cannot excuse either of the lot, and from my stand-point, they were far more culpable than was Mrs. Lot, who, with only the curiosity natural to almost every lady who ever lived, simply turned round to see how a city looked upon which a storm of melted and burning brimstone was descending. She simply turned her head and looked behind her when, we are assured in the book that cannot be wrong, she immediately turned into a pillar of salt. If her daughters had followed their mother's example and turned around and become salt, too, it would have been far more respectable than for them to be guilty of the conduct laid to their charge. It was very unladylike and very unchaste for them to get their weak old father into a beastly state of intoxication and then to seduce him to commit a crime which our extreme modesty almost prevents us from alluding to.

It may have been a common custom in that age of the world, when God spent much more of his time appearing to his patriarchs and in conversing with them from day to day than he has done of late years, for fathers to sleep with their daughters and get children by them, but such crimes against morality, decency, and nature's laws are not tolerated now, and those who are so base as to be guilty of this great offense are spurned and despised below all other members of the human family.

It is singular that it should have been deemed necessary by any pure-minded or sensible person to transmit such an indecent, immoral narration in the pages of a book, much less to the Book of all books, the Bible, which we are commanded to believe was penned, if not by the direct finger of God himself, at least by his dictation and under his immediate auspices. The Bible, which we are thus commanded to reverence as a gift from the source of all good, and to doubt which as being the heavenly manna bestowed upon a lost world is to suffer the eternal torments of hell, is filled with such moral stories as this about Lot and his daughters; and this is the book which our Christian friends insist shall be used in our schools as a reading-book for boys and girls, to teach them the morality and the purity which the saints and patriarchs in olden time used to practice.

221. It may easily be inferred that I do not give much credence to the pillar-of-salt story. I may have intimated as much before. There is no reason why any one should believe it. It is so out of the way of the course and laws of Nature that it is absolutely impossible. There is no other instance on record, sacred or profane, that an ounce of human flesh ever turned to salt. It is wholly impossible to change flesh into salt. Salt we know may be intermixed with flesh, and the flesh may absorb a certain percentage of the salt, and preserve it from decomposition, but it is impossible for the flesh to become salt, or for the salt to become flesh. Salt is composed of sodium and chloric acid. There is very little of these elements in the human organization, and there is no way known by which the nitrogen, hydrogen, carbon, ammonia, phosphorus, lime, and other elements that compose the human body, can be changed into soda and chlorine. The story is perfectly preposterous.

222. The reason given for performing such an impossibility is as puerile as the story itself. God was burning up a couple of cities with a heavy shower of fire and brimstone, and the woman exercised the very natural curiosity to look around and view the work God was doing. Was he ashamed of what he was about, that he did not want her to look at him or at his work? If he was engaged in a praiseworthy effort to benefit his creatures, it would seem that he could have no reasonable objections to Mrs. Lot just taking a look or two. Showers of fire and brimstone do not take place every day, and how natural for a woman to want to look at anything so remarkable. If the same rule of turning women into salt for every such trivial offense had been pursued from that day to this, the female population of the world would have been very largely decreased, and pillars of salt would be standing over the face of the earth, thicker in many places than the trees of a forest. But as that is the only instance on record where a woman was changed to salt, it is probable that he thought women could be put to a better use than to salt them down in that manner. The story is a very salty one, and every person has the privilege of believing it who can and who wishes to do so. I cannot believe it and do not want to.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Scientific American.

Among the various papers and periodicals to which we sent copies of Viscount Amberley's ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF for review and criticism, is the Scientific American. Its issue for the 14th inst. contains this notice:

"An Analysis of Religious Belief. By Viscount Amberley. New York City, D. M. Bennett. We would take this opportunity to inform publishers and correspondents that the columns of this journal are not open to the discussion, review or criticism of matters pertaining to religious faith; and that it is entirely useless to send us letters or books on such subjects. The volume above named is the work of a young English nobleman, now deceased. It created great comment in England at the time of its publication, and caused much pain to the relatives of its author, who, being best conversant with the circumstances of the production, made every effort to prevent its circulation. The present publisher, as a matter of charity and good taste, should have respected these desires. Hereafter, books of this class sent to us will remain unnoticed."

Is this the voice of enlightened science? Is this the language that ought to be expected from the leading scientific journal of the land? Should we look, in the last quarter of the nineteenth century, for the oracle of science to cry out with sonorous voice: "Let art and invention advance. Let improvements in all kinds of machinery and mechanical appliances be made. Let the present century far exceed all preceding centuries in all that pertains to the welfare of man in a physical or intellectual point of view, except with reference to the theological myths and fables of the past. Let the same superstitions and errors which ruled the ignorant races of the earth three thousand years ago, before man had invented the plow, the farm-wagon, the steam-engine, or the printing-press, continue to govern mankind, though they are far more enlightened in all directions now than when those errors had birth. Improve your machinery as much as you please; produce as many new discoveries in all departments of science and art as you like; but you must not touch the antique theological dogmas. They are sacred; they must not be improved; they must not be analyzed. The same views that have been hugged to the bosoms of ignorant people, for centuries must still longer be hugged. There must be no advance, no progress in this direction. The columns of this journal are open to nothing of the kind. Mrs. Grundy and her rich relatives, and the cousins and brothers-in-law of the clergy are upon our list, and they must not be offended. Their pet theories must not be examined and disturbed. We are the conservators of science and progressive truth, and our dicta must be observed!"

This is virtually the position taken by the Scientific American, which thousands of Liberal and progressive people all over the country are using their money to sustain. How will they like this ruling of the scientific organ of the country? Is this the feast to which they have been invited?

On the same page containing the above notice of Viscount Amberley's learned, able, and candid work appear notices of "Improved Card Racks," "Improved Firearms," "Improved Neck yoke Ring," "Improved Currycomb," "Improved Baggage Check," "Improved Sash Balance," "Improved Churn," and several other improvements of a similar character. These are all very proper, but the readers are given to understand that, so far as that journal is concerned, there must be no improvement in theological theories. These were perfect when first invented, and no improvement must be attempted. They must not even be examined, criticized or discussed.

A quotation from Ingersoll will be in order: "Science found agriculture plowing with a stick—reaping with a sickle—commerce at the mercy of the treacherous waves and the inconstant winds—a world without books—without schools—man denying the authority of reason, employing his ingenuity in the manufacture of instruments of torture, in building inquisitions and Cathedrals. It found the land filled with malicious monks—with persecuting Protestants and the burners of men. It found a world full of fear; ignorance upon its knees; credulity the greatest virtue; women treated like beasts of burden, cruelty the only means of reformation. It found the world at the mercy of disease and famine; men trying to read their fate in the stars, and to tell their fortunes by signs and wonders; generals thinking to conquer their enemies by making the sign of the cross or by telling a rosary. It found all history full of petty and ridiculous falsehood, and the Almighty was supposed to spend the most of his time turning sticks into snakes, drowning boys for swimming on Sunday, and killing little children for the purpose of converting their parents. It found the earth filled with slaves and tyrants, the people in all countries downtrodden, half-naked, half-starved, without hope and without reason in the world.

"Such was the condition of man when the morning of science dawned upon his brain. For the change that has taken place we are indebted solely to science—the only lever capable of raising mankind. Abject faith is barbarism; reason is civilization. To obey is slavish; to act from a sense of obligation perceived by the reason is noble. Ignorance worships mystery; Reason explains it; the one grovels, the other soars. Superstition has always been the relentless enemy of science; faith has been a hater of demonstration; hypocrisy has been sincere only in its dread of truth; and all religions are inconsistent with mental freedom. Under such conditions progress was impossible. Some one had to lead the way. The Church is, and always has been, incapable of a forward movement. Religion always looks back. The Church has already reduced Spain to a guitar, Italy to a hand-organ, and Ireland to exile."

The influences which grew out of these myths and fables are what the Scientific American does not wish to have disturbed, so far as its columns are concerned. The origin of these myths must not be enquired into, and a work, no matter how ably or how candidly written, is to receive no notice nor recognition at its hands!

We have not the slightest doubt that the publishers of the Scientific American are abundantly able to conduct their business to their full satisfaction, but we deny them the right to prescribe what "good taste" permits us to publish. We reserve that privilege for ourselves. We are entirely unable to see wherein we have outraged good taste in publishing Viscount Amberley's very scholarly and singularly able work, even though his superannuated father and the bigoted Duke of Bedford, in allegiance to the behests of the systems founded upon the myths which the Viscount fairly exposed, did not approve of it. The Viscount was not a boy nor a youth when he prepared this work for publication. He was between thirty and forty years of age, and had spent a busy life in research and study.

It is not difficult to realize what it cost Viscount Amberley to forego the approbation of his relatives and friends; to oppose the opulent and powerful Church which his government sustains at a heavy expense to the people, in bringing out the work to which he had devoted the best years of his life. He well knew he was bringing upon his head the obloquy of a proud and rich aristocracy, of the richest nation upon the globe, but he did not flinch in his devoted labor.

He possessed intelligence enough to know what he wished to present to his fellow beings, and this desire so beautifully seconded and carried out after his death by his intelligent, affectionate and noble mother, is sufficient guarantee that there was a commendable motive which prompted its publication. It is a work of unusual ability, fairness and candor. We would be glad to have the Scientific American, or any of its friends whom it does not wish to offend, point out the first material error the Viscount made in his entire work. It is worthy the attention of the best minds of the age; and we claim to have conferred a favor of no small magnitude upon the American public by placing this work before them, at so low a price, and this regardless of what may be the objections, on the ground of good taste, on the part of Lord John Russell, the Duke of Bedford, the Archbishop of Canterbury, or the editors of the Scientific American.

Our young and zealous friend, G. Gunneson, of Minneapolis, Minn., is kindly acting as agent for us in obtaining subscribers, and taking orders for our publications. He is actuated by a desire to render the cause of truth all the service he can, and we hope our friends in that locality will encourage him all in their power.

We wish many of our friends would interest themselves in trying to obtain new subscribers for us. We need more paying patrons. We are making a life and death struggle and need the aid of all sympathizing friends. The beginning of the "Humphrey-Bennett Discussion" in our last paper is a good time for the subscriptions of trial readers to commence. What a fine thing it would be for our cause if a few thousand new subscribers, even if for three months only, could be sent in. It can be done if our friends will work in earnest. Nothing great can be accomplished without effort, and we conjure the friends of truth to make some exertion to increase the subscription list of THE TRUTH SEEKER. It contains the most reading matter for the money of any Liberal paper in the country, and we will be glad if Liberals can feel that they have a duty to discharge to help sustain it.

VOLUME IV OF THE TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS is now ready to send out to patrons. Let those wanting a volume of 540 pages of first-class Liberal and scientific reading matter send 60 cents for a copy in paper, or $1.00 for the cloth bound. The four volumes complete, 2,100 pages; in paper covers, $2.00, in cloth, $3.00, postage included.

Good Testimony for Amberley.

BOURBON, IND., April 2, 1877.

DEAR BENNETT.—You have done a good work in bringing out a cheap edition of Viscount Amberley's work, thereby placing it within the reach of the mass of Liberal readers to whom heretofore owing to its high price it has been inaccessible. I hope your enterprise as a Liberal publisher will be rewarded by increased patronage.

"The Analysis of Religious Belief" is a work of much ability and learning. It is the work not only of a scholar, but of a thinker. And the thought of the work is characterized by comprehensiveness as well as acuteness. The style is clear, forcible and graceful; the spirit of the work generous, earnest, and noble; the tone always respectful and dignified, as becomes one who is examining the cherished belief of others and is seeking to instruct and elevate his fellow men. The work contains a great deal of information for the common reader, and much that must claim the attention of those who have read extensively and thought profoundly on the subject that he treats. What a pity that one so gifted and so good perished so early!

Those notices which appeared in some of the English papers when the work was first published conveying the impression, as you recollect, that it was the production of one who was too young, too deficient in maturity of thought and breadth of culture to entitle him to any consideration as an author, may have checked somewhat the circulation of the book at first, in accordance with the wishes of Lord John Russell and many members of his family; but such unjust criticisms can affect temporarily, only, a work of the merit of "Analysis of Religious Belief." Yours truly,

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Another Count(y) Heard From.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I notice in the World of the 9th inst. a literary curiosity, purporting to be a review of Lord Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief." The alleged review has presented a puzzle to my mind which it is possible that you can solve, viz: why should a school-boy select the "Analysis of Religious Belief"—a work intended for thinkers—as a subject upon which to air his ignorance in his first effort in composition? The article must have got into the paper by mistake, and escaped the editor's watchful eye because of its obscure style. The youthful aspirant to literary honors speaks of having Lord Amberley "oriented properly," meaning, I presume, orientated, or turned in an eastern direction. Why an eastern direction? Why not a western direction? or will not southern answer? He says, "It is matter of slight import, from the Christian stand-point, whether our forebears were infinitely below or infinitely above us." Forebears? Can it be possible that one of Barmum's cubs has become sufficiently developed to attempt a review, and to speak of his ancestors as his "forebears"? He accuses the Viscount of "commodiously mistranslating" certain passages from the Greek. That a passage may be mistranslated is possible, but how it can "be commodiously," i. e., properly or fitly, mistranslated is a puzzler. The amateur reviewer evidently intended to say something wise or sensible about the subject of his laborious and ungrammatical composition, but if he has done so he has carefully concealed the fact. He should abstain from the perusal of Greek and Latin phrase-books until sufficiently well acquainted with the English language to write a half-column article without making ten or twelve blunders.

I am afraid I trespass by taking up so much of your space with such an insignificant subject, but before I close I wish to say a few words to this "encyclopedantic" youngster.

Sonny, if you really desire to leave your present blissful state and become wise, run right straight home, have your hair combed and your nasal appendage attended to, coax your mamma to buy you a book called a grammar—you may have heard of it before—study it a few years, and if it does not give you wisdom, it will at least enable you to present your ignorance to the reading and lecture-attending public in grammatical language. But if you will persist in writing compositions, do not "rush in where angels fear to tread," leave Lord Amberley to men of understanding, and try your "trenchant pen" upon some subject with which you alone are familiar—"Genealogical Memoranda Relating to the Family of Forebears," or "Theological Flip-Flaps in a Diocesan Church Calendar," or "Orientations of the Yeomanry Cavalry in a Serbonian Bog," for instance—and if your articles should be rejected by the newspapers, you can read them to the members of some liberal and patient club.

Theoretically and practically yours,
COUNT ALESSANDRO DI OYSTERCAG.

A GHOST IN A PRINTING OFFICE.—Something must be done to suppress this literary spook, Jones—this Stephen who died a martyr a few weeks ago in Chicago at the hands of an infuriated husband, on account of conduct in which the wife of the assailant was not entirely uninvolved. He is dead; but he still writeth. He dictates from the Summer Land editorials for his old paper, as long and uninteresting as ever, to the great disadvantage of other Spiritualistic writers, who eagerly yearn to succeed him at the desk of the Religio-Philosophical Journal. This is demoralizing. It is unjust. It is in violation of all laws of political economy. Labor reform has no rules which countenance such conduct. If there is to be any such thing as fair play, it must be understood that when an editor dies his connection with the paper shall absolutely cease. The bourne to which he goes, ought to be one from which no copy can return. It is obvious that, other things being equal, a living editor cannot compete with a dead one. The disembodied rhetorician is able to put forth a great amount of energy on a very small capital. It is impossible to rival him. He is worse than Chinese cheap labor. The coolie, on landing at San Francisco, can live on a rat a day, provide himself with clothes for two dollars a year, and sleep in a bunk hardly large enough for a croton bug; but a disembodied person runs as cheaply as a cheap machine that consumes nothing, never sleeps, and requires no wardrobe whatever. A human being with tissues that require to be constantly maintained with a supply of oxygen, nitrogen, carbon and the salts, cannot profitably compete with an editor who has moulted, and set up business as an active ghost. If this is to go on there will be left no work for any of us mortals. The population of this world is to be the population of the other only as one to millions, and if the rivalry of which Stephen Jones furnishes an awful example is to be actively prosecuted, nobody's bread and butter will be safe. If journalists who have shuffled off this mortal coil can come back and take control of their newspapers, railroad presidents and insurance solicitors can still conduct business at the old stand, and Teddy, who died of a fever, and Bill, who was killed in the Bowery, can still retain their places on a good deal smaller wages than would support human life. There must be an end to this invasion of terrestrial territory. If it is to continue, the possibilities are appalling. To compete successfully we must all become spirits. The rivalry would disorganize trade and end in the destruction of human society. We trust that Jones himself will see the point and desist. Deadheading is going out of date, and the rule that dead men tell no tales should be enforced by proper penalties.—Graphic.

Friendly Correspondence.

A. O. DURHAM, Clarence, Mo., writes: "The Analysis of Religious Belief" is received. I like very much the style and workmanship. Its perusal is very interesting and the price is low.

MRS. JENNIE B. BROWN, Stony Creek, Conn., writes: I am very much pleased with the "Analysis of Religious Belief." It is gotten up in good style. I have also read your "World's Sages" with great interest, and find it very convenient for reference. I have lent the copy of "John's Way" you sent me to several to read, and all admit that there is much truth and force embodied in it which cannot fail to move the mind of the reader to an acceptance of its truthful conclusions.

M. BABCOCK, St. John's, Mich., writes: We have made an effort to get the Bible out of our school, but have only succeeded in reducing time from fifteen to five minutes, with no compulsion, owing to the very active part taken by our now tax-paying ministers of the Gospel, who, not satisfied with running the church, are bound to run our public schools also. Send me as many of No. 13 (revised list) "Arrangement of Priestcraft," as you can afford for the inclosed one dollar. I shall give them to the public that they may know friends in their true character. The ten dollars' worth of tracts that you sent me a short time since are nearly all given away to such as I think will read them.

M. L. SANDERS, Lincoln, Ill., writes: Please find enclosed fifty cents, and send me the following tracts: "Logic of Prayer," by Charles Stephenson; fifteen cents worth of "Leaflets," "Thirty-six Questions," twenty-five cents worth; "The Resurrection of Christ," by W. S. Bell. The above are for distribution, and I expect to make a convert to each tract. This may sound rather extravagant, notwithstanding I have worked miracles with those that I have received of you heretofore, and if every reader would send you fifty cents or one dollar for tracts to distribute among our Christian friends, that they may be healed of their blind faith, and any Free thinker that has the nerve can take two dollars' worth of your tracts and leaflets, and convert more Christians to Infidelity than Moody can convert Infidels to Christianity in a life-time. Whenever your leaflet called "Thirty-six Questions" falls into the hands of a Christian, and if he has the pluck to argue them, the first thing he knows he is badly wounded in his faith, and when once stripped of that he holds most dear, he is found standing in an Infidel's shoes. Now I kindly suggest to every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER to send for one dollar's worth of tracts and leaflets, and as the commander says, make ready, take aim, and fire a volley of common sense and reason into their gloomy minds.

J. R. HINCKLE, Mt. Freedom, W. Va., writes: Having been very busily engaged for some weeks I have not had the pleasure of a friendly greeting with you in that time. How do you fare? How are you getting on with respect to health, strength, etc., while grinding out those knotty problems for the mythical Jehovah and his would-be followers? Problems which, if they solve our scientific and common-sense principles, will knock Infidelity and Atheism higher than a kite. But we will not be put off any longer with the old evasion, replies that "it was not intended for us to know," or that "all will be made plain beyond the skies." We'll take our teaching now. Unless Jehovah or some of his aids rise to explain in accordance with the best means we have of comprehending things, we'll doubt their ability to do so, and constitute ourselves a standing "commission" to make the "count" and investigate the frauds they have been perpetrating on the whole human family from time immemorial. We'll not "bulldoze" anybody, nor do we fear being "dozed."

All hail to that principle of right which has almost sunk the spirit of persecution for honest opinion's sake into oblivion; and which is fast bringing universal liberty to all.

What a glorious thing it is to be a mental free-man! To act upon the best known principles of right without the fear of a frowning god or a tormenting devil. And though our thoughts may not be worth a "penny," the knowledge of their being unfettered by custom or creed is infinitely valuable.

Many of my friends have read my copy of Bob's "Gods and other Lectures" and it seems that saint and sinner alike are pleased.

We all like the "Friendly Correspondence" page of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We contrast it with the Methodist experience-meetings that we used to frequent.

Long life and prosperity to thee and thy paper.

N. R. ZEDIKER, Boone, Iowa, writes: I attended a lecture at the Methodist Church in this place on the evening of the 28th ult., by Alexander Burns, D.D.; subject, "Free Thinking." And as the Christian fraternity pronounced it a first-class entertainment, I must give you the weight of his arguments. He introduced the subject with a few explanatory remarks respecting man and animals, then proceeded to explain what Free thought was. He believed in Free thinking, but not to overreach the bounds of God's law, as laid down in the Bible. "The Christian religion," he argues, "is founded upon the supremacy of reason, and modern skepticism and criticism have only added a brighter lustre to its immortal fame." What a pity that more of those who think are not of the same opinion. After firing a few blank cartridges at Hume, he opened his artillery upon Huxley, Spencer, Tyndall, and Darwin, only leaving off when his ammunition was exhausted. "Hume's argument, in the main, was a mere begging of the question, his statements containing several falsehoods," but he failed to bring any of them to light. He doubted not but there were many things claimed to be miracles that were mere counterfeits, and asserted that a counterfeit was proof positive of a genuine article. Spiritualism wants no stronger proof than this, for the many frauds and counterfeits that have followed in its wake could not exist—according to this theory—unless Spiritualism was a "genuine article," and this the reverend gentleman would not care to admit. He believed in the freedom of reason. "There is nothing," he says, "so stultifying to reason as abject slavery either of mind or body;" and in the next breath he urges them to serve a deity, dwelling elaborately upon the soothing, elevating and beneficent effects of prayer; thus denouncing slavery in one breath, and advocating it in the next. He bases the Christian faith upon conscience, "which," he urges, "is the strongest evidence that can be given of its infallibility. Sight, touch, taste or smell are not to be held in comparison with conscience." "We know," he adds, "that the Lord hears and answers prayer, because we feel it." Here he proclaims the Christian religion to be a truth, and proves that prayer is answered by the evidence of conscience. Now the conscience of a Mahometan would not prove a prayer to be answered by a Christian God, nor the conscience of a Christian prove a prayer to be answered by the gods of other nations. The Buddhists believe their religion to be true, their prayers to be answered, yet they worship not through the name of Jesus of Nazareth, and their conscience, according to Burns, is their proof. The heathen believes it right to worship idols, and their belief is approved by their conscience. All nations of the world, that worship as many gods, believe they are right, and their various beliefs are supported by their conscience, and each bars the other from a throne of grace. Many of the little defects of science were alluded to, but not one from the Bible, which had God for its author (?) It seems strange that an intelligent community can be delighted with such subterfuge. A minister of the Gospel in Lake City, after a fruitless labor to bring souls to Christ, requested all that were willing to pray for the conversion of souls to rise up. No one having arisen, he repeated the request, whereupon but two or three arose to their feet, when he very energetically exclaimed, "There's no use of preaching any longer, for there would not be a single soul saved, not one."

JAMES L. MCKELVEY, Davenport, Iowa, writes: Enclosed find fifty cents for which you may send me "Ingersoll's Lectures" (30 cent edition), "The Old and the New," "Discussion with Geo. Snodgrass," "Is there a God" (Bradlaugh), "Underwood's Prayer," and two copies of "Come to Dinner." I want to give the last two to some of my pious friends who always thank God when they sit down to eat their meals earned by the sweat of their brow. I think it will be an incentive to make them live "nearer to him" who was so kind and providing to his "chosen people" in times gone by (see Ezek., iv., 12). I have often thought since I read "Come to Dinner" what a nice thing it would be if "our ecclesiastical gentry" would only have to make a meal or two on those God-ordered, exquisitely seasoned "flavjacks" mentioned in the above chapter. I think it would literally lessen their reverence for the old Jew "Bulldozer" of the Old Testament. Your paper is getting better and better as it grows older. Your "What I Don't Believe," and "Interrogatories to Jehovah," are simply enormous. Even the Christians themselves cannot help reading them. I was raised a Presbyterian, but about three years ago I decided to "go behind the returns" (of bibles and preachers), and do my own thinking. Thanks to Thomas Paine and the glorious old Boston Investigator, and the staunch and plucky little TRUTH SEEKER, I am now on the right track, and intend to remain there, not by the help of God or Christ; not by the reading of bibles or repeating of creeds, but by the exercise of that same reason and common sense that me an Infidel. I hope you will be able to keep your paper alive and active as long as there is a vestige of priestcraft and superstition remaining. It is actually astonishing how so many persons there are of good sense who read the Bible and still believe it to be the word of an all-wise and perfect being. I must say that I do not believe that there is another book on the face of the earth containing commands which will compare with those found in the Christian Bible. Why, you can find commands to commit murder, to steal and lie and get drunk, to rob and plunder other nations, and to burn their cities, to murder their men and children and ravish their wives and daughters; and in one instance the God of the Bible went so far as to command the Jews, his own "chosen people," to eat their own excrement and that of cows. And in another instance he commanded the people to have their children stoned to death for what they were pleased to call "stubbornness." Read, for information, the following chapters: Deut., xli., xli., xli., and xli.; Num., xxxi.; Jer., xxv., 27 and 28; also 2d Kings, x., 11-30. After all these horrible and brutal commands, after all the ignorance, obscenity, and absurdity found in the Bible, and evident to Christians themselves, they have the audacity to get up and say that their God is unchangeable in his being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth. Yes, Christians, your God is unchangeable; so much so that he made a world and peopled it with human beings, animals, and plants, pronounced it very good, and then said, "It repenteth me that I have made them" (Gen., vi., 7). Just the same as if a man, claiming to be a first-class builder, were to put up a very fine house, and then, because it did not suit him, went to work and demolished it, notwithstanding he had previously claimed it to be "infinitely perfect." What a smart God. Very unchangeable indeed, but to bring it to a fine point: if the Christian's God really is unchangeable and all-wise, and is "of purer eyes than to behold evil, and cannot look on iniquity," then we must come to the conclusion that there was a time when all these horrible and brutal commands of the Bible God were in harmony with infinite wisdom and goodness. To believe the Bible, then, we must believe that there was a time when it was right to commit murder, right to steal and lie and get drunk, right to rob and plunder other nations, and ravish their wives and daughters because they essayed to defend themselves and their property; and when it was right for people to descend to the level of swine, and eat their own excrement. If we are to believe the twentieth chapter of Deuteronomy, it was wrong for a peaceable nation to defend itself from the attacks of an invading army; wrong for them to assert their manhood, and wrong for them to be brave and heroic defenders of human liberty, wrong for them to be men, but right for them to become slaves and servants to their enemies. If we are to believe it, this book was written by the command of an unchangeable God. Then we must believe that there was a time when good was bad, when right was wrong, when honesty and decency were crimes, and when grand larceny and murder were the greatest virtues. In fact, we must reverse all our ideas of justice, reason, and common sense, sink to the level of bestiality and barbarity, and worship in slavish fear and hypocrisy, under the name of religion, the king of crowned ruffians, robbers, and murderers—the Bible God.

WM. NIBHART, Stockton, Ind., writes: They have just shut down a soul-saving machine—"distracted meeting"—near this place. It was set up and run by a sect called Campbellites, alias Disciples, alias Christians. I prefer using the term Campbellites, since it is the historical name. The fireman is Elder Walton, a Southern refugee, who ran away from his wife and children during the war, and let them, I presume, starve to death; at least, upon his return, after the war, he found them all dead. When he came here, he bruted all over the country, that he had come to kill Infidelity. He left an appointment and preached, but Infidelity still lives: the fact is, he does not know what Infidelity is! In a conversation which I had with him I challenged him to a discussion on the authenticity of the Bible. He replied that there was only one side to the question, and that scientific men and Infidels were all fools, and he quoted the following Scripture to prove his assertion: "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom;" "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God." Thinking he had taken pretty "broad grounds," I wondered if he would expand the assertion still further: so I asked him what he would do with the other different sects. His reply was that they were no better than Infidels. I related our conversation to several persons, and when he was running his gospel machine, he declared from the "sacred" pulpit that whoever said that he made such assertions was a liar. I, having a witness, went to their next meeting and wanted permission to free myself from the odium which had been cast upon me by being denounced as a liar. But the members cried me down, and would not grant me that privilege. So you see they believe and execute that damnable phrase, "The ends justify the means." If they could make the leading Infidel, as they thought, out a liar, and thereby save souls, it was all right. Well, they ran their mill till they had ground the sense out of some half-dozen. Among the converts is a young man, who had been taken out of the Baptist fold to enjoy the more beneficial influences to be derived from associating with the occupants of the State Prison. He enjoyed those privileges for two years, and a few months ago returned; and he has so far behaved with credit to himself. But the point I wish to make is this: This young man, early in the winter, became a member of our Literary Society, and the Christians at once set up the howl that the Infidels could only go in the society of thieves, robbers, murderers, etc., and they could not see how honest men could Mr. such a character. Now, my Christian friends, you must not only "Mr." this young man, but you must necessarily brother him. You are welcome to him. I wish you much joy. I understand that the Campbellites here have adopted a new mode of obtaining converts. They have "Saint Agents," or men who buy saints at as low figures as they can. They pay about one dollar per head. But after they have "put off the old man" and are garbed with their saintly cloak (which, by the way, is a good one under which to hide Christian sneaks and saintly rascals) they are worth but little to any one. Brother Bennett, what are saints quoted at in your locality? Now, my Christian friends, another word to you. Let us see who is in keeping of the best society, and upon whom the charge of murderer, liar, etc., should rest. Your "book of all books" says: "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer" (John iii. 15). Again, it says, "If any man come unto me and hate not his father, mother, and wife, and children, and brethren and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple" (Luke xiv. 26). So you see by your own acknowledgment and belief you are murderers. My Campbellite friends, here is the door of your church: "He that believeth and is baptized [immersed] shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark xvi, 16). Please read the next two verses: "And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues. They shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." Do you believe this? Of course you do? Then, I say, exhibit your power. Let skeptics see you handle, for instance, a boa constrictor or a rattlesnake. Let them see you heal the sick by this method. Let them see you cast out devils. Let them hear you speak languages that you never learned. Let them see you take a drachm of strychnine or Paris-green or other "deadly things" without injury to yourselves, and they will certainly embrace your doctrines. Now, who is a liar? "He that believeth these sayings and doeth them not is a liar, and the truth is not in him." Now infidels are not made liars and murderers by their own doctrine. They only worship Truth, and bow to Reason. Christians should not cast the epithets of liar, etc., until their own characters are purified. I will give below the Campbellite Bible Condensed, or Campbellism in a Nutshell: 1. Believe as I do or be damned. 2. Believe that Jesus Christ is the son of God, and you shall be saved. 3. All outside of our church are fools and idiots, and are of the devil. 4. He that believeth and is immersed back downward shall be saved; and he that is not immersed back downward shall be damned. 5. You must commune every Lord's day, or you will surely forget the Lord. 6. We invite others to commune with us but they will surely drink damnation unto themselves. 7. Regard only one thing above religion, and let that be politics. 8. No man hath a right to pray, except he has been immersed back downward. 9. When ye pray, stand up lest ye soil your broadcloth. 10. He that looketh in the Word, and seeth not water in every syllable therein, is a heretic, and cannot be a disciple.

Special Notices.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygienic Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

SPERMATORRHOEA.—Dr. R. P. Fellows' Warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this life-wasting disease. It is an external application, and has made 1000 permanent cures. Charges moderate. Address with stamp, Vineland, New Jersey. t12

WANTED—AN EXPERIENCED NURSE and housekeeper with approved morals, active, intelligent, and of sufficient age to give character to a Hygienic Institute. Would prefer a lady wishing treatment and board for impaired health, with a view to the position after it is restored. Address J. S. Lyons, M. D., Springfield, Mo.

Stereopticon for Sale, and OVER TWO HUNDRED BEAUTIFUL PICTURES.—As I wish to procure more expensive apparatus for my next season's work, adapted to the largest halls, I offer my oxy-calium stereopticon (one of McAllister's best, suitable for halls seating 300 people), and over two hundred elegant views, for sale. It affords a safe, pleasant business for any gentleman who is desirous of traveling. For particulars address W. F. JAMIESON, Glenwood, Iowa.

THE EVOLUTION

For March contains "Evolution in Biology and Philology," "The Spontaneous Generation Question," "Ethics of the Positive Philosophy," "Amend the Constitution," "The Jews in Europe," "New Laws in Italy," "Review of Sir John Lubbock in Arts," "Personals," "Peachell's Races of Man," "Scientific Notes" and ten other interesting articles. Send 15 cents for it to 34 Dey street, N. Y.

A DAILY-SERVICEABLE NOVELTY—A PERFECT VADE MECUM.

Duplex Gusset-End Wallet.

[Size, closed, 5 1/2 x 9 inches.]

To compactly hold bills, papers, etc., usually carried about the person; for reliable use at Store Office and Home; with valuable Tables, Statistics, Calendar, Measuring Gauge, etc., upon it. Contents cannot work out. NEEDED by every Professional and Business Man and Woman in the country. Satisfaction guaranteed to all who will send 25 cents for a package.

W. N. CLAPP,

8 Oakland Ave., Jersey City, N. J. Agents will do well to address, enclosing as above. 3714

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319 5th Ave., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters P. O. Box 4329 New York City. 171

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1740

COPY YOUR LETTERS

USE
Excelsior Copying Book,
Made of Chemical Paper.

Quickly copies any writing WITHOUT Water, PRESS, or BRUSH, used at home, library or office. For Ladies wishing to retain copies of letters, every business man, clergyman, correspondent, traveler it is invaluable—sells at sight. Send $3.00 and we will send a 300 page Book, letter size, BY MAIL paid to any address. We refer to any Commercial Agency. Stamp for Agents' Circular. EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING CO., 110 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill. 5000 AGENTS wanted. 6114

WINTER'S

WONDERFUL HAIR RESTORER

is now offered to the people in the form of a recipe, sent post-paid to any address for $1.00. Is made of simple ingredients. No sulphur. No sugar of lead, nor any other poisonous substance. Restores faded, dry, harsh, and falling hair to softness and natural color. Restores hair to the prematurely bald-headed where all other hair restoratives have failed. Removes all unpleasant irritation, itching, and scaly dryness. Three Reasons why every one who has lost or is losing their hair should buy this valuable HAIR RESTORATIVE RECIPE. First. It is the best and most successful hair restorative ever discovered. Second. It contains no poisonous substances. Third. Every purchaser of this Wonderful Hair Restorative Recipe can make his own remedy at trifling cost. Address J. C. WINTERS, CINCINNATI, Pica-way Co., Ohio. 3m06

The Resurrection of Jesus.

A new Lecture by W. S. BELL, of New Bedford, Mass., the able Libera Lecturer. It is an excellent Essay. It costs but ten cents, mailed to any address. Send for a copy. Address

D. M. BENNETT,
SCIENCE HALL, 141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

DR. E. B. FOOT'S PLAIN HOME TALK. A most valuable work on health and disease, with the most rational modes of treatment. It contains over 900 pages and 300 illustrations. As a work on Hygiene, it has hardly an equal. Price, with a beautiful chromo, $3.25.

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3.00; Leather, $4.00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4.50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,
141 Eighth St., New York.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"

In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

SCOTTISH

WESTERN LOAN CO., OF LEROY, MINN.

Invest Money in first mortgages on improved farms in Iowa and Minnesota. Interest nine per cent annually in advance. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. Send for circulars to G. L. HENDERSON, President, 141 Eighth street, New York. 1716

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED—First. "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second. "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and 95 cents, postpaid free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1750

TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS (Bound), Vols. I, II, and III, comprising nearly ninety tracts, including the Scientific Series, containing 500 pages each, or 1,500 in all. They embrace a variety of subjects, by different authors, and are very interesting reading. Each volume will contain a wood-cut portrait of the Publisher. Will be ready in January, 1876, and will be furnished at the extremely low price of 50 cents per volume, in paper, or $1.50 for the three volumes; $1 in cloth, or $2.50 for the three volumes.

Bankrupt Sale of Jewelry.

GREAT FAILURE OF THE MILTON GOLD JEWELRY COMPANY IN LONDON

Their Entire Stock Consigned to us to Raise Money as Soon as Possible.

Everybody has heard of MILTON GOLD JEWELRY, it having been sold in this market for the last ten years, and worn by the best and richest class of our population. Still it takes an expert to distinguish Milton Gold from Virginia Gold. In order to dispose of this large consignment in the speediest way, we have put up lots which we offer to the public for the tenth part of their value.

FIFTY-CENT LOT.

One pair elegant sleeve-buttons, retail price $1.00
One set spiral shirt-studs, retail price .75
One beautiful scarf-pin, stone setting, retail price .75
One elegant gent's watch chain, latest pattern, retail price 1.50
One collar-button, retail price .50
One elegant wedding ring, very heavy, retail price 2.00

Total.....$6.50

Remember that we will send you the above-named six articles, which we have retailed for $6.50, by mail, post-paid, for fifty cents, 4 sample lots for $1.50, or 12 sample lots for $4.

ONE DOLLAR LOT.

One pair gent's sleeve buttons, stone setting, retail price $1.20
One set elegant spiral studs to match same 1.05
One beautiful ladies' band engagement ring 2.00
One gent's large seal ring 2.00
One ladies' long neck chain 2.75
One gent's heavy plate watch chain 1.75
One gent's "Lake George" diamond stud 1.00
One beautiful scarf-pin 72
One pair ladies' engraved sleeve-buttons 1.00

Total.....$13.50

TWO DOLLAR LOT.

One set gold front pin and ear-rings.
One ladies' long neck-chain.
One elegant locket for the above.
One ladies' "Pompadour" watch chain.
One pair stone sleeve-buttons.
One pair engraved sleeve-buttons.
One amethyst stone ring.
One gent's large seal ring.
One ladies' band engagement ring.
One set spiral shirt studs.
One gent's Lake George diamond stud.
One beautiful scarf-pin.

FIVE DOLLAR LOT.

One ladies' opera chain with slide and tassel.
One heavy ladies' neck-chain.
One beautiful locket for the above.
One ladies' Cameo pin and earrings.
One pair (2) elegant bracelets.
One pair amethyst sleeve buttons inlaid with pearls.
One pair onyx sleeve-buttons.
One set studs to match the above.
One fine gent's watch-chain with charm.
One amethyst ring inlaid with pearls.
One topaz ring inlaid with pearls.
One ladies' heavy band ring.
One ladies' chemise button.
One gent's Parisian diamond pin.
One collar button.
One extra fine set studs.

The above figures are the prices these goods have been retailed at in our leading cities. We mention these figures to give you an idea of the goods.

A FINE SOLID SILVER WATCH FREE.

On receipt of $15 we will send by express, one dozen 50 ct. lots and one of each of the others; also one elegant Watch, Ladies' or Gents' size, guaranteed to be a good timekeeper. Such opportunity is offered but once in a lifetime.

We want our patrons and the public in general to understand that this is Milton Gold Jewelry and no common Plated Ware. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance or money refunded. Send money by P. O. order or registered letter.

Our Firm and Milton Gold Jewelry are endorsed by all the leading newspapers of the country. Goods sent C. O. D. if $5.00 is sent with the order, not otherwise. Address all orders to

RALSTON JEWELRY CO.,

Importers of Watches and Jewelry.

LaSalle and Randolph Streets, Chicago, Illinois.

KIDDER'S SECRETS OF BEE-KEEPING.

One of the most reliable Bee-Books now in use. It touches on over a hundred points pertaining to Bee-Keeping. It is a guide to the Bee-keeper in every department of Bee management. It is gotten up in condensed form, and contains as much matter as any two-dollar book, and yet we propose to sell it at a much less price. Bound, 75 cts.; Paper cover, 50 cts. Postage free. Address, D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

THE HEROINES OF FREETHOUGHT.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-Smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.
Paine's Monument.
Paine's Bust.
Voltaire.
Rousseau.
Humboldt.
Goethe.
Schiller.
Aug. Comte.
Helne.
Alex. Pope.
John Milton.
Goldsmith.
Shelley.
Byron.
Burns.
Washington.
Franklin.
Jefferson.
John Adams.
J. Q. Adams.
Madison.
Jackson.
Lincoln.
Lincoln's Monument.
Gerrit Smith.
Henry C. Wright.
J. S. Mill.
Sumner.
Edgar A. Poe.
Greeley.
Castellar.
Tennyson.
Darwin.
Tyndall.
H. Spencer.
Huxley.
Proctor.
Draper.
Bradlaugh.
Holyoake.
Ingersoll.
Underwood.
Mendum.
Seaver.
L. Colby.
Dr. Hare.
F. E. Abbot.
Frothingham.
Wendell Phillips.
Emerson.
Garrison.
Henry Bergh.
Peter Cooper.
D. B. Burt.
S. P. Andrews.
Walt Whitman.
Froude.
Max Muller.
Warren Chase.
Jas. Parton.
Wm. Denton.
Dr. Slade.
A. J. Davis.
Foster.
J. M. Peabody.
Frances Wright.
E. Y. Wilson.
G. L. Henderson.
Prof. Fiske.
Fred Douglas.
N. P. Banks.
P. V. Nasby.
Beecher.
Tilton.
Moulton.
G. W. Curtis.
Th. Nast.
J. G. Bennett.
Chas. A. Dana.
Phoebe Carey.
Alice Carey.
Elizabeth C. Stanton.
Susan B. Anthony.
Lucy Stone.
Julia Ward Howe.
Chas. Cheney.
Paulina Davis.
Mary F. Davis.
Emma H. Britten.
Lizzie Fowler.
Mrs. Slenker.
Susan H. Wixon.
D. M. Bennett.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc., at 20 cents each singly, or six for one dollar.

Neat Albums, by mail, holding 30 photos., 80 cts., holding 50, $1.
D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you, $25 a day sure to all. BIRKSON & SMITH, 50 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine. 11

THE WORLD'S SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS:

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT,
Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - - $3.00
ARABESQUE, colored leather, red burnished edges, - - - 4.00
MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked head-band, - - - 4.50

Address, D. M. BENNETT,

Eating for Strength.

A NEW HEALTH COOKERY BOOK.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Which should be in the hands of every person who would eat to retain and regain health, strength and beauty. It contains, besides the science of eating and one hundred answers to questions which most people are anxious to know, nearly one hundred pages devoted to the best healthful recipes for foods and drinks, how to feed one's self, feeble babes and delicate children so as to get the best bodily development. Mothers who do not nurse their children will find full directions for feeding them, and so will mothers who have delicate children, and invalids who wish to know the best foods. Price, $1, postage free.

For sale Wholesale and retail by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

POSITIVELY

$50.00 WORTH OF INFORMATION in form of a nice book of over 100 pages, well illustrated, sent post-paid for $1.00

BY A PRACTICAL CLOSE OBSERVER

How to keep the hens, and hen-roosts free from lice. How to feed to get an abundance of eggs, even in mid winter. How to manage setting hens, chickens, &c., and how to preserve eggs a great length of time. Best breeds of hens, &c. Enclose $1.00 with order.

E. D. BLAKEMAN, Circleville, Ohio.

Mr. Blakeman is a school-boy friend of ours. We know him well; he is entirely reliable, and the information he has to impart upon the poultry subject is valuable.—ED. T. S.]

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CHAVEN.

Price, by mail, $1.00. Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth Street, New York.

Gems of Thought.

It is error, only, and not truth, that shrinks from inquiry.—Thomas Paine.

Evil is the friction of Nature's activities working for eternal good.—Hudson Tuttle.

SUPERSTITION is a religion out of fashion, and religion is a superstition in fashion.—Hobbes.

DARE I say,
No spirit ever broke the band
That stays him from the native land
Where first he walked when elapsed in clay?
—Tennyson.

It is only through the refining influence of sorrow that mortals approach the perfection of manhood and womanhood. Thorns are as beautiful as roses when once we learn their use.—Susan H. Wixon.

We affect fashion—we affect Orthodoxy and Liberalism, and we support neither. We are governed by the rule "they say." "They say" has ruined men and brought women to misery. Show me one who is content with himself and a law unto himself, and I will show you the ideal man.—Prof. Felix Adler.

PERSEVERE in doing good. Remember that every well-meant effort of thy life has brought its own recompense to thee, outside of the good accomplished for others. Every true and sincere aspiration for the well-being of others has been a means of inestimable good to thy own nature. Labor on, therefore, cheerfully and contentedly, for though thou mayest not realize the good achieved, the effort to accomplish it is never labor lost.—Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

For these things tend still upward—progress is the law of life—man's self is not yet Man! Nor shall I deem his object served, his end attained, his genuine strength put fairly forth, While only here and there a star dispels The darkness; here and there a towering mind O'erlooks its prostrate fellows; when the host Is out at once to the despair of night, When all mankind alike is perfected, Equal in full-blown powers—then, not till then I say, begins man's general infancy!
—Browning.

ALL new truths have to come into the mind as disturbing elements, overturning and uprooting all opinions and all ideas. The world is naturally conservative, and all of us are disposed to have faith in the prevailing opinions of the day; and it is a hard matter to divest ourselves of prejudice, and look at new ideas unbiased by preconceived opinions. So we consequently use our utmost endeavors to make each new truth harmonize with all the old notions that we have been all our lives accumulating. The true plan is to test each new idea by known facts of science and philosophy and accept only such as these pronounce sound and correct.—Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

As to the savage races, those sad survivors of an infant world, for whom nothing better can be wished than a quiet death, it is almost derision to apply our dogmatic formulae to them. Before making Christians of them, we should first have to make them men, and it is doubtful if we should succeed in doing that. The poor Otaheitan is trained to attend mass or sermon, but the incurable softness of his brain is not remedied; he is only made to die of melancholy or ennui. Oh! leave these children of Nature to fade away on their mother's bosom. Let us not with our stern dogmas, the fruit of twenty centuries of reflection, disturb their childish play, their dances by moonlight, their hours of sweet intoxication.—Renaud.

THINK of the millions of men and women who have been destroyed simply for loving and worshipping God. Is it possible that this God, having infinite power, saw his loving and heroic children languishing in the darkness of dungeons; heard the clank of their chains when they lifted their hands to him in the agony of prayer; saw them stretched upon the bigot's rack, where death alone had pity; saw the serpent flames crawl hissing round their shrinking forms—saw all this for sixteen hundred years, and sat as silent as a stone? From such a God why should man expect assistance? Why should he waste his days in fruitless prayer? Why should he fall upon his knees and implore a phantom—a phantom that is deaf, and dumb, and blind.—Ingersoll.

If we lift the veil of sanctimony which hangs around the priesthood, where is the sense of Godship? We see nothing but illusion, delusion and barren self-deception. Not to the man but to the office does the name belong. The idea of direct relations with Deity, the authority to bless, aye, and to curse, are among the causes of these conditions. Blood-stained and black with vice are the annals of the fanatic and vicious priesthood! But have there not been great men in this order? Nay, is it not worth perpetuating now? I say it with uplifted soul, "There shall be a new ideal to enlist men's hearts and sympathies—a new order of priests. Priests we will have. But they shall not be known by the surplice and cassock. They will have no altars; at least, they shall have no dogmas. They shall not be more than human, only they shall be more human. We have priests of science, of art, of literature—artists of the good. Such a priest as we will have was Socrates. He was an ideal priest, he held no office. He ministered at no shrine. Yet he was in the true sense a priest—simple, homely, and honest—with one deep, potent charm. He was the reverse of dogmatic. He sought to lead men to find the truth for themselves. To those who asked him questions in religion, he said,—"Are ye, then, masters of humanity, that ye seek to pry into divine secrets? He was a sun to which the world turned and was thereby enlightened. So, you see, what we seek is not a new thing. There has been a priesthood of the ideal from the earliest time.—Prof. Felix Adler.

Odds and Ends.

It may snow and snow, but the mosquito season is no farther away for a' that.

MEN who have bank notes coming due should feel glad to see the days growing longer.

SUCCESS don't consist in never making blunders, but in never making the same one twice.

TEACHER:—"Why did John gird up his loins?"
Boy:—"Why—so his breeches wouldn't fall off?"

THE past winter has given positive proof that the perfect snow plow has not yet been invented.

BE merciful to all dumb animals; no man can get to heaven on a sore-backed horse.—Josh Billings.

GEORGE McCLURE, of Texas, is lugging fifty-five duck-shot around in his body, and when he says he doesn't feel well, people believe him.

THE druggist who hasn't invented a cough medicine of his own is some indolent man who had rather whittle a shingle than wait on customers.

IT now transpires that Cassabianca, who wouldn't leave the burning ship was twenty years old, had warts on his hands, and had been shipped away to sea to get rid of him.

It is related that in a certain town in the northern part of Maine the people were holding a meeting, when the pastor remarked that if any present had relatives or friends in distant lands, prayers would be offered in their behalf. No sooner was the sentence completed than a simple-looking sister arose and thus addressed the pastor: "I would like you to pray for my brother. He went away two weeks ago, and I haven't heard from him since. I don't know just where he is, but you need not pray below Bangor."

AN ABBREVIATED STATEMENT.—Col. Mich. O. Connell, a Ten-Or. from Ind. Ia., whose heart was Ala. Fla. Mo. for a Ga. Miss. from Texas drank a Kan. of R. I. Wis. Ky., one Sunday after Mass., and proceeded to Cal. N. C. her. Her Pa., who is an Md., angered at the drunkard, took an old razor—formerly used by Noah to Mo. the beard of his son Ham, in the Ark—and, without Del. La., with one blow, cut short his maudlin tale by cutting off his head, thereby abbreviating his Min. N. Y. Dis-United Statements. All people of Col. Or.

A LITERARY CURIOSITY.
A LADY of San Francisco is said to have occupied several years in hunting up and fitting together the following 38 lines from 38 English poets. The names of the authors are given with each line:

LIFE.
Why all this toil for triumph of an hour?
—Young.
Life's a short summer, man a flower;
By turn we catch the vital breath and die.
—Dr. Johnson.
The cradle and the tomb, alas! so nigh.—Prior.
To be is far better than not to be.—Sewell.
Though all man's life may seem a tragedy.
—Spencer.
But light cares speak when mighty griefs are dumb.
—Daniel.
The bottom is but shallow whence they come;
—Ralph.
Your fate is but the common fate of all;
—Longfellow.
Unmingled joys, here, no man befall.
—Southwell.
Nature to each allots his proper sphere.
—Congreve.
Fortune makes folly her peculiar care;
—Churchill.
Custom does not often reason overrule.
—Rochester.
And throws a cruel sunshine on a fool.
—Armstrong.
Live well, how long or short, permit to heaven;
—Milton.
They who forgive most shall be most forgiven.
—Bailey.
Sin may be clasped so close we cannot see its face;
—Trench.
Vile intercourse where virtue has not place;
—Somerville.
Then keep each passion down, however dear.
—Thomson.
Thou pendulum, betwixt a smile and a tear;
—Byron.
Her sensual snares let faithless pleasure lay.
—Smollet.
With craft and skill to ruin and betray.—Crabbe.
Soar not too high to fall, but stoop to rise.
—Massinger.
We masters grow of all that we despise.
—Cowley.
O, then, renounce that impious self-esteem.
—Beattie.
Riches have wings and grandeur is a dream.
—Cooper.
Think not ambition wise because 'tis brave.
—Davenant.
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.—Gray.
What is ambition? 'tis a glorious cheat.—Willis.
Only destruction to the brave and great.
—Addison.
What's all the gaudy glitter of a crown?
—Dryden.
The way to bliss lies not on beds of down.
—Quarles.
How long we live, not years, but actions tell;
—Watkins.
That man lives twice who lives the first life well.
—Herick.
Make, then, while yet ye may, your God your friend.
—Mason.
Whom Christians worship, yet not comprehend.
—Hill.
Thetrust that's given guard, and to yourself be just;
—Dana.
For, live we how we can, yet die we must.
—Shakespeare.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Oratio on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	2
9.	The Story of the Flood.	2
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	2
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arrangement of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	2
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	8
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snod. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	10
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sothoran.	5
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	5
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	2
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	2
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologians, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	1
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	1
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	1
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Fishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	5
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	3
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Padon.	5
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologians, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	2
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	5
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	5
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	1
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	5
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	6
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	10
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	2
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers. W. S. Bell.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	5
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	10
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	5
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

These eight Scientific Tracts are made into a pamphlet of 125 pages, at 20 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

Truth Seeker Leaflets.

Sent, assorted, or as desired, post-paid, at 4 cents per dozen; 25 cents per hundred, or $2 per thousand.

Let them be distributed freely in every town village and neighborhood. Address, D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., New York.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth	50
" " with Examination of Prophecies	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth,	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. E. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub, Bible in India. Jaccoliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate, 60an d	1 00
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch. Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.	1 25
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Snakspere's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.	1 75
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species. (Impr'd Ed.)	2 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell.	50 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright.	85 & 80
Evans' History of all Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought. Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evnns.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.	5
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johanson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneelands Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Vale.	1 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and	150
" Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology. 770 cuts.	5 40
" Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peetle's All Around the World.	2 50
Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	80 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	20
" Rights of Man.	50
" Theological Works.	2 00
" and Miscellaneous Works.	2 50
" Miscellaneous Writings, Centennial edition.	2 50
" Political Works. 2 Vols., 1 8vo.	5 00
" Complete Works. 3 Vols. 8vo.	8 00
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	60
Synagma. Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature, D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.	2 00
Strass' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus. 2 vols.	12 00
Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols., 8vo.	8 00
Sexual Physiology. Trall.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall (Prof. John) Entire Works.	2 00
The Christ of Paul.	75
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers.	4 50
$3 00, $4 00, and	1 00
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc.	75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and	1 00
IV, 50 cts. &	30.
The Outcast. Winwood Reade.	30.
Talks with My Patients. Mrs. Gleason. M.D.	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	50 & 80
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE,
MORALS

FREETHOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 16. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, April 21, 1877. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $2 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE queen-bee in a hive may produce 50,000 eggs in a single season.

IN the clerical quarters of Paris the dealers in relics sell straws from the Pope's prison bed for half a franc each.

BLUE glass has been tested in the Royal Gardens at Kew, England, and the effect as reported by the director, shows that the rays retard the growth of plants.

THE Rev. B. Hayden, Episcopal clergyman, was instantly killed by an express train near the depot at Elizabeth, N. J. Has God no longer any care for his faithful ones?

SHOCKED and astonished old man—"You bad and wicked boy, why don't you take off your hat in the church?" Bad and wicked boy (overcome with guilt)—"If you please, sir, I am a little girl."

THE Rev. John Miller, Presbyterian Minister of Princetown, N. J., is to be tried by the Presbytery for saying that Jesus Christ was only "a chosen man." He also denies the trinity. Oh, what an Infidel!

A BOSTON clergyman says he would not give much for a "hope" that is preserved in whisky. Several members of his church are rather fond of a "nip" in the morning, to be repeated afterwards semi-occasionally.

AN observing reader says that the word "piety" appears in the Bible but once and the words "moral" and "morality" not at all, but "witch" and "witchcraft" a score of times. "Ferryboat" is mentioned but once and "engines" twice.

THE Rev. Dominick M. McCaffrey and several members of his church of Our Savior were before the General Sessions Grand Jury to ask an indictment of Mrs. Adelaide Leavitt, whose complaint that the pastor had kissed her had been dismissed. The accusation is that of attempt to blackmail.

AMONG the replies to an advertisement of a music committee for "a candidate as organist, music teacher," etc., was the following: "Gentlemen, I notice your advertisement for an organist and music teacher, either lady or gentleman. Having been both for several years, I offer you my services."

THE Abbe Beaugard, vicar of an important parish in Paris, has been sentenced to fifteen years' transportation for indecently assaulting two little girls and communicating to them a loathsome disease. Another Abbe is in jail in Saint Briene for violating two little girls that he encountered on the high road.

THERE is a little sense in poking fun at the clergyman who recently held services at the State Reformatory, and who prefaced his remarks to the prisoners by saying that he was glad to see so large a number present. With equal propriety he might have added that there were lots of gentlemen at large who ought to be among his audience.

ONE single paragraph in Herbert Spencer's essay on "Primitive Marriages," in the Popular Science Monthly, contains the words, "endogamy," "exogamy," "polygamy," "monogamy," "polyandry," "polygyny," and "agnation." Think of a man being caught out alone with that essay in some country town, and no unabridged dictionary within forty miles.

ONE of the Connecticut papers thinks that the crowds that flocked to hear Beecher does not show a popular belief in his innocence, but an admiration for his pluck in maintaining his place, notwithstanding, and a growing feeling that the matrimonial cord is drawn altogether too tightly for comfort. There is a good deal of fellow-feeling at the bottom of the ovations.

THE "New York Liberal Club" had a serious disagreement on the occasion of the election of officers, on the evening of the 13th. Several members severed their connection with the old club, and, it is said, will organize a new one, called "The New York Radical Club," and will meet in Science Hall every Friday evening. The most Radical part of the old club will probably be embodied in the new organization, the old being too conservative.

IT was formerly thought that the Methodist Bishops were directly guided by the Holy Spirit in making the appointments for the churches. But it has long been the practice for the brethren to afford such aid by their suggestions to the Bishops as circumstances would allow. Bishop Foster now speaks out in meeting and says he wants no more of these suggestions; and that he has been so much bothered during the recent session of the conference that he fears injury may result to the cause.

THE Rev. R. G. Williams, of the Reformed Church at Griggstown, N. J., doesn't preach there any more. In fact, he has put in a disappearance. He was engaged to be married to one of the ewe lambs of his flock, when his wife most impolitely made her appearance in the place, and rather checked the happy consummation which the good man desired. Things ceased to be as lovely as they were. It is passing strange what a penchant wives have for arriving at the very time when they are not wanted. Why could she not have stayed away just a few days more?

CERTAIN of the brethren have a habit of making statements in their prayers and informing the Almighty of things of which he has no need to be told. One of these brethren broke out in a Methodist Conference the other day on the subject of ministerial appointments. Thus did he pray: "Lord, when these appointments have been announced by the Bishop there will be great satisfaction in some minds; there will be great grief and sorrow in other minds. Come to us and fortify our minds and our hearts for all that is before us for the year to come." The rest of the brethren responded to this prayerful statement with prodigious amens, for a great many of them knew just how it was with themselves.

SLX Belzebub took all occasions To try Job's constancy and patience. He took his honor, took his health. He took his children, took his wealth. His servants, oxen, horses, cows But cunning Satan did not take his spouse. But heaven, that brings out good from evil, And loves to disappoint the Devil. Had predetermined to restore Twofold of all he had before. His servants, horses, oxen, cows,— Short-sighted devil, not to take his spouse! —Coleridge.

THE Baptist brethren have now settled the question that the unregenerate heathen of distant countries will go to hell if not reached by the Gospel. On its settlement an earnest brother arose and suggested the immediate raising of $5,000, in order to send the gospel to these poor heathen. Unfortunately, this praiseworthy proposition met with no substantial response. The only inference is that the brethren thought that as much money is now being spent on the heathen as they are worth; and if it is a question of giving more money or letting the poor fellows go to the bad, the times are such as to render it inconvenient to do otherwise than let them go. For these brethren to decide that millions on millions of uneducated heathen are perishing, and then quietly adjourn to dinner, looks as if they did not care much whether the far-away heathen perished or not.

JUST as we are going to press we receive the following note from Canada: Friend Bennett—I take a moment to drop you a few lines. The Liberal Convention, now in session, is a success in numbers and united effort. The Freethinkers of Toronto meet in Albert Hall, a very commodious and tastefully fitted-up auditorium. On all sides of the hall the walls are decorated with shields and banners, on which are the names of the most notable men of Freethought. The Liberals are a most earnest and active people, and will surely do much towards advancing the cause of truth-seeking in Canada. In this convention are representatives from different parts of the dominion, who will return to their homes with increased interest in the cause of Liberalism. I have been greatly pleased with their earnestness and intelligence. I have never addressed an audience that was more attentive and appreciative than the audience which assembled last evening to hear Mr. Underwood and myself. Success to their brave endeavors. W. S. BELL.

MR. MOONY admonishes young ladies against being yoked to unbelievers. But the young ladies, as a general thing, care less for the theological views of the owners of the coat sleeves which fondly encircle their graceful waists than for their good looks, their agreeable and polished manners, and the size and contents of their pocket-books. But still it is not to be expected that Mrs. Grundy or any of her daughters will recognize a young man who does not believe in the blessed fountain of blood that flows from Immanuel's veins, and that to secure a reserved seat in the mansions in the skies he must bathe and disport himself in that delightful fountain; and who does not believe that a son can be as old as his father, and that one and three are precisely the same. If he can only believe in these beautiful inconsistencies and have plenty of faith that he is to secure a blissful seat in heaven upon another's merits besides his own, then he may hug and kiss the daughters of the church and all the rest of it, and everything will be lovely. But such young men, or middle-aged men, as dare to have a mind of their own and to doubt the infallible dicta of the black-coated and white-crowned priests and to have more confidence in nature's unerring laws than in the myths, superstitions, and fables of three thousand years ago, must take a back seat. They must not presume to see the girls home from church and singing-schools and set up with them in the best room after the old folks have gone to bed, until the roosters crow in the morning. Such men have a bad showing with the pious young sisters of the church, and unless they can find here and there a young woman who has a little common sense, their chance is far from brilliant.

BRADLAUGH AND MRS. BESANT.—The intelligence has just been received that Charles Bradlaugh and Mrs. Annie Besant, the well-known lady lecturer, have been arrested for publishing and selling the "Fruits of Philosophy," which is pronounced a disreputable book. This work was written by Dr. Charles Knowlton, an American, some forty years ago. The plates came into the possession of Mr. Bradlaugh's partner, Charles Watts, who published an edition of the work, but when complaint was made of its immoral character, he evaded responsibility by declaring his ignorance of its contents, and his willingness to withdraw it from circulation. This disgusted Mr. Bradlaugh, who got rid of his partner at once and assumed the responsibility of publishing the work, and he announced in the National Reformer that he and Mrs. Besant would themselves in person sell the first hundred copies of the work, in order to shoulder the responsibility of its sale and bring the question fairly before the courts, whether an English citizen cannot discuss social questions with absolute freedom without let or hindrance by the authorities. The work whose publication has caused so much rumpus, relates to over-population, and the means of preventing it. It is an application of the famous doctrine of Malthus, that while population increases in a geometrical ratio, food increases only in an arithmetical ratio; and, therefore, unless the increase of population is kept down, the race will starve. It was for calling attention to the evils of over-population, and urging restrictive measures, that Miss Martineau first provoked severe and bitter criticisms. But Germany puts numerous restrictions on marriage. In France the population is kept from rapid increase by various devices. In Sweden and some other Scandinavian nations early marriages are prohibited, and in Scotland they are discouraged. The English Malthusians, a powerful though not a numerous body, maintain that one of the crying evils of the nation is the too rapid increase of population among the poor, the ignorant, and the pauper classes. There are too many babies for the bread. The work for the sale of which Mr. Bradlaugh has been arrested, pointed out the means of preventing over-population. It may be improper. It may offend good taste and good morals by its coarseness and plain speaking. It can hardly be supposed that the English authorities would undertake to suppress a work that contains merely scientific facts and information that can be found in medical books without trouble. But whether the book is disreputable or merely shocking to English tastes and prejudices, Mr. Bradlaugh is certainly involved in a new mesh of difficulties, and the English people are likely to have a new agitation. The English journals will be full of this arrest, for Bradlaugh is disliked by the ruling classes, and Mrs. Besant, though a beautiful woman, is an advocate of religious doctrines which are deemed very objectionable.—N. Y. Graphic.

Events of the Week.

DESTRUCTIVE forest fires have raged on Long Island within the last few days.

HON. JOHN A. KASSON, ex-Congressman from Iowa, has been appointed Minister to Spain.

EX-MAYOR A. OAKLEY HALL is still in London. The report that he had gone to Glasgow is untrue.

A MAN by the name of Potter, of Geneva, N. Y., shot his wife and killed her, and then shot himself. She had left him the day before.

THE news comes from Europe that James Gordon Bennett is making arrangements to prolong his stay in Europe for a term of years.

THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW passed by Congress a few years ago to apply to Government employees has been practically pronounced by the Supreme Court to be a dead letter.

SEVERAL Republican papers in the country are expressing, more or less pronounced, their disapprobation of President Hayes' Southern policy. Some are predicting a general rupture all along the line.

THE WAR-CLOUD IN THE EAST has assumed very threatening aspects again. Turkey positively declines outside dictation, the representatives of the Russian Government are about retiring from Constantinople, and the papers say war is inevitable.

THE weather for the past week has been an improvement upon the three previous weeks. The buds of the trees have visibly enlarged and the grass in the parks is becoming beautifully green, but the weather does not get very warm yet and the prospects for an early spring are not especially promising.

THE citizens of Suffolk and Queens counties, Long Island, have inaugurated a vigorous warfare upon the tramps. They have resolved to give them neither food nor lodging, and are determined to carry out the resolution, which seriously discomposes the perigrinating fraternity, and causes them to seek more appreciative localities.

MRS. HENRY MORELAND, of Jersey City, knocked down with a chair a big negro whom she found ransacking her room at two o'clock in the morning; and Kate Donovan a stout girl of twenty-two made it so hot with her fists for John Donovan, a blacksmith, who insulted her in Broad street, that he went to the ground. The question is being raised whether women are always going to remain the weaker sex.

THREE steamers left this port, within the past week, for Liverpool, laden largely with beef for the English market. The City of Richmond carried 200,000 pounds; the Celtic 80,000, and the California for Glasgow, 100,000 pounds, besides many live sheep. Those three vessels and the Neckar for Bremen took out 100,000 bushels of grain. Thus America feeds Europe. The prices of provisions are slowly advancing in the Old World.

ANNA DICKENSON's engagement at the Eagle Theatre in this city came to a sudden termination early in the week, at her own option. She complained that the contract was broken on the part of Mr. Hart, the lessee of the theatre, and that in justice to herself she could no longer continue to play. She is engaged to next appear at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, with her "Crown of Thorns." Some of the critics have been almost unmerciful with Anna, but she has spunk and energy to succeed in spite of them. She has given some of them a good Roland for their Oliver.

THE first installment of Tweed's confession has been given to the public, in which he admits that large sums of money belonging to the city were dishonestly appropriated by the "ring" and their immediate friends. He makes revelations very damaging to public men in both parties, and his disclosures are destined to make a fluttering among the wounded birds of prey. Already implicated persons deem it necessary to rise and explain. It can now be very easily understood why ex-Mayor A. Oakley Hall had such a sudden call to Europe. His ten per cent. stealings he saw were bound to be exposed. "Verily the way of the transgressor is hard."

Career of Religious Ideas.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.—Copyrighted.

CHAPTER I.—CONTINUED.

The school has been supplied with books written in the service of the Church, to the exclusion of others, and every avenue to knowledge seized with rapacious hand. The primary school, the seminary, the college, if not publicly teaching theology, are controlled by theologians.

Wise and subtle as this scheme appeared, they who employed it knew not wherewith they built. The mind becomes enlarged and its perceptions sharpened even by erroneous learning. After receiving the knowledge prepared by the priesthood, it gains increased capacity; and one ray of light allowed to enter creates a desire for the whole sunshine. The New England common schools, of which those of other States are copies, were established chiefly to maintain Puritan orthodoxy; but they have in a great measure escaped from the controlling hand of the Church, and from them have flowed the heresies which have degraded its power and led to the Freethought of the present. May we soon rejoice for the day when they shall become wholly secularized, and the light of knowledge, instead of revealing the horrid machinery of theology to the ardent imaginations of the young, be allowed to shine as the sun of morning over the beauties of Nature.

Neither the Church nor any organization having the right to decide what is truth, man is thrown on his own resources for its determination. Granting the dogma of miraculous creation, every organ and function of man is designed and created for pleasure—not for pain—and it is essential that an All-wise Being make him an authority to himself. If not, how is it possible for him to receive the revelation of his Maker? Here we leave the dark night-land, where, in the miasmatic gloom of ignorance and dank vapors of superstition, theology grows like a fetid mushroom, and with relief gain the heights of untrammelled thought, where religion becomes moral obligation. Not to systems, but to the mind itself, are we to turn for the understanding of religion. The meaning of that word can be exalted. The true religious code and the moral are one. The most moral man is the most religious. Everything outside of a well-ordered life—a life devoted to the most perfect accomplishment of the object of being, under the name of whatever religion—is a sham. Religion is the citadel in which emotional ignorance has entrenched itself, and fought to the death every advance of knowledge, which, expressed in the general term of science, is the true savior of mankind.

"Ah!" it is replied, "science is well in its place, but in morals and religion it is at fault: they are beyond its pale." The worshiper of beans and garlies under the shadow of the Pyramids made the same statement four thousand years ago. Religion is the province of unreasoning faith, and the greater the faith required, the more miraculous the system and laudable the unwavering faith of the devotee. Faith is another name for credulity, and is most reprehensible.

The weapons of metaphysical theology are now useless. The war has changed its base. It has been fought on the damp marshlands of ignorance, and the combatants have been guided by will-o'-the-wisps, which they mistook for stars of heaven. Now the light of certain knowledge floods the world, and the systems of theology and metaphysics disappear. They can never change front and battle with new weapons. Knowledge not only destroys dogmatism; it renders its existence impossible. The Goliaths of theology arrayed on the battle-field of science, become phantasms, the attenuated shadows of ghosts, which amuse rather than annoy with their incoherent gibberish.

Knowledge carries men away from Churchianity. The leading minds of Europe and America stand outside of its influence. Yet they and their followers form the most moral members in their respective societies. The drifting away of the dross of dogmatism leaves the true gold of morality.

In these pages the great questions of religion and morality are treated by knowledge, and not by faith. No obscure region is covered by the "mystery of Godliness." The only mystery admitted is that of Ignorance. By religion is meant all systems, and Christianity will be weighed in the same balance with Mohammedanism, Buddhism, and the lowest Fetishism. If it stand the test, it is well; if not, why mourn? As from the mind of man has sprung all the systems of the past, he is superior to them as the master to his work, and adequate to the production of the systems essential to his future progress. The essential cannot be destroyed. Fetish gods only need to be jealously guarded.

CHAPTER II.

WHAT IS RELIGION?

The way to gain admission into the portals of science is through the portal of doubt.—Socrates.

He that takes away reason to make way for revelation puts out the light of both, and does much the same as if he should persuade a man to put out his eyes the better to receive the remote light of an invisible star by a telescope.—Locke.

If religion be devotion to and awe of personified life and intelligence, it is possessed by the brutes of the field.

Europe, with all her nameless store
Of cultivation, wisdom, pride,
Had marched through centuries of gore
Before she reached the lighted side
Of God's humanity. Her veins,
Though pure, have run barbaric blood;
Her fair face has worn pits and stains;
But change wrought error into good.

—Gazette.

The assertion that religious phenomena are found among all races of mankind has been a standard argument to prove that man, by necessity of his organization, is a religious being, and that worship in some form is indispensable. Undoubtedly this is one of the strongest arguments possible to urge, and if received as expressing the fact that no mental phenomena can be manifested without an adequate cause residing in the mind, is indisputable. Furthermore, and a fact of great significance, religious feelings and observances become refined and elevated, and tend to disappear in morality, in exact ratio to the advance of reason and knowledge. There are shades of progress, from the Patagonian, the sum of whose religion is roasting a sea-bird's egg and singing a wild song over it, to the refined subtleties of the Evangelist.

The existence of such feelings is not a proof of their munificence, or that they should be uncontrolled. War appears normal to all mankind, and is even more universal than religion, going down through the successive grades of the animal world to the lowest. Its existence proves that man possesses combative elements in his nature, which, properly directed by reason, exert a salutary influence. It does not prove a separate faculty of war, but arises from a combination of faculties which an advanced civilization employs quite differently.

The existence of religious feelings proves no more than the love of war. We are not sure we cannot discover intimations of religion in animals themselves. When the wild winds blow, and the lightnings fill the black clouds with fire, and the air is rent with thunder, how piteously the brutes of the field fly here and there, uttering their plaintive moans, or rush into the presence of man, trembling with fear!

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

THE SERVICES OF INFIDELITY AND CHRISTIANITY TO AMERICAN LIBERTY.

HUMPHREY'S LETTER No. 2.

NEW YORK, April 14, 1877.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I am pleased with the courteousness of your reply, and with your candor in admitting the substance of my last letter. Your concession amounts to this: that, in the proportion that "ninety or ninety-five per cent." is greater than ten or five per cent., the Christians who resisted British tyranny were more numerous than the Infidels who did the same.

You assert that resistance to constituted government, even when it is oppressive and inhuman, is contrary to the principles of Scripture. This is an error. Such passages as "Be subject to principalities and powers," "Subject yourselves unto kings or governors," "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's," mean simply that the Christian should not be anarchical; he should be a law-abiding citizen. There is no intimation in the Old Testament that the Israelites violated the Divine law when they threw off the Egyptian yoke. Nor is there a hint in the New that Jesus did wrong in ignoring the Jewish Sanhedrim.

I was rather surprised to see you making such hit-or-miss assertions respecting the religious opinions of certain persons prominent in the Revolution. Of course, Thomas Paine is yielded to you. So is Ethan Allen. But I insist that not one of the others whom you name was an Infidel in the true sense of that word. Benjamin Rush was universally known as an eminently pious Christian. His "Essays" put this beyond the reach of a doubt. The New American Cyclopedia says of him that in 1791 "he wrote an able defense of the Bible as a school-book. He was Vice President, until his death, of the Philadelphia Bible Society, of which he was one of the earliest originators, and the constitution of which he drafted." Parton says of Aaron Burr that "he was no scoffer. He was desirous, while condemning the severe theology of his fathers, not to be thought an unbeliever" (Life of Aaron Burr, vol. ii, pp. 274-329). Alexander Hamilton was a believer in Christianity. In a paper prepared in view of his duel with Burr he said: "My religious and moral principles are strongly opposed to the practice of duelling" (Morse's Life of Hamilton, Boston, 1876, vol. ii, p. 364). He sent for a clergyman to administer the sacrament to him before his death (A Collection of Facts and Documents relative to the Death of Alexander Hamilton, 1804, pp. 47-55). Morse says: "He was a sincere and earnest Christian. He had lately said of Christianity in his firm, positive way: 'I have studied it, and I can prove its truth as clearly as any proposition ever submitted to the mind of man'" (Life of Hamilton, vol. ii, p. 370). If you want to find proof that Gouverneur Morris was not an Infidel, I will refer you to his "Life," by Jared Sparks, vol. i, pp. 508-9, vol. iii, p. 44. A careful examination of such works as Rives' Life and Times of James Madison will compel any one to see that our fourth President was very far from being a rejecter of Christianity.

The four persons who played the most active part in the Revolutionary struggle, and in the formation of the government afterwards, are often claimed by Infidels, and too frequently conceded to them by Christians. I refer to Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, and John Adams. Let us now throw aside as so much rubbish the "Sabbath-school stories" and religious magazine paragraphs, and also the "Liberal Club" traditions, with all the Infidel newspaper tales respecting these persons, and let us try to determine from their own writings and from standard biographers what their religious opinions really were. Let us consider them in the order of their birth.

As Benjamin Franklin was the oldest, we will examine his religious belief first. There are several trustworthy Lives of Franklin before the public. The most recent is that of Bigelow. But as Parton's is in all essential matters in agreement with the rest, and as Mr. Parton is a "liberal" man, we will refer chiefly to him. All biographers get their materials mainly from Franklin's Works, of which there is an admirable collection edited by Sparks, Boston, 1840.

Franklin was raised under religious influences. When a mere boy he left home to make his own living. Before leaving his teens he had read Shaftesbury, Collins, and other Deistical writers. They shook his mind. When about nineteen he wrote and published a "Dissertation on Liberty and Necessity." Its conclusions were that there is no inherent distinction between virtue and vice, and that man is really under the reign of Fate. But, as Lossing says, "Franklin always looked back to those early efforts of his pen, in opposition to Christian ethics, with great regret" (Lives of Celebrated Americans, p. 40). He afterwards did all he could to gather every copy of his "Dissertation," and annihilate it forever (Parton's Life of Franklin, vol. i, p. 132). But it is on the strength of this treatise that Franklin is claimed as an Infidel! We might as justly sum up Col. Ingersoll's life, and say he was a drunkard and a Democrat, because there has been a period when he was both.

When twenty-two he reconsidered his position and retraced his steps. He passed through what Parton calls a "regeneration"! He drew up a creed and a liturgy for himself (Parton's Life of Franklin, vol. i, pp. 167-178). When twenty-three he called "Atheism" "nonsense," and pronounced "the Christian religion the best of all religions" (Ibid, vol. i, pp. 192-3). When fifty-eight he advised and urged his daughter to "go constantly to Church," to be devout, and "never miss the prayer days" (Ibid, vol. i, 455). When sixty-seven he styled himself a "Protestant of the Church of England, holding in the highest veneration the doctrines of Jesus Christ" (Ibid, vol. i, p. 557). When eighty he asked: "If men are so wicked with religion, what would they be without it?" He advised a Freethinker not to publish an Infidel work (Ibid, vol. ii, p. 554). In the Convention of 1787, when he was eighty-one, he made this motion, "That henceforth prayers, imploring the assistance of Heaven and its blessings on our deliberations, be held in this Assembly every morning before we proceed to business; and that one or more of the clergy of this city be requested to officiate in that service."

In the course of his remarks in support of this motion he said: "In this situation of this Assembly, groping, as it were, in the dark to find political truth, and scarce able to distinguish it when presented to us, how has it happened, Sir, that we have not hitherto once thought of humbly applying to the Father of Lights to illuminate our understandings? In the beginning of the contest with Britain, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayers in this room for the Divine protection. Our prayers, Sir, were heard; and they were graciously answered. All of us who were engaged in the struggle, must have observed frequent instances of a superintending Providence in our favor. To that kind Providence we owe this opportunity of consulting in peace, and the means of establishing our future national felicity. And have we now forgotten that powerful Friend? or do we imagine we no longer need its assistance? I have lived, Sir, a long time; and the longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth: That God governs in the affairs of men" (Ibid, vol. ii, p. 573).

When eighty-four he gave a summary of his creed in these words: "I believe in one God, the Creator of the Universe. That he governs it by his Providence. That he ought to be worshiped. That the most acceptable service to him is doing good to his other children. That the soul of man is immortal, and will be treated with justice in another life respecting its conduct in this." He was undecided in regard to the divinity of Christ, but thought there was no harm in believing that doctrine (vol. ii, p. 615-616). When eighty-five, and near his death, "he had a picture of Christ on the Cross placed so that he could conveniently look at it as he lay in bed. 'That,' he would say, 'is the picture of one who came into the world to teach men to love one another'" (Ibid, p. 618). And "his last look, it is recorded, was cast upon the picture of Christ" (Ibid, p. 619).

Can you, my dear Sir, have the hardihood to assert that a man who lived such a life, and died such a death, was an Infidel? Can you impugn the authorities to which I have referred you? Would it not be better to reject the floating gossip that Franklin was a Deist, and accredit the facts of history—that he was a skeptic only in his minority; that when he became a man, he renounced his skepticism; and that he drifted farther and farther from it until the end of his life?

In regard to Washington I will say but a word. You say he was a Deist. The only evidence you furnish is the testimony of Dr. Abercrombie; and that testimony does not come direct, but in a roundabout way which makes it very unreliable. Robert Dale Owen said that "Dr. Wilson" said that Dr. Abercrombie said that Washington was a Deist! Thomas Paine "did not choose to rest his belief on such evidence" as "hearsay upon hearsay." How is it that you, the disciple, are more credulous than your master? The explanation is easy: This story about Abercrombie—more vague than the legend of the little hatchet—is the only scrap of proof that you can produce from all the libraries of the world that Washington was a Deist!

The truth is, Washington was a strictly moral and highly religious man. He prohibited card-playing, gaming, drinking, and profanity among his troops. If divine services were missed necessarily on Sunday, he would introduce them at the earliest opportunity on a week day. He recommended a special meeting for prayer and thanksgiving after the capitulation at Yorktown. He was in the habit of fasting. He made it a rule to attend church on the Sabbath. In a letter dated Aug. 20, 1778, he said: "The hand of Providence has been so conspicuous in all, that he must be worse than an Infidel, that lacks faith, and more than wicked, that has not gratitude to acknowledge his obligations." He regarded "Religion and Morality as the essential pillars of civil society." These statements are not old wives' fables. You will find undeniable authority for all of them if you will look over Washington's Writings, edited by Sparks, Boston, 1835. See, in particular, vol. ii, pp. 141, 167, 406; vol. iv, p. 28; vol. v, p. 88; vol. viii, p. 189; vol. xii, pp. 245, 400, 402. Irving testifies that, in early life, he led prayer-meetings, and that under special difficulties (Life of Washington, Leipzig, 1859, vol. i, p. 109). Weems, who was intimately acquainted with Washington, bears witness that he was a devout and godly man (Life of Washington, 1837, pp. 174-189). You must rebut these authorities with stronger authorities, or else admit that the Father of his Country was far from being an Infidel.

Space compels me to defer my discussion of Adams and Jefferson until my next. Very respectfully,

G. H. HUMPHREY.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Toland on the Pillar of Fire and the Pillar of Cloud.

MR. EDITOR: As the English Astronomer Royal, in his recently published argument against the authenticity of the "Mosaic Record," has endeavored to give a rational explanation of phenomena and events attending the Exodus of the Israelites from Egypt, by showing that what is understood to have been miraculous was really only natural events, i. e. that "the pillar of fire by night and the pillar of cloud by day," is merely the figurative expression of the historian of the Exodus of the effects of a volcanic eruption of Mount Sinai at the time when the Israelites were encamped in its vicinity, I think I may offer to your readers another and more probable explanation, which is given by that erudite and acute reasoner, the persecuted John Toland. He affirmed that the Hebrew Scriptures are grossly perverted in the translations used by Christians, and are, therefore, greatly misunderstood. He supported these assertions by many illustrations, one of them being the proof that there was not any miraculous guidance through the wilderness; that the narrative in the Hebrew is intended to show that the whole expedition was conducted by Moses, who, with the customary human assistance, did no more than human leaders had done before, and have done since.

We need not doubt that the Hebrew narrative asserts that God directed all the movements of the Israelites, and that when Moses ordered a movement he said it was ordered by God; but the fact that the Israelites ascribed most events to God, is only an evidence of their being like the majority of Christians, who, in past as in present times, have seen God's will and power working in every event, and who claim that God is on their side when they persecute, when they go to battle, or express their opinions; that ill-fortune and good, health and sickness, are all from God. I knew a woman, unusually rational in the affairs of common life. She said she liked me, though I talked Infidelity to her, because she thought me sincere; yet she said that when, many years before, she had gained very religious convictions, she declared to God that she was ashamed of the new bonnet she had bought, and, most unexpectedly, she was able to sell this bonnet, and then she declared to God that, as he had been so good as to help her in this, she would wear a Quaker bonnet all the rest of her days. The thought that moves to action is, with such people, an inspiration from God, and many of such ideas, expressed with Oriental exaggeration, are found in the Hebrew narratives.

Toland says: "It was the practice of the Persians and others who had to traverse the Wilderness in early times, before the use of the compass was known, to guide their armies by hoisting a pot of fire on long poles, attached to a chariot, or in some way erected high, which, conducted by some one who was well acquainted with the place, served as a guide to direct those parties which, in the night, would get straggled from the main body. And it was the practice, also, to place such a light in the rear when the army was being pursued, as it served to baffle the pursuers, as it is said to have baffled Pharaoh and his host (Ex. xiv, 19-20).

Moses had married Zipporah the daughter of Jethro, (called, also, Reuel and Raguel), "a priest of Midian (a priest of Baal) and, in the record of the second year after their leaving Egypt, we find that the Israelites had with them Hobab, the brother of Moses' wife, and son of the priest of Midian; and he, being a native of the wilderness, or of its borders, appears to have acted as a guide to the host of Israel, for we find (Num. x, 29-32) that Hobab purposed to leave them; and he was prevailed on to stay by promises of a great reward—"And Moses said unto Hobab, the son of Raguel the Midianite, Moses' father-in-law, We are journeying unto the place of which the Lord said, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good; for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel. And he said unto him, I will not go; but I will depart to mine own land, and to my kindred. And he [Moses] said, Leave us not, I pray thee; forasmuch as thou knowest how we are to encamp in the wilderness, and thou mayest be to us instead of eyes. And it shall be if thou go with us, yea, it shall be that what goodness the Lord shall do unto us, the same will we do unto thee."

Hobab, as we afterwards find, complied. "Now, says Toland, 'what need was there of Hobab 'as eyes' to the Israelites, if they were guided by a miraculous fire and cloud?' To which some critics replied that Hobab was wanted to guide the various parties who went "spying" about, while the main body and the miraculous guide stood still.

But, in the accounts of these spying excursions, I find mention of Caleb, Joshua, and one man of each of the tribes but I do not find any mention of Hobab, who surely would be named if he were so urgently retained for such business. What he was retained for, he did; for the long record of Israelitish gratitude for the service rendered by Hobab is something like evidence that there was an exodus of a body of Hebrews from Egypt, who were expelled by the Egyptians, not freed by God from bondage, and that the starving, homeless horde were assisted by Hobab's knowledge of the wilderness to reach fruitful lands and needed stores, the owners of which they conquered and murdered that they might rob them, and the civilized people of modern England did about the same in India; and the civilization of the United States stained by the slave trade, the events that grew out of it, and by the annihilation now going on of the Indians.

In Exodus xiv, 19, we read: "And the angel of God which went before the camp of Israel, removed and went behind them; and the pillar of the cloud went behind," etc. But the word "angel," is misunderstood, and is misapplied by Christians; the Hebrew word thus translated means as Toland says (and as I will show) a messenger, a human messenger; and some men and women among the Hebrews, as among us, asserted (or believers in God's providence said it of them) that they had a "commission from above," and were the oracles—the messengers of God, as our evangelical preachers, tract distributors and other denouncers of hell-fire arrogantly inform more rational people than themselves that they are. It is obvious that the "angel" who removed, etc., was Hobab the God-directed messenger, and the Israelites honored him and his descendants (as our messengers like to be honored), by giving to him and them worldly wealth and social distinction.

We find that the children of the Kenite, Moses' father-in-law, dwelt among the people in Canaan; and that 195 years after the supposed time of the Exodus, one of the many families of these Kenites was of sufficient consequence to be said to be at peace with the King of Habor (Judges i, 16, iv, 17,) and 412 years after the Exodus, Saul made war on the Amalekites, with whom were some divisions of the Kenites: "And Saul said unto the Kenites, depart, get you down from among the Amalekites, lest I destroy you with them, for ye showed kindness to the children of Israel when they came out of Egypt" (1 Sam., xv, 6).

It was the wife of Kenite, "which was of the children of Hobab," who treacherously killed Sisera (Judges iv, 11, 17-21). An honorable mention is made of a branch of the tribe of Jeremiah (Jer. xxxv, 2-19), 880 years after the Exodus.

Toland said that Numbers x, 13, is evidence that Moses commanded the moving and standing still of the pillar and cloud, for, they (the Israelites) first took their journey according to the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

Jethro, the priest of Baal advised Moses to instruct the Israelites in ordinances and laws, and taught him also a system for the administration of justice and preservation of law and order, that in essence has been acted on very generally to this day. And Moses did all that he had said. (Ex. xviii, 15-26). Thus, though the Pentateuch is a historical collection of myths, having some truth in them, it is evident that the writers of it did not intend to show that the pillar of fire and the cloud constituted what we call a miracle. And this illustrates the mingled ignorance and dishonesty of those who have imperiously and cruelly endeavored to make those who are more intelligent and honest than themselves submit to their conceits and inventions.

MARGARET CHAPPELLSMITH.

Revival Scraps.

Our Methodist brethren are having a revival of "sound and fury, signifying nothing," here. In the way of extravagant declamation, abuse of "Tom Paine" and Universalists, who, by the way, your rural Christian always lumps with the Infidel—wild and unsupported assertion, and marvellous display of self-conceit, beats anything I remember to have ever seen or heard in this "neck of woods." One evening the minister's wife warned her Christian friends against this "cursed Spiritualism," which was the enemy of all morality; and she wondered how any Christian could tolerate it in any form. She then inquired: "What has Spiritualism done for the world?" And then went on to tell the old story about Christianity being the parent of civilization. As you know, I have no very high opinion of Spiritualism, but I can frankly say that as a liberalizer of public sentiment, it has done more in the short time it has existed as a separate ism, than anchored Christianity has done in all the centuries of its existence, or than it will ever do in the future. In fact, Spiritualism is the progressionists of the army of supernaturalism, and many of them are so far in advance that they can almost be classed with the pure Rationalists. Indeed, many of them, like yourself, Bro. Bennett, claim to be completely "over the border," and up to the side of secularism, and while I cannot concede the soundness of the assumption, I have no doubt of its necessity.

But, leaving that as an open question, we will return to our "distracted" meeting. In tones to beat an eighteen-pounder the preacher told Moody's story about the man going over Niagara, and then said: "You need not work to get to hell, just drift there. Eat opium. Tom Paine will give you some of his opium." And then he yelled that he did not doubt that Satan has his opium-feeders here. They have "brought their devilish stuff to poison your minds." I had my TRUTH SEEKER in my pocket. Perhaps he perceived it with the "eye of faith," or he may have been a clairvoyant. Once the clerical gent said that the "fall of Adam" put us all into the sleep of sin, from which there is no awakening unless we throw away our reason, and believe with this light of the gospel that, "the reasonable, rational professor of religion, no matter how orthodox he may be, is the deepest in this sleep of sin"! No chance to be a Christian in Florence if you intend to reason yourself through. That will never do, for your pastor says that he would not give the "snap of his finger" for a religion which he could not feel. Probably it is about all feeling. Says our ecclesiastic again: "If you do not realize that you are a child of God, I pray God that you may realize that you are a child of the Devil." We gladly recognize the latter fact, for, if our Christian friends are correct, the latter gentleman has much the more respectable and prominent family. His children are the wise, the heroic, the useful, the noble men and women of every land and age.

They have done all for progress, naught for superstition. They are and have ever been the champions of freedom—the opposers of slavery. One revamped backslider said the other evening that he had read "Tom" Paine, Ingersoll, and THE TRUTH SEEKER, but could get no consolation for his troubled soul! From our knowledge of the matter, we are certain that he is now in the most congenial company, although I never knew him as anything but a believer.

"The fool hath said in his heart there is no God." What does that mean? you ask, "thundered his reverence. 'I will tell you what it means. It means just what it says,—the 'fool hath said in his heart there is no God.' I call this a very fair specimen of pulpit manners.

One young lady said that for six years she had been without sin. That she had sinned neither against God nor her fellow-man! Oh! the supreme self-satisfaction it is to feel yourself a child of God. What a school of egotism is the Church?

The same reconverted gentleman mentioned above, who said that he had read Ingersoll, THE TRUTH SEEKER, etc., upon another evening remarked in telling his "experience," that he was willing to be called a fool at the judgment—that he was willing to be a fool for Jesus." "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Perhaps he may not have to wait until the "judgment" to be known as what he expressed his willingness to be. In an exhortation to the children and youth to come to Christ, the preacher said that every bishop of the Methodist Church had given his heart to God when very young,—he would almost say that every one had so done when a child. There was, he said, no hope for a man to attain a high position in the Church who did not become a Christian when young, before Satan had sown the seeds of sin and doubt in his soul. By long service in the ranks of Satan, he became unfitted for work in the army of the Lord. The longer he put off giving his heart to Jesus, the more apt was he to be unprepared when the grim monster came, and the more likely was he finally to fry. Even if he did repent in middle or old age, he would be very apt to backslide, and he would never be able to do deftly and well the work of the Church. All of which is no doubt quite true, in the sense that youthful impressions and teachings remain most indelibly fixed in the mind. The child who puts his mind in the shackles of a creed is very apt to become and remain the indiscriminating defender of every absurdity which that creed thrusts upon him in the name of his Lord and its Bible. Those who join later in life, stand a chance of perceiving the sophism and barbarities of the teachings of their Church and may revolt from it, to the extent, at least, of backsliding, although they may never become really skeptical as to the basic articles of the faith. If the Church can but have complete control of the minds of the children until their ideas are fixed, and their habits of thought formed, she has but little fear that they will ever desert her standard; indeed, his must be an unusually clear and well-balanced brain, having a tendency to seek new fields of thought, if he shall ever get out of the well-trodden path in which his infant feet first learned to walk. Here should Infidel parents be upon their guard. Let your children attend Sunday-school and church, if they want to, but let your home life ever shed the praises of Freethought.

There is a sublimity, a truth, a beauty and glory in the principles of secularism which will ever hold the innocent, unbiased mind of the child loyal to the teachings of Reason. The moral beauty of Infidelity will ever retain the love and respect of the family-organized brain of the darling of your home as against the superstitions and inanities of religious faith, in a fair field. Instruct your children in the principles of that ever-glorious Infidelity of which it may truly be said that it is the motive power that drives the car of progress. In your dealings at home and abroad be Infidel—ever Infidel to falsehood, to religion, and to faith, and you shall, of necessity, be faithful to truth, to science, and to reason. Never subvert the reason of your children, but ever let it act to the full extent of its development, and, above all things else, let your highest aim be to increase and augment that development to the fullest extent possible. But we are a long ways from our Methodist carnival of faith, falsehood, froth and folly. One incident more and we are done:—A new convert a young man of about twenty-one years, arose and delivered himself about as follows: "My Christian friends, I know that there is a power in prayer. Last Tuesday evening I heard that they were praying for me here. I did not think that it was necessary for me to join the Church; to be a Christian. That was my opinion. But that evening at about half-past eight o'clock, I had a notion to do something I don't very often do, that is, to read. I went and got my Bible, for I had a Bible, if I wasn't a Christian, and read a chapter or two, but could get no satisfaction from them, so I got a hymn-book and read a couple of hymns and I never felt so happy in my life. Just at that time they were praying for me here."

What a conversion for a young man, an American citizen! What hope for the perpetuity of the Republic when there are thousands—aye millions—of such voters, "sovereign citizens." Men who do not very often read. Such we consider legitimate products of Christianity, for this young man is the son of Christian parents, very zealous in the cause of Christ. And then he could get no satisfaction from his Bible—rather a rough joke on that venerable volume, when the hymn-book takes precedence of it as a medium of consolation to the nascent Christian. Verily "of such is the kingdom of heaven." Never do we so clearly recognize the transcendent beauty and sublimity of Rationalism, as when we have sat for two or three hours under the droppings of the sanctuary. Truth, beauty, and peace are over us.

Florence, Iowa, Dec. 10.

E. C. WALKER.

To become properly acquainted with a truth, we must first have disbelieved and disputed against it.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.
SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 18.

Great Jehovah, the cases of divinely-begotten sons, already considered, which are analogous to the marvelous conception of thy own son, were myths and traditions that existed in the world from five hundred years to twelve hundred years, and more, before thy son was heard of among men. With thy permission we will take a view of a few cases which are dated about the same time that Jesus is said to have made his advent on earth.

Let the first one be Apollonius of Tyana in Cappadocia. Is it not related of him by his biographers that he was born a few years before Jesus, and that he lived twenty or thirty years after it is claimed that thy son ascended into the upper atmosphere?

Was he not in many respects fully equal to Jesus? and was it not claimed that his conception was quite as remarkable?

Did not Philostratus write his biography in full? and did not also Sir Godfrey Higgins give minute details of his career, and indicate numerous points of similarity between Apollonius and Jesus?

Was not the advent of Apollonius foretold to his mother by an angel who appeared unto her?

According to tradition, did not his mother, while gathering flowers in a meadow, fall asleep and dream that she was surrounded by a circle of swans? and did not the clapping of their wings awaken her, whereupon she gave birth to Apollonius?

After the child had grown to be a youth, and had attended school at the far-famed seat of learning, Ægæ, and had applied himself closely to study, did he not subsist entirely upon fruits and vegetables, using only water for drink?

Did he not let his hair grow long and untrimmed? Did he not go barefooted? Did he not generously divide the fortune that was left him with an erring brother, and other needy relatives?

When he left Tyana and retired to the celebrated temple of Æsculapius at Ægæ, did not the fame of his wisdom spread abroad over the land, and was he not looked upon as possessing light from on high? Did not people flock to him from all directions to listen to his words of wisdom?

In order to devote himself entirely to divine things, did he not resolve to abstain from the society of women, and not to enter the marriage relation? Did he not condemn sexual pleasures as sinful and debasing?

Did he not at one time keep silence, and not utter a word for the term of five years? Was not this period passed in silent meditation, study, and devotion?

Was it not claimed for him that he performed many wonderful miracles? Did he not feed the hungry, heal the sick, the lame, and the blind, and was it not asserted that he even raised persons from the dead?

Did he not travel from city to city, and from country to country, speaking words of wisdom and instruction to the multitudes who flocked to hear him? Did they not regard him as the wisest man who had ever lived upon the earth? Did he not have devoted disciples, the most prominent among whom was his beloved Damis? Were not the morals he taught of the purest character? and was it not his object in all cases to make mankind better and happier?

Were there not striking resemblances between the works which he performed and those which Jesus performed? Among the miracles attributed to him, did he not cast out devils? Did he not read the thoughts of those who gathered around him to listen to his words?

Is it not said that he caused a tree to bloom by miraculous power? Was it not claimed that he stayed a plague that was decimating the people?

Did he not establish a school at Ephesus, in Greece where he expounded the questions of morality, and taught the philosophy of the ancient Pythagoras? Did he not spend a long life in teaching his fellow beings, and in performing acts of self-denial? Was he not clad in the simplest manner, his food the plainest, and did he not deny himself all luxuries and sensual pleasures?

While there is some disagreement as to the manner of his death, was it not claimed by his disciples that he was crucified; that he rose from the dead, and was finally taken up into heaven?

Although it is quite probable that exaggerated claims were set up relative to Apollonius, and that he performed deeds that no person has ever performed, is not his life and career far better authenticated by history than is the life and existence of Jesus?

While all that pertains to the latter is found in the writings of the four so-called Evangelists—Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, whose writings cannot be shown to have been in existence before the second century, cannot the existence of Apollonius be much better demonstrated?

Was he not known to Nero, Vespasian, and Titus, and did not the last two give him frequent audience, and confer honor upon him? Did they not consult him upon many subjects, and did they not hold him in great respect?

Did not the cruel Emperor Domitian, when he came into power, become jealous of the influence of Apollonius, and throw him into prison?

After his death, were not great honors paid to his memory? Did not the Emperor Aurelian treat the citizens of Tyana with unusual leniency because of the regard which he entertained for Apollonius, whose birth-place Tyana was?

Did not the Emperor Adrian preserve a collection of the writings of Apollonius in his palace at Antrim? Did not the Emperor Caracalla cause a temple to be erected and dedicated to the memory of Apollonius? Did not the Emperor Alexander Severus place his statues in his imperial palace with those of distinguished ancients?

Did not the Empress Julia engage Philostratus, an eminent writer of Athens, to gather all the facts in relation to Apollonius, and to write them in a book? Was not the volume so written and completed before one hundred years had passed after the death of the subject treated? Have not these writings of Philostratus come down to our own time? and is he not accepted as authority on matters pertaining to Apollonius? Did not the early fathers of the Christian Church admit the existence of Apollonius, while they attributed the marvelous power he possessed to the influence of evil spirits?

If the teachings of Apollonius had been accepted by the nations of Europe as the basis of their religion, would not his name stand, to-day, throughout Christendom, as high, and would not his fame be as great, as that of Jesus of Nazareth? And would he not now be regarded as the great teacher and savior of men?

Did not Apollonius live earlier than Jesus? and did he not live later? Did he not possess greater learning? Did he not travel in far more cities and countries? Did he not devote more than ten times as many years to teaching and instructing his fellow men as did Jesus? Were not his morals and instructions as pure and as unexceptionable as those of Jesus? Were not his powers and abilities, in every sense of the words, as great? In short, we again ask had he been accepted as generally as was the man of Galilee, would he not now be regarded as one of the most remarkable characters and one of the purest teachers that ever walked the earth?

Contemporaneous with Apollonius did there not exist another distinguished character who had a large following and was believed by his disciples to have been of divine origin—Simon Magus, sometimes called the Magician of Samaria? Were not most remarkable deeds ascribed to him?

Was it not claimed for him that he performed miracles, such as controlling the elements, transforming himself into the appearance of other men and animals, rendering himself invisible, walking on the water and in the air, passing through and sitting in flames uninjured, passing through mountains, causing trees to suddenly spring up in desert places, flinging himself from high precipices without injury, creating a man from the atmosphere, raising the dead, walking through the streets accompanied by spirits of the dead, etc., etc?

Was he not also a great moral teacher? and did he not instruct his hearers about the nature of deity, and of their proper intercourse with their fellow men, as well as of the nature of evil spirits?

Did he not build up a great name for himself? and was not his memory retained long after his death? Was not his existence recognized by the writers of the New Testament, and did they not seek to evade the force of his competitorship by ascribing his power to sorcery and the aid of evil spirits? Is not this about what might be expected of competitors in business?

In all ages of the world, have not teachers, reformers, prophets, incarnated sons of God, messiahs, redeemers, and saviors, arisen in great numbers, and have they not attracted more or less attention, according to the conditions and circumstances that surrounded them?

Is there any reason why Jesus, the carpenter's son, should be considered the greatest of them all? Was not his ministry much shorter than that of many of the others? and were the deeds he performed more remarkable than those of many of the others? Were not the morals taught by the others just as pure and just as elevated as those taught by him? Was not the celebrated "Golden Rule" taught by many of the other redeemers, and centuries earlier?

If superiority in numbers of followers and disciples prove superiority of power and divinity, should not Buddha be pronounced greatly superior to Jesus? Are not the followers of Brahma, of Confucius, or of Mohammed about equal in numbers to the followers of Jesus?

Is not the existence of Jesus quite as uncertain and as mythical as that of any of the others, and far more so than several of them? Are there not strong grounds for questioning the reality of his existence, while this is not the case with numbers of the others of the world's redeemers?

Was not the religion of Jesus much slower in its early growth than was Buddhism, Mohammedanism, and the religions instituted by other leaders and reformers? Were there not more serious disputations and contentions in the early Christian centuries as to whether Jesus had a real existence, or whether a merely spiritual one, than was the case with any others of the great religious leaders? Was that the case with Buddha or Mohammed?

Will it not be far better for mankind to become enlightened by the laws of nature and the truths of science, and thus be able to be their own saviors, than to place implicit faith in any of the mythical characters who lived in the long ago, and had no better means of arriving at truth than now exists in the world?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

What I Don't Believe.—No. 26.

223. I do not believe that the old Patriarch Jacob—the father and founder of a people so remarkable and so lovely that God took them under his special care and attention, to the neglect and disadvantage of all the other nations of the earth—was a model, honest, truthful, upright, perfect, saint. His distinguishing characteristics were double-dealing, intrigue, and trickery. He possessed the faculty of disregarding truth in a shameless manner when he thought his own interests would be thereby promoted.

224. I do not think it was a brotherly or an honorable transaction at the time he "enchured" his twin brother Esau out of his birthright by taking advantage of him when he was nearly exhausted with hunger and made him swear away the only valuable possession he had in the world, for a bowlful of bean-porridge. This is one of the hardest bargains on record—a man's birthright to be taken from him, with the sanctity of an oath, for what, under the circumstances, should have been given without exacting anything in return. If Esau was so nearly famished with hunger that he was upon the point of fainting, Jacob ought to have come to his relief with his soup without a moment's hesitation, and without exacting a thousand times the value of it. How base in Jacob to thus take advantage of a brother's dire necessity, and demand such an enormous consideration for that which had cost him but a few minutes' labor! He "cornered" the soup market most effectually. He had all there was, and he ran the price up to a fearful elevation. He would have made a conscienceless "bull" in the stock exchange of Wall street. He would have bullied up the stocks he happened to hold at a relentless rate, and with a frightful disregard for those who might be ruined by his rascality.

I do not know precisely what the value of a birthright is; they have depreciated very much in valuation within the last few thousand years, till at the present time but a very moderate premium would be paid for them in our market; but at the time Jacob swindled his brother out of his, they were valued very highly and were more prized than any earthly possessions. This shows what a soulless transaction it was of Jacob's to thus take advantage of his famishing brother. How many thousand brothers there are in this sinful age of the world, who would most willingly and promptly give a starving brother, or a starving fellow being not related in the slightest degree, something to appease hunger and save life? Who but a natural inborn villain would take advantage of such a circumstance to enrich himself by performing one of the simplest duties of life, and thus ruin his brother! Is it strange that the Jews have been considered sharp-in a bargain, if they inherited the qualities of their father Jacob?

225. Jacob's conduct was still more reprehensible when, by absolute knavery, he obtained his father's final blessing, which was designed for and justly due to his brother; for in this instance barefaced lying was coupled with injustice. The old man Isaac, getting far advanced in years, his limbs trembling and his eyesight gone, felt that the close of life was near, and he told his favorite son Esau to take his bow and quiver and go out and procure him some venison, and make him a good savory dish, such as he was fond of, that he might have one more square meal, and then bless his first-born, before he died. While the faithful son was on his mission, Jacob and his mother conspired to execute as aggravated a case of dishonesty and swindling as ever was perpetrated. Jacob went to the flock and brought in two kids, which his mother dressed and cooked according to Isaac's tastes, and Jacob took it in to his father, imitating Esau's voice, and pretending to be Esau.

The old gentleman seemed somewhat suspicious of his tricky son, and asked how he had obtained the venison so quickly, when Jacob, with peculiar pious cant, said that the Lord had assisted him by bringing the venison to him. Thus the lying fellow made God a party to his rascality. This falsehood did not allay the old man's suspicions, and he asked the dissembler to come near. When the father felt of the son he said, "The voice is Jacob's but the hands are the hands of Esau." Here the dishonest Jacob had taken means to deceive the old man. To make himself appear like his hairy brother he had put pieces of goat-skin on his hands and neck, and in that way the old man was taken in, and he imparted his blessing to the scapegrace. Did any one ever hear of deeper dishonesty! The old man, still feeling not quite sure, earnestly inquired, "Art thou my very son Esau?" and Jacob repeated the falsehood, "I am," and the rogue allowed his old father to dandle him and toy with him and smell of him, under the delusion that it was his first-born, Esau. Was ever a confiding, blind old man worse treated by a thief or a robber! It can easily be imagined how he shook and trembled when he found how he had been taken in when Esau really did come, and the unhappy son cried and plead with his father when he learned how his dishonest brother had injured him. It is not strange that he, in his anguish and perplexity, threatened revenge upon his dishonest brother, which the partial mother over-hearing, sent Jacob to her dear brother Laban.

226. It would not be supposed that God would approve of such double-dealing and dishonesty as Jacob had practiced, but it seems that he did, for while on his way to Padan-aran God appeared to Jacob, leaning on the top of a ladder, and gave him a special blessing. I cannot believe that Jacob was worthy of it.

227. Jacob's conduct with his uncle Laban was not marked by that honesty and integrity which a man ought to evince who is a favorite of heaven. His tendency to sharp practice and deep schemes of cheating were here made conspicuous. Laban agreeing that the spotted, ringed, streaked, and speckled cattle and goats and the brown ones among the sheep should be Jacob's for the services rendered to his father-in-law and uncle, Jacob took the unfair advantage of peeling rods and poles and putting them up at the watering-troughs when the cattle came to drink, and they conceived there, and when they brought forth their young, a large proportion of them were also ringed, streaked, and speckled, so that in a short time nearly all the increase of the flocks and the herds belonged to Jacob, and his wealth increased wonderfully. The designing fellow worked it so that the increase of the strong and healthy cattle and sheep belonged to him, and the feeble ones were left for his father-in-law. Possibly Jacob thought it was paying Laban back in his own coin for making him work the second seven years for the girl, Rachel, whom he wanted. Perhaps it was "diamond cut diamond."

228. Jacob probably performed his duty faithfully enough as a patriarch at the head of a family. Probably his wives, Leah and Rachel, and their handmaids, Zilpah and Bilhah, had little to complain of on his part on the score of family duty, for between them a full dozen boys and a girl were reared; but Jacob's treatment of his old father-in-law, when he left him, was decidedly shabby. When old Laban was away sheep-shearing, Jacob gathered together all the sheep, cattle, camels, asses, and goats that by sharp practice he had made off his father-in-law, and sneaked away like a thief; and Rachel, one of Jacob's wives, actually stole the very gods and images that belonged to her father.

Laban did not know of their leaving, nor the manner of their leaving, until they had been gone three days, when he took his men and pursued them seven days. When he caught up with them, he upbraided Jacob for stealing away from him in that ungentlemanly manner, for appropriating to himself property that did not belong to him, and especially for stealing his gods. These latter Jacob gave him permission to search for. Rachel secreted them and sat upon them, and told a falsehood to prevent her father from finding his own property that he valued so highly.

It would have been far more honorable and manly in Jacob to have given Laban notice that he wished to leave, and had a fair and honest settlement, and not to have permitted his wives to take anything that did not belong to them. It would have looked much better for the founder of a great nation—far more in keeping with a man of integrity, honor, and justice.

229. Jacob's true character was farther exemplified when he approached his old home, and when he deemed it a matter of prudence to placate his brother, Esau. He sent messengers to him to announce his coming with the wealth he had accumulated for a score of years. When he learned that Esau was coming to meet him with four hundred men he feared greatly, and divided his people, his flocks, his herds, and his camels into two companies, and gave instructions that if his brother should smite one company, the other should escape. To secure the good will of the brother whom he had so greatly wronged twenty years before, he sent him as a present two hundred she-goats, twenty he-goats, the same number of ewes and rams, thirty milch camels with their colts, forty kine and ten bulls, twenty she asses and ten foals. Notwithstanding, however, the magnificent presents which he thus had sent his injured brother, his conscience seemed to trouble him, and he had great fears for the safety of himself and family, lest Esau should come down upon him and capture all; so he rose up in the night and took his two wives, their two handmaids, and his eleven sons, and sent them over the ford of Jabbok.

230. After Jacob had thus disposed of his wives and children, he passed the remainder of the night in one of the most remarkable wrestling-matches that has ever been placed on record. It seems that God wrestled with Jacob till daylight in the morning without gaining any advantage in the contest, until, by a foul movement, he put Jacob's hip out of joint. They had no umpire to decide which was the victor, but took it out alone in the dark. It has been a question with theologians who it really was that wrestled with Jacob that night. The book says at first that it was a man; the heading of the chapter says it was an angel, but Jacob says it was God, and it must be admitted that he had the best chance to know. He declared it to be God, and that he had seen him face to face. I cannot believe it was the omnipotent, Supreme Power of the Universe, for I do not believe Jacob could have proved so nearly equal to him, and God, doubtless, too, had too much business on hand to spend a whole night in a wrestling-match with a Jewish trickster. It belittles the ruling deity of the solar system and all the endless worlds, and makes him appear a mean, crude trifler, to attribute such a night's labor to him.

231. The two points that Jacob gained by the contest were, first, to have his hip put out of joint, and, second, to have his name changed. After the dislocation, God is said to have told Jacob that his name should afterwards be Israel, and that he should not be called Jacob any more. The latter clause never was verified, for he has been called Jacob ever since, by God himself and almost everybody else.

232. Esau, contrary to the fears which Jacob entertained, received his brother very cordially and affectionately, and showed not the slightest disposition to treat him unkindly on account of the injuries done him twenty years earlier.

The superior nobility and magnanimity of Esau over Jacob in this connection is most apparent. The latter was governed by a cowardly, cringing fear, induced by an inherent sense of guilt, while the former exhibited a generous spirit of forgiveness which invests his memory with far more respect than all the wealth which Jacob won by trickery and knavery. The simple magnanimity of Esau has rarely been excelled in any age of the world. It was a triumph of filial affection and a generous nature over a deep sense of the most execrable treachery that man could be guilty of. I cannot think that it was just or right in God to love Jacob and hate Esau when their conduct made it far more proper that his feelings toward the brothers should be exactly reversed.

233. I do not think Jacob and his sons were governed by a humane or honorable spirit, when Dinah, the daughter of Jacob and Leah, fell into trouble with Shechem, the son of Hamor the Hivite, the prince of the country, who fell in love with her and lay with her. After the young man had done the deed, he seemed to be governed by far more honorable motives than is usually the case in similar circumstances. His soul cleaved unto Dinah. He wished to marry the girl and make her his lawful and honorable wife, and for this purpose he sent his father to negotiate with Jacob and his sons, that he might wed Dinah and set up housekeeping at once. The young man himself also went and plead with Jacob for his daughter, and said to him and his sons: "Let me find grace in your eyes, and what ye shall say unto me I will give. Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me; but give me the damsel to wife." The Jacob family said they could not listen to their sister marrying an uncircumcised man, but if Shechem and all the males belonging to him would be circumcised and become like themselves in that respect, he should have Dinah for his wife. So earnest and honest was the young man in his intentions, that he readily consented, and he and his father and all the males of their city were circumcised. But mark the treachery and baseness of the Jacobites. On the third day after the men had been circumcised, and when they were sore from the operation, the sons of Jacob rushed in upon them like murdering brigands, and with the edge of the sword put every male to death, and despoiled the city of all its treasures. They took the wives and daughters and all the little ones of the slain men, and took their sheep and oxen and asses, and all that was in the city, and appropriated the same to their own use.

234. This was the conduct which God's chosen people were guilty of in the very commencement of their inglorious career. More treacherous, cruel, and base-hearted business was never performed; and it would seem a marvel how a just God could approve of such conduct, and feel a partial love for men capable of such villainous treachery, murder and robbery. The only reproof Jacob gave in reference to the bloody outrage was from the fear that such conduct would make him unpopular with the people of the adjacent country, and that they might come against him and slay him. He never said a word in condemnation of the high-handed outrage and crime they had committed. It was only for his own safety that he was concerned. And this is the character of the father of God's peculiar and chosen people, whom he selected as his own in preference to all the inhabitants of the earth, upon whom to devote his special care and love, and to favor with the choicest blessings of heaven! I cannot believe that a pure and just God could feel a special love for people guilty of such villainy, or that he could choose such out from all the peoples and nations of the earth. The idea seems too absurd and monstrous to be entertained for a moment. If a God is to be judged by the companions he chooses and the company he keeps, the God of Jacob and his posterity certainly cannot take very high rank.

235. In looking over the history of Jacob, little can be found in his character, as we have seen, but trickery, dishonesty, falsehood, and execrable knavery. There is not one redeeming trait, not one noble deed to be found in the whole course of his life to neutralize his many wicked and dishonorable actions. With the exception of the courage and ability which he showed in wrestling with God, and holding an even contest with him for several hours, which at best is extremely mythical and improbable, there is very little that can be placed to his credit as a high-minded man. Craftiness, low cunning, and meanness were his distinguishing traits. Many of his sons, too, were far from being models of virtue, and their descendants were no better. Judah committed adultery with a woman, got a child by her, and then sought to burn her. Reuben held sexual connection with Bilhah, who had acted the part of wife to Jacob, and had borne him two sons. (Such conduct evinces the fact that there was not a very high state of morals prevailing among them.) Simeon and Levi were murderous wretches who slew people without a cause, and of whom it was said: "Instruments of cruelty were found in their habitations." Dinah was guilty of a great immorality. Joseph, the favorite of the old man, and who was basely sold into slavery by his own brothers, proved to be a merciless speculator. As an adept in telling the meaning of dreams, he found favor with Pharaoh, and became secretary of his treasury and grand purveyor of the whole kingdom. He bought up all the corn at a low price, and kept it till everybody else was out, when he sold it at an immense advance, thus realizing enormous profits. He became emphatically the premier of Egypt, the grand vizier of the house of Pharaoh. It was this family of twelve hard sons, that, we are told, God placed his special affections upon, and, while indifferent to all the rest of mankind, cherished for these brigands and robbers ardent love and affection. I can believe nothing of the kind.

235. Probably the best thing about Jacob is, that he was a myth—that he never had an actual existence. Many learned men regard the whole story as an allegory. That the twelve sons of Jacob only meant the twelve signs of the Zodiac, as taught by the Chaldeans; as did the twelve great gods of the pagans, and the twelve apostles. The Chaldeans were great astronomers, and studied the motions of the heavenly bodies with much carefulness. The Jews knew nothing of astronomy when they were taken captives to Babylon, where they learned something of that science, and became familiar with the ideas of cosmogony and the creation which the Chaldeans held. When they returned to their own city and country, they were far better informed than were the Jewish barbarians who were taken captives, and they felt the need of a history and a system of religion of their own, and both were gotten up. What is called the Old Testament was, doubtless, then written, and the story of Jacob and his twelve sons was a clumsy imitation of the Chaldean sun-god and the twelve signs of the zodiac. The greater part of the Bible stories are now being shown to have a direct connection with the astrology and sun-worship of Chaldea and Babylon. So Jacob, with all his villainess, is far pleasanter to contemplate as a myth, than as a reality whom God recognized, loved and embraced.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

To Those Who Read and Don't Pay

We want to say a few words. From information we receive, we estimate that there must be several thousands over the country who are very fond of reading THE TRUTH SEEKER, but who don't want to pay for it. They depend upon borrowing it. This is hardly fair to the persons who pay for the paper, or to ourselves. Those who pay for it often want to keep it by them so as to have it to show to friends when they call in, and the practice is depriving us of the very assistance we so greatly need to meet the expenses we cannot avoid incurring. It is often the case that one TRUTH SEEKER has to do duty for a whole neighborhood, and goes from house to house until it is about worn out. That is all well enough in one point of view, but not in another. The number who are willing to pay us is too small to make the running of the business pleasant and comfortable. The support we receive is hardly adequate to the outlays that we have to make. In justice, those who are edified and instructed by the paper we print are in duty bound to contribute somewhat towards paying the expenses of it. If every person who reads the paper regularly would pay his little two dollars a year to the publisher, it would help him out amazingly to enable him to issue more reading matter and to do more towards spreading truth over the land. Friends, don't cheat the overworked but underpaid editor and publisher of THE TRUTH SEEKER out of the pittance he is justly entitled to. He needs more help than he receives. Let every person who likes to read his paper feel willing to pay for it. If they cannot send in the price for a year they certainly can for six or three months—one dollar, or fifty cents. Friends, if you will all make up your minds to do this it will be a great benefit to us—just try it once.

And let every person who likes to read this sheet be willing to have his postmaster—Deacon Brown and Mrs. Grundy—know that he is not afraid to take THE TRUTH SEEKER. So long as we are skulking cowards we cannot be respected by our fellow men, and so long as we refuse to pay for what we enjoy and that does us good, we are not strictly honest.

Brother John Syphers.

Brother Syphers, who will soon be known to the world "and the rest of mankind" as the editor of The Agitator, writes us a long letter (which, for want of room, he will please excuse us for not publishing), in which he says he has been sick for several days in consequence of exposure and getting wet while working to arrest a fire in his village which threatened to burn his studio and Agitator office. He is getting right again, and means business so far as his proposed paper is concerned. He says subscriptions are coming in lively, and he wishes the influx of names to continue. His first number, for May, will be out in two or three weeks, and he wants to start off with as large a subscription list as possible. Those who take his paper will surely be amused and edified. They can hardly be troubled with gloom and melancholy while reading Brother Sypher's sharp hits and funnyisms.

His monthly Agitator will be issued at $1 00 per year. Next to our own sheet, we hope to see his the most prosperous. His address is Lockport, Ill.

TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS, VOL. IV.—To those who have ordered Vols. I, II, III, of THE TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS we will mail Vol. IV. at 50 cents in paper covers and 75 cents in cloth. This is extremely cheap reading matter, and as good as cheap. Those who have the first three volumes can hardly dispense with the fourth.

Our readers should remember that we send, postpaid, the four volumes, containing over 2,100 pages, at $2.00 in paper and $3.00 in cloth. Every Liberal family in the land ought to have a bound set of THE TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS. In the assortment are Col. Ingersoll's far-famed lectures, and one hundred and ten other excellent tracts by the best authors. If it were generally known how much valuable reading matter is to be had in the four volumes of TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS for a mere nominal price, we think many would order them who have not yet done so. We fill orders for these volumes with peculiar pleasure, for we know the buyer in every instance richly obtains the worth of his money. We wish every reader of this sheet had a set of bound tracts.

Amberley.

The following is from Hull's Crucible:

AN ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF, by Viscount Amberley. D. M. Bennett, New York.

This book is invested with peculiar interest. The author was the son of Lord John Russell, one of the oldest Peers of England. The wife of the author, to whose memory the work is most tenderly inscribed, while assisting him in his labors of getting up the work, was smitten by the hand of death, and before it was completed, while it was yet in the hands of the printer, Lord Amberley himself passed away. Great efforts were made on the part of some of the family and others to buy up the entire edition and destroy it; but in this they failed.

D. M. Bennett has done the American Liberal cause a good service in republishing this truly great book in so cheap and yet so substantial a form. Solomon said, "of making many books there is no end," and from the many books which come from the press in these days we may yield to the conviction that there is no end—and so far as we can see in the future there is not likely to be an end of books. He is a wise man who chooses only good books. Lord Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief" is certainly of this latter class, and every reader who wishes to keep abreast of the times would do well to possess a copy of this late attack upon the strongholds of Christianity. It is an examination of the foundation of Religion in general, and of the special claims of Christianity. The style of the writer is elevated and elegant, but while he avoids vulgar methods, he nevertheless lets the sword cut where it may when truth has it in hand. The book is interesting because it deals so largely in what may be called the history of religion. When the author discusses any principle or theory, he brings as illustration and proof of his thought, the manners and customs of different nations and tribes. This is so unlike the dogmatic style of preaching, that notwithstanding the encomiums of Paul on the foolishness of preaching, we prefer the hard facts which Lord Amberley gives us.

The principal value of the book consists in the candid and capable manner in which the writer treats the great characters, Confucius, Lao-tse, Buddha, Zarathustra, Mahomet, and Jesus Christ—and the great books.

Almost one-half of the book is devoted to the "Holy books or Bibles."

1. The Thirteen King; 2. Tao-te-King; 3. The Veda; 4. The Tripitaka; 5. The Zend-Avesta; 6. The Koran; 7. The Old Testament; 8. The New Testament.

There is a certain freshness in the author's thoughts which lends no inconsiderable interest to the pages of his "Analysis." We have, like many others, read almost all well-known biographies of Jesus, and the ground over which we have often traveled has become familiar, if not commonplace, and it becomes most interesting to follow the lead of one who, to some extent carves a new way—or like an explorer digs up from these ancient foundations some unknown relic which sheds light upon the otherwise dark and insoluble questions.

There is so wide a scope to his method of treating each branch of his theme, that we cannot attempt, in so small a space, to quote many specimens of his thought or style. We will however venture one.

"The exact converse of this unintelligent reverence for the sacred writings is the excessive and over-subtle exercise of intelligence upon them. It is the common fate of such works to be made the subject of the most minute, most careful, and most constant scrutiny to which any of the productions of the human mind can be subjected. The pious and the learned alike submit them to an unceasing study. No phrase, no word, no letter, passes unobserved. The result of this devout investigation naturally is, that much which in reality belongs to the mind of the reader is attributed to that of the writer. Approached with the fixed prepossessions that they contain vast stores of superhuman wisdom, that which is so eagerly sought from them is certain to be found. Hence the natural and simple meaning of the words is set aside, or is relegated to a secondary place. All sorts of forced interpretations are put upon them with a view of compelling them to harmonize with that which it is supposed they ought to mean. Statements, doctrines and allusions are discovered in them which not only have no existence in their pages, but which are absolutely foreign to the epoch at which they were written. Lastly, are there palpable contradictions? At whatever cost they must be explained away, for Holy Writ being inspired, can never contradict itself."

The American edition of Viscount Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief," from the enterprising press of D. M. Bennett, of the Liberal and Scientific Publishing House, New York, has been promptly received by us, and will receive that more careful and critical attention hereafter which it so richly merits. The author of this volume, destined to become famous in the history of liberal thought and untrammelled investigation, was the son of Lord John Russell, one of the oldest Peers of England. He had scarcely got his work, the fruit of many years of studious research and patient thought, into the hands of the printers, when he was removed by death. The first edition had been issued but a little while when his father and the Duke of Bedford made urgent efforts to buy it up and suppress it. Viscount Amberley was bred strictly within the Church of England, and every influence combined to keep him within the fold; but his naturally independent spirit, joined to the loving influence of the wife to whom he was devoted, broke away from these early restraints, and he resolved to investigate the whole subject of religion for himself. The result was the avowal of his unbelief in the code taught him from his youth, in the form in which it is now presented to the reader. In the brief preface the wish is expressed that those readers who find in this book their most cherished beliefs questioned, and their surest consolations set at naught, would try and remember that he "had not shrunk from pain and anguish to himself, as one by one he parted with portions of that faith which in boyhood and early youth had been the mainspring of his life." The book is dedicated to his young wife, who was its chief inspiration, and who preceded him by but a little time to the silent land. We shall give the book a critical notice in an early issue. —Banner of Light.

The remarkable work "Analysis of Religious Belief," by the Viscount Amberley, which has made so strong and wide an impression in England among all who devote attention to Religious discussion, has been republished entire in this country. It is a work of over 740 pp. and no one volume of which we know is more comprehensive. It follows out the beliefs in all lands and traces the similarities which exist in them. It is essentially freethinking and radical, but is at the same time a fine-tempered and evidently conscientious work. The outspoken language, the firmness of purpose and the utter denial of the conventionalities which might be expected to influence a writer of Viscount Amberley's disposition, give an increased value to the volume. It is an able work all will allow, whether agreeing or disagreeing with its deductions; likewise all will perceive at once that it is the life-effort of a scholar, a student and a very deep thinker. —Boston Daily Evening Traveller.

The following friendly notice of some of our publications appeared in the Religio-Philosophical Journal.

We have received from the enterprising publisher, D. M. Bennett, New York, the following works, all of which will be read by Liberalists with pleasure.

THE OUTCAST. By Winwood Reade, 1877. Pp. 160, 12mo. Paper, 30 cents.

The English edition of this profoundly interesting and instructive story sold at $2.00, and the publisher has conferred a great favor on the liberal-reading public by presenting it so cheaply that none need be deprived of its perusal. Mr. Reade is well known by his "Martyrdom of Man," a work grandly suggestive, at times, fanciful, but always broad or Catholic. This story of the "Outcast," narrates the struggles of an honest truth-loving soul out of the mists of theology, from a priest to a Freethinker, and the scorn, contumely, and misery he sustained. Truly, the Infidel is the true bearer of the cross!

One arises from its perusal depressed and sad, that such suffering exists, and with intense disgust for the system of religion which makes bigots of well-meaning men and women, and in the name of love, withers and desolates the emotion, affection, and all the generous impulses of the human heart.

THE PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or, an answer to the question: "Have we a Supernaturally Revealed, Infallibly Inspired, and Miraculously Attested Religion in the World?" In four parts.—I. A brief history of the four great Religions Claiming a Supernatural Origin—Paganism, Hinduism, Christianity and Mohammedanism. II. Review of the arguments in favor of Supernatural Religion. III. Statement of the arguments against Supernatural Religion. IV. Particular remarks on the Supernatural Origin of Christianity, and Statement of the views of Rationalists on Inspiration, Revelation and Religion. By E. E. Guild. Pp. 143. 12mo. Paper, 30 cents; Muslin, 50 cents.

The title page fully describes the contents of this little book, which is crowded with good sense. Of course it is impossible for the author in such limited space to more than outline the vast field he reviews, but he has performed his task faithfully and well.

THE ADVENTURES OF ELDER TRIPTOLEMUS TUB—Comprising important and startling disclosures concerning hell; its magnitude, morals employment, climate, etc. All satisfactorily authenticated. By George Rodgers. Pp. 65, 12mo. Price, 15 cents.

A book sometime before the public, republished in cheap form. A most readable, philosophical satire.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic Radical Story.—By Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. Pp. 100, 12mo. Price, paper, 15 cents.

Is an instructive story by a fearless writer. John the Infidel has a more prosperous time than is usually allotted to such characters. A lesson of sterling value is taught, however, by his fortunes, that an honest, upright, unswerving adherence to truth and right, in the end always wins.

EVOLUTION: AS MR. UNDERWOOD EXPLAINS IT.—This scientific theory—or perhaps this theory of scientists, was very ably discussed by Mr. Underwood. We shall give the readers of the Reporter a synopsis of the arguments of the speaker and probably suggest some queries or make some comments. We do so for the following reasons: the theory is very generally misunderstood. Mr. Underwood gave a very fair and thorough view of it. We think no harm can result from the discussion of the subject. It is a theme that every thinking mind must grapple. By free discussion and investigation whatever there is of value in the theory will be brought out, and whatever of error there is in it, will be exposed, and sooner or later refuted. There is nothing in the theory, we are confident, that can in any way destroy the worth or force of morality or religion. We give the following synopsis with the full conviction that it will necessarily be defective; and possibly the speaker's ideas may be shorn of their force and precision through our lack of comprehension or ability to express them. We shall aim to be accurate and fair. Mr. Underwood began by saying that the common notion of the theory is erroneous. That man sprang from the monkey or tadpole is not the doctrine of evolution. Man is not a development from the monkey tribe, but the highest of a branch related to the monkey. Evolution means unfolding; the development of the heterogeneous from the homogeneous; from the simple to the complex. Man is not a development from nothing. This is absurd. Every effect exists potentially in the cause. Cause and effect not necessarily alike—as is often erroneously affirmed. A marked and essential distinction between cause and condition. Nebular hypothesis—accepted by scientists and theologians—explains how matter was put into form of sun, earth, planets. By condensation, cooling, contracting the earth was gradually made ready for the forms of life produced by operation of natural law. Life is a form of force, as heat or light is. Origin of life not more mysterious than origin of heat. All life evolved from lower forms of matter and force. Combinations of matter give us life, as combinations of chemicals in proper proportion and proper conditions give us compound bodies. Matter is eternal. Creation of matter is unthinkable. Worlds have their childhood, their youth, manhood, old age and decay. Systems will decay, dissolution will take place; and as neither matter nor force can be destroyed, there will be new combinations, new systems, and so on through the cycles of eternity. In the absolute sense there is no progression or retrogression. All things occur in the eternal order of nature. Dissolution is as much an ordinance of nature as progression. Power or Force, in which we "live, move, and have our being" is unknowable. . . . Objections to the Theory.—1. Connecting links not found. But Prof. Huxley has traced the development of the horse back, showing clearly that one case is known of an existing animal derived from a pre-existing one; 2. Species never cross. Not correct. Not a correct definition of species. Illustrations are numerous. Finally, best men, scientists of Europe and America accept the theory and put it on same ground as nebular theory or the theory of conservation of energy. The above is the merest outline, and does not give much idea of the force and profoundness of the lecture. Mr. Underwood is a clear and powerful thinker. Has energy and courage to say what he thinks. We cannot speak too highly of the ability of Mr. Underwood, yet in our feeble way we must present our objections to his arguments. —West Liberty (Iowa) Reporter.

Braden-Underwood Debate.

On Monday the 23d inst. a twelve nights' debate will commence at Denver, Col., between these two gentlemen. The ground to be gone over embraces nearly all the differences between Materialism and Christianity. The issues to be discussed, as agreed upon, are these:—

First—The origin of all existence and phenomena.

Second—The origin of religion, the necessity for religion, the basic ideas of religion, the necessity of revelation, and how should religion, revelation, and their basic ideas be given to man.

Third—The nature and influence of the teachings of the Bible.

Fourth—The origin, authenticity, genuineness, credibility, truthfulness, and history and scientific accuracy of the Bible.

Friendly Correspondence.

I. N. MOORE, Avoca, N. Y., writes: THE TRUTH SEEKER has become a household necessity. It is the first paper I read. I am glad to see G. G. Briggs so liberal. I am personally acquainted with him—used to work for him in California. Fowler and Well's Phrenological Journal of July 1859, has his likeness and phrenological developments. Hoping you will be able to keep your head above water, and let your light shine, I remain yours for the good.

GEORGE PADDINGTON, Millerton, Cal., writes: Please find my picture enclosed. I have taken your paper from the first number, and I like its tone. I want the "Sages," but cannot take it at present. I think a discussion between a Christian and an Infidel, to be published in your paper and then in book form would greatly augment the number of your readers. Nearly all Liberals would want to read it, and some Christians. I send my TRUTH SEEKERS out on their mission, and they will bring in fruit when money is more plenty.

Mrs. Dr. VERNON, Lakeside, Florida, writes: Say to the correspondent who inquired for juvenile publications suitable for the children of Liberals, that the Scribner publishing house issue a magazine at $3.00 a year called St. Nicholas, which is really the finest and most perfect thing of its kind ever published. It is conducted by Mary Mapes Dodge, and is (although from an orthodox house) free from all the objectionable religious cant of other children's works; and among its contributors are to be found Louise Alcott, and many others of rank radical views.

N. W. HENDRICKS, Clear Lake, Iowa, writes: There are many here who look forward with much delight to the time for the arrival of THE TRUTH SEEKER. You may be sure your spicy paper is doing its work in Iowa. Many professed Christians read THE TRUTH SEEKER (borrowed) fully as carefully as they do their Bibles. The Christians of this place have been having a great revival for the past few weeks, but now they have fallen to quarreling among themselves. It is said that one of the sisters has sued a brother for $10,000 for seduction.

D. V. MORGAN, Molina, Ill., writes: I want THE TRUTH SEEKER to oppose Christianity enough to not make use of a Christian date. It is as easy to print U. S. A. as it is to print A. D. Allow me to ask who is Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker? and is Mr. Slenker likely to live forever? Many of us Infidels have fallen in love with her long ago. I must tell you what I did with those Tracts and Leaflets. I took them to a revival meeting and gave them to persons as they came out of the door; and I have the satisfaction of knowing that some of the seed fell on good ground, and is likely to yield fruit to the cause of truth.

CHARLES FRANCIS, Boston, Mass., enclosing photographs of himself and wife, writes: We are both converts from Christianity to Liberalism; and it would take more than all the priests of all the gods to get us into the church again. We accept nothing but demonstrated facts, and no church has such to give. All that the thousand different religions of the world offer is simply faith; they demand belief, not investigation. And after a man has been unmanly enough to shut from his mind every ray of reason, he has only the slim chance of one in a thousand for being saved. But as long as there is so much money expended for the propagation of the Christian faith, people will continue to profess it.

J. L. MCKELVEY, Davenport, Iowa, writes: I received the "Sages" safe and sound. In my estimation, the price of Infidelity is the price of brains. Infidel is a name given by the lovers of tyranny and oppression to the friends of freedom and progress. In all ages there have been men who believed that their brains belonged to themselves and not to God; men who have used their tongues in speaking the honest thoughts instead of idly repeating creeds. These men have been, and still are, the real saviors of the race." Col. R. G. Ingersoll, in his last political speech of the campaign in this city, said, "I am a free man. This is a free country. I will think my thought. I will express that thought or die."

D. W. FILLBROWN, East Highgate, Vermont, writes: Those Tracts you sent are nearly worn out in the service of their divine master, Truth. But I see many who are still suffering under the various phases of theological disorders, so ruinous to healthy mental condition, and I really need more of those anti-church truth-coated pills to deal out to such patients as have common sense enough to take them. I find them very potent remedial agents, and they have helped to emancipate many of the reason-forsaken dupes of priestcraft from their superstitious bondage, who now rejoice in that true salvation which flows from Nature's divine revelations and the God of Reason.

GEO. WEIDEL, Miamisburgh, O., writes: You have opened our eyes in this section. You have taught me something I never knew before, viz., that a paper exists in this country that dare expose and criticize the Christian Bible. I was of the opinion that it was unlawful to speak aught but well of the Holy Bible in this free country, but I see that you, for one, have the nerve to express your views on the book in your paper. I say, for one, go on with your brave little sheet. Open more eyes; wake up some of the half-dead-and-half-alive people. I am not a rich man; I would like to aid you if I could, but cannot, but still I will always try and have two dollars for your fearless journal.

T. A. CAPPHART, Polk Patch, Ind., writes: Freethought is gaining ground in this town. The Methodists, after a two weeks' effort this winter, failed to get up a revival of any magnitude. One of the brothers publicly admitted that Infidelity was gaining ground, and that it was the cause of their failure. We have the advantage of them when we make a convert—and that is whenever we get one to reading—he never goes back on us, while they cannot retain five per cent. of theirs. It is strange, but true, that church members are more easily converted than others. I suppose it is because they have a better chance to see the hypocrisy practiced by their church.

J. A. RUTHERFORD, Honey Grove, Texas, (about eighty years of age) writes: Dear TRUTH SEEKER—After my respects, etc., I beg leave to ask the publication (gratis) of the following singular but sincere request. I sincerely request every man, woman and child that thinks the Bible tells more immoral, nasty tales of the God than it does of the Devil, to drop me a postal card, simply telling me who, where and what. My name is J. A. Rutherford, born Jan. 31, 1799, and have been living and thinking ever since. I neither use tobacco, nor drink whiskey. My neighbors call me the honest, conscientious old Infidel. "The world is my country, and to dogood my religion." All newspapers that have the moral courage to copy are respectfully requested to do so. Address J. A. Rutherford, Honey Grove, Texas.

MALCOLM GRAHAM, Salt Lake City, writes: The "World's Sages," etc., is certainly a valuable collection of highly profitable and interesting matter for the reflecting mind. When we contemplate the condition under which many self-evident honest and powerful thinkers of the past spoke and wrote against error with ignorance, bigotry and fanaticism to contend with, holding their lives lightly, all for the spread and support of the greatest practical good mankind has ever known, suffering in many cases death from those they wished to benefit, force us to the conclusion that the mass of mankind advance to reason and common sense in matters of religion only by slow and painful degrees. This book will be appreciated by a very great number of people. It should and I believe it will have a large circulation. I feel much indebted to you, Mr. Bennett, for your great service to the cause of Reason and Truth.

CHAS. B. ALLEN, M. D., Ann Arbor, Mich., writes: The time for which I subscribed for your paper has almost expired; when it does expire, please discontinue, as I am going to leave this place to go whither I know not. This afternoon I receive from the Michigan University the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Sixty M. D.s go out then, of whom nearly two-thirds are Freethinkers. The best men in the class are badly tainted with Liberalism. I believe as a rule there are more Freethinkers in the medical profession than there are in any other. How do you find it? I am circulating the "Free Religious Constitutional Amendment," upon which I have the names of seventy men who wish a total separation of Church and State. The greatest trouble I find with men is that they have not the backbone to come out and say what they honestly believe. I expect it will be policy for me when I start out in my profession to keep my mouth closed in regard to religion. I may have to until I make a reputation. I will do what I can in a mild way.

Mrs. L. HUTCHINSON, Bishop's Creek, Cal., writes: In your paper of March 14th a nameless lady patron says that she does not believe in spirit communion, because when she was left an orphan in her childhood, and when sick and heart-broken from cruel treatment, she had begged her mother to come to her, but she came not. I heard a preacher once make the same plea against Spiritualism. Said he: "My mother died when I was a small boy, and I used to go to her grave at the still hour of night, and pray to God to let me see my mother again; and," he added, "if it had been possible, I believe I should have seen her." But it is in answer to just such prayers and heart-longings that the gulf of death will be bridged over, making it possible for our loved ones to recross the dark so be we live individualized beyond. But our love that cannot die must span the infinitude of time and space, and be united to the central source of light, life, and love from whence it came. What hope for of blissful existence, in some form, ere conscious life completes these cycles of eternity?

Dr. H. J. PARKER, Hannibal, Mo., writes: Amberley's "Analysis" came duly to hand, and I find it the best book of the kind I have ever seen. It is a work which will awaken deep interest in the mind of every reader. It is one that will take the superstition out of any one who carefully peruses its pages. Altogether, it is a rare and masterly production, and its reprint and circulation in this country is an immense service to the cause of Freethought. It is, indeed, remarkable that a man in the station of Amberley, nurtured in the Christian faith, and brought up amid all the surroundings of superstition, should break away from the fetters that bound him, and learn to love truth more than respectability. He sought to discharge a solemn duty to humanity by proclaiming to the world his honest convictions. The book will leave a lasting impression upon the mind of every candid Christian who reads it. While containing nothing that might shock the most squeamish child of faith, it will surely lead every reasonable orthodox reader on to a knowledge of the truth. This generation owes a debt of gratitude both to the memory of the deceased author and to the enterprising American publisher. I am in hopes of sending you many orders for it.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygeian Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

SPERMATORRHEA.—Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this life-wasting disease. It is an external application, and has made 1000 permanent cures. Charges moderate. Address with stamp, Vineland, New Jersey. t112

WANTED—AN EXPERIENCED NURSE and housekeeper with approved morals, active, intelligent, and of sufficient age to give character to a Hygienic Institute. Would prefer a lady wishing treatment and board for impaired health, with a view to the position after it is restored. Address J. S. Lyons, M. D., Springfield, Mo.

Stereopticon for Sale, AND OVER TWO HUNDRED BEAUTIFUL PICTURES.—As I wish to procure more expensive apparatus for my next season's work, adapted to the largest halls, I offer my oxy-calcium stereopticon (one of McAllister's best, suitable for halls seating 300 people), and over two hundred elegant views, for sale. It affords a safe, pleasant business for any gentleman who is desirous of traveling. For particulars address W. F. JAMIESON, Glenwood, Iowa.

THE EVOLUTION

For March contains "Evolution in Biology and Philology," "The Spontaneous Generation Question," "Ethics of the Positive Philosophy," "Amend the Constitution," "The Jews in Europe," "New Laws in Italy," "Review of Sir John Lubbock in Arts," "Personals," "Peschel's Races of Man," "Scientific Notes" and ten other interesting articles. Send 15 cents for it to 34 Dey street, N. Y.

A DAILY-SERVICEABLE NOVELTY—A PERFECT VADE MECUM.

Duplex Gusset-End Wallet.

(Size, closed, 3 1/2 x 5 inches.)

To compactly hold bills, papers, etc., usually carried about the person; for reliable use at Store Office and Home; with valuable Tables, Statistics, Calendar, Measuring Gauges, etc., upon it. Contents cannot work out. NEEDED by every Professional and Business Man and Woman in the country. Satisfaction guaranteed to all who will send 25 cents for a package.

W. N. CLAPP,

8 Oakland Ave., Jersey City, N. J.

Agents will do well to address, enclosing as above. 3614

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319 6th Ave., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters P. O. Box 4829 New York City. 151

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1750

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY. By R. T. TRALL, M.D. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. 25,000 copies of this work have been sold. Finely illustrated, and a very important work. Price, $2.

INGERSOLL'S LECTURES (Cheap Edition) including "The Gods," "Arrangement of the Church, or Individuality," "Heretics and Heresies," "Thomas Paine," "Humboldt," Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents. We have also a splendid edition of the same at $1.25.

COPY YOUR LETTERS

USE
Excelsior Copying Book,
Made of Chemical Paper.

Quickly copies any writing WITHOUT Water, PRESS, or BRUSH, used at home, library or office. For Ladies wishing to retain copies of letters, every business man, clergyman, correspondent, traveler it is invaluable—sells at sight. Send $3.00 and we will send a 300 page Book, letter size, BY MAIL paid to any address. We refer to any Commercial Agency. Send stamp for Agents' Circular. EXCELSIOR INK & CO., 110 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill. 5000 AGENTS wanted. 6114

WINTER'S

WONDERFUL HAIR RESTORER

is now offered to the people in the form of a recipe, sent post-paid to any address for $1.00. Is made of simple ingredients. No sulphur. No use of lead, nor any other poisonous substance. Restores faded, dry, harsh, and falling hair to softness and natural color. Restores hair to the prematurely bald-headed where all other hair restoratives have failed. Removes all unpleasant irritation, itching, and scaly dryness.

Three Reasons why every one who has lost or is losing their hair should buy this valuable HAIR RESTORATIVE RECIPE.

Firstly. It is the best and most successful hair restorative ever discovered.

Second. It contains no poisonous substances.

Third. Every purchaser of this Wonderful Hair Restorative Recipe can make his own remedy at trifling cost.

Address J. C. WINTERS, CINCINNATI, Piquette Co., Ohio. 3m06

The Resurrection of Jesus.

A new Lecture by W. S. BELL, of New Bedford, Mass., the able Liberator Lecturer. It is an excellent Essay. It costs but ten cents, mailed to any address. Send for a copy. Address

D. M. BENNETT,

SCIENCE HALL, 141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

DR. E. B. FOOTE'S PLAIN HOME TALK. A most valuable work on health and disease, with the most rational modes of treatment. It contains over 900 pages and 300 illustrations. As a work on Hygiene, it has hardly an equal. Price, with a beautiful chromo, $3.25.

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3.00; Leather, $4.00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4.50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,

141 Eighth St., New York.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"

In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

SCOTTISH

WESTERN LOAN CO., OF LEROY, MINN.

Invest Money in first mortgages on improved farms in Iowa and Minnesota. Interest nine per cent annually in advance. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. Send for circulars to G. L. HENDERSON, President, 141 Eighth Street, New York. *1916

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B. F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First. "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second. "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., New York.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1750

TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS (Bound), Vols. I, II, and III, comprising nearly ninety tracts, including the Scientific Series, containing 500 pages each, or 1,500 in all. They embrace a variety of subjects, by different authors, and are very interesting reading. Each volume will contain a wood-cut portrait of the Publisher. Will be ready in January, 1876, and will be furnished at the extremely low price of 60 cents per volume, in paper, or $1.50 for the three volumes; $1 in cloth, or $2.50 for the three volumes.

Bankrupt Sale of Jewelry.

GREAT FAILURE OF THE MILTON GOLD JEWELRY COMPANY IN LONDON

Their Entire Stock Consigned to us to Raise Money as Soon as Possible.

Everybody has heard of MILTON GOLD JEWELRY, it having been sold in this market for the last ten years, and worn by the best and richest class of our population. Still it takes an expert to distinguish Milton Gold from Virginia Gold. In order to dispose of this large consignment in the speediest way, we have put up lots which we offer to the public for the tenth part of their value.

FIFTY-CENT LOT.

One pair elegant sleeve-buttons, retail price $1.00
One set spiral shirt-studs, retail price .75
One beautiful scarf-pin, stone setting, retail price .75
One elegant gent's watch chain, latest pattern, retail price .15
One collar-button, retail price .50
One elegant wedding ring, very heavy, retail price .20

Total $6.50

Remember that we will send you the above-named six articles, which we have retailed for $6.50, by mail, post-paid, for fifty cents, 4 sample lots for $1.50, or 12 sample lots for $4.

ONE DOLLAR LOT.

One pair gent's sleeve buttons, stone setting $1.20
One set elegant spiral studs to match same 1.00
One beautiful ladies' band engagement ring 2.00
One gent's large seal ring 2.00
One ladies' long neck chain 2.75
One gent's heavy plate watch chain 1.75
One gent's "Lake George" diamond stud 1.00
One beautiful scarf-pin72
One pair ladies' engraved sleeve-buttons 1.00

Total $13.50

TWO DOLLAR LOT.

One set gold front pin and ear-rings.
One ladies' long neck-chain.
One elegant locket for the above.
One ladies' "Pompadour" watch chain.
One pair stone sleeve-buttons.
One pair engraved sleeve-buttons.
One amethyst stone ring.
One gent's large seal ring.
One ladies' band engagement ring.
One set spiral shirt studs.
One gent's Lake George diamond stud.
One beautiful scarf-pin.

FIVE DOLLAR LOT.

One ladies' opera chain with slide and tassel.
One heavy ladies' neck-chain.
One beautiful locket for the above.
One ladies' Cameo pin and earrings.
One pair (2) elegant bracelets.
One pair amethyst sleeve buttons inlaid with pearls.
One pair onyx sleeve-buttons.
One set studs to match the above.
One fine gent's watch-chain with charm.
One amethyst ring inlaid with pearls.
One topaz ring inlaid with pearls.
One ladies' heavy band ring.
One ladies' chemise button.
One gent's Parisian diamond pin.
One collar button.
One extra fine set studs.

The above figures are the prices these goods have been retailed at in our leading cities. We mention these figures to give you an idea of the goods.

A FINE SOLID SILVER WATCH FREE.

On receipt of $15 we will send by express, one dozen 50 ct. lots and one of each of the others; also one elegant Watch, Ladies' or Gents' size, guaranteed to be a good timekeeper. Such opportunity is offered but once in a lifetime.

We want our patrons and the public in general to understand that this is Milton Gold Jewelry and no common Plated Ware. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance or money refunded. Send money by P. O. order or registered letter.

Our Firm and Milton Gold Jewelry are endorsed by all the leading newspapers of the country. Goods sent C. O. D. if $5.00 is sent with the order, not otherwise. Address all orders to

RALSTON JEWELRY CO.

Importers of Watches and Jewelry.

LaSalle and Randolph Streets, Chicago, Illinois.

KIDDER'S

SECRETS OF BEE-KEEPING.

One of the most reliable Bee-Books now in use. It touches on over a hundred points pertaining to Bee-keeping. It is a guide to the Bee-keeper in every department of Bee management. It is gotten up in condensed form, and contains as much matter as any two-dollar book, and yet we propose to sell it at a much less price. Bound, 75 cts.; Paper cover, 50 cts. Postage free. Address, D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

THE

Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-Smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.
Paine's Monument.
Paine's Bust.
Voltaire.
Rousseau.
Humboldt.
Goethe.
Schiller.
Aug. Comte.
Heine.
Alex. Pope.
John Milton.
Goldsmith.
Shelley.
Byron.
Burns.
Washington.
Franklin.
Jefferson.
John Adams.
J. Q. Adams.
Madison.
Jackson.
Lincoln.
Lincoln's Monument.
Gerrit Smith.
Henry C. Wright.
J. S. Mill.
Sumner.
Edgar A. Poe.
Greeley.
Castellar.
Tennyson.
Darwin.
Tyndall.
H. Spencer.
Huxley.
Proctor.
Draper.
Bradlaugh.
Holyoake.
Jagersoll.
Underwood.
Mendum.
Seaver.
L. Colby.
Fr. Hare.
F. E. Abbot.
Brothmington.
Wendell Phillips.
Emerson.
Garrison.
Henry Bergh.
Peter Cooper.
D. R. Bart.
S. P. Andrews.
Wait Whitman.
Froude.
Max Muller.
Warren Chase.
Jas. Parton.
Wm. Denton.
Dr. Slade.
A. J. Davis.
Poster.
J. M. Peebles.
Frances Wright.
E. V. Wilson.
G. L. Henderson.
Prof. Fiske.
Frod Douglas.
N. P. Banks.
P. V. Nasby.
Beecher.
Tilton.
Moulton.
G. W. Curtis.
Th. Nast.
J. C. Bennett.
Chas. A. Dana.
Phoebe Carey.
Alice Carey.
Elizabeth C. Stanton.
Susan B. Anthony.
Lucy Stone.
Julia Ward Howe.
Chas. Cheney.
Paulina Davis.
Mary F. Davis.
Emma H. Britten.
Lizzie Fowler.
Mrs. Slenker.
Susan H. Wixon.
D. M. Bennett.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc. at 20 cents each singly, or six for one dollar.

Neat Albums, by mail, to hold 30 photos., 80 cts., to hold 50, $1.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St. New York.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $8 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 50 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine. 11

THE WORLD'S

SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS:

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - - $3.00

ARABESQUE, colored leather, red

burnished edges, - - - 4.00

MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked

head-band, - - - 4.50

Address, D. M. BENNETT,

Eating for Strength.

A NEW HEALTH COOKERY BOOK.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Which should be in the hands of every person who would eat to retain and regain health, strength and beauty. It contains, besides the science of eating and one hundred answers to questions which most people are anxious to know, nearly one hundred pages devoted to the best healthful recipes for foods and drinks, how to feed one's self, feeble babes and delicate children so as to get the best bodily development. Mothers who do not nurse their children will find full directions for feeding them, and so will mothers who have delicate children, and invalids who wish to know the best foods.

Price, $1, postage free.

For sale wholesale and retail by

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., N. Y.

POSITIVELY

$50.00 WORTH OF INFORMATION

in form of a nice book of over 100 pages, well illustrated, sent post-paid for $1.00

BY A PRACTICAL CLOSE OBSERVER

How to keep the hens, and hen-roosts free from lice. How to feed to get an abundance of eggs, even in mid winter. How to manage setting hens, chickens, &c., and how to preserve eggs a great length of time. Best breeds of hens, &c. Enclose $1.00 with order.

E. D. BLAKEMAN, Circleville, Ohio.

[Mr. Blakeman is a school-boy friend of ours. We know him well; he is entirely reliable, and the information he has to impart upon the poultry subject is valuable.—Ed. T. S.]

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CRAVEN.

Price, by mail, $1.00. Address

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth Street, New York.

Gems of Thought.

WHERE knowledge is a duty ignorance is a crime.—Thomas Paine.

HONOR your own faith, and do not slander that of others.—Buddha.

RELIGION is the ceaseless effort for purity and integrity of being, and harmony with the order of the world.—Hudson Tuttle.

HOPE binds the frame of man with strong enchantment. The bitterest end awaits the pleasure that is contrary to right.—Pindar.

THE king-times are fast finishing. There will be blood shed like water, and tears like mist, but the people will conquer in the end. I foresee it.—Byron.

THE Goliaths of theology, arrayed on the battle-field of science, become phantasms, the attenuated shadows of ghosts which amuse rather than annoy with their incoherent gibberish.—Hudson Tuttle.

EVERY plant as it rises strugglingly towards heaven, ere it bursts forth at the top into a flower, breathes itself away in plaintive prayer as it dies that the beautiful may yet become permanent.—Harbaugh.

I BELIEVE George Eliot a thousand times the superior of Victoria. The one is a woman, the other a queen; the one a useful person, the other a useless one; the one wears a crown by chance, the other has created a throne for herself.—Ingersoll.

TO TELL me I am to love the being who damned me and myriads beyond all computation because of an inherited nature that they had nothing to do with conceiving; that the loathing and curse of God are upon them; to tell me that, is an infinite violation of every conception of rectitude of character.—Beecher.

MAN's form of worship is in accordance with his enlightenment, and when his illumined mind is in close sympathy with the great heart of Nature he ignores all forms as inadequate to a just exposition of his deepest feelings and most profound emotions, which admit of no expression.—Mrs. S. W. Kent.

YOU have a disagreeable duty to do at twelve o'clock. Do not blacken nine and ten and eleven and all between, with the color of twelve. Do the work of each, and reap your reward in peace. So when the dreaded moment in the future become the present you shall meet it walking in the light, and that light will overcome its darkness.—George Macdonald.

THERE are many roads leading to the New Jerusalem of happiness; roundabout ways, circuitous roads, and crooked meadow paths; the dim, misty, deep-shadowed, and narrow way through the green woods where one may scent the wild honeysuckle, juniper, and golden rod; and then there is the short cut across lots, wild, uneven, and briary; but it matters little which way we go, so long as we arrive at the gate at last.—Susan H. Wison.

IN the dark ages the Church had this world by the throat; in the sixteenth century, not one in twenty thousand could read, and not one in fifty thousand could both read and write. Every thought was strangled, every idea lost. In that day only miracles were recorded, but these got so common that they had to be stopped by law. But the Moors got into Spain, and brought their paper, mathematics, and philosophy. Science was actually thrust into the brain of Europe at the point of Moorish bayonets.—Ingersoll.

NEVER fear to step outside of the beaten track. If you think there are better things in the fields and by-ways. Strike out for yourself. There are heights to which no intellect has yet climbed. You may meet opposition, but it will give you added courage and strength, elasticity of thought and individuality, which shall make you stand out as somebody amid so many more machines and commonplace mortals who are content to tread where their fathers trod, think as their fathers thought. Knowledge, progress, reform and development can only be achieved by independent thinkers who dare to be units and individuals.—Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

FREEDOM OF CONSCIENCE.
Oh, brave Apostle, thou hast truly said
It is a trivial thing indeed to be Judged of man's judgment! Conscience must be free,
Nor blindly nor dogmatically led,
Either by living oracles or dead;
For truth admits of no monopoly.
And where it points each for himself must see
Nor fears an independent path to tread.
Honor to him who speaks his honest thought,
Who guards his reason as a sacred trust,
Demands the truth for every dogma taught,
And turns dissenter only when he must!
For he shall rise by whom the light is sought,
To the high plane where stand the wise and just.
—William Lloyd Garrison.

SUPPOSE in the early times some powerful association of men had said, "You shall not invent a plough; that crooked stick was handed down by God: that twisted hay is the best of all twisted things, and you must use them;" what if some one said, "That dug-out was got up by the Trinity combined, and is the best fender that ever struck a wave," what progress would there have been in agriculture and navigation? Yet that is just what the State and Church have done in some things. The Church has said you shan't take a book from the devil or remove a single dart from his fiery tail; you must let that alone for he is the best devil that can be made. The Church succeeded, and while we have been advancing, overcoming the obstacles of nature in other directions, we still hold the ideas of the skull that groped in the cave.—Ingersoll.

Odds and Ends.

AN English judge said: "Prisoner at the bar, God gave you health and strength, instead of which you go about stealing cows."

A MAN out West offering bail for a friend, was asked by the Judge if he had any incumbrance on his farm. "Oh, yes," said he, "my wife."

THE grave of the inventor of the accordion is unmarked by a stone. It ought to have an epitaph, "Hark from the tomb a doleful sound."

WHAT is the difference between spermaceti and a school-boy's howl? One is the wax produced by a whale, and the other is a wail produced by the whacks.

A BABY came to a family in Maine a short time since, and a bright five-year old brother, patting it playfully under the chin, inquired: "Say, how was Dod when you left?"

A POOR soldier with his face half shot away, was asked by a comrade if he wanted anything. "I should like a drink of water if I had the face to ask for it," he replied.

TIMES are awful hard, for a fact. Even the old ladies who engineer the ministers' donation parties and go early and stay late don't appear to fat up as well as they did last year.

"My dear," said a husband to his wife, on observing red-striped stockings on his heir, "why have you made barbers' poles of our child's legs?" "Because he is a little shaver," was the neat reply.

A PENNSYLVANIA clergyman seeing a young man standing in the doorway of the church and looking hesitatingly about, paused in the midst of his sermon and exclaimed: "Get out young man, she is not here."

AN old lady sleeping during divine service in a church in Liverpool, let fall her Bible, with clasps on it; and the noise partly awakening her, exclaimed, "What! you've broken another jug, you slut, have you?"

"My son," said Mr. X., kindly, to his youthful heir, "accustom yourself to be polite to the porter, the servant girl, the coachman, to all the servants; thus you will come in time to be courteous to all people, even to your parents."

"I HAD nine children to support, and it kept me busy," said Smith to Jones as they met, "but one of the girls got married. Now I have"—
"Eight?" interrupted Jones. "No, ten—counting the son-in-law!" said Smith with a sigh which might have been heard afar off.

A DETROIT grocer gave a man a dollar for a chest that he said he found, which evidently from the marks, belonged to the dealer. The chest was hidden, and at the first leisure moment opened and found to contain—not fifty pounds of Oolong, as was expected, but some nice, clean sawdust. How he did kick that chest!

"COULDN'T you give me something to do?" asked a poor boy at a Michigan shingle factory, the other day. "No," said the owner, "we are all full now." The boy looked sad and was about to go away when a bright thought seized him, and, turning again to the owner, he inquired, "Don't you need a boy to test shingles on?" But even then he got no position, for the man had a boy of his own.

A FARMER and his wife called at a Detroit photograph gallery last month to have some photographs taken of the latter, and, while the operator was getting ready, the husband gave the wife a little advice as to how she must act. "Fasten your mind on something," he said, "or else you will laugh and spile the job. Think about early days—how your father got in jail, and your mother was an old scolder, and what you'd have been if I hadn't pitied you. Just fasten your mind on that!" She didn't have any photographs taken.—Detroit Free Press.

A NEW GAME.—A man came into a restaurant last night, and, mounting a high stool, leaned over the counter and ordered a porterhouse steak with eggs on the side, and some ale and oysters to begin with. In about half an hour he had finished his repast and was beginning to deliberate on what kind of dessert he would wind up on, when a man walked in, and tapping him on the shoulder, remarked:
"Is your name Billy Hicks?"

"Yes, that's my name," said the man on the stool, as the hand stole down to his hip pocket, fumbling for the handle of a barker; "what do you want?"

"We had a little trouble once before in White Pine, and now I guess I've got you dead to rights," continued the new comer, pulling out a large-sized six-shooter.

"If you'll just step into the street and pace off your distance, I'm your man," said the feeder, who had just finished his pie, and whipping out a revolver, he sprang off his perch and rushed after the other into the street.

The frightened restaurant man got down behind the counter and bent his ear to listen to the shots and the rush of the mob; but he didn't hear anything unusual, and in about five minutes he recollected that there was $2.50 owing on the meal. Then he went out on the sidewalk to investigate.
"Was there a row out here a few minutes ago?" he inquired of a star-gazer on the sidewalk.

"Didn't see any. I've been here for the last half hour or so."

"See two fellows with ulsters and revolvers come out?"

"Yes, they was talkin' about swappin' guns, and they're over across the way now, taking a drink."

The restaurant man went back to clear up the dishes.—Virginia City Chronicle.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	6
4.	Arraignment of the Church. Ingersoll.	6
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	6
6.	Humboldt.	6
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	2
8.	The Old Snake Story.	2
9.	The Story of the Flood.	2
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	2
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	2
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Hog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snodde. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	10
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. O. Sothoran.	5
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	2
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	2
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	1
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	1
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	1
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	3
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	3
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	2
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	3
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wison.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vigilant Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	2
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	5
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	2
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	5
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsborg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	2
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 60 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

These eight Scientific Tracts are made into a pamphlet of 125 pages, at 20 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

Truth Seeker Leaflets.

Sent, assorted, or as desired, post-paid, at 4 cents per dozen; 25 cents per hundred, or $2 per thousand.

Let them be distributed freely in every town village and neighborhood. Address, D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., New York.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth	50
" " with Examination of Prophecies	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	78
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viacount
Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wison.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27 00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tab.	15
Bible in India. Jaccoliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 60 and	1 00
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diogenes	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Snakspere's Text. God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
" Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright.	35 & 60
Evans' History of all Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Gray's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought. Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religious Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jameson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneelands Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Vale.	1 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy. Problems of Life and Mind.	3 50
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts.	3 40
" Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peoble's All Around the World.	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	20
" Rights of Man.	50
" Theological Works.	2 00
" " and Miscellaneous Works.	2 50
" Miscellaneous Writings, Centennial edition.	2 50
" Political Works. 2 Vols., 1 8vo.	5 00
" Complete Works. 3 Vols. 8vo.	8 00
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	60
Synagma. Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature. D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus. 2 vols.	12 00
Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols., 8vo.	8 00
Sexual Physiology. Trull.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul.	2 00
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers.
" $3.00, $4.00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and IV. 60 cts. &c.	1 00
The Outcast. Winwood Reade.	30
Talks with My Patients. Mrs. Gleason, M.D.	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	50 & 80
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researcher in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE
& MORALS

FREETHOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 17. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY }
BY D. M. BENNETT.

New York, Saturday, April 28, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year.
NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

THE revenue officers found in Brooklyn a secret illicit distillery in an unoccupied church. This is perhaps a doubtful method of making a church promote the spiritual welfare of the people.

MR. MOODY sensibly says that pretty girls should not permit men to kiss them at church fairs for twenty-five cents. That is right. They may be just as easily kissed after they leave the fair, and for a hundred per cent less in the price.

THE RADICAL REVIEW.—Friend Benjamin R. Tucker sends us a circular saying that the first number of his Review will be out by the 15th of May, or before. He gives the contents of the number, and, judging by the titles and writers, it will be a splendid issue. May he receive the proper and necessary encouragement.

THE Rev. Dominick McCaffray is the latest disciple of Mr. Beecher, whose flock has come to his vindication and passed resolutions establishing his purity. "To err is human, to forgive divine" is all well enough in its way; but isn't it encouraging human error a trifle too much to keep on forgiving divines in this way?—Puck.

THE Minnesota Christians spent last Tuesday in praying for the total abolition of grasshoppers. The Apostle Paul prayed that the Lord would take away his "thorn in the flesh" or give him grace to bear it. Perhaps the Minnesotans would be willing to compromise on a supply of grace instead of the removal of the grasshoppers.

A CORRESPONDENT of a Boston paper, the Morning Star, thus hyperbolically writes about Moody and his work: "He wills to conquer, and he conquers; for he sits before the very throne of the Eternal; he moves the hand that moves the world." How grateful God ought to be to Brother Moody for instructing him how to run this little Universe.

INDIANAPOLIS, APRIL 16, 1877.—EDITOR TRUTHSEEKER.—Dear Sir: In your paper of April 7th you say a correspondent from this city informs you that the Central Christian Chapel of this city had whitewashed their late pastor, W. E. Black. Permit me to say that said church has not only retired the said pastor, but has entirely withdrawn fellowship from him by a large majority. A MEMBER.

A BUNGLING piece of barbarism was enacted a few days ago at Youngstown, O., in hanging a young man by the name of Sterling, who persisted to the end in asserting his innocence. The knot slipped under his chin, by which means he suffered a slow and agonizing death. When will enlightened people of this nineteenth century cease this horrible business?

THE Czar and the Sultan have both invoked the blessing of God on their armies and his vengeance on their enemies. Now look out! Somebody will be hurt. The prayers for vengeance will probably be answered. It will be a good test of strength between Jehovah and Allah. The principals are not expected to engage in the fight; that will be left to their followers.

THE editor of the Chicago Advance says: "We happen to know the circumstances under which Mr. Ingersoll contracted his desperate prejudices against religion, and while they do not excuse him, they would, if known, show with startling force how sedulously Christians ought to clothe religion, in all its relations to business, domestic, and social life, with the sweet reasonableness of Christ's own spirit."

THE trial of Mr. Charles Bradlaugh and Mrs. Annie Besant for publishing and selling Dr. Charles Knowlton's book, "The Fruits of Philosophy," was commenced March 24th at the Guildhall Justice Room, London, before Alderman Figgins. A few witnesses were examined, when an adjournment till April 17th was granted to enable Mr. Bradlaugh to summon some forty witnesses, including some of the best medical men of the country. He will doubtless show that the book is of a scientific character, and that it is not low nor obscene. The parties to the trial were required to give bail in £300 each.

THE case of Brother Pearson of Pittsburgh is very curious. He was accused of much misconduct, most of which was not proven. His congregation whitewashed him by passing resolutions that they considered him, though an imperfect man, yet one who was striving to do the best he could. The ministerial association to which he belonged thought differently, and passed on him a unanimous vote of censure and disfellowship.

THE trial of the Rev. John Miller, of the Presbyterian Church, has commenced in Princeton, N. J., before the presbytery of that locality. His offense consists in writing a book in which he endeavors to show that the Bible does not teach immortality; that when man dies he dies soul and body, and that he remains in the grave until, as a special gift of heaven, he is resurrected, by a blast from Gabriel's trumpet, both soul and body; 2. That Christ is in Adam and partook by his human nature of the sinfulness of Adam; 3. That the Bible does not teach that God is a trinity; that the trinity is a pagan or Platonic conception. Miller will doubtless be deposed from the Christian pulpit for presuming to utter such heterodox opinions.

THE Sunday-school lesson, Sunday, was about the lying and the leprosy of Gehazi, as set forth in the Second Book of Kings, fifth chapter. There is material in this for a great deal of solid instruction to the young people. Considering the great amount of lying now prevalent in high places and low, the only wonder is that leprosy is not more common as a consequence. A little chap who was asked why God does not now strike with leprosy everybody who tells a lie, replied: "Because if he did there wouldn't be hardly anybody who wasn't lepers." If every man who tells an untruth were to be turned into a leper, would not our fashionable churches immediately become badly afflicted with the disease?

PROF. SMITH of the Free Church College in Aberdeen, Scotland, wrote the article in the Encyclopedia Britannica on "The Bible," and expressed opinions which brought down on his head an avalanche of wrath from his brethren in the Church. They now demand that he shall stand trial. He responds that he is willing, but wants a "bill of particulars" setting forth the exact heresies of which he has been guilty. This bothers his accusers, and they do not seem to know what they are going to do about it. The professor intimates that there are other men among those before whom he would have to appear for trial who are as unsound as they declare him to be. Fifty-nine ministers and seventy-five elders have signed a statement that they think favorably of letting the professor alone, and avoiding the stir which a trial would make.

THE Rev. Paul T. Valentine, Ph. D., D. D., LL. D., was sentenced by Recorder Hackett in General Sessions to ten years' imprisonment in state prison for the most revolting and despicable crimes in the whole calendar, the corruption and vile use of little boys and girls under his charge in what he called his "College for Homeless Children," where he pretended to teach them useful employment and to give them food and clothing; but where, in reality, he practiced the grossest and most abhorrent crimes, at 508 Pearl St. The witness against Valentine was a lad fourteen years of age, but there were some nine others in the court prepared to testify to similar enormities. The jury found the reverend gentleman guilty, and District Attorney Russell announced that there were several other charges against the man upon which there was no doubt of his conviction. Recorder Hackett said the case was the most atrocious that had ever come to his knowledge, and he was only sorry he could not punish the miserable culprit with death; but he could do no more than sentence him to the full extent of the law—ten years. The Rev. Valentine is a native of Italy, and was originally a Catholic, but when he came to this country he professed to be a convert to Protestantism. He first operated with the Methodists and obtained a professorship in the Drew Theological Seminary. At the close of the term he acted as pastor of a Methodist mission church. Finding that not very remunerative he joined the Protestant Episcopal (Italian) church presided over by the Rev. Dr. Stauder, his fellow countryman. He subsequently joined the Episcopal Church and was ordained by the Right Rev. Bishop Potter, May 7, 1876, as a missionary among the Italians in this city. After this he opened the establishment at the place named, where, under the guise of imparting valuable information to homeless children of both sexes, he committed the very blackest of crimes. The Gospel did not do very much for that man.

A SINGULAR SECT.—In a letter to the N. Y. Times, from the mountains of Alabama, a correspondent writes thus of a sect of religionists which he found there: None of the mountain-sect's traits is more interesting than his religious credulity. His earnestness in it commands our admiration, and his ignorance our pity, and with it all his reckless devotion taxes our patience in this enlightened and skeptic age. In one of the mountain counties I heard of some religious experiences that seem beyond our belief; but I failed to discover any evidence against them, but found much that confirms them. The leader himself is of a temperament and appearance that favor the history. His bold eye, with a strong magnetic look, and his expression of face, far from that of a religious enthusiast, lend great probability to the tales. His statement of his religious dogmas or creed impressed me as a mass of uninteresting and illogical assertions. They are partly texts from the Bible, and partly such assumptions as he thinks harmonize them into a philosophy. Among other things, he said that what is called the Lord's Prayer is the Disciples' prayer; the true Lord's Prayer is the seventeenth chapter of St. John. Their marriage ceremony is brief. Each one of the couple declares that God gave him or her the other for husband or wife, and then the words, "Let not man put asunder what God hath joined together," pronounced by the preacher, completes the rite. They believe in the efficacy of prayer for individual, practical relief. They employ no remedies of any kind for diseases, and many claim to have been cured by faith alone. He affirms that he never suffers pain, and that, if he should, he "will desert his God," and that he "will never taste death." He permits no ordination, has no membership of the church, and no rules of discipline or other constraint on either members or officers. This absence of both law and penalty may or may not be an evidence of shrewd policy, according to the character and practices of the members. But the interest of the organization is in the credulity and devotion of its followers more than in the character of its leader or his doctrines. The church has withstood all kinds of persecutions, both individual and collective; and in the past seven years has grown to number one thousand members. Some people gave away their land and goods and followed the new leader as the Disciples did of old. An educated physician gave up his practice and physic. After a while he got the chills; he called in the Elders to pray for his recovery; he became, as I was told, "happy in religion," and was permanently cured. They never indulge in lawsuits or in short hair. Their services were generally improvised in all respects of matter, time, place and audience. At a house where the leader lived for a year he professed the power to shield the fields from any and all misfortunes. He placed his Bible on a stump, secured it by pegs from blowing away, and left it there from planting to harvest. And the misfortune is that the crops on that farm were very good that year. At one time he imposed a penance on the young women of sensitive conscience. They walked the whole night in but one garment, and barefooted, while he accompanied them with spiritual counsel and bodily presences. In due time the repentance bore fruit. At another epoch in his ministry he announced that he must be attended by five virgins. Five virgins volunteered promptly. He told them that the sacredness of their offices made it necessary to establish their pretensions beyond a doubt. Four submitted to the required examination, but the fifth refused and divulged the proceeding. A few loaded shotguns were added to his followers. His ascendancy and the superstition of the people were such that he persuaded a father to surrender his child for a burnt offering. It is said the day for the sacrifice was set, and that the preparations were made, but as some one revealed the intention outside, public opinion prevented the execution of the religious ceremony. One would think that such proceedings would destroy both the organization and the individual career, but the church is large, and the leader is still its respected head.

Events of the Week.

DESTRUCTIVE forest fires have been raging in parts of Michigan.

WIDOW GREENE, North Castle, N. Y., committed suicide on Sunday last, by hanging.

TWEED is still in jail. He denies that he authorized the confession recently published.

SPENCER'S spectacle factory at Newcastle, N. Y., was burned last Saturday night. Loss $120,000.

A REVOLT has taken place in Paraguay, and the President and his brother were assassinated.

GEO. L. FOX, the pantomime clown, has relapsed again into insanity and has been sent to an asylum.

A MAILBOAT plying between Brest and the island of Ushant was wrecked and eight persons drowned.

THE weather much of the time during the past week has been perfectly lovely. Spring is coming on apace.

CAPT. KASS, with a platoon of men, raided a dance-house, 14 Stanton st., last Saturday night, and arrested one hundred and thirty men and women who were holding forth there.

A FURIOUS hurricane passed over the sea coast, south of this point, on the 22d, and did considerable damage to shipping in various localities, especially from Cape Henry to Cape Hatteras.

A LARGE fire occurred in Omaha. A whole block was burned and several establishments utterly destroyed. Loss, over $100,000. Among the goods burned were $5,000 worth of diamonds, uninsured.

THE Journal of Commerce, one of the oldest daily papers in this city, suffered a serious loss by fire on the morning of the 23d. The upper stories of the building were badly injured, and much damage done to the stock.

MINISTER MARTEL, of Paris, has been directed by the Cabinet to address an official letter to the bishops, pointing out the dangers and complications which might arise from political manifestations on the part of the clergy.

THE U. S. troops have been withdrawn from Louisiana, and Gov. Nicholls will assume full control of the State government. Gov. Packard retiring under protest. The conduct of Hayes in the matter is, of course, warmly approved by some, and strongly condemned by others.

HENRY WARD BEECHER is again away on a two weeks' leave of absence on a lecturing tour in the West and Southwest. Louisville is one of the points he touches. He is to preach more than usual during the hot weather to make up for his absence now. He is making it pay, and he needs some money about these days.

Two lads of Boston, Dudley Kimball and Stephen Cox, one six and the other seven years old, quarrelled at play, when Kimball said, "I will fix you." Then he went home, obtained his father's revolver, returned and shot his little companion dead. Both families stand high in the community. This is beginning the killing business early.

THE Am. Popular Life Insurance Co. of this city has met with serious trouble. The State Superintendent of Insurance has had an investigation made, and finds that the officers have sworn to false statements and representations, and that their assets are much less than represented, and their liabilities much greater. They are forced to discontinue business—a case of misplaced confidence with those who insured in the company.

THE long-threatening war-cloud in the East has finally burst. Russia has formally declared war against Turkey, and one of her armies has crossed the Pruth, the boundary line. Journalists assert that the advantage is with Russia in the beginning. The Czar declares the war to be in the interests of humanity, but the blood of humanity will doubtless freely flow during its continuance. The consequent excitement is great, and it has extended to this country. Flour and provisions have advanced—the former 50 cents per barrel.

Career of Religious Ideas.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.—Copyrighted.

CHAPTER II.—CONTINUED.

The first germ of religion in savage man is this same fear of the elements. Under like circumstances he cries with terror and falls prostrate, appealing for protection to something, he knows not what. Is there any difference in kind between the fear of the brute and that of the savage? The animal throws itself under the protection of man; the savage, having no visible superior to whom to appeal, personifies the elements themselves, and casts himself before the ideal of his own creation.

Those who regard man as fallen from a high estate see in the savage, not a primitive, but a degraded condition. This conclusion conflicts with the facts of human history. The races of mankind began, like the individual, ignorant and brutal. The early man was a savage, a cannibal, whose religion—if he possessed a religion—was of the grossest form. Our pride may revolt against such a view of our ancestors, but it makes it no better by denying it, and it is flattering to know that man is subject to progressive growth and unlimited achievements. Fetishism has been considered the lowest expression of religious instinct, but it does not touch the bottom of the abyss. Comte fails to meet the issue when he declares this statement insupportable. He combats a positive subject with metaphysical argument. He says if man existed in a state wholly material, there must have been "a time when intellectual wants did not exist in man; and we must suppose a moment when they began to exist, without any prior manifestation." This he concludes impossible. His argument is of that metaphysical kind, as delusive as unsatisfactory, which the author utterly discards in others. The "want" is subject to an imperceptibly slow growth. The appearance of the "want" is evidence of the prior capability for its development, and there must be a time when this development becomes manifest.

Fetichism is not the first expression of the religious sentiment. There are many species of animals in which it is apparent, especially in those which have had the advantage of the culture given by man. A kitten mistakes a ball for a living being as readily as a savage sees a life like his own in the wind. The thoughts awakened in the mind of a dog by presenting a watch to his ear are of the same kind—he regards it as a living being; the savage thinks it possessed by a demon. A Bechuana, seeing the sea and a ship for the first time, said the ship must have come of itself, for it could not have been created by man. The Yakats are represented as being so amazed by the action of a telescope in bringing distant objects close to the eye, that they believe it possessed by a spirit; writing they cannot comprehend, and books they regard as living objects that can talk.

In our own individual development we can mark the same ideas in our childhood. They even extend to our mature years; and when a machine refuses to do its work, how readily the mechanic gives it personality! The child converts a broomstick into a prancing steed, and the engineer speaks of his locomotive as a person for whom he has the warmest attachment. The child chastises the offending object; Xerxes, leading the myriads of Persia, would send a message to the turbulent sea, and bind it with chains. These are examples of the lowest Fetichism—the endowment of inanimate objects with life.

We have advanced so far from that primitive faith that we cannot study its peculiar phases without referring to people who are at present in the same stage as that which we have left in the remote distance. As human development is governed by the same unchanging laws, similar stages of growth present corresponding phenomena. As in a forest the connection between the acorn and the oak can be traced through the intermediate forms of growth, the civilized man stands connected with the savage.

This field of study is lamentably broad, as only a moiety of mankind have become what is styled civilized, and at least one-third of the human family are savages. Those vast regions forming the continents of Africa and Australia, the countless islands of the Pacific, and the interminable expanse around the North Pole, in America extending southward almost to the Great Lakes, are inhabited by rudest tribes, whose religious beliefs are of the grossest form. The Australian has not made an attempt towards embodying his religious ideas, if he has any, in rites and ceremonies. (Latham.) Certain wild songs, accompanied by gestures, mistaken for such, have proved of foreign origin. Even missionaries, eager to discover analogous ideas in the heathen they would convert, have honestly expressed their perplexity. Says one: "They have no idea of a Divine Being. They have no comprehension of the things they commit to memory. I mean especially as regards religious subjects." Another remarks: "What can we do with a nation whose language presents no terms corresponding to justice or sin, and to whose minds the ideas expressed by these words are completely strange and inexplicable?" "A kind of highly developed instinct for discovering their food which is always difficult for them to obtain, seems among them to have taken the place of most of the moral faculties among mankind," is the statement of Lesson and Garnot. Unless watched by the police, they would offend law and decency with as little scruple as the monkeys of a menagerie; and so dormant is their reason, that the same means must be employed to convince them that is used with children and idiots.

The inhabitants of Central Africa are little more advanced.

Leighton, who for four years served as missionary among the Mpongwes, Mandingos, and Grebos, important tribes, says that they have neither priests, nor idolatry, nor religious ceremonies. The testimony of Livingstone on the Bechuanas is the same. In order to translate the word God and make it comprehensible to Caffre intellect, the missionaries had to employ the word Tixo, meaning "wounded knee." Tixo was a well-known sorcerer, and received his name from a wound received on his knee. He was the highest ideal of the Caffre mind, and his name best translated the idea of God to their understanding.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

BENNETT'S REPLY. NO. II.

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Dear Sir: I fear you are inclined to give me more credit than I am entitled to, as you say I admitted the substance of your first letter. You mistake; I did not admit so much. I simply stated that I did not claim that unbelievers, in the American struggle, equaled, numerically, the believers. On all the other points I took issue with you.

You are mistaken again in saying I asserted that resistance to constituted government "is contrary to the principles of Scripture." I said nothing of the kind. If you will refer to my reply you will see that I said it was contrary to the spirit of Christianity—a very wide difference. I readily grant that in the Old Testament there are numerous instances where war and bloodshed were brought into use to overthrow existing governments. The God of the Old Testament seems to have been more fond of war and slaughter than anything else. He styled himself "the Lord of Hosts" and "the God of Battles," and gloried in subduing enemies. But that was not Christianity, and I defy you to cite one instance where the reputed founder of Christianity, or its early promulgators, ever incited a war for freedom, or even admitted the advisability of such a struggle. The burden of Christ's teachings touching this point, as I said, was, "submit" and "obey," "never rebel," "assert not your own independence."

I am very sure you cannot cite an instance where Christ, or any of his disciples, ever encouraged a people to rise against their oppressors, or to lift their hands to strike off the chains that bound them. That would not have been the spirit of Christianity. Its office, in its incipency, was to make people contented with their lot, and to enjoin them to submit to the powers that were. Christ said explicitly "My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." He found his own nation groaning under the heel of foreign oppression, but he said not a word to incite resistance to that oppression. When the hand of tyranny was laid upon himself, and his liberty and life were in peril, he moved not a finger towards freedom. The tenor of all his teachings was to yield submission to the powers of this world, for the glories that await in the next. No, Christ did not teach people to rise and fight for liberty, nor even to aspire to political freedom. To fight for political rights was contrary to the injunctions of him who said, "My servants do not fight." To do that was opposition to his entire teachings. It was Infidelity. Hence the American people were doing the work of Infidelity when they took up arms to resist a Christian power.

You seem disposed to claim persons as Christians who evidently were not such. And before we go further, it will be well to understand what is required in order to be a Christian. It does not make a man a Christian to be born of Christian parents, to have a Christian wife, or to sometimes, or frequently, attend a Christian church, nor to pay for a pew in a Christian church. He is not a Christian though he admits that Jesus had a real existence, that he was a good man and taught good morals. It does not make a man a Christian to believe that the Christian religion, in most respects, is an improvement on the systems that previously existed in the world. It does not make a man a Christian to be a lover of virtue and morality. This class of men have been found in all systems of religion. But to be a Christian, a man must accept and believe the dogmas constituting the Christian religion, the principal among which are that Jesus was divinely begotten; that he is God; that he died to reconcile God to man; to atone for a lost world; and that, without a belief in him and in the efficacy of his blood, there can be no salvation. This I have heard proclaimed from Christian pulpits again and again, and I hardly think you will deny it. I will call your attention to an ecclesiastical trial that is now pending against the Rev. John Miller, Princeton, N. J., of your own denomination (Presbyterian), for holding that the Bible does not teach that Jesus is God; that he was simply a chosen man, and for denying the Trinity. For this the Rev. Miller is charged with being a heretic, or an Infidel, and there is but little doubt that he will be expelled from the position in the Christian pulpit which he has occupied. So be careful, my Friend, that you do not claim as Christians those whom your own church does not accept. Let not Brother Miller's perils escape your observation.

Before giving quotations from recognized authorities, I wish to call your attention to the fact, that most of the biographies and histories published are written, directly or indirectly, in the interest of Christianity. A large proportion of them are written by Christian clergymen or Christian professors, or, at all events, they are written for a Christian market, and everything is shaped and colored accordingly. A shrewd caterer, of course, always prepares his viands to suit the taste of his patrons, and to please those who pay their money. When a great or distinguished man has passed away, the fondness for making it appear that he was a Christian, or that he accepted the Christian system, is most conspicuous, and it is often amusing to notice the ingenuity employed in that direction. It is not to be thought strange, then, if the Infidel views of our great men are kept in the background, and that every circumstance which even squints toward their feeling friendly to the Christian religion is most favorably presented. Everything and everybody is expected to bow in submission to the great Diana of the age—the Christian religion.

I cannot agree with you, that you have proved Franklin to have been a Christian. His being raised under religious influences does not establish it. Paine was so reared, and so were the larger share of Infidels. You admit that, during a portion of his life, he was an Atheist. I did not claim so much, but that he was a moderate Deist, or Moralist. You speak of his having drawn up a creed and liturgy of his own. He did so, but that hardly proves him a Christian, but rather the reverse. Had he been a Christian, he would have needed no creed of his own. The creed of the Christian Church would have been all he needed. Besides, his creed was pure Deism. He spoke of God with great reverence, but said nothing about his divine Son, nor of the efficacy of his blood, nor of his death.

Parton says (vol. i, p. 175): "As Franklin grew older he abandoned the fantastical part of his creed and settled down into the belief of these six articles: 'There is one God, the Creator of all things. God governs the world by his providence. God ought to be worshiped. Doing good to man is the service most acceptable to God. Man is immortal. In the future world the disembodied souls of men will be dealt with justly.' " This is Deism—nothing more, and nothing less—and agrees as nearly with the religion of Thomas Paine as the creeds of two men can agree. It contains nothing of the dogmas of Christianity, nothing of the author of it. On page 71, vol. i, in speaking of the change which had occurred in Franklin's views, Parton says: "He escaped the theology of terror and became forever incapable of worshipping a jealous, revengeful, and vindictive God." If Parton was correct, Franklin was forever incapacitated for becoming a Christian.

On page 319, vol. i, Parton settles the question of Franklin's belief most conclusively. He says: "In conversation with familiar friends he (Franklin) called himself a Deist or Theist, and he resented a sentence in Mr. Whitefield's Journal which seemed to imply that between a Deist and an Atheist there was little or no difference. Whitefield wrote: 'M. B. is a Deist; I had almost said an Atheist.' 'That is,' said Franklin, 'chalk, I had almost said charcoal.' " It will be seen by this that, while Franklin did not like to be called an Atheist, he notably called himself a Deist, and did not object to others doing so; and there is not the first tittle of proof that he ever changed from this position.

On page 546, vol. i, Parton, in speaking of the intimacy between Priestley and Franklin, quotes from Priestley's Autobiography these words: "It is much to be lamented that a man of Franklin's general good character and great influence should have been an unbeliever in Christianity, and also have done so much as he did to make others unbelievers." Priestley furnished some works upon the evidences of Christianity for Franklin to read, but the American war breaking out soon after, he presumed Franklin never read them. I regard these as positive proofs of Franklin's Deism. Priestley knew him well and had frequent conversations with him upon the subject, and though he was himself considered very radical, and was often denounced as an Infidel, he still regretted that Franklin was still more unbelieving. If Priestley, who knew him so intimately, knew him to be a Deist, is it not a work of supererogation in us, who knew him much less intimately, to undertake to call him a Christian? In his comments Parton says: "Perhaps if the two men were now alive, we might express the theological difference between them by saying Priestley was a Unitarian of the Channing school, and Franklin of that of Theodore Parker"—a total unbeliever in the dogmas of Christianity. Everybody knows that Parker was a thousand times denounced as an Infidel.

To show how great a reverence Franklin entertained for the sacredness of the Bible, I will allude to a fact which Parton mentions (vol. i, p. 320). It was a custom with Franklin to amuse himself and his friends by taking up the Bible and pretending to read from it, instead of which he extemporized as he went along. Had he believed the Bible to be the word of God, he would hardly have subjected it to caricature and ridicule in that manner.

In vol. ii, p. 412, is mentioned the list of Franklin's friends in Paris, with whom he was on familiar terms, as follows. Turgot, Raynal, Morcellet, Rochefoucault, Buffon, D'Alembert, Condorcet, Cabanis, LeRoy, Mabley, Mirabeau, D'Holbach, Marmontel, Necker, Malesherbes, Wat-elet, Madame de Genlis, Madame Denis, Madame Helvetius, Madame Brillon, Madame de Stael, La Viellard, etc. These were mostly Infidels and were, to say the least, rather questionable company for a Christian. Jonathan Edwards would hardly have selected them for companions.

Voltaire and Franklin entertained a high regard for each other. They met at a theatre on a certain occasion in Paris, when they embraced each other like brothers. Voltaire would hardly have been so affectionate towards a Christian, nor a Christians toward him.

You speak of Franklin advising a Freethinker not to publish a certain skeptical work which he had written. This has often been said to refer to Paine and his "Age of Reason." To show how far this is from being the truth, it is only necessary to state that Franklin died not less than three years before a word of the "Age of Reason" was written. Parton says: "Paine was a resident of Philadelphia, a frequenter of Franklin's house, and was as well aware as we are of Dr. Franklin's religious opinions. Nor is there much in the 'Age of Reason' to which Franklin would have refused his assent" (vol. ii, p. 553). He classes Franklin with such Christians (?) as Goethe, Schiller, Voltaire, Hume, and Jefferson, and says they all would have belonged to the same church (vol. ii, p. 646). Does that look much as though Parton considered Franklin a Christian? If Franklin could have accepted the "Age of Reason," it is a marvel how you can claim him as a Christian!

Allow me to make a few quotations from Franklin's private letters. To B. Vaughan (1778) he said: "Remember me affectionately to good Dr. Price and to the honest here-tic, Dr. Priestley. I do not call him honest by way of distinction, for I think all the heretics I have known have been virtuous men. They have the virtue of fortitude, or they would never venture to own their heresy." That does not sound like being a Christian. How he felt toward the Bible may be inferred from an extract from a letter which he wrote to a friend, in 1784. He observes: "There are several things in the Old Testament impossible to be given by divine inspiration; such as the approbation ascribed to the angel of the Lord, of that abominably wicked and detestable action of Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite" (Opinions of Celebrated Men, p. 9). This is sufficient to show that certain parts of the Bible, at least, he did not believe were given by divine inspiration, and there is nothing to prove that he had any special veneration for the book as a whole. There is also nothing to show that he believed Jesus to be a god or to have been divinely begotten by God.

When he had reached the great age of eighty-five years, and President Ezra Stiles, of Yale, addressed him a letter, asking positively as to his views regarding Jesus Christ, he showed in his reply that they had undergone no material change. He wrote: "As to Jesus of Nazareth, my opinion of whom you particularly desire, I think the system of morals and his religion, as he left them to us, the best the world ever saw, or is like to see; but I apprehend it has received various corrupting changes, and I have, with the present dissenters in England, some doubts as to his divinity, though it is a question I do not dogmatize upon, having never studied it, and think it needless to busy myself with it now, when I expect soon an opportunity of knowing the truth with less trouble." This was probably his last utterance upon the subject; and while he did not wish to express himself harshly to his respected Christian friend, he confesses that though he regarded the teachings of Jesus as superior to the human teachers who had preceded him, and his system of religion an improvement upon the old pagan systems, he did not accept his divinity; that he had not taken interest enough in it to study the question, and that in view of an early visitation of death, he did not deem it necessary to do so. He did not fear to die in his belief that Jesus was simply a good man—a position that nearly all Deists occupy. I repeat, then, Franklin was emphatically a Deist, and he died without experiencing any change of views upon the subject. The painting you spoke of proves little. It might have been a fine work of art, or the gift of a dear friend, but because it was in his room, or because his eyes rested upon it, does not show that he at any time accepted Jesus as God, or that his life-long deistical views had changed. He did not deem it necessary to wash in Jesus' blood, nor to have any special part in him, before or after he closed his eyes in death.

As to Washington, you anticipated somewhat the evidence I intended to present, and you seem not satisfied with its directness. It certainly is not very "roundabout," nor very apochryphal in character. Robert Dale Owen, a gentleman of unblemished character and great intelligence, is still living. He had seen an article in the Albany Daily Advertiser of October 29, 1831, from the pen of the Rev. Dr. Wilson of the Episcopal church in that city, in which he had given as authority Dr. Abercrombie, rector of the Episcopal church in Philadelphia which Washington attended while President, that on occasions of the administration of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, Washington invariably absented himself; and when in a discourse the Doctor reprovingly alluded to it Washington took some offense at it and was never known to stay through the ceremony and participate in the rite. Mr. Owen called upon Dr. Wilson. He read to him the Advertiser article, and said he had called to converse with him upon the subject of what his friend, Dr. Abercrombie, had said in reference to Washington. Dr. Wilson's response was as follows, "I endorse every word of that," and further added, "As I conceive that truth is truth, whether it make for us or against us, I will not conceal from you any information I have on this subject, even such as I have not given to the public." He then narrated the conversations he had with Dr. Abercrombie upon the subject of Washington's religious views, and gave that eminent clergyman's words, thus, "SIR, WASHINGTON WAS A DEIST!" "Now," continued Dr. Wilson, "I have perused every line that Washington ever gave to the public, and I do not find one expression in which he pledges himself as a professor of Christianity. I think any man who will candidly do as I have done will come to the conclusion that he was a Deist and nothing more" (Bachelor and Owen Debate, p. 369).

I repeat, this does not strike me as being "roundabout or unreliable. Between Dr. Abercrombie and Mr. Owen was only Dr. Wilson, and all three of the gentlemen were men of character and reliability, and Dr. Abercrombie had excellent opportunities for knowing Washington's views. Your allusion to what Paine said about "hearsay upon hearsay" in his remarks about revelation appear to be hardly to the point. And permit me to add, if the system of religion which you so greatly revere were based upon testimony half as direct and reliable as this of Dr. Abercrombie, Dr. Wilson and Robert Dale Owen, its credibility would be greatly improved. In this case there is nothing of the nature of a dream related by a second party, from fifty to one hundred and fifty years after it was said to have been dreamed.

Touching Washington's religious views, Thomas Jefferson wrote as follows in his journal of 1800 (Jefferson's Works, vol. iv, p. 572): "Dr. Rush told me, he had it from Asa Green, that when the clergy addressed Gen. Washington on his departure from the government, it was observed in their consultation that he had never, on any occasion, said a word to the public which showed a belief in the Christian religion, and they thought they should so pen their addresses as to force him at length to disclose publicly whether he was a Christian or not. However, he observed, the old fox was too cunning for them. He answered every article of their address, particularly, except that, which he passed over without notice. Rush observes, he (Washington) never did say a word on the subject in any of his public papers, except in his valedictory letters to the governors of the States, when he resigned his commission in the army, wherein he speaks of the benign influence of the Christian religion. I know that Gouverneur Morris, who claimed to be in his secrets, and believed himself to be so, has often told me that General Washington believed no more in that system (Christianity) than he did." So much from Jefferson, which does not speak very strong for Washington's belief in Christianity, or Morris' either.

Washington's reticence on doctrinal points was marked. He was discreet and non-committal; he did not obtrude his Deistic views upon others, but that he firmly maintained them cannot be doubted. I agree with you that he was a moral man, but you hardly have the guarantee for saying that he was "highly religious." He was no more so than is compatible with a belief in Deism. I think you cannot quote a paragraph, that he wrote or a word that he uttered, which shows that he accepted the dogmas of Christianity, that he believed that Jesus is God and that his blood is essential to the salvation of the world. While he was President he signed a treaty made between our government and Tripoli, wherein it was solemnly declared that "the government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion."

As to Benjamin Rush, perhaps I was hardly authorized to class him among the Deists, though he was a liberal and progressive man. Possibly the friendship he showed to Paine, and the manner in which Jefferson uses his name and remarks justified my doing so. There may be no accessible proof that Hamilton was a Deist, though probably as much as there is that he was a Christian, or that he believed in the Christian dogmas. I, however, waive special claim to Hamilton. As to Aaron Burr, I did not say nor intimate that he was a "scoffer," nor did I suppose he was so more than Franklin, Washington or Jefferson. If, however, you had been a little fuller in your quotation from Parton, you would have shown that Burr was all I claimed him to be—one who did not accept the divinity of Jesus Christ. At the time of Burr's death, Dr. Van Pelt, Reformed Dutch clergyman, was called in, and he questioned Burr closely upon his belief in the merits of Jesus, who suffered and died on the cross for the salvation of the world. Burr's laconic and conclusive reply was, "On that subject I am coy" (Life and Times of Burr, p. 681). If he entertained any belief in Jesus being the son of God, and that he must be saved by faith in him, that was the time for him to confess it. He should then have ceased to be coy or silent. But he did not; and you have no just grounds upon which to claim him as a Christian. The same with Gouverneur Morris. Of him and Madison I will probably have more to say as we progress.

D. M. B.

A Plea for the Clergy.

NO. I.

MR. BENNETT: I see in your tracts, and in the columns of your paper, that you are sometimes very hard on the clergy, for the way they have when in the pulpit 'of running amuck against the heretics and Infidels, misrepresenting their opinions, and their characters. You also expose the Solomonic way that so many of them have out of the pulpit of loving the dear women contrary to the statute so made and provided. Will you allow me to say a word or two, not in justification, defense, or extenuation of their conduct in these respects, but only in apologetic explanation?

You will not be startled, but many of your readers will be, when I say that, as regards the general subject of religion, so interesting to old persons who think and enquire into the character of human nature, there is not in all the land a class of men who are so profoundly ignorant and unlearned as the clergy. They have a good deal of ex-parte knowledge of their respective sects, and the creeds they hold, and can attack and defend in a family quarrel, with considerable zeal. But as to the broad general subject of religion as a topic in the science of anthropology, they know comparatively nothing. Look at the history of most clergymen. A young rustic in a country church, if he be stupid and "pious," is devoted by his parents to the Christian ministry, or, if he be a wild fellow, and gets converted at a revival, goes straitway to a theological seminary. What for? Not to study the great subject of religion as a trait in the human character, but to prepare to "preach the gospel." The evangelical theory is that outside the charmed circle of his sect, the whole world of mankind is in a lost and ruined condition, resembling a ship load of passengers when the vessel has gone to pieces on a rock in the ocean—all certain to drown, and become the prey of sharks, unless rescued by a life-boat sent to them from the shore.

An impartial inquirer after truth would begin his study of God and our relations to him by asking the previous questions, whether there was such a shipwreck at all or not; and whether there was any propriety in the use of the term life-boat. But the affirmative of these questions is taken for granted by the theological student, and he is, with all haste, qualifying himself to become a "preacher," so that he may man the life-boat of the gospel, and save the souls of the wretched sinners who are sinking down to hell all around him. And the urgency becomes the greater when he remembers that his sect alone is the only one that can save these perishing sinners for sure, since he regards all the other sects as very doubtful instrumentalities in so important an enterprise. The Baptist, for instance, says that he understands all about water; that the drowning wretches would not be safe in any boat not constructed after his model. The Methodist affirms that his craft is the only one that takes up the victims generally, and not with discriminating particularity. The Presbyterian inquires searchingly whether there are any of the Lord's elect in the water. The Episcopalian, in gown and surplice, thinks it is vulgar to be seen scrambling with the other sects, and standing on the bank in the most dignified manner, beckons to the drowning people to swim ashore and prepare for confirmation by the Bishop; while the Catholic sounds the alarm that there are none of the Protestant boats but what leak badly, and presses all to come to his craft as the only safe and sure mode of saving their lives.

I once visited and examined the library of one of the oldest and most popular of the theological seminaries in the country, and there was not a book on the shelves that would give a student to understand that either in ancient or modern times it was a disputed question whether Christianity, as its claims and character are set forth by the Church, was a true religion. All the students go to such an institution committed, having been educated by their mothers, or their preachers, and are professing Christians just as they would be professing Moslems, had they been born and brought up in Turkey. They have prejudices in favor of Christianity but no convictions; for conviction is that state of mind which comes to a jurymen in the box after he has heard the witnesses on both sides of the case examined and cross-examined, and their testimony weighed and measured by the Judge. A theological seminary, therefore, is the last place on earth where you shall go to find, either among students or professors, a free spirit of inquiry, and consequently a knowledge of the questions now discussed on the subject of religion. The severe, but able editor of the Nation has recently shown up the ignorance of the clergy concerning the relation between religion and the law of evolution as laid down and illustrated by Huxley, in his New York lectures. Their knowledge on the general subject, modified as it is by their respective creeds, is all one-sided, and therefore, only another name for ignorance. The Rev. Dr. Taylor, whose back was more terribly excoriated than any of the rest, true to his clerical character for arrogance and assumption as the divinely-authorized teacher of teachers, retires into his tabernacle, and still continues to teach what he does not know.

When therefore you go to church, friend Bennett, and see a clergyman striking out against Science, and Infidelity, like a ram butting at a gate-post, you should lift up a prayer that light, more light, may dawn upon his darkened understanding. But you say, a man ought to read and inform himself before he undertakes to be a public teacher. Ah, my Dear Sir, that is just the thing he will not do. On the contrary, he drives away the first approach of doubt, and carefully avoids all reading that would even tend to shake his faith in his creed. His natural sagacity enables him to scent trouble afar off, for what condition of life is so pitiable as that of a preacher who is compelled to preach doctrines which, for a long time he suspected were untenable, and now knows, by further reading and reflection, to be false and hurtful? Compelled, I say, for fear of losing caste among the brethren as a heretic, and the fear of losing his salary on which his family depend for bread, form a double motive to confine his readings to church literature, and to remain in blissful ignorance of what is going on all around him in the world of mind. "Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise."

Some time ago, on a summer's evening, a Presbyterian Doctor of Divinity was walking down the street, and stopped at the porch of one of his church members, a physician, who was reading a volume of radical character that had just come from the press. He took the book in his hand, examined its contents for a while, and then told the Doctor that it was a dangerous book which he ought not to read. "Why," said the D. D., "that book would shake my faith, much more yours." "Well," said the M. D., "if that book or any other can shake my faith, it ought to be shaken." The next Sunday, when the old pastor went into his pulpit, where he knew no one could call him to account for his statements, he made a violent attack upon Infidelity and Infidel books, entirely ignorant of the fact that most of the intelligent members of the church had long been reading such books, and were more or less tinged by the sentiments they contained. This clergyman takes rank among the best educated men in the ministry of his church, yet on the whole subject of the evidences he is as ignorant as a child of what may be said against his opinions. And, although it is traveling a step out of the record, this Infidel church member, with many others, was paying fifty dollars a year to support a religion which he once believed in, but which he had long ago outgrown, and did not now believe in at all! If all the Infidels in the church would come out of it, and give their money and their countenance to the radical cause there would be ample funds to support a dozen TRUTH SEEKERS and Indices, and to establish publication societies for printing and circulating tracts, calculated to enlighten the public mind, and emancipate it from the thralldom of error. But to return.

It is an unfortunate condition of society that we have a class of men—the clergy—whose influence is very great, and whose interest it is to delude themselves and others with superstitious beliefs and practices which impede the progress of the human family in civilization. And the machinery of the Church is so artfully contrived that when the sun of truth, through the medium of science in all its departments, is shining down from the heavens, like our glorious orb of day, there is no class who keep themselves so hopelessly in the dark as the religious teachers of the people! Freedom of inquiry would effectually cut the hamstrings of their faith and zeal, and convince them that their creeds had no chance of a case in the court of the human understanding, and therefore the controlling influence of the church favors darkness rather than light. Outside of the church however, the tide of influence runs in another direction. Our literature is thoroughly rationalistic. The newspaper press is also mainly under such guidance. Even those papers like the New York Tribune, since the death of Greeley, truckle to the evangelical sentiment for the sake of patronage and flattery, the editors of them are rationalists, but, after the order of saint Nicodemus. This explains the facts which all the churches are loudly complaining of, that the candidates for the ministry now offering themselves to the beneficiary boards of education are generally fourth-rate men in ability; that intelligent youth of both sexes are far better informed on religious and scientific subjects than the clergy, and prefer to spend their Sundays elsewhere than listening to the wretched commonplace of the pulpit; even in Philadelphia, the most priest-ridden city in the country, next to Washington, it is amazing to see how the churches on Sunday are given to women and children. And as for New York, as the churches are wealthy, and by giving large salaries, command the ablest preachers that can be had either at home or abroad, it is found impossible to attract even their own people to church on Sundays by the sermons that are preached, and therefore they have to resort to the artifice of drawing them out to the house of God by fashionable music performed by professional artists, for which, according to a recent statement in Scribner's Monthly, they pay $500,000 a year! Although the fullest churches everywhere are those whose preachers are farthest removed from the mediæval creeds, the common men of the clergy never take the hint, but pursue the old policy of "preaching the gospel" to their decreasing congregations, by which is meant a weekly rehash of pious platitudes, which the people have heard from their childhood, and of which they are heartily sick.

Now, Mr. Editor, is there another class of men except the clergy in the country whose very profession dooms them to live in the dark while all others around them have a chance to see the light? Bound by solemn oath and covenant to their cast-iron creeds, and compelled, like trained parrots, to utter only what they have been taught, can you reasonably expect from them more than you get? As a class they are to be pitied as much as condemned.

Next week I shall say some things about the clerical weakness of women. OMICRON.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.
SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 19.

Great Jehovah, we have already made some enquiries of thee respecting thy partner and companion the Holy Ghost; and before we get too far away from the subject, we would respectfully ask still a few more questions relative to the same mysterious personage.

From our stupidity, or lack of spiritual discernment, it is extremely difficult for us to understand the great puzzler how one can be three and three one—how one god can consist of three distinct personages, and these three at the same time be but the one god. We have tried to comprehend it, but cannot see that we make any headway in our efforts in that direction, and we fear that we never shall be able to overcome the difficulty in the future, any better than at the present time.

As compared with thy description of thyself in the Old Testament, where thou never madest the slightest allusion to a Holy Ghost, or to any person, or third part of a god, connected with thyself, is not that mysterious, weird, fanciful, fabulous, indescribable something, or nothing, comparatively a new idea or modern improvement upon thy former self? and is it not perfectly legitimate to make some enquiries as to the mythical idea, and to learn, if possible, whether it is a regular outgrowth of the old Jewish monotheistic idea of God, or whether it was borrowed out and out from the Oriental nations, without any connection with the Judaism of the old Testament?

As this Holy Ghost is represented as appearing in various forms and styles, sometimes as a dove or bird, sometimes as a spirit, sometimes as a breath, sometimes as cloven tongues of fire, sometimes as a mighty rushing wind, not to mention several other forms and modifications, may we not enquire if there are not found in the pagan religions of the Old World, the sources whence these various notions and myths were obtained?

Is not the appearance of the Holy Ghost, or Holy Spirit, as a dove or a pigeon an old tradition in several of the oriental mythologies and systems of religion?

Did not the dove stand for the third person in the Trinity in the religions of ancient India thousands of years ago? Does not Sir Godfrey Higgins give an account of this in his Anacalypsis?

When a person was baptized in the Brahminical religion, was it not held that he was "born again," and that the Holy Spirit, in the form of a dove, descended and settled upon him?

In ancient Rome was not a dove or a pigeon held to be a symbol or emblem of the female procreative energy? Was it not claimed that the dove accompanied the goddess Venus?

Was not the dove held sacred by the Grecian oracles and worshippers long before it was introduced into the Christian system? Did not the dove also enter into the romantic eclogues of ancient Syria? In the Syrian temple at Hieropolis was not Semiramis represented with a dove on her head, and this centuries before the dove was said to have descended upon the head of thy son?

As a Holy Breath, did not the ancient Hindoo tradition teach that the creative Spirit moved upon the face of the waters of the great deep? Was it not held that this Holy Breath imparted vitality to every created thing with which it came in contact? Was not this conception of the Holy Breath—the principle of life—though older, synonymous with the Christian idea of the Holy Ghost?

Among those Orientals was not the ceremony of imparting the Holy Ghost by breathing often practiced? Did not the priests blow their breath upon the children brought to them, and in this way was it not believed that the Holy Spirit was imparted to the young candidates for heaven?

As a Holy Wind did not the Orientals regard the vitalizing power which proceeded from the mouth of their Supreme Deity? Was not this idea of Holy Wind recognized by several of the older systems of religion?

Is not the Greek word pneuma, which is translated ghost, also frequently translated wind and spirit?

Was not the ancient Hermes of Egypt regarded as a personification or breath proceeding from the Great Divine Being? Were not wind and spirit often interchangeable terms?

In the form of Tongues of Fire did not the old Orientals speak of the spirit or influence which proceeded from their Deity. Were not tongues of fire a conception of the Buddhists in connection with their incarnated god three thousand years ago? Was not Buddha often represented in a symbol of glory—a tongue of fire upon his head?

Was not the visible manifestation of the Holy Ghost or Spirit by fire a sacred tradition among the Hindoos, the Celts, the Druids, and the Etrurians? When this Holy Ghost or influence was rendered apparent to the perception of the masses was it not usually in the form of fire or the dove? Was not the ancient custom among the Hindoos, the Chaldeans, and the Persians, of making offerings and oblations to their superior deities under the form and symbol of solar fire a very natural one, and whence was derived the Christian idea of Holy Fire or Holy Ghost?

Did not the ancient Celts believe that the Holy Ghost, the Holy Spirit or influence was imparted by the laying on of hands, and was not that ceremony often used among them?

Was not a Baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire used by the ancient religionists? Did not the Tuscans and the Etrurians claim to baptize with wind, with fire (ghost), as well as with water? Did they not use as symbolical for the Holy Spirit, gas, gust, or wind? In those ancient countries were not young children taken to the priests, who, before their holy or sacred fire, baptized them with the holy spirit, by the process of sprinkling holy water upon them from a vessel made of the "Holme" wood?

Did not the idea of a Holy Spirit, Holy Ghost, Holy Fire, Holy Breath, and Holy Influence pervade many of the Oriental religions? and did not this belief run back into remote antiquity?

Do we not find here, we repeat, the source whence the Christian sect obtained the conception? As the pagan religions of the East possessed a Holy Ghost, and as thy chosen people knew nothing of any such personage or influence, and as thou never, either to thy patriarchs or prophets, gave the slightest intimation of any such individuality—is it not very natural to conclude that the idea was borrowed from those pagans rather than from the revelations which thou madest of thyself to thy chosen people? Is not the Rev. John Miller, now being tried for heresy by the Presbytery at Princeton, N. J., quite correct when he pronounces the whole idea of the Holy Ghost a mere rhetorical flourish, and the doctrine of the Trinity a borrowed paganism or Platonism?

May we ask if thou always hadst a Holy Ghost with thee, and, if he ever formed a part of thy person and being, how it is that thou never saw fit to give even a slight intimation of it when thou so frequently held intimate conversations with thy old favorites, the patriarchs and prophets? Why didst thou leave it for the pagans to devise and study out? Is not the Holy-Ghost-idea wholly of pagan origin, and, we again ask, is not paganism the only source whence Christians obtained it?

Is it not precisely the same with the idea of a Trinity? As thou saidst nothing about a trinity in the days when thou didst hold intercourse with thy patriarchs and prophets, and as the nations called pagan did have their trine gods—their regular trinities—their incarnated gods and sons of gods, thousands of years ago, long before Christianity was thought of in the world, is it not a very safe and correct conclusion to come to that these innovations upon thy revelations are wholly from the pagans? that they never came from thee, directly nor indirectly?

In like manner has not Christianity borrowed a large share of her stock-in-trade—her dogmas, creeds, rites, sacraments, and ceremonies—from the same pagan sources? This being the case, is it not perfectly right that the people should understand it, and that the world should not continue to grope along in darkness and error in regard to this important matter? If Christianity has appropriated all these delusions from the older Oriental religions, is it not better that the world has the truth presented to it?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Two New Books.—We have just received from C. P. Somerby, publisher, 139 8th St., the following new publications: "Personal Immortality, and other papers," by Josie Oppenheim; extra cloth; 100 pp.; and "The Anonymous Hypothesis of Creation," by James J. Furniss; cloth, 60 pp. The former is a woman's modest statement of her dissent from current theological ideas, in which immortality and prayer are discussed with ability from a standpoint of pure rationalism. Price $1.00. The latter is a brief and concise presentation of the differences between the first chapter of Genesis and science, for the use of beginners. Price 50 cts. Orders may be addressed to the publisher, or they will be filled from this office at the same prices.

What I Don't Believe.—No. 27.

236. Mention has before been made of the deeds attributed to Moses, and some doubts expressed as to the truth of all that the Bible claims in reference to him, but while taking a cursory view of some of the more prominent patriarchs, saints, and prophets, it would be unpardonable to omit Moses—the greatest man among all the patriarchs, the great Hebrew leader, general, theologian, and lawgiver—the man reputed to have maintained the most intimate relations with the Divine Being, who held daily intercourse with him for the term of forty years, and who probably had more control over the Supreme Overruling Power than any other man who ever lived before or since. The hardness of the hearts of the Jewish people was so excessive, and the aggravations which God found it necessary to submit to were so numerous, so tantalizing, and so provoking, that he frequently yielded to outbursts of impatience and anger. When in this perturbed state of mind, it seems God was often very rash, and would have utterly destroyed the people that he had taken so much pains to raise up and mould over just to suit himself, had not Moses, who usually managed to keep more cool-headed than Deity, by prudent expostulations and plausible arguments persuaded God to hold his temper and to not make a fool of himself and a laughing-stock before the surrounding nations.

The Ruler of heaven and earth ought to have been exceedingly grateful to Moses for the immense favor thus conferred upon him, and for the disgrace he was thus saved from bringing upon his character, and a magnificent reward should have been dealt out to Moses for his indispensable services. True, the great lawgiver often had his hands full to keep a perfect control over God, and he doubtless sometimes found it necessary to exercise his utmost ability to keep his master in a placid, equitable frame of mind. God was so liable to let his "wrath wax hot," his anger to burn like an oven, and his indignation to be aroused to the killing pitch, that Moses was kept pretty busy to see that matters went along smoothly and pleasantly, and that God did not act foolishly.

When God and Moses were forty days upon the mountain getting up the two engraved tables of stone called the Ten Commandments, and when the job was completed, and Moses returned with the product and found that in his absence his brother Aaron had been getting up a golden calf for a god, Jehovah's anger was of course greatly aroused. It was a very provoking state of things. Probably almost any god would dislike to have a competitor set up in his place; though it might seem, at the same time, that the Ruler of the Universe would not care much for a puny calf made by man. But God did. It made him very angry, and he said to Moses: "I have seen this people, and behold it is a stiff-necked people. Now, therefore, let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot against them and that I may consume them."

In this instance, God, in the fierceness of his anger, would doubtless have consumed his chosen people had not Moses, as usual, acted the part of pacificator. He said to God, virtually, "O, none of this; it will never do. Why do you give way to passion in this manner? Think what you are about. Do you want to make yourself appear ridiculous in the eyes of the Egyptians? Do you want them to say that you got mad at your own people and slew them in the wilderness? Come, turn from your fierce anger. Give up your passionate whim. Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the promises you made to them," etc., etc. This persuasion was too much for God, and he "wilted" like a little child who had been in a rage, and had had a crying fit and the "pouts" but had gotten over it. "And the Lord repented of the evil which he thought to do unto the people" (Exodus, xxxii., 9-15).

I cannot believe all this yarn about God's getting angry, and Moses' putting him into a good humor again by a little smooth talk, but upon the supposition that it is true, it is seen at once how important a personage Moses was, and how much superior he proved himself to God. It will be interesting to look at some of the moral traits of his character.

237. To go back a little. Moses is first introduced to our notice when very small. He was a grandson of Levi, and son of Jochebed and Amram. At the age of three months he was placed in an ark of bulrushes, and left to float on the surface of the water, that he might escape the edict of Pharaoh that all the male children of Hebrew birth should be put to death. (The Jews must have been a worthless class or the king would not have been so anxious to exterminate them.) It was while the little future lawgiver and governor of God was thus floating upon the Nile that he was found by Pharaoh's daughter when she went down to bathe, and she took him home and raised and educated him.

The Bible is silent as to his career after he left the charge of the princess, but Josephus states that he led the Egyptians in a war against the Ethiopians. But neither Egyptian history nor the Bible say a word upon the subject. The story of Josephus is doubtless a little apocryphal.

The first important event the Bible records in reference to Moses after he arrived at manhood was the premeditated murder he committed of an Egyptian who was having a personal difficulty with a Jew—in fact, was smiting the Hebrew. First looking in various directions to see that nobody was in sight, Moses slew the Egyptian and hid him in the sand. I cannot believe that, in this business, he acted in a moral and commendable manner. He committed a homicide, which act illy comports with the law which he afterwards set up, "Thou shalt not kill." It was a case of wilful murder, and without even the excuse that he did it in self-defense or in the heat of passion. After he had committed the deed, and had buried his victim in the sand, he did not confess what he had done and give himself up to the authorities, as many a man has done since, but was very secretive about it, so much so that when he saw a Hebrew man fighting with another Hebrew, who, upon Moses interfering, said, "Who made thee a prince and judge over us? Intendest thou to kill me as thou killedest the Egyptian?" he seemed to think it would be safer for him to get out of the country. This act of murder may have been necessary to prepare him for the high office of prophet, priest, and lawgiver, but I do not believe it. A man who will deliberately take the life of a fellow being is a man dangerous to society, and most unfit to be a teacher of morals and a spiritual leader of his nation and of the world.

338. When Moses fled from Egypt he went to Midian—a nation of pagans and unbelievers—where he married his wife. If it was wrong for the Hebrews to marry outside their own nation, and if it was right for the sons of Jacob to put all the males of a city to death because the prince wanted to marry their sister, I cannot believe it right in the great lawgiver to marry a Midianitish woman.

He must have liked pagan Midian pretty well, for it seems he remained there not less than fifty years. It is estimated that he was about twenty-five years of age when he murdered the Egyptian, and about eighty when he undertook the business of leading his people out of Egypt into a land flowing with milk and honey. What he was engaged at during all this time is hard to say. How many murders and other crimes he committed is not stated. He married the daughter of Jethro—or Reuel, as you please—who was king and priest of Midian, and from whom Moses doubtless received many of his theological notions, and who possibly aided him in laying plans for a revolt in Egypt and for bringing the Hebrew nation out of that country.

239. I do not take much stock in the story of the burning bush, where it is supposed God appeared unto Moses for the first time and commissioned him to lead the Hebrews out of a state of bondage. To believe that the God of the Universe, who fills immensity, could contract himself so as to get into a bush or shrub requires a greater amount of credulity than I seem to possess. (Moses and the Jews had the ability to compress their God immensely. For many years he resided in a box three feet long, called the ark; sometimes in a tent, or in a division of a tent; afterwards occupying a temple ninety feet in length, though the holy of holies—where God was supposed to make his special dwelling-place—was but a small portion of the temple.) No one was near the bush but Moses. There is no assurance that he ever told the story or ever wrote it. It is not known who did write it, but in all probability it was not penned till nearly a thousand years after the event was said to have occurred, and possibly the writer dreamed it or simply invented it. Such things have often been done.

240. I said some time ago that I did not believe in the extravagant statements made in the Bible about the plagues said to have been sent upon Egypt through the mediumship of Moses, nor that he produced the impossibilities claimed for him—including the changing of rods into serpents; of one serpent swallowing all the others; turning all the water in Egypt, including the river Nile, into blood; the production of myriads of frogs; the conversion of dust into lice; swarms of flies; murrain upon all the cattle; boils and pestilence; thunder, hail, and fire; locusts in immense numbers; thick darkness that could almost be sliced with a knife; destroying all the first-born in the land, both of men and cattle, etc., etc. I do not believe that such a series of impossible plagues ever visited any country, or that any man ever lived capable of producing them.

241. I do not think it was honesty or truthfulness in Moses to pretend to Pharaoh that the Jews wanted to go into the wilderness to sacrifice to their God. He told an out-and-out falsehood when he said so. He had no intention of returning. How does that agree with "Thou shalt not lie"? Probably if the people had known that they would be roaming about in the wilderness and desert forty years, and that not one in a thousand would live to see the promised land, they would greatly have preferred to remain in Egypt. There was a good deal of deception in the whole business.

242. It was not honesty that induced Moses to instruct the Hebrews to despoil the Egyptians of their gold and silver ornaments, wearing apparel, etc., by borrowing the same for three days, when he knew they would never return those valuables. How does that agree with "Thou shalt not steal"? God is charged with authorizing this very dishonest business, and it is therefore difficult to lay the disgrace wholly upon Moses. The honors are easy.

243. It was doubtless a commendable thing in Moses, when the Israelites were famishing in the wilderness for the want of water, to strike the rock, Horeb, with his staff and bring out a bountiful supply for 2,000,000 people, but the story is hard to believe. It is wholly in opposition to the experience of mankind. Rocks cannot be changed into water, nor can water be brought from a solid rock, though it be beaten with all the staves in the world. Such a thing never occurred.

244. In the battle that came off between the Israelites and Amalekites, it is said Moses saved large numbers of his people simply by holding up his hands. When his hands were up, the Israelites prevailed over the Amalekites, and when his hands were down, the Amalekites prevailed over the Israelites. It certainly was kind in Moses to hold up his hands, if the story can be credited. It was a singular method of deciding a battle. One was never decided by that process before nor since, nor probably then either. The story was written so long after the events were said to have occurred that the imagination doubtless had to be depended upon altogether for the statements made. It is far easier to write big stories than it is to make them true.

245. It is hardly necessary to allude again to the statement that Moses was forty days and nights on Mount Sinai with God in getting up the two tables of stone on which the Ten Commandments were written or engraved. If the two put in their time on the job they were not very expeditious about it. God ought to have done far better by himself. If he could get up the sun, moon, and all the countless stars, with all they contain, in one day, he ought to have turned out those two tables in less than three minutes. Moses ought to have performed the work in forty days himself. Probably that was what he was doing so long; he was engraving the tables, and, not being a practiced stone-cutter, it required a long time to perform the work. His statement that God did the labor was probably made to increase the veneration of the people for, and to make them attach greater importance to, the commandments.

They were not very original. The same injunctions were practically used earlier by the Asiatic nations—the Brahmins and Buddhists. If the two tables of stone were handed down from God out of heaven, it is a great pity they were destined to be so short-lived, and that Moses, before the people had had time to read them, should dash them down and break them. He ought to have controlled his temper better, and not have ruthlessly destroyed that which it took God more than six times as long to get up as it did to create the entire Universe. To pay him for that piece of rashness, the work had all to be done over again, and the second time God did not help him.

246. The statement that Moses ground the calf that Aaron had made into powder and cast the powder into water and made the people drink it as a punishment, is incredible and unnecessary. Gold is not easily pulverized by any process, and if it were ground to a powder and thrown into water it would impart no quality to the water. In a metallic state it is entirely insoluble in water. It is so heavy, too, that it would settle to the bottom at once and not affect the water at all. It is not probable that Moses ground the golden idol to powder, or that the people drank it. A sillier story could hardly be devised.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Truth Seeker Collection

OF FORMS, HYMNS, SONGS AND RECITATIONS.

We have for several weeks been engaged on this volume, and will have it ready for patrons in the month of May. It will contain a variety of forms for Organizations, Constitutions, By-laws, etc., Funeral Sermons for Liberals and Spiritualists, Marriage Ceremonies, Naming of Infants, Invocations, Benedictions, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, Toasts, Sentiments, etc., etc. The larger share of the work will contain some five hundred Liberal and Spiritualistic hymns and songs, both original and selected, a portion of which will be accompanied by music. The whole to be followed by choice poetical selections for recitations, etc. The volume will contain nearly six hundred pages, and will be mailed to patrons at the unprecedentedly low price of 75 cents. This price will scarcely cover cost of the first edition, but it is hoped large numbers will be demanded. Every Liberal and Spiritualist family in the country ought to have a copy. The price is merely nominal, and ought not to prevent any one from sending for it. Orders are now solicited, that we may know how many to print. Let those who feel like buying a dozen or half a dozen copies, that their neighbors may have one, please do so. The book is worth three times the price asked for it, and we hope every reader of this article will decide to have a copy. Friends, let us hear from you.

SCIENCE HALL.—The lecture on Sunday evening before the "Society of Humanity" was delivered by Hugh Byron Brown. Subject, "The Demands of the Age." The lecturer, after discussing the question of whether a high civilization was compatible with the best interests of all classes, proceeded to point out some of the reforms imperatively demanded by the age, among which were land reform, a revolution in our system of legal jurisdiction, the reconstruction of accumulation of wealth by graduated taxation, the taxation of church property, and, lastly, an amelioration of the condition of women.

The lecturer, however, did not view with favor the extension of the franchise to women, believing that it would create more evils than it would cure; and that the result would be that woman, by reason of her blind devotion to the Church, would immediately transfer the political power conferred on her to the enemies of progress, against which calamity it was our duty to save her and ourselves.

MANY persons sigh for death when it seems far off, but the inclination vanishes when the boat upsets, or the locomotive runs off the track, or the measles set in. Every one wishes to go to heaven, but most people are willing to take a great deal of very disagreeable medicine first.

Reply to a Question on Baptism.

"If you were a believer in religion, which kind of baptism would you think the safest and best, immersion or sprinkling?"

L.—If I believed in the Christian religion, I should try to do just as the early Christians did as regards all things of importance concerning the salvation of the soul. I should consider no labor too severe—no cross too heavy—if it only advanced me one step nearer the goal. Our whole life here is but as the thousand millionth part of a second as compared with eternity; and why, then, be anxious to spare ourselves for that infinitesimal period of time when the everlasting, eternal, and endlessly-stretching future is at stake?

So I say, immerse, by all means, and do it three times over, too, so as to make a sure thing of it. And go down into the water naked. Be certain it is clear water, too, and running water at that.

Baptism is a very old rite. The pagans were scrupulously particular that everything offered to the gods should be without spot or blemish; and when an individual consecrated himself to holy purposes, he always bathed and washed, so as to be pure and clean. Men admired cleanliness, and consequently imagined their gods did the same. The Indians have, from time immemorial, been used to plunge into the Ganges, supposing that what purified the body likewise purified the soul; and they were right about that, for no one who is personally filthy can have a clean, pure soul. Under the old Egyptian temples there used to be large tubs kept for baptizing purposes, and a humorist once said of them:

"One can but think it somewhat droll.
Pump-water thus should cleanse the soul."

They baptized with fire, also, in some Christian societies branding or burning the candidate with red-hot irons. Luke says, "He that cometh after me shall baptize you with fire." Again, some Christians were baptized by proxy after they were dead. They put a living man under the dead man's bed, who answered for him, and then the corpse was plunged into a tub of water. St. Crispin was asked if sprinkling was real baptism. He said that they were Christians, but they had infinitely less grace than those who had been thrice dipped. Muddy water was not considered as efficacious as pure water. Baptism was at first only administered to adults, but at last people got to baptizing babies, because they were supposed to have inherited original sin and a bit of water was presumed to be efficacious in cleansing it all away and making them as spotless as Adam and Eve are said to have been before they ate the apple.

It is said that there was once a pious sect who went about poisoning newly-baptized infants, so that they would be sure to go straight to heaven and enjoy eternal happiness and bliss unutterable; and why not send them all there, big and little, as soon as they come up out of the water, pure from all sin?

The original Baptists, according to Taylor, were an effeminate and debauched order of priests, belonging to the godless Cotytto. They took their names from their stated dippings and washing by way of purification, though it seems they were dipped in warm water, and were to be made clean and pure (?), that they might wallow and defile themselves the more, as their nocturnal rites consisted chiefly of lascivious dances and other abominations.

The most unquestionable evidence confirms the fact that the Christian Baptists of Germany, in the fourteenth century, and some time before and after, "came short of no impurities that could have characterized the Antinomian priests of Cotytto."

Therefore, my dear L.—, I would counsel you, if you really desire to be on the safe side, to go the whole porcine quadruped! Be immersed in a state of nudity, in clear running water, and in summer time when the water is warm. Have the ceremony performed three times over, and brand certain characters "on the neck, forehead, and wrist" with a red-hot iron. When all this is done, it is no matter whether you have committed perjury, murder, arson, theft, rape or incest, or any other abominable crime in the calendar, or all of them, you shall be entirely purged from every vestige of the sin and become as pure and innocent as a lamb and as spotless as a dove. At least, it is so pretended by believers in these rites, though I doubt if thee or I would place as much confidence in a neophyte of this sort as we would in one who had always borne a good moral character, and was known to have been trustworthy and reliable all his life, though an unbeliever in all of the mythologies of this day, or any past day.

Sin always leaves its mark. A man who has been brutal, vicious, and bad all his life, cannot be made really pure, moral and good by any sudden conversion or ceremony. Virtue, benevolence, charity, goodness, and purity, come by slow and steady growth and accumulation. They are not picked up as one gathers pebbles on the sea-shore, but laboriously mined out, as one mines out gold from its deep-hidden, subterranean recesses by slow, steady, persevering toil.

In view of all this, my advice to you is, not to trust too much in ritualism, but rely on deeds and works, combined with an earnest desire to attain the greatest elevation, morally and physically, of which the race is capable, and make a heaven here and now, instead of hoping for some intangible and incomprehensible future, of which no one knows or can know anything.

"If it be 'Infidel'
On reason to rely—
To prove and weigh things well—
Then Infidel am I."—Preston.

ELMIRA D. SLEEKER.

EXPERIENCE keeps a dear school, but fools will learn in no other.

The Toronto Liberal Convention.

The Liberal Convention at Toronto, April 14, 15, and 16 was fairly attended, and did a good deal of work of a preparatory kind, from which I expect to see valuable results. The meetings were made up of intelligent, thoughtful, earnest men and women, and the proceedings were marked throughout by the utmost harmony of action, and an intelligent appreciation of the needs of the hour. The work was positive and constructive rather than critical and negative. A general Liberal organization was effected, to be known as "The Freethought Association of Canada," and steps were taken to secure branch organizations throughout the Dominion. The Association will encourage Liberal lectures and the sale of Liberal books. A plan was adopted for starting and sustaining a Liberal paper at Toronto, and about half enough money to sustain it a year, independent of subscription, was paid or pledged at the convention. Who will say the Canadian Liberals are lacking in energy or earnestness? I have no time to mention names or incidents—some one who has, I hope, will send you an account of the proceedings. Respectfully, B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Chicago, April 18, 1877.

The Canada Convention.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER—Sir: A Convention of Canadian Freethinkers was held in Albert Hall, in this city, on Saturday, Sunday and Monday, the 14th, 15th, and 16th inst. The Toronto Liberal Association performed the part of host, and at a great expense handsomely decorated the walls of the assembly room with shields and bannerets, inscribed with the names of noble martyrs and apostles of science and free enquiry. Among the delegates from a distance were Sara A. Underwood, B. F. Underwood, W. S. Bell, Boston; W. McDonnell, J. G. W. Martin; W. J. Logie, Lindsay; W. Sisson, Port Hope; J. Groom, Meaford; James Brown, Galt; John Fitzgibbon, Scarboro; C. Bounsell, Bowmanville; Joseph Pilcher, George Gray, Mount Forest; Joel Lewis, A. White; Aylmer (Ont); Sylvester Taylor, Port Stanley; Edwin Dunn, Owen Sound; John Macmillan, Oshawa; H. Sells, Vienna; B. Farr, Woodbridge; R. A. Goodwin, Hamilton; and a large number of resident sympathizers.

Mr. J. I. Evans, President of the Toronto Liberal Association, was elected chairman of the convention; John T. Hawke, Secretary; and R. B. Rutland, Assistant Secretary.

The results of the Convention may be summarized as follows:—

A "Canadian Freethinkers' Association," with several branches, was formed; and the following central executive elected:—J. Iok Evans, President; John T. Hawke, Secretary; J. R. Hargrave, Corresponding Secretary; R. B. Rutland, Treasurer; Messrs. W. Sisson (Port Hope), R. Green, W. B. Cooke, B. F. Riley, Eyre Evans, C. A. Seadding, J. D. Kelly, Executive Committee. The Presidents of the branches will be Vice-Presidents of the central organization.

A directorate of experienced men was elected to start a Freethought Journal; and the necessary stock is being subscribed.

A Propagandist Fund for the support of Canadian Freethought lecturers, and the dissemination of Liberalism in a new territory was opened. In a few weeks the first lecturer will commence the campaign.

Resolutions favoring the taxation of churches and church property; the exclusion of the Bible and religious services from the Public Schools; of State-aided separate schools; the abolition of oaths in Courts of Justice so far as they concern Freethinkers; the exclusion of chaplains and prayers from the Legislatures; the free observation of the Sunday; demanding "in things demonstrated and certain, unity; in whatsoever can be doubted, free diversity; in all things, charity."

The lectures produced were the principal immediate results of the Convention; but time alone will be able to measure the consequences of this important, and so far as the daily press are concerned, unnoticed gathering.

JOHN T. HAWKE, Secretary.

Toronto, April 18th, 1877.

Lord Amberley.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: I wish to express my thanks to thee for the inestimable benefit thou hast conferred upon the Liberal cause by publishing Lord Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief."

I have just finished reading the book, and through the whole 750 pages the interest never wearied or slackened. It is one of the most plain and simple, yet thorough and learned, of all the theological works I have ever read. Perfectly impartial in its judgment concerning all religions, gods and bibles; treating each and all with due respect, and giving to each their full meed of justice, it separates as far as possible the mythical from the real, and the probable and true from the improbable and false.

I hope every Liberal in the land, who is able to do so, will purchase the book, thus securing a valuable volume for the family library, as well as assisting the indefatigable publisher in the good and noble work of endeavoring to enlighten, emancipate and cultivate the grandest and highest development in Nature—the human mind. There are few books whose perusal will give more general satisfaction than this cool, calm, thorough, and practical analysis of Lord Amberley's. "Peace be to his ashes."

ELMINA D. SLENNER.

Snowville, Va.

AN ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF, by Viscount Amberley. From the London Edition, complete. D. M. Bennett, Liberal and Scientific Publishing House, New York.

The following quotation from the title-page clearly defines the Viscount Amberley's purpose in giving to the world the present learned effort on religious belief. "Ye shall know the Truth, and the Truth shall make you free."

The "Analysis of Religious Belief," is a work of permanent value. It treats great questions in a masterly manner. Perhaps there are others who have written as liberally and as ably on these questions as has Lord Amberley.

There are but two parts in the book. The first Part is entitled, "Means of Communication Upwards." These means of upward communication are classified under the following five general divisions: 1. Consecrated Actions; 2. Consecrated Places; 3. Consecrated Objects; 4. Consecrated persons; 5. Consecrated Mediators.

The Second Part is entitled "Means of Communication downwards." 1. Holy Events; 2. Holy Places; 3. Holy Objects; 4. Holy Orders; 5. Holy Persons or Prophets; 6. Holy Books.

Nearly one-fourth of the book is devoted to Christ, and about one-half of it is taken up in the discussion of the Holy Books, or Bibles. The principal bibles whose merits he discusses are: 1. The Thirteen King; 2. The Tao-te-King; 3. The Veda; 4. The Tripitaka; 5. Zend-Avesta; 6. The Koran; 7. The Old Testament; 8. The New Testament.—Lafayette, Ind., Daily Courier, April 16, 1877.

From the New York Evening Telegram.

AN ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF. By Viscount Amberley. New York D. M. Bennett.

The American edition of this work, already celebrated, is at last before us. As the American publisher says in his preface, the appearance a few months ago of "The Analysis of Religious Belief" caused much excitement in England, and its introduction into our country has had much the same effect. To quote the words of Mr. Bennett, who belongs to the extreme radicals, "While many were more or less shocked by the Viscount's boldness of language in examining the sources of the religious creeds of the world and at the freedom with which he removed the sacred mask from many antique myths and superstitions, the thoughtful and the inquiring were furnished with a fund of material for new thought and largely increased facilities for investigating and comparing the creeds and dogmas which have made up the ruling religious faiths of mankind."

Viscount Amberley was the son of Lord John Russell, one of the oldest peers in England. He had been brought up in the principles of the Christian Church. Everything tended to make him a believer in and follower of the Christian dogmas. But "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Despite his high aristocratic connections; despite his own interests that were at stake; despite the thousand obstacles that lay in his path, Viscount Amberley fought bravely for what he thought to be the truth. If he was wrong, we owe him at least our respect. He was ably seconded in his endeavors by his wife, who, strangely enough, sympathized fully with him. She toiled with him, and rendered him essential service in collecting and arranging the matter for his two volumes. Unfortunately death came between them before the work was completed. The wife died, and the husband was left in solitude to finish the work. Even he sank under disease and passed away while his books were still in the hands of the printer. These circumstances invest the work with a new interest.

After the Viscount's death every effort was made to suppress the "Analysis." The Duke of Bedford and Lord John Russell used all the means in their power to buy up the entire edition issued. But these efforts were in vain, as might have been easily foretold. The book is inscribed to the author's wife in the following touching words:—"With all reverence and all affection to the memory of the ever-lamented wife whose hearty interest in this book was, during many years of preparatory toil my best support; whose judgment as to its merits or its faults, would have been my most trusted guide; whose sympathies my truest encouragement; whose joyous welcome of the completed work I had long looked forward to as my one great reward; whose nature, combining in rare union scientific clearness with spiritual depth, may in some slight degree have left its impress on the page, though far too faintly to convey an adequate conception of one whose religious zeal in the cause of truth was rivalled only by the ardor of her humanity and the abundance of her love." Such a dedication is more suggestive than any introduction could be, and from its tenor we can justly draw many conclusions regarding the man who penned it.

The "Analysis" is a book for scholars, one which every scholar should possess. At the same time it is an excellent source of general reference. The subject is treated in every possible light and no details are neglected. Information is derived from all points and the amount of matter consulted by the author must have been enormous. To dispute a book like this the religious world must put forth its strongest arguments and highest resolves.

THE SEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION of the American Labor Reform League will be held in Masonic Hall, 13th street, between 3d and 4th avenues, New York City, Sunday and Monday, May 6 and 7, at 10:30 A. M., 3:30 and 7:30 P. M. each day. J. K. Ingalls, E. H. Heywood, Wm. Hanson, R. W. Hume, Geo. W. Maddox, Dr. E. P. Miller, S. Mira Hall, Dr. C. S. Weeks, Edward Palmer, and other speakers are expected.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., APRIL 10, 1877.

BRO. BENNETT—Sir: I would say again to all the readers (our brothers and sisters) of THE TRUTH SEEKER that it will be impossible to answer my numerous correspondents only through your valuable paper. I am now preparing for an extended tour of the United States with Grant's Diorama of Florida as lecturer, first East and then West, when I will have an opportunity of telling the people all about Florida; after which I hope to have my pamphlet in print and ready for sale.

Respectfully, J. EDWIN CHURCHILL.

Friendly Correspondence.

D. M. WORLEY, Lebanon, Ohio, writes: I see in my welcome weekly visitor, THE TRUTH SEEKER, of March 10th, that T. A. Capeheart of Polk's Patch, Ind., has ordered among other books, "The Sages," and "Exeter Hall." A good selection. He should have added to it the "Inquirer's Text Book," being thirteen lectures on the Bible, by Robt. Cooper. Price $1.00. It is first-rate, and should accompany the "Sages," and "Exeter Hall." No library is complete without these three works.

H. M. ARNOLD, Corry, Penn., writes: Although I don't have much time to read, depending mostly upon my father, who reads aloud, still I call myself a reader of your paper. I like the paper very much indeed. It is doing a noble work, and one deserving the attention of every lover of the truth. Let it be kept at its work, and, in the course of time, victory will be ours, and the world will be rescued from the depths of superstition and bigotry, in which it has been buried. But there are now unmistakable signs, among them your paper stands foremost, of a revolution in the opinion of the people; and reason begins to assert its right to govern the minds of men. A glorious future is looming up in the distance. Let all help to hasten its arrival by subscribing for THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WM. CAIN, Owen Sound, Ont., writes: I was particularly pleased with the article in the issue of the 24th of March, entitled "The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug." It is just the sort of article that is required to arouse and thoroughly awaken the attention of thinking people. It is put so forcibly that there is no possibility of gainsaying the subject matter. We are but a few Freethinkers here, but we occasionally get one of those heavy pulpit drives, and some of the select are surprised that we still live, after all the horrid blasphemies we are guilty of. But we still flourish. "By faith they can remove mountains," but they can't convert one sensible person who has once had his eyes opened to the absurdities and fallacies of the Christian faith.

WILKES ANGEL, Belmont, N. Y., writes: You will please accept my sincere thanks for placing within my reach Amberley's most excellent book upon the subject of Religious Beliefs which have obtained among men. It is the best book I have ever read. It is able, candid, impartial, and truthful. The cowardly notice of the book in the Scientific American referred to in your last paper is characteristic of a large class of so-called scientific men whose ideas of science can never progress beyond the confines of an orthodox creed. The science taught by such men is but the servant of superstition and bigotry. The teachings of Copernicus and of Galileo would as readily have been condemned by them as are the sentiments and teachings of the priceless volume of Viscount Amberley. Blame them not, as they are as nature organized them—narrow, peaked, with contracted brains, and wholly incapable of appreciating or understanding the free speech of true and unshaken science.

D. H. WISE, Salem, O., writes: Though the "filthy lucre" is quite scarce with me at present, yet I have concluded to wear my old clothes a while longer and send for a copy each of the "Sages" and Amberley's "Analysis." I have been a reader of your paper from the first number to date, and know whereof I affirm when I speak in its praise. I cannot express myself better than by saying that I am delighted with it, and could not well get over Sunday without it. I am anxiously awaiting your reply to Humphrey. The discussion will make the paper more than commonly interesting. Humphrey's story will be good till you tell yours. The idea of claiming Franklin and Jefferson as Christians! Why, I would not be surprised to hear even Lincoln quoted as authority for the Christian scheme of salvation, as well-known infidel as he was. But the defenders of the faith have nothing else upon which to rely but assertion and presumption. To say nothing about the absurdity of its doctrines, the Church is doing more to retard progress than all other causes combined. Nothing can be imagined more pernicious to real morality than the premium it puts on crime by its doctrine of the vicarious atonement. Even Lee, the prince of assassins, if we except the old Jew, Joshua, can boast while kneeling on his coffin, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." I don't take much stock in that scheme of salvation through the blood of Christ. Send me copies of the books in leather. I want them to pass around among my neighbors.

A. SWEET, False Cape, Cal., writes: While thinking over the disadvantages we are laboring under, it occurs to me that if we go to work right, we can accomplish a great deal. It is plain to be seen that all the hosts of superstition and priestcraft are well organized and drilled. They have their meetings once or twice every week. Our children and young people are bound to go where there is a public gathering, and it would be wrong to prohibit them from going to some public gathering. Now I think we could have meetings as well as they, if we were organized. Are there not men and women in our ranks who will volunteer to go through all the States in the Union armed with full power to form Lodges of the Liberal League. Appoint one for each State, and let it be his or her duty to form one or more County Lodges, and to keep an account of all expenses, and the Society to refund the same, and pay for their time. I would have women admitted to full membership, and I would have all the meetings public except the business of the Lodge. I know that we are strong if we were only once organized, and would see priestcraft totter and fall, and their fine churches used for better purposes. Please call the attention of Liberals to this subject and see what can be done. See if there can be ways and means provided to carry on this great work.

BENJAMIN GRIFFIN, Lawrence, Mass., writes: There is a good deal of talk here about Moody and Sankey. I think if they had another partner, say the Virgin—the Trinity would be complete, three in one. I think if some of their dupes had your paper to read, it would be an eye-opener to those who are looking in the old rusty Jew-book for salvation. If they would give reason and common sense fair play, they would see that the great "I Am" talked of in that old Jewish History called the God-inspired word, was not quite so good after all in punishing his children through all eternity and a little longer. If they would only throw off the shackles of superstition with which they are bound, they would see that they were "barking up the wrong tree" for salvation. This talisman of theirs says: "Ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find," etc., but they have been seeking and knocking for years without any effort. I wonder that more of them have not lost confidence in this God of theirs and his wonderful book so full of contradictions, absurdities, lies and obscenity. Many of its characters, and especially its saints, are the most licentious, cruel, and ignorant men of whom history gives any record. We need more humanity, and less Bibles, Gods, Christs, Priests, Moodys and Sankeys in order to make the world freer and better.

CLAY C. CLINTON, Fort Mc Henry, Baltimore, Md., writes: I have received the books of my last order. I have never during my short life read any work on Deism or Atheism. I was raised a Christian, attended Sunday-school regularly, was taught to say my prayers before I retired for the night, etc. As I grew older I read the Bible frequently and attentively, but the more I read the less I believed, and finally I knew it to be a fraud. I very frequently get into an argument on the authenticity and credibility of the Scripture, and as a general thing slay my man with his own weapon, the Bible. A few days ago I was cornered in an argument. Please help me out, either by letter or through the columns of your paper, or if you have the work of any one that will answer the question I will purchase it if you have not time to answer. The question put to me was:—From what or where do Infidels derive their moral code of law? or from what do they derive their sense of right or wrong? Let your answer be beyond refutation if possible.

REPLY.—To answer this question very briefly, we will say, morality or the moral code is derived from the great sense of right and wrong inherent in the breast of humanity. It comes not from gods nor devils,—heaven nor hell. It needs no revelation to know it, but observation as to what makes our fellow beings better and happier.—ED. T. S.

GEO. F. KESSLER, Baltimore, Md., writes: I feel myself compelled to say something through your "Friendly Correspondence." I had no idea that Liberalism had made such rapid strides. It was purely accidental that I first saw your paper. This city is so fully impregnated with Catholicism, with all the other orthodox rubbish thrown in, that Freethought has made but little advancement. I have been a Liberal ever since I began to think for myself, and that has not been so very long as I am only twenty years old, and it affords me great pleasure to learn that there are numerous other young persons throughout the land who entertain similar views. It is encouraging to hear from young persons through your paper, as it proves that the rising generation are becoming more reasonable in their views. It also convinces us that education is one of the mighty influences that is successfully combating superstition and orthodoxy. I think every true Liberal should make it his object in life to convince believers of their error, but in a mild and dispassionate manner, rather than in a dogmatic, bulldozing way; and I think we can all accomplish something, with such an unlimited amount of information with which to arm ourselves to be gathered from your paper. I myself have made some converts, but I found it rather hard work, as I had only my own ingenuity to rely on, but now, with this eye-opener, I expect richer harvests. I am writing an article entitled, "Why I am an Atheist," which I hope you will insert in your valuable paper at some future time. But as I feel that I am infringing on valuable space, I will close by saying that these letters are an encouragement both to the reader and editor providing we always accompany them with—well, say enough to buy and spread a few tracts.

W. S. COLLINS, Ransom, Ill., writes: I am just through college, and have not yet made my start in the world, but I feel as strong and brave and cheerful and happy as it is healthy to be. A stray copy of your brave little paper converted me to the cause of truth and conscience. And as long as it is as brave, independent and fearless as it is to-day, my name shall stand on your books until my blood stands still in my body. Oh, that I had had, two years ago, the light of common sense and reason to have guided me through the mazes of botany, chemistry and physics—for I am but a little more than a year old in the new faith. But it did me some good before I left school, for my eyes were opened before I began geology and psychology. How grand were those scientific lectures by Prof. Proctor and others! What a fine discussion was that "Matter, Mind, and Immortality" for one just beginning psychology; also, "What I don't Believe," and those "Interrogatories to Jehovah;" they will attract the notice of those still "out of the fold." And right here let me say, although you are brave and fearless, and although we must all be brave and fearless, it requires money to enable you to seatter these good words to the people, Liberals are apt to get too independent, and withdraw their support from the Liberal papers. We must remember that nine hundred and ninety-nine in a thousand of the people in this world are yet unacquainted with the truths of Liberalism. We must remember that more men are convinced by reading and reflection than by argument face to face, for the eyes of the world are not upon them, and passion and pride do not rise in conclusion. We must remember that if we are true Liberals, we are more than ever brothers, and should we not do something to place the truth in their hands? Even if money is hard to get, can we not go hungry a few times, that we may have a good paper for a whole year? If we have already enough light to carry us on our way rejoicing, can we not scatter a little in the paths of our struggling brothers? If the "struggle for life" means the "survival of the fittest," can we not exert ourselves to make all we meet, as far as we can, the fittest? When the future looks darkest is the time for men to stand the firmest. Keep on in the good work, and when you are gone, we will carry on the fight for mental freedom.

Special Notices.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N.Y.

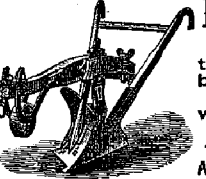

Dr. J. S. Lyons's Hygienic Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

SPERMATORRHEA.—Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this life-wasting disease. It is an external application, and has made 1000 permanent cures. Charges moderate. Address with stamp, Vineland, New Jersey. t112

WANTED—AN EXPERIENCED NURSE and housekeeper with approved morals, active, intelligent, and of sufficient age to give character to a Hygienic Institute. Would prefer a lady wishing treatment and board for impaired health, with a view to the position after it is restored. Address J. S. Lyons, M.D., Springfield, Mo.

Stereopticon for Sale, and OVER TWO HUNDRED BEAUTIFUL PICTURES.—As I wish to procure more expensive apparatus for my next season's work, adapted to the largest halls, I offer my oxy-calculum stereopticon (one of Mr. Allister's best, suitable for halls seating 300 people), and over two hundred elegant views, for sale. It affords a safe, pleasant business for any gentleman who is desirous of traveling. For particulars address W. F. JAMESON, Glenwood, Iowa.

ADAMANT PLOWS.
Hard Metal
High Polish
Adjustable
Beams
Wood/Iron
Run Steady
Light Draft
All Sizes.
Do the work of best steel plows, while much cheaper to repair. Agents wanted.
THE NEW YORK PLOW CO., 55 Beekman St., N. Y.

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

Sexual Physiology.....$3 00
Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book.....1 00
Health and Diseases of Women.....25
Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses.....50

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. TRALL, M.D., 21 E. Twentieth St., New York. t1

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319 6th Ave., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters P. O. Box 4329 New York City. 171

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1750

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY. By R. T. TRALL, M.D. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. 25,000 copies of this work have been sold. Finely illustrated, and a very important work. Price, $2.

INGERSOLL'S LECTURES (Cheap Edition) including "The Gods," "Arrangement of the Church, or Individuality," "Heretics and Heresies," "Thomas Paine," "Humboldt," "Paper," 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents. We have also a splendid edition of the same at $1.25.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you, $8 a day sure to all. BRIMSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 38

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINEON & Co., Portland, Maine. 11

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CRAVEN.

Price, by mail, $1.00. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

The Household Treasure;

or, MEDICAL ADVISER.

By Mrs. C. A. VON CORT,

Wife of the eminent Prussian physician, C. J. VON CORT, M.D.

This volume contains a great amount of information about the diseases which afflict the human race and the remedies that will cure them. It also gives a large number of valuable recipes. The whole is presented in an interesting and comprehensive language. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.00. Sent postpaid by mail on receipt of price. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

E. P. Cooley,

Manufacturer of

Window Shades and Opaque Cloths.

64 READE STREET, NEW YORK.

Dealer in Fixtures, Cords, Tassels, Hollands, etc.

IMITATION LACE CURTAINS A SPECIALTY:

Combining the beauty of a Lace Curtain with the utility of a Window Shade. ORDERS BY MAIL PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO, and FORWARDED WITH CARE. Retail Orders delivered in any part of the country, C. O. D. In ordering special sizes give size of opening, also size of glass. State where you saw this adv. 8117

COPY YOUR LETTERS

USE

Excelsior Copying Book,

Made of Chemical Paper.

Quickly copies any writing WITHOUT Water, PRESS, or BRUSH, used at home, library or office. For Ladies wishing to retain copies of letters, every business man, clergyman, correspondent, traveler it is invaluable—sells at sight. Send $3.00 and we will send a 300 page Book, letter size, BY MAIL paid to any address. We refer to any Commercial Agency. Send stamp for Agents' Circular. EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING CO., 110 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ills. 5000 AGENTS wanted. 6114

WINTER'S

WONDERFUL HAIR RESTORER

is now offered to the people in the form of a recipe, sent post-paid to any address for $1.00. Is made of simple ingredients. No sulphur. No sugar of lead, nor any other poisonous substance. Restores faded, dry, harsh, and falling hair to softness and natural color. Restores hair to the prematurely bald-headed where all other hair restoratives have failed. Removes all unpleasant irritation, itching, and scaly dryness.

Three Reasons why every one who has lost or is losing their hair should buy this valuable HAIR RESTORATIVE RECIPE.

Firstly. It is the best and most successful hair restorative ever discovered.

Second. It contains no poisonous substances.

Third. Every purchaser of this Wonderful Hair Restorative Recipe can make his own remedy at trifling cost.

Address J. C. WINTERS, CINCINNATI, Pica-way Co., Ohio. 3m06

The Resurrection of Jesus.

A new Lecture by W. S. BELL of New Bedford, Mass., the able Liberal Lecturer. It is an excellent Essay. It costs but ten cents, mailed to any address. Send for a copy. Address D. M. BENNETT, SCIENCE HALL, 141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

DR. E. B. FOOTE'S PLAIN HOME TALK. A most valuable work on health and disease, with the most rational modes of treatment. It contains over 900 pages and 300 illustrations. As a work on Hygiene, it has hardly an equal. Price, with a beautiful chromo, $3.25.

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3 00; Leather, $4 00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4 50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher.

141 Eighth St., New York.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"

In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

SCOTTISH

WESTERN LOAN CO., OF LEROY, MINN.,

Invest Money in first mortgages on improved farms in Iowa and Minnesota. Interest nine per cent annually in advance. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. Send for circulars to G. L. HENDERSON, President, 141 Eighth Street, New York. *1716

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B. F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First, "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second, "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., New York.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

THIRTY DISCUSSIONS, BIBLE STORIES, ES- TAYS AND LECTURES. By D. M. BENNETT. A work of about 700 pages, with a wood-cut portrait of the author. A low-priced volume. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bankrupt Sale of Jewelry.

GREAT FAILURE OF THE MILTON GOLD JEWELRY COMPANY IN LONDON

Their Entire Stock Consigned to us to Raise Money as Soon as Possible.

Everybody has heard of MILTON GOLD JEWELRY, it having been sold in this market for the last ten years, and worn by the best and richest class of our population. Still it takes an expert to distinguish Milton Gold from Virginia Gold. In order to dispose of this large consignment in the speediest way, we have put up lots which we offer to the public for the tenth part of their value.

FIFTY-CENT LOT.

One pair elegant sleeve-buttons, retail price $1 00
One set spiral shirt-studs, retail price..... 75
One beautiful scarf-pin, stone setting, re- tail price..... 75
One elegant gent's watch chain, latest pat- tern, retail price..... 1 50
One collar-button, retail price..... 50
One elegant wedding ring, very heavy, re- tail price..... 2 00

Total.....$5 50

Remember that we will send you the above-named six articles, which we have retailed for $5.50, by mail, post-paid, for fifty cents, + sample lots for $1.50, or 12 sample lots for $4.

ONE DOLLAR LOT.

One pair gent's sleeve buttons, stone set- ting.....$1 20
One set elegant spiral studs to match same 1 05
One beautiful ladies' band engagement ring..... 2 00
One gent's large seal ring..... 2 00
One ladies' lang neck chain..... 2 75
One gent's heavy plate watch chain..... 1 75
One gent's "Lake George" diamond stud. 1 00
One beautiful scarf-pin..... 72
One pair ladies' engraved sleeve-buttons.. 1 00

Total.....$13 50

The above figures are the prices these goods have been retailed at in our leading cities. We mention these figures to give you an idea of the goods.

A FINE SOLID SILVER WATCH FREE.

On receipt of $15 we will send by express, one dozen 50 ct. lots and one of each of the others; also one elegant Watch, Ladies' or Gents' size, guaranteed to be a good timekeeper. Such opportunity is offered but once in a lifetime.

We want our patrons and the public in general to understand that this is Milton Gold Jew- elry and no common Plated Ware. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance or money refunded. Send money by P. O. order or registered letter.

Our Firm and Milton Gold Jewelry are endorsed by all the leading newspapers of the country. Goods sent C. O. D. if $5.00 is sent with the order, not otherwise. Address all orders to

RALSTON JEWELRY CO.,

Importers of Watches and Jewelry,

LaSalle and Randolph Streets, Chicago, Illinois.

THE WORLD'S

SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS:

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - - $3.00
ARABESQUE, colored leather, red
burnished edges, - - - 4.00
MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked
head-band, - - - 4.50

Add 388,

D. M. BENNETT,

Eating for Strength.

A NEW HEALTH COOKERY BOOK.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Which should be in the hands of every person who would eat to retain and regain health, strength and beauty. It contains, besides the science of eating and one hundred answers to questions which most people are anxious to know, nearly one hundred pages devoted to the best healthful recipes for foods and drinks, how to feed one's self, feeble babes and delicate children so as to get the best bodily development. Mothers who do not nurse their children will find full directions for feeding them, and so will mothers who have delicate children, and invalids who wish to know the best foods.

Price, $1, postage free.

For sale wholesale and retail by

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., N. Y.

POSITIVELY

$50.00 WORTH OF INFORMATION

in form of a nice book of over 100 pages, well illustrated, sent post-paid for $1.00

BY A PRACTICAL CLOSE OBSERVER

How to keep the hens, and hen-roosts free from lice. How to feed to get an abundance of eggs, even in mid winter. How to manage setting hens, chickens, &c., and how to preserve eggs a great length of time. Best breeds of hens, &c. Enclose $1.00 with order.

E. D. BLAKEMAN, Circleville, Ohio.

[Mr. Blakeman is a school-boy friend of ours. We know him well; he is entirely reliable, and the information he has to impart upon the poultry subject is valuable.—Ed. T. S.]

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Port- land, Maine. 1750

Gems of Thought.

THE best prophet of the future is the past.—Bryon.

OURSELVES are all we know of heaven.—Margaret Fuller.

GREATNESS, once and forever, has done with opinion.—Emerson.

EDUCATION—Learning the rules in this mighty game of life.—Huxley.

SCIENCE is nothing but trained and organized common sense.—Huxley.

IF God be with me, I need no church to find him, and no mediator.—Rev. John Weiss.

CALL not coldness of soul religion; nor put the bigot in the place of the Christian.—Thomas Paine.

THE old orthodox view of heaven: one eternal serenading of the Almighty.—Laura Cuppy Smith.

THE saint of the future will hold his body as noble as his spirit, and of equal importance. The bravest soul is useless in a corrupted body.—Hudson Tuttle.

THE best piety is to enjoy when you can. You are doing the most then to save the earth's character as an agreeable planet. And enjoyment radiates.—George Eliot.

THE woman question is the negro in white face and petticoats. If the men of our country were able to swallow the black man, I think it a pity if they can't get the white woman at least as far as the lips.—Olive Logan.

THE history of science is not a mere record of isolated discoveries; it is a narrative of the conflict of two contending powers, the expansive force of the human intellect on the one side and the compression arising from traditionary faith and human interests on the other.—Draper.

FOR Science the volume of inspiration is the book of Nature. Confronting all, it needs no societies for its dissemination. Infinite in extent, eternal in duration, human ambition and human fanaticism have never been able to tamper with it. On the earth it is illustrated by all that is magnificent and beautiful, on the heavens its letters are suns and worlds.—Draper.

IF we take in hand any volume of Divinity, or school metaphysics, let us ask: Does it contain any abstract reasoning concerning quantity or number? No. Does it contain any experimental reasoning concerning matter of fact and existence? No. Commit it to the flames; for it can contain nothing but sophistry and illusion.—Hume.

THE night has a thousand eyes,
And the day but one;
Yet the light of the bright world dies
With the dying sun.
The mind has a thousand eyes,
The heart but one;
Yet the light of the whole life dies
When love is done.—Anon.

THE virtue in most request by society is conformity. Self-reliance is its aversion. It loves not realities and creators, but names and customs. Whoso would be a man must be a non-conformist. Nothing at last is sacred but the integrity of your own mind. I remember an answer which, when quite young, I made to a valued adviser, who was wont to importune me with the dear old doctrines of the Church. On my saying, "What have I to do with the sacredness of traditions, if I live wholly from within?" my friend suggested, "But these impulses may be from below, not above." "They do not seem so to me; but if I am the devil's child, I will live then from the devil." No law can be sacred to me but that of my own nature. Good and bad are names very readily transferable to this or that: the only right is what is after my constitution, the only wrong what is against it.—Emerson.

WHOEVER makes a great fuss about doing good, does very little; he who wishes to be seen and noticed when he is doing good, will not do it long; he who mingles humor and caprice with it, will do it badly. He who only thinks of avoiding faults and reproaches, will never acquire virtues.

FOR him who does everything in its proper time, one day is worth three.

THE less indulgence one has for one's self, the more one may have for others.

TOWERS are measured by their shadows, and great men by those who are envious of them.

WE must do quickly what there is no hurry for, to be able to do slowly what demands haste.

HE who wishes to secure the good of others, has already secured his own.

THE court is like the sea: everything depends upon the wind.

WHAT a pleasure it is to give! There would be no rich people if they were capable of feeling this.

THE rich find relations in the most remote foreign countries; the poor not even in the bosom of their own families.

THE way to glory is through the palace; to fortune through the market; to virtue through the desert.

THE truths that we least wish to hear are those which it is most to our advantage to know.

ONE forgives everything to him who forgives himself nothing.

IT is the rich who want most things.

WHO is the greatest liar? He who speaks most of himself.

A fool never admires himself so much as when he has committed some folly.

WHEN a song gives much fame, virtue gives very little.

ONE never needs one's wits so much as when he has to do with a fool.

ALL is lost when the people fear death less than poverty.—From the Chinese.

Odds and Ends.

"WERE you ever baptized?" inquired an earnest minister of a green candidate. "No—no—no sir! Never only once, and then I fell in."

AN exchange remarks that in China it is customary to kill poets and eat them, which moves the Norristown Herald man to add, "on account of their tender lines, we suppose."

AN old black woman reciting her experience, said she had been to heaven. "Did you see any of de colored ladies dar?" asked a younger one. "O, you git out, you 'spose I went in de kitchen when I was dar?"

A YOUNG KNOW-NOTHING—Teacher: "Who was the first man?" Brown (Head boy).—"Washington; first in war, first in—." Teacher: "No, no; Adam was the first man." Brown.—"Oh, if you are talking of foreigners, I 'spose he was."

SOME time ago a pupil of a deaf and dumb asylum in New York read a portion of the Book of Job. When asked to write out his understanding of Job's sufferings, he wrote as follows: "The Lord boiled Job seven days!"

A COUNTRY editor received the following:—"Dear Sir: I have looked carefully and patiently over your papers for months for the death of some individuals I was acquainted with, but as yet not a single soul I care anything about has dropped off; you will please to have my name erased."

ADVERTISING is a good thing, but when a prominent grocer carried to a funeral an umbrella on which was painted conspicuously the business of his house, and held it over the preacher's head while he read his prayers, the bystanders thought he was running the thing into the ground.

A GENTLEMAN called on a bookseller for a finely bound copy of the Scriptures. The dealer looked over the stock but could find nothing to suit the customer. Casting an abstracted look over the shelves, he finally said: "I don't see why it is there are so few here. We always keep an ungodly number on hand."

CHARLES LAMB was once riding in a stage-coach in company with one of those sympathizing souls who are ever on the lookout for an opportunity to compassionate affliction. "What a bad cough you have, sir!" said the sympathizing one, after Lamb had recovered from a violent fit of coughing. "I know it," replied Lamb, "but it is the best I can do."

A SCHOOL-BOY being requested to write a composition upon the subject of "pins," produced the following: "Pins are very useful. They have saved the lives of a great many men, women and children—in fact, whole families." "How so?" asked the puzzled teacher; and the boy replied, "Why, by not swallowing them." This matches the story of the other boy, who defined salt as "the stuff that makes the potatoes taste bad when you don't put any on."

A LITTLE five-year-old fellow came up to his mother the other morning, and with great earnestness said: "Mother, I saw something run quickly across the kitchen floor this morning, and it hadn't any legs, either. What do you suppose it was?" The mother's curiosity was excited at the apparent strangeness of the supposed animal, and not knowing what else to say, said she guessed it was a snake, or a worm, or something of that sort—she didn't know what. Having enjoyed his mother's inability to solve the problem for a time, he said: "It was water!"

"THERE was a Kerry priest," began Ned Shea, "an' he had the fashion of hearin' confessions wid a slate an' pencil; an' he'd write down every sin, an' the price of it opposite. Well, one day a big mountainy fellow came to his duty, an' says he 'I bruk a man's head last Hollow Eve.' 'Toat's a nine-pence,' says the priest. 'I cut the tail ov Larry Kelley's cow.' 'That's a shillin'—oh, begob, a shillin' that is!' And down it went on the slate. 'I nearly murdered me wife twice.' 'That's thruppence; go on.' 'I kilt an Orangeman.' 'Whoo!' says the priest, rubbin' out everything. 'That clanes out all the rest.'"

THE pig was thus written up by a Georgia boy: "The pig is about as big as a sheep, only a pig's wool isn't good for making stockings of. Why is a pig like a tree? Because he roots; that is a conundrum. A pig washes himself in the mud. A pig has four legs, one under each corner of his body. They pickle pigs' feet, but not until the pig is done using 'em. A pig squeals awful when it rains, also when you pull its tail. A pig has got a first-rate voice for squealing, and he grunts when he feels good. You can't make a whistle out of a pig's tail, 'cos it is crooked. Why is a pig like Tommy Grant? 'Cos he's got his nose into everybody's business. This is another conundrum, which is all I know about the pig."

FRANK M. BAKER, a printer, is under arrest in Rochester for bigamy. Already it appears that he has five living wives, and several parishes to hear from. As a "rule" he seems to have "distributed" his affections liberally. "His case" will probably soon be disposed of, and his "form" looked up.—Batavia Times.

No, condemn him to the "galleys" for life, and without "for-mallet-y" too.—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

No, "double-lead" him with a "shooting-stick."—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Cruel wretches! "Justify" him with a ten "column chase."—Atchison Champion.

Better put a well "displayed head" on him and dump him into the "hell box."—Ellis County Star, Kan.

He must be badly worn; why not send him to pot and take a new cast?

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	6
4.	Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll.	6
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	6
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	2
9.	The Story of the Flood.	2
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	2
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arrangement of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	2
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	8
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snodde. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	10
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sothoran.	5
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	5
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	8
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	2
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	1
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	1
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	2
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	1
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	5
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets, No. 1.	5
52.	Marple's Underwood Debate. Underwood.	8
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	2
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	2
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	5
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	2
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	1
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hoppes, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	2
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	1
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsborg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	5
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	5
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

These eight Scientific Tracts are made into a pamphlet of 125 pages, at 20 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

Truth Seeker Leaflets.

Sent, assorted, or as desired, post-paid, at 4 cents per dozen; 25 cents per hundred, or $2 per thousand.

Let them be distributed freely in every town village and neighborhood. Address,

D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., New York.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " " Cloth	50
" " " with Examination of Prophecies	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	25
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and 5.00.	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27 00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jaccoliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 60 and 100.	1 00
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and 60.	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diogenes.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians, Deluge, Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Sayings, Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.	1 75
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible, Wright.	35 & 60
Evans' History of all Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and 80.	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Fröthingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History, Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religious Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.	3
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and 50.	50
" etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidel's Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneelands Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lcky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Vale.	1 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each.	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology. 770 cuts.	3 40
" Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peoples' All Around the World.	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	20
" Rights of Man.	50
" Theological Works.	2 00
" " and Miscellaneous Works. 2 50.	2 50
" Miscellaneous Writings, Centennial edition.	2 50
" Political Works. 2 Vols., 1 8vo.	5 00
" Complete Works. 3 Vols., 8vo.	8 00
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man, Ethan Allen.	60
Syntagma. Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature, D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.	2 00

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE,
MORALS,
AND FREETHOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 18. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY }
BY D. M. BENNETT.

New York, Saturday, May 5, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year.
NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS has classes for the study of Universology and his new language Akwato, at Hotel St. Elmo, 130 West Brookline street, Boston.

THE papers say Rev. L. K. Washburne, a Unitarian heretic, is making things lively in his parish at Revere, near Boston. Stir them up Bro. Washburne.

GIRLS should not be afraid to work. They should remember that Ruth who gleaned in the harvest-field got just as good a Bo-az any girl in the neighborhood.

THERE Arminia reasons why the Turks cannot adequately defend themselves on Asiatic frontiers. You know it is Asia for a camel to go through the eye of an eagle.

AN exchange says: "Don't judge a man by his family connections, for Cain belonged to a very reputable family." Yes, certainly one of the very first families in the country.

THE Ten Commandments have been stolen from a synagogue in this city, and the worst of it is they cannot be restored as good as they were, for one has been broken in the act.

THE ways of Providence are dark and hidden. In the burning of the Southern Hotel it is a noticeable fact that two preachers were burned to death, when Kate Claxton the actress and several gamblers escaped unharmed. "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform."

THE news is going the rounds, and is creating not a little excitement in matrimonial circles, that Mr. Stillman of Memphis has been united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Miss Roberts of the "Spirit World." The question arises is a numerous progeny expected, and has proper provision been made? Are the practices of 1877 years ago to be revived?

AN Iowa minister has been dismissed on account of writing puffs of his own pulpit oratory. Why, his enemies ought not to be too censorious with him. The exercises he has been indulging in is innocence compared with what some of his brothers of the cloth are guilty of and are still allowed to break the bread of life. Think of Beecher and Glendinning.

ANOTHER CLERGYMAN IN TROUBLE.—The Rev. Thomas R. Bott, pastor of a Baptist church in Philadelphia, has recently been arraigned before the criminal court for a grave offense. He is a young and talented man, and is married; but he seems not to have been fully satisfied with home comforts, and paid frequent and protracted visits to Miss Louisa Younger, daughter of the deacon of the church, who evidently encouraged his attentions. It was proved that the clergyman and the young lady visited the Fish Hotel, at a small village near Philadelphia, where they spent several days under fictitious names, Bott passing himself off as Horace Easton. The pair were observed to be very loving together, frequently embracing and kissing when they thought they were not observed. The reverend gentleman attempted to prove an alibi, but hardly with success. His church is divided for him and against him. The women are principally on his side. Deacon Younger, the young lady's father, is the prosecutor, which the daughter pointedly resents.

POPEING pays, but pope-paying pauperizes. Last week the poor Catholics of this country presented the Pope with $65,000. Next week $65,000—more or less—will be paid out of the public purse for the support of Catholic paupers. Charity begins at home—with the poor; and ends there—with the Pope. A fool and his money soon part; the money goes to the Pope, the fool to the poorhouse. "He that giveth to the poor (Pope) lendeth to the Lord." The Pope has $32,000,000 in bank, therefore who can doubt his infallibility? Judging by the numbers of beggars and paupers in Catholic countries, Peter's pence are an expense to the public; but "Whomsoever hath, to him shall be given," Jesus had not where to lay his head, but he was not a pope, only a god; popes were not invented in those days. It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for the Pope to "go through" his "pile" before death takes him; and luckily he cannot take it with him. If he did it would melt, for, being rich, he could not enter the kingdom of heaven, so hell would catch him and he would catch—well, he would not catch cold. Evidently the Pope trusts more in gold than in God; or perhaps his God is gold—with I knocked out of it. God help the rich, the poor can beg.

MOHAMMEDANISM AND CHRISTIANITY IN AFRICA.—Several remarkable papers have lately appeared in an English magazine on the comparative progress of Christianity and Islam in Africa. Some of the facts and suggestions offered merit careful attention, not only by their intrinsic importance, but because the author of the articles, Edward W. Blyden, the Principal of the Liberian College, is himself a black of pure African descent.

At a time when events in the East provoke appeals to religious prejudices, and when a narrow view of Mohammedanism, its moral worth and its true function in education, is often put forth even in England and America, nothing could be more opportune than a lucid account of what it has done for western and central Africa. We are told, for instance, that Islam has a tendency to pen up nations in Chinese immobility; that it is a sort of progress which stifles the progressive spirit; that it is not a short cut or stepping-stone to a better civilization, but a blind alley. Now, that this notion is quite erroneous, as regards one branch of the human race at all events, the data collected by Mr. Blyden effectually prove.

For three centuries western Africa has been in contact with Christianity, yet not a single tribe has been collectively converted, nor has one powerful chief accepted the faith which European missionaries have offered him. Mr. Blyden tells us that even on the coast of Liberia and Sierra Leone there is not a point, with the exception of one small island, where the imported Christianity can fairly be said to have taken root. Islam, on the other hand, since its introduction by Akbar in the ninth century and establishment at Timbuctoo, has steadily and vastly widened the circle of its authority, showing itself competent to master the most virile and refractory tribes, addressing itself, indeed, by preference to those peoples which already possessed the rudiments of civil government and a social organization. It is Islam which has built and now occupies the largest towns of the interior, which has evoked and still controls most of the trade between equatorial Africa and foreign countries, and which gives laws to the most considerable kingdoms, such as Hausa, Bornu, Darfur, Kordofan, and Sennar. We are reminded, further, that in this quarter the fervor of proselytism is unquenched, and that every day the Moslem missionaries are gaining ground on the native fetishism and idolatry, and enforcing respect for their faith upon all Africans, even those who are not yet enrolled under the standard of the Prophet.

As to the work of melioration performed by Islam within its expanding pale, Mr. Blyden tells us that with the first step inland from the West Coast you are struck with the different aspect of localities, according as the inhabitants are heathen or Mohammedan. The divergence runs through the form of government, the social laws, the manners, and even the amusements of the people. Passing in 1873 from Sierra Leone to Futa Jallo, he had to traverse some large pagan villages, and soon afterward entering a Mohammedan town, he seemed to breathe a higher and purer atmosphere, the character, sentiments, and condition of the population having undergone a complete metamorphosis. It appears that the ascent of an African community in the social scale, under Moslem impulse, is often attended with signal exhibitions of individual capacity. Those who are familiar with the Mussulman world of western and northern Africa tell us of more than one great man among the negro converts who has exercised a potent influence in the religious and political affairs, not only of his own land, but of the older and classic seats of Islam. In the Arabic collections of biography, many Mussulman blacks of merit are said to figure, and much space is given to the achievements of a negro named Fodie, whose zeal and daring won to the true faith a larger part of the region watered by the Niger. One of the most noteworthy persons of recent times in the country lying between Timbuctoo and the West Coast was a native of Futa-Toro, known as the Sheikh Omarwal-Haj. This man, brought up by an Arab missionary and instructed in the Arabic language, made two pilgrimages to Mecca, and returning to his native district, undertook a proselyting campaign against some formidable heathen tribes whom he subjected to Islam, next setting himself to purify the practices of several Mussulman peoples among whom vestiges of idolatry yet lingered. We may add that sons of this Moslem apostle militant are now reigning in two of the largest towns of central Africa. One or two additional facts deserve mention. For instance, in Sierra Leone and Liberia the Mohammedan converts build mosques and maintain public worship at their own cost, and contribute largely to the support of Arab missionaries coming from foreign parts, whereas it is notorious that the native Christians depend almost wholly in such matters on European and American aid societies. Again, in the last Ashantee war, the staunchest and bravest of the black troops were the Hausas, who are strict Mohammedans, while the Christian negroes proved quite unstable. Mr. Blyden assures us that Sir Garnet Wolsey's statement, in an order of the day, that "the indigenous African feels a superstitious terror of the white man," if applied to the heathen or Moslem black is ludicrously ill-founded.

Now, the key to this strange contrast in the effect of the two religions upon the native African doubtless lies in another fact frequently remarked, and in the explanation of that fact. Almost all travelers agree that the negro convert to Islam evinces a sentiment of personal dignity and self-respect not observed in the Christian neophyte. The reason, of course, is not far to seek. If Christianity were now preached, as it once was, to the non-Aryan races by missionaries of their own or a less alien stock, we might possibly witness something like the success of those Nestorian monks who swept across central Asia into China some ten centuries before the advent of the Jesuits in the latter country. But as it is, the work of Christian propaganda is wholly committed to men of European origin, that is, to men in whom the subtle teachings of laws and manners, of literature and art, have planted an overweening and inveterate pride of race. We can judge how grave a bar this feeling must prove to a close and fervid sympathy on the part of their white pastors with the African proselytes, from the plain admission of so enlightened a man as Bishop Heber, that "there is certainly something repugnant in the negro to those who are unaccustomed to him." Where his conversion is effected under these conditions, it is not surprising that the native black should regard its author as a superior, or at all events alien being. Hence he conceives a poor opinion of himself, learns to depreciate his characteristic qualities, and is discouraged by the manifest hopelessness of reproducing the physical and mental traits of his preceptor.

In the hands of its Semitic apostles, Islam seems to have been more profoundly loyal to the spirit of broad humanity which was the common emblem of both faiths. There is not now, and there never has been, any instinctive repulsion, or assumption of inbred superiority on the part of Arabic conquerors and educators toward Mussulman blacks. The case might have been different if Moslem art had been allowed to idealize, and, so to speak, sanctify the Arab type; but this an express precept of the Prophet, and perhaps the genius of the race, forbade. The fact is that the traditional prayer, the Adzab, which convokes at the same hour more than a hundred millions of human beings, was first formulated by a negro named Bilal, whom Mohammed, upon the prompting of a dream, made muezzin or public crier; and travelers say that even the renown of Alexander the Great is eclipsed in central Asia by that of this famous black. We read, too, of a negro caliph who reigned with credit at Bagdad in the ninth century, and is said to have been a man of rare merit and accomplishments. Finally, the Moslem propagandists have at all times proved the sincerity of their sympathies in the most conclusive way, namely, by intermarriage; and some of the most esteemed Arabic authors were the offspring of such mixed unions. With such precedents and principles, tolerance and fellow-feeling are easy to the missionaries of Islam, while the African disciple finds himself stimulated to self-improvement and fortified in self-respect by the bracing bluntness of his new relation.—N. Y. Sun.

Events of the Week.

PARSON BROWNLOW, ex-Governor and ex-U. S. Senator died a few days ago.

WE have had another week of pleasant Spring weather. The trees and grass are putting on a beautiful appearance.

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN began a series of Sunday evening lectures in this city on last Sunday night. Subject, Train, etc.

AN expensive railroad bridge at Cos Cob, on the New York and New Haven road was burned by an incendiary. The loss to the company is heavy.

A DESTRUCTIVE fire visited Montreal, April 29th, by which a large amount of property was destroyed, nine lives lost, and ten persons badly injured.

HEAVY snow-storms have prevailed in this side of the Rocky Mountains to the extent of delaying the trains. In Nebraska and Iowa it also snowed considerably.

THE Rev. Thomas K. Beecher, the Elmira brother of Henry Ward, in a recent sermon in Plymouth Church, said that the greatest misfortune of his life was that his name was Beecher.

A VERY heavy fire occurred in Constantinople, April 28th, in which six hundred houses were destroyed and two women killed. The old adage is again proved true, "Misfortunes never come singly."

EUGENE N. ROBINSON, who inherited $2,000,000 dollars from his father a few years ago, and who has been a heavy operator in stocks, etc., recently became a bankrupt. Many of his recent speculations have been most unfortunate.

SOME twenty feet square of the roof of our new post-office, from the great weight of concrete of which it was composed, and the removal of some of the supports below, fell in on the 1st, by which three workmen were killed and others injured.

MRS. JAMES HURD, aged 30, of Weare, Mass., while laboring under a fit of insanity, killed her son, 10 years of age, by a heavy blow with an axe, and then after two unsuccessful attempts hung herself with a clothes-line. Her husband upon returning from a neighbor's found the two lifeless bodies.

WANG CHIN FOU, a Chinese Buddhist of much intelligence, is now in this city and proposes to deliver a course of lectures, showing the good qualities of the Chinese religion as compared with Christianity. It is perhaps very fitting that the Asiatics should send missionaries to our shores with a view to improve our religious opinions and moral practices.

SARAH DILL and her daughter Ida May Dill, aged 16 years, both of whom had resided among the Shakers in Hamilton Co., Ohio, and the daughter having been required to leave the Society, committed suicide at the Farmer's Hotel in Cincinnati by taking morphine. They had made efforts to obtain a situation where they could work and live together but meeting with rebuffs and disappointments they decided to end their lives, which they did effectually.

THE Russo-Turkish war is fairly inaugurated. Russia has advanced her forces in several directions. Several engagements have taken place in one or two of which the Turks were successful. Some Russian war vessels have also been captured by the Turks. The Russian advance has been retarded somewhat by floods England is making vigorous preparations with her navy and enlistments for the army are brisk. It is thought she will take a hand in the fray before it is over.

JOHN W. GULLY, a prominent citizen of Kemper county, Miss., was recently assassinated. Judge Chisolm was said to be knowing to the crime. He and his son were arrested and imprisoned. His wife and daughter accompanied them to prison. A mob attacked the jail. The Judge and his son were killed, also two men named Gilmer and McClellan, who had been arrested in connection with the case. Miss Chisolm in defending her father, shot and killed Dr. Rossell, and Mrs. Chisolm severely injured young Gully. It was a kind of political embroglio. The Chisolm, Gilmer and McClellans were Republicans.

Career of Religious Ideas.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.—Copyrighted.

CHAPTER II.—CONTINUED.

Of the Esquimaux, people depressed by the cold as the preceding are by excessive heat, Sir John Ross speaks in no flattering terms as regards their religious status:—

"Did they comprehend anything of all I attempted to explain, explaining the simplest things in the simplest manner I could devise? I could not conjecture. Should I have gained more had I understood their language? I have much reason to doubt. That they have a moral law of some extent, 'written in the heart,' I could not doubt, as numerous traits of their conduct show; but beyond this I could satisfy myself of nothing; nor did these efforts and many more enable me to conjecture aught worth recording. Respecting their opinions on the essential points from which I might have presumed on a religion, I was obliged at present to abandon the attempt, and I was inclined to despair.

"The Esquimaux is an animal of prey, with no other enjoyment than eating; and, guided by no principle and no reason, he devours as long as he can, and all that he can procure, like the vulture and the tiger. The Esquimaux eats but to sleep, and sleeps but to eat again as soon as he can."

South of the Himalayas, in the dense forests of Central Hindoostan, man exists in lower caste than has yet elsewhere been described. Mr. Piddington, who had extensive experience of travel, describes one of these remarkable people, whom the Hindoos call "monkey-men":

"He was short, flat-nosed, had pouch-like wrinkles in semicircles round the corners of the mouth and cheeks; his arms were disproportionately long, and there was a portion of reddish hair to be seen on the rusty black skin. Altogether, if couched in a dark corner or on a tree, he might be mistaken for a large oran-utan."

No sharp line can be drawn between man and the brute which shall leave the dawn of religious conception on one side and the absence of such on the other. The ancestors of the great European civilizations were savages as degraded as those here introduced. In the Egyptian representatives described by Champollion, the victorious Sesostri leads captive representatives of Europe, Asia, and Africa. The European is sketched as a savage clad in the skins of wild beasts, but the Syrian is attired in splendid Asiatic costume.

Europe has her own monuments to indicate the status of her ancient people.

The shell-heaps of the North, the arrow-heads and other imperishable remains found buried beneath the earth, are vestiges of peoples rude as the Red Indian of British Columbia. The inhabitants of Britain two thousand years ago met the invasion of Cæsar with arrows and spears of wood hardened in the fire. Their clothing was of skins of wild beasts, and their dwellings caves excavated beneath the earth. It is well determined that these savages, shouting their harsh war-cries as they gallantly met in unequal combat the invincible legions of Rome, have absorbed their conquerors, and that the present English people are their direct descendants.

This progress has involved an equal advance in religious conceptions. Every increment of knowledge threw new light on the nature and influence of the gods, and revealed more correctly the relations of man to his fellows. There is not a vestige of moral sense until the intellect is capable of comprehension.

Religion is the observance of certain ceremonies. Why are these observed? Because they are supposed to have been dictated by the gods, and especially pleasing to them. They propitiate their wrath and win their favor. Wholly selfish are they, springing from fear of the gods. The gods are never angry; and, although man for immemorial ages has sought their favor by prostration and sacrifice, in no instance have they interfered with the established order of things.

The religious element is fear, by which the imagination is perverted and reason enslaved. This is its ultimate analysis.

It is said, we are conscious of this element within us—that, by the failure of our schemes, the blasting of our hopes, the mystery which gathers round our lives, the limitation of our understanding, the unfathomableness of causation, we are prone to bow in submission, and acknowledge a superior Power governing Nature.

But we find, as knowledge of the laws of causation becomes more accurate, we are enabled to account for the blasting of our hopes, the failure of our plans, the mystery of our lives—are less impressed and overwhelmed with a sense of the unknown, and feel less of that dependence which some acute metaphysicians claim to be the ultimate of religious feeling. Here the distinction is drawn between morality and religion. The observance of the prescribed ceremonials of his time has constituted the religious man, and no amount of good works could shield him from the charge of infidelity if he neglected such observances. Moral ideas are not naturally allied to religious, and flow from a different source. To primitive man the observance of superstitious customs is far more essential than moral conduct. Cherishing the coarsest vices, he will suffer death before he will disobey the requirements of superstition.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

FILL one little niche in life all day yourself. Keep it dusted and in order. Adorn it with the fruits of industry, and never move to larger quarters until you have filled the smaller and need more room.

THE poorest of all human beings is the man who is rich in gold, but intellectually and spiritually bankrupt.

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

HUMPHREY'S LETTER No. 3.

NEW YORK, April 28, 1877.

MR. D. M. BENNETT—Dear Sir: Examine my last letter closer and you will find I did not say that Franklin was ever an Atheist. You say his creed contains no recognition of the divinity of Christ. That is true; but the doctrine of the divinity of Christ is not the dividing line between Infidelity and Christianity, but the doctrine of the divine origin of the Bible. See Webster's and Worcester's definitions of the words "Infidelity" and "Christianity." When Parton says Franklin "escaped the theology of terror, and became forever incapable of worshipping a jealous, revengeful and vindictive God," he meant no more than that he was emancipated from the hyper-Calvinism of "the Lord Brethren of Boston" (Life of Franklin, vol. i, p. 71). He had still the wide domain of Arminianism to traverse before reaching the borders of Deism. If his friendship with French Atheists proves that he was an Infidel, then, on the same principle, his friendship with such men as Cotton Mather, Samuel Adams, Ezra Stiles, Benj. Rush, Edmund Burke, Adam Smith, John Jay, Bishop Shipley, George Whitfield, etc., etc., proves that he was a first-rate Christian. It is true Franklin and Voltaire were friends; but that embracing in the theatre proves nothing, as it was not spontaneous, but an act forced by the popular clamor for a salutation "French fashion" (Parton's Life of Franklin, vol. ii, p. 316). As you say, Parton classifies Franklin, Jefferson, and Adams with Paine. But how does he do it? Is it by asserting that the former three were Freethinkers? No; unaccountable as that may be, he does it by saying that the "Age of Reason contains nothing against religion" (Life of Franklin, vol. ii, p. 552). It is said again that Franklin "called himself a Deist or Theist." A man that can use words in that helter-skelter kind of a way could prove anything from any document. "Deist or Theist"! Mr. Parton ought to know that these words, as they are currently used and popularly understood, are as different as "chalk" and "charcoal." The former means an Infidel, and the latter signifies a believer in a personal God and in a divine revelation. That Franklin was a Theist is all I contend for. I will let you and Parton reconcile the foregoing with what the latter says of Franklin in his remarks on the motion for prayers in the Convention of 1787: "It was the more remarkable to see the aged Franklin, who was a Deist at fifteen"—mark it, "was a Deist at fifteen"—"and had just returned from France,"—from the midst of those Atheistic friends—"coming back to the sentiments of his ancestors" (Parton's Life of Franklin, vol. ii, p. 575). You refer to Priestley's lamentation that Franklin was "an unbeliever in Christianity." I will say, in the words of Parton, "I do not understand what Priestley meant." What did he disbelieve? He was only undecided as to the divinity of Christ. He believed in the most incredible doctrines of Christianity, such as the resurrection of the body and future rewards and punishments, and in its leading duties, such as thanksgiving and prayer. In the preface to his abridged book of Common Prayer, he styled himself a "Protestant of the Church of England," and a "sincere lover of social worship." In spite of Parton's leaning to "Liberalism," he had to describe his death by saying: "To use the ancient language, he had fallen asleep in Jesus, and rested in hope of a blessed immortality" (vol. ii, p. 619).

You repeat the "hearsay upon hearsay" in rebuttal of my proofs that Washington was not a Deist. I cannot receive R. D. Owen's testimony, but with suspicion. A man that could be imposed upon by a silly girl like Katie King, is rather incompetent to sift and furnish evidence. The treaty with Tripoli, ratified in 1796, was "in no sense" of a personal character. The statement that "the Government of the United States is in no sense founded on the Christian religion," was only an assurance that the American Republic was not so allied to Christianity that the peace with Tripoli, or with any other power, would be interrupted on account of religion. It gives no hint that Washington personally ignored Christianity. His writings contain abundant proof that he did not. The only thing "observed" was his silence on sectarian doctrines. He was bold and frequent in his commendation and recommendation of the general principles of Christianity.

Even Vale admits that the "publication of Paine's Deistical opinions might have been one of the causes of Gen. Washington's indifference to Paine during his imprisonment in France" (Life of Paine, p. 129). Most assuredly, then, Washington was no sympathizer with Deism.

But it is claimed that John Adams, too, was an Infidel. Let us see about that. He was reared in an orthodox family. He was educated at Harvard, an institution that was then pervaded by a religious spirit. At twenty he thought of entering the ministry. But his taste led him to study law. He read many skeptical works, which modified the rigidity of his theological views. He disliked Calvinism. So did Adam Clarke and John Wesley. He despised wrangling sectarianism. So did St. Paul. As evidence that this representation is correct, see Bancroft, vol. iii, p. 142; vol. v, p. 207.

A patient and impartial examination of John Adams' Life and Works, Boston, 1856, cannot but show you that he was not a Deist. In his diary, Jan. 22, 1756, he wrote: "Suppose a nation in some distant region should take the Bible for their only law-book, and every member should regulate his conduct by the precepts there exhibited. Every member would be obliged, in conscience, to temperance and frugality and industry; to justice and kindness and charity towards his fellow men; and to piety, love, and reverence towards Almighty God. In this commonwealth no man would impair his health by gluttony, drunkenness, or lust; no man would sacrifice his most precious time at cards, or any other trifling and mean amusement; no man would steal or lie, or in any way defraud his neighbor, but would live in peace and good will with all men; no man would blaspheme his Maker or profane his worship (Works, vol. ii, pp. 6, 7). He says of Bolingbroke, whom he admired as a political writer: "His religion is a pompous, folly, and his abuse of the Christian religion is as superficial as it is impious;" "a haughty, arrogant, supercilious dogmatist" (vol. i, p. 44; vol. x, p. 82). At the age of sixty he said: "The Christian religion is, above all the religions that ever prevailed or existed in ancient or modern times, the religion of wisdom, virtue, equity, and humanity" (vol. iii, p. 421). In a letter to Benj. Rush, in 1810, he said: "The Christian religion, as I understand it, is the brightness of the glory and the express portrait of the character of the eternal, self-existent, independent, benevolent, all-powerful, and all-merciful creator, preserver, and father of the Universe, the first good, first perfect, and first fair. It will last as long as the world. Neither savage nor civilized man, without a revelation, could ever have discovered or invented it" (vol. ix, p. 627). In a letter to Jefferson, dated Dec. 25, 1813, he wrote: "I have examined all, as well as my narrow sphere, my straitened means, and my busy life would allow me; and the result is that the Bible is the best book in the world. It contains more of my little philosophy than all the libraries I have seen; and such parts of it as I cannot reconcile to my little philosophy, I postpone for future investigation" (vol. x, p. 85). Bancroft says he "invoked the blessing of heaven to make the new-born republic more glorious than any which had gone before" (vol. v, p. 312). The most that can be said of him is that he was a Unitarian of the most conservative kind (Works, vol. i, p. 621; vol. iii, p. 423; vol. x, pp. 66, 84). But he did not "deny Christianity and the truth of the Scriptures," therefore he was not an Infidel.

The thoroughly religious character of his son, John Quincy Adams, shows that he did not impart Deistical instruction. His writings abound with severe criticisms on Paine's views. This we shall show more fully hereafter.

But you have put in a special claim to Thomas Jefferson. The inquiry will naturally arise, How did Jefferson come to have the name of being an Infidel? The answer substantially is, That this story was circulated by political opponents in the campaign of 1800, and it has been kept alive ever since, mostly by those who desired it to be true. This story is about as creditable and about as credible as its contemporaneous calumny that he had a bastard by one of his slaves (Parton's Life of Jefferson, p. 669).

I will argue that Jefferson was not a Deist, in the full sense of that term, in four ways; 1. From his early training. His parents were, theoretically and practically, believers in the Christian religion. Their illustrious son was thoroughly indoctrinated in that religion. Of course, this does not prove that he continued to cherish those principles; but in the absence of positive evidence to the contrary, the presumption would be that he did.

2. An argument of some weight may be based on the man whom he admired most, and in whose learning and judgment he had the greatest confidence. I refer to Dr. Priestley. I have examined Priestley's works carefully, and especially those to which Jefferson refers with his endorsement. In those works there is not a word of denial that the Scriptures are the inspired word of God. The author argues invariably from the Bible, but never against it. He contended for what he conceived to be purely Scriptural doctrines. On reading the life of Priestley I find, moreover, that he wrote a book in defence of the Bible against the attacks of Volney and Paine. If this was the character of Priestley, the master, may we not fairly infer that that of Jefferson, the disciple, was similar to it?

3. We may certainly reason from Jefferson's own writings. He admits that he was sometimes more angry with sectaries than is authorized by the blessed charities which Jesus preached (Works, vol. vii, p. 128). This occasional "anger" may account for his occasionally rash expressions. The general tenor of his correspondence is on the side of the Christian religion. In several of his letters he complained that "libels" had been published against him (vol. iv, p. 477—Randall's Life of Jefferson, vol. iii, p. 45.) He wrote to Dr. Rush in the year 1803 that his real sentiments were very different from that anti-Christian system attributed to him by those who knew nothing of his opinions (Works, vol. iv, p. 479). In his bill for establishing religious freedom, he referred to "the holy Author of our Religion." In referring to a collection of New Testament passages which he called "Philosophy of Jesus," he said: "A more beautiful or precious morsel of ethics I have never seen; it is a document in proof that I am a real Christian" (Works, vol. vi, p. 518). He believed in future rewards and punishments (Works, vol. vii, p. 252). He spoke of the Bible as a revelation (Works, vol. iv, p. 423; vol. vii, p. 281). In a letter to Rush in 1808 he said: "To the corruptions of Christianity I am indeed opposed; but not to the genuine precepts of Jesus himself. I am a Christian in the only sense in which he wished any one to be; sincerely attached to his doctrines, in preference to all others; ascribing to him every human excellence, and believing he never claimed any other" (Works, vol. iv, p. 479). Shortly before his dissolution he said: "I resign myself to my God, and my child to my country" (Encyclopædia Britannica).

In reply to all this you will probably remind us that Jefferson disliked the Presbyterians; that he had to override some of the clergy to establish religious toleration; that he said some pretty hard things of those who seemed to have more zeal than knowledge; that he advised Peter Carr to "fix Reason firmly in her seat, and call to her tribunal every fact, every opinion"; that he made no Thanksgiving proclamations; and that he entertained Paine, and spoke well of his writings—all of which is no proof that Thomas Jefferson was an Infidel. The Presbyterians were disliked in that age by almost every other denomination. Religious toleration was advocated and established by the Revolutionary statesmen, not because they were opposed to religion, but because they wanted to give to every form of religion equal protection and equal privileges. The advice to Peter Carr was only an application of the Protestant doctrine of the "right of private judgment." No one denounced Pharisees as did the Founder of Christianity. Jefferson's refusal to proclaim Thanksgiving days was based, not on any antagonism to religion, but on his peculiar construction of the Constitution. They were not all Deists that entertained Thomas Paine occasionally. James Monroe kept him in his house in Paris for eighteen months; but it is well known that President Monroe lived and died a Christian. And almost everybody, regardless of religious belief, spoke well of Paine's political writings. Jefferson never endorsed any other.

4. There is another consideration worth mentioning. It does not appear that Jefferson and Thomas Paine ever exchanged ideas on religion. Randall says this topic did not enter into the conversation when the latter visited Monticello in 1802 (Life of Jefferson, vol. ii, p. 644). Some nine or ten of Jefferson's letters to Paine are still extant. Religion is scarcely mentioned in any of them. It cannot be said that Jefferson's silence arose from any distaste for the subject, for his letters to other friends are full of thoughts on that very theme. Is not this an incidental proof that there was no congeniality between Paine's and Jefferson's religious views?

5. But my conclusion from Jefferson's writings is by no means singular. It is substantially that of nearly all his standard biographers. Even Parton calls Adams and Jefferson "Christians" (Life of Jefferson, p. 570). The Cyclopaedia Americana and the Encyclopedia Britannica do not intimate that he was an unbeliever. The New American Cyclopaedia in 1864 said: "Discarding faith as unphilosophical, he became an Infidel." But the edition of 1874 says simply: "He carried the rule of subjecting everything to the test of abstract reason into matters of religion, venerating the moral character of Christ, but refusing belief in his divine mission," i. e., disbelieving in his divinity. Quite a modification, or rather recantation, in ten years. Tucker says: "His religious creed, as disclosed in his correspondence, cannot perhaps be classed with that of any particular sect; but he was nearer the Socinian than any other. In the last years of his life, when questioned by any of his friends on this subject, he used to say he was a Unitarian" (Life of Jefferson, London, 1837; vol. ii, p. 563). Bancroft says: "He was not only a hater of priestcraft and superstition and bigotry and intolerance, he was thought to be indifferent to religion; yet his instincts all inclined him to trace every fact to a general law, and to put faith in ideal truth; the world of the senses did not bound his aspirations, and he believed more than he was himself aware of" (vol. v, p. 323). Linn says: "However opposed Mr. Jefferson may have been to what he considered the corruptions or abuses of Christianity, yet to the spirit and precepts of the Gospel he was strongly attached; and of our Savior he was a warm and professed admirer (Life of Jefferson, Ithaca, 1839, p. 264.)

Perhaps the best Life of Jefferson is that by Henry S. Randall, LL.D. In the preparation of it the author had the approbation and assistance of Mr. Jefferson's family. He devotes the fourteenth chapter of the third volume to a discussion of Jefferson's religious belief. He denies emphatically that he was an Infidel. He shows that he wished to put a representation of the Israelites in the wilderness, led by the pillar of fire, as a device on the United States seal; that he once advocated the observance of a national fast; that he contributed largely to religious enterprises; that he attended the Episcopal church regularly, and took part in the services; that his wife was a member of that church; that his children were baptized in it; and that he himself was buried according to its rites. He was neither anti-Christian in sentiment nor unchristian in deportment. He himself denied that he was an Infidel, and claimed to be a Christian. Before it can be proven that he was an Infidel it must be shown that he was an unmitigated hypocrite.

I submit that I have proved the following points:

1. That Washington was not only a moral but a religious man.
2. That Franklin was a theoretical and practical believer in Christianity, growing in faith as he advanced in years. He was undecided respecting the divinity of Christ, but leaned to the orthodox side.
3. That Adams was an Unitarian of the Priestley and Channing type. He believed in the Bible as a divine revelation. Hence, he was not a Deist.
4. That Jefferson too was an Unitarian, but of somewhat looser views than Adams. If it is difficult to reconcile some things he said with a belief in the inspiration of the Scriptures, it is equally difficult, if not much more so, to make the preponderance of his utterances to tally with Infidelity. Take the average of what he said about religion, and you cannot but feel that it is in striking contrast with what Paine published on the same subject. If Christianity is not entitled to him without some qualifications, Infidelity cannot claim him without discrediting what he said of himself.

To Christianity, then, and not to Infidelity, belongs the credit for what Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson did for American liberty.

In my next I will endeavor to give the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, about Thomas Paine.

Very respectfully yours, G. H. HUMPHREY.

A GOOD conscience is better than two witnesses—it will consume your grief as the sun dissolves ice. It is a spring when you are weary, a screen when the sun burns, a pillow in death.

Our Florida Letter.

NO. VI.

LAKESIDE, April 22, 1877.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKER: I see by a recent T. S. that your readers are to be introduced to Florida by Prof. Churchill, a gentleman whom I have not the pleasure of knowing, but who, I doubt not, will faithfully represent this State. I am always ready to give every correspondent credit for honesty, but in writing up any peculiar country the more minute questions are often overlooked, and only the striking features represented. Only by a close study of Florida at all seasons, can one truthfully write it up. One often sees such a statement as this: "Anything can be raised in Florida." But then there is the more important fact—how many months during the year will things grow and bear?—that is entirely overlooked. It sounds fine for you to hear that we in the South are eating green peas in March and April, but then, peas in March are no better than peas in July, and we cannot, like you, have them in July. The only thing planted here in summer is the potato. We take advantage of rainy days in July, and get in a sweet potato crop, which lasts the year through. Other vegetables must be well under way before March, or by that time, to withstand the scorching rays of the sun. By August no vegetables are to be had, not even watermelons, and one nearly famishes for fruits and vegetables for the next three months. During the latter part of August we plant our winter garden, and look fondly forward to November and December, when we can be eating new potatoes, lettuce, radishes, turnips, beats, etc. This year we looked in vain, for cold came and killed our garden. And now, for the first time in a year, our table is furnished with these things. Lettuce is nearly gone. Everything matures very quickly, and there is no way of keeping things as in the North. The climate is fine, and yet, in spite of this being recommended as a certain cure for lung diseases, I found myself, a few days since, threatened with congestion of the lungs, and I never so much as had a cold on my lungs in the North. And then, oh! how we miss the cool green grass and the shade-trees of our northern country life. Everything is too bright and glaring here; one gets so tired of the eternal sunshine and sand—just as one would feel in that orthodox heaven we hear so much about. And though perhaps there may be more sudden and fatal diseases North, there is here a more constant languor and an earlier loss of vigor, and though people live, perhaps, longer, here is far less of that joyous exuberance and perfect health, than at the North. We live longer, but life is of less interest and yields less of enjoyment. I consider the quality of life of more importance than the length of it.

Most people who come to Florida have very little money, and even with courage to endure the privations of this life, I do not think the benefit at all equal to the loss of what northern life affords. But as this is only my opinion, and would not perhaps be assented to by others, there is one undeniable fact remaining:—The day has gone by when it is wise for a man to come here without means. All the good land has been taken, and is held at from $10 to $100 per acre. And it costs at least $20 per acre more to clear up and put it in working condition. But, most important of all, I think it positively cruel for delicate, refined northern women to be compelled to renounce the comforts of life and be subjected to such privations as, with means or without, must be endured here. But as we differ so much in opinions about life, perhaps very few would take this view of Florida. At all events, if people must come here, let the men come first and establish a comfortable home; the loss of the ministrations of their better halves will be good for them for a time, and will give them a higher appreciation of their wives' value, when they once more enjoy the comforts of a home. Education is in its infancy yet. The best informed people here we should consider at the North extremely ignorant. The outlay for theological teachings has been ten times as good as for practical education. And then we are so often told to notice what Christianity has done for the world. The only result I can see is, that it has produced a dwarfed and stunted growth of humanity. To be sure, now-a-days, from many pulpits great and vital principles of morality are taught. Because the advanced state of the thinking world demands it. Christianity has not led mankind—mankind has led the Church to a higher plane of thought and teaching, and many ministers are today preaching broad and liberal scientific truths.

Of course they are glossed over with much of the old cant but the truth is felt no matter what the garb it wears. The outward trappings signify little. Here where the old style, pure Bible teachings are to be found, without one ray to illumine the darkness of their literal interpretation, we see a very ignorant, bigoted and non-progressive class of people. Very few of these people can read or write. One of our original neighbors who has been a little more fortunate in this respect said not long since, that when he went to school, he could never get beyond "baker," in the spelling-book. As soon as he reached this point he was turned back, and he always thought the master was afraid the pupil would get beyond him. I have offered my services as an instructor, but my offer has met with little favor, because they have a faint idea, that I may perhaps get too far beyond "baker" among the long bad words, spelled, "liberality," "infidelity," "progression," "aspiration," and the like. We had a school opened near by, this winter, by a graduate of a Georgia college. Said pedagogy had occasion to close school for a few days, and announced the facts in the following way—"I have dispensed my school indefinitely." Shades of departed Webster! It is the same man who speaks so feelingly of his "peregrinations through this State." Poor fellow, he is pitched too high for common mortals who stand and gaze in awe and admiration.

"And still they gazed and still their wonder grew.

That one small head could carry all he knew."

The rapid influx of the Northern element is giving an impetus to education. These Southerners have considerable pride, and native wit and capacity in abundance. They only need a little more scientific training; for, as Huxley says "Science is only trained and organized common sense." There is an excellent foundation to build upon and may the work fall into competent and skilful hands. And I am sure such will never be found south of Mason and Dixon's line. Not in Georgia colleges surely.

DR. VERNON.

The Result of Believing too Much.

Any one who read the confession of John D. Lee, the notorious Mountain Meadow murderer, must acknowledge that the details of that brutal massacre are enough to make the blood of an Infidel run cold; and I presume most Christians look upon the act, as very wicked and barbarous, calling, no doubt, those priests and self-styled prophets, very wicked men. Yet, at the same time they stand up in all their manly dignity and say, "Old Moses was a great and good man." When the Mountain Meadow affair was nothing compared to the horrid barbarous and brutal murders committed by the orders of that old lying prophet in his day according to the Bible account. Neither is he alone, for there are hosts of these religious pirates who figure very conspicuously all through the old Bible, and are held up to-day by Christian ministers, and by teachers in the Sunday-schools, as exemplary men, worthy of imitation. Christian men and women pause a moment and consider what you are doing by upholding such men as Moses, Jacob, Joshua, David, Noah, Lot, and many others, of the same stamp! Just look up their history and see if you could not consistently add Brigham Young, Joseph Smith, John D. Lee, and his associates to their number without blushing. Lee believed he was doing right in the sight of God. He believed old Brigham Young told the truth when he said there had not been a drop of innocent blood shed. Now, Christians, why do you condemn him when he had just as good authority for believing as he did, as you have for believing that Moses, Elijah, and other Bible heroes were God's prophets? I pause for an answer.

A. T. M.

Dress and Hernia.

There are but few people who trace effects back to causes. It needs but a single thought to conclude that there must be a cause for every result. It may be remote, or it may be immediate, or there may be a combination of causes; but the truth is clear, that we can comprehend no result without a cause. The indolent mind is worse than the ignorant one, for the one is not satisfied to find results without enquiring the cause, while the other looks upon human miseries with about as much interest as to what produced them, as they do upon the everlasting hills. The latter class never think of a preventive, and never feel that they have any obligations to the present or future generations, as a return for advantages that past generations have left as an inheritance for them—left the same as the price of great effort, great research, scorn, hatred, malice, slander, physical abuse, and even the loss of life.

What all this prelude has to do with dress and hernia, requires but a few words to explain; and but for my recent visit to the rooms of the most successful treaters of hernia (334 Bowery, N. Y.), I would not have written upon the subject at the present moment.

My own practice has revealed to me that the great mass of women are afflicted with organic displacements and weaknesses, that can be produced by the fashionable style of woman's dress, and that the exceptions to the rule are very rarely to be met. This is true, not only in America, but over the world, where fashion prevails. Not only is this true, relating to woman's organization as women, regarded in a special sense, but the cases of hernia are numerous and fearfully on the increase among women, while among men it is beginning to be a matter of such alarm, that a preventive to hernia is being discussed by scientists, and we here predict that one and all must ere long acknowledge that we are correct in asserting that the weak condition of the viscera of the mother, caused by her stays and long dresses is inherited by her sons as well as her daughters. Man cannot interfere with the inalienable right of woman to dress comfortably and in a power-saving manner, without the penalty coming right home to man. The poor "penny-a-liners" will find the penalty of hernia visited upon their sons, for ridiculing a reform dress so persistently that young women, for fear of their ridicule, dare not dress in a manner to save their vitality and better their already weakened (by inheritance) reproductive system, while their daughters will be even worse than their sons. It does not need one deep in lore to see that a debilitated mother cannot give life to strong sons, with a power of endurance capable of resisting the immediate causes of hernia. DR. MARY E. WALKER.

GOVERN your thoughts when alone, and your tongue when in company.

ORDER is the sanity of the mind, the health of the body, and the security of the state.

If you intend to do a mean thing, wait till to-morrow. If you are to do a noble thing, do it now.

THE shallow stream rattles along its course, but when it is met and drowned by the majestic tides rolling in from the seas, there is silence on the hills. In the great tide there is the power of more than a hundred rivulets, yet its coming is almost as quiet as the celestial forces that bring it. The tide flows down and shallow grows the stream, and again the empty clattering goes on. And this is what we wish to say: that things most potent, although demonstrative, as indeed they must be from their effects; are not necessarily noisy. A strong and earnest life need not make what people are in the habit of calling a "fuss." It is better to be known by the lead that strikes than by the bang of the gun that sends it.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.
SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 5, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 20.

Great Jehovah, we have seen that the incarnation of thyself in the person of thy son Jesus was not original nor new with the Christian Church, for incarnated sons of gods were common among the pagans for a thousand years before the beginning of the Christian era.

We find too that Redeemers and Saviors of men were not at that time a new idea in the world, for at least forty saviors, real or imaginary, had existed long previous to the time when Jesus is said to have made his advent into the world.

We also find that he was far from being the first that was sacrificed as an atonement, or as a propitiation, for the sins of the world; that he was not by any means the first one of the sons of the gods who was put to death upon the cross for the benefit of the world of humanity, for there were nearly a score of these semi-deities, or sons of gods, who were said to have been crucified centuries before the name of Jesus was heard of on the earth.

We have seen, too, that the Trinity and the existence of the Holy Ghost did not originate among Christians, for the pagans had held to the same hundreds of years before the Christians appropriated these dogmas to make up their own creed.

These being absolute and positive truths—and if they are not we implore thee to now speak and let us know the fact, or to take some means, at a very early date, to let us and the world at large know the real truth—these being the facts, we say, are we not fully justified in continuing our examinations and inquiries to learn, if possible, what there is in the Christian religion that is original and peculiar to it, and was not borrowed or pilfered from the old pagan systems?

Canst thou have any objection to our learning the full truth pertaining to these things? and canst thou feel the least unwillingness to have us give our attention to these subjects, and to obtain all the light that is to be had in this direction?

As, then, crucifixions and demi-gods were resorted to many centuries before Jesus is said to have been crucified, was not the Cross, as a symbol of holiness, used by different nations fully a thousand years before Christians adopted it?

Was not the cross used as a religious symbol by the ancient pagans of India, Persia, Thibet, Egypt, Arabia, Greece, and many other countries, ages before the dawn of Christianity?

Is there any religious symbol that has descended from the early faiths of the world more confirmed and more positively demonstrated than this symbol of the cross?

Did not several of the apostolic and Christian fathers admit in their writings the great use that had been made of the cross, previous to the existence of Christianity, in the various pagan religions of the world.

Did not Justin Martyr, born near the close of the first century, admit that the worshipers of Mithra, the Persian mediator, had the sign of the cross affixed to their foreheads as a badge of divinity, and this nearly a thousand years before Christians used the symbol?

In an apology addressed to Antonius Pius, did not this early father say, "If, then we hold some opinions near akin to the poets and philosophers in most repute among you, why are we thus unjustly hated? For in saying that all things were made in this beautiful manner by God, what do we seem to say more than Plato? When we teach a general conflagration, what do we teach more than the Stoics? By opposing the work of men's hands we concur with Menander the comedian; and by declaring the Logos, the first begotten of God, to be born of a virgin, without any human mixture, to be crucified and dead, and to have risen again, and ascended into heaven, we say no more in this than what you say of those whom you style the Sons of Jove. For you need not be told what number of sons the writers most in vogue among you assign to Jove. There is Mercury, Jove's interpreter, in imitation of the Logos, in worship among you. There is Æsculapius the physician, smitten by a thunderbolt, and after that ascending into heaven. There is Bacchus torn to pieces, and Hercules burned to get rid of his pains. There are Castor and Pollux, the sons of Jove by Leda and Perseus by Danaë, not to mention others. I fain would know why you always deify departed emperors, and have a fellow at hand to make affidavit that he saw Cæsar ascend into heaven from the funeral pile. As to the Son of God called Jesus, should we allow him to be no more than man, yet the title of 'Son of God' is very justifiable on account of his wisdom, considering you have your Mercury in worship under the title of 'the Word and Messenger of God.' As to the objection of our Jesus being crucified, I will say that suffering was common to all the aforementioned sons of Jove, but only they suffered another kind of death. As to his being born of a virgin, you have your Perseus to balance that; as to his curing the lame, the paralytic, and such as were cripple from their birth, this is little more than what is said of your Æsculapius?"

Did not Tertullian, born in the second century, admit, in an apology he wrote, the previous existence among the pagans of Christian doctrines, Christian rites and symbols, including the cross?

Did not Melito, Bishop of Sardis in Lybia, in the second century, in an apology addressed to Marcus Antoninus, say: "The philosophy which we possess truly flourished aforetime, but having blossomed again in the great reign of Cæsar Augustus, thy ancestor, it proved to be, above all things, ominous of good for thy kingdom?"

Did not Origen, also born in the second century, admit the earlier use of the rites and symbols of the Church?

Did not Minutius Felix, in his Octavius, written A. D. 211, write these words, "I must tell you that we neither adore the crosses, nor deride them; you it is, ye pagans, who are most likely to worship wooden crosses, as being parts of the same substance with your deities. For what else are your ensigns, flags, and standards? Your victories not only represent a simple cross but a cross with a man on it. Thus you see that the sign of the cross has either some foundation in nature or in your own religion, and therefore ought not to be considered an objection against Christians?"

Are here not direct Christian admissions in the very infancy of the Church that the sign of the cross had long before been used as a sacred symbol by the pagan nations?

Did not Shelton, in his Appeal, say: "How it came to pass that the Egyptians, Arabians, and Indians, before the time of Christ, paid such a remarkable veneration to the sign of the cross, is to me unknown; but the fact is known; and in Egypt it stood for the sign of eternal life?"

Did not Dr. Oliver (Hist. of Init.) say: "The Christian reader may start when he beholds the sacred emblem of his faith, and as a symbol of heathen devotion, but it is even so. . . It is found engraven on their monuments, and the erection of their temples was conducted on the same cruciform principle. The two great pagodas of Benares and Matthura were erected in the form of vast crosses?"

Did not a recent writer in the Edinburgh Review say thus: "From the dawn of organized paganism in the Eastern world to the final establishment of Christianity in the Western, the cross was undoubtedly one of the commonest and most sacred symbolical monuments; and to a remarkable extent is so still in almost every land where that of Calvary is unrecognized or unknown. It appears to have been the original possession of every people of antiquity?"

Did not the Christian writer, Georgius (Antoine Aguste), in his "Tibitium Alphabetum," give plates of the god, Indra, nailed to a cross, with five wounds; which crosses are to be seen in Nepal at the corners of roads and on eminences?

Do not, we repeat, the admissions of these and many other Christian writers abundantly prove that the cross was extensively used as a religious symbol by pagans ages before the believers in Christ adopted it?

Was not the cross used by the ancient Scandinavians and the Celtic Druids long anterior to the Christian religion?

When Cortez and Pizarro conquered Mexico and Peru, did they not find the cross engraved upon the walls and pillars of the temples, showing that on the Western continent as well as on the Eastern, the symbol of the cross had been used from time immemorial?

Cannot even the symbol of the cross be traced as far back into antiquity as the Phallic worship? Was not the cross originally used to represent the god Phallus, the male organ of generation? And is it not true that in the Phallic worship was the origin of many of the religions which subsequently ruled in the pagan and Christian world?

Was not the symbol of the cross which thus originated in the sexual worship of the extreme ancients the representation of life, vigor, and regeneration, and in that view was not the symbol an object of worship and veneration for thousands of years?

Do we not then, when we see the symbol of the cross which Christians view with such a feeling of sacred devotion, have the best of reasons for regarding it as having a wholly pagan origin, and can we not see in it a relic of the superstitions and fallacies that have ruled in the world for thousands of years?

Is it not far more truly a symbol of paganism and superstition than it is of light, truth, and progress?

Does it not also argue a great want of originality and invention in the Christians for the past two thousand years to be thus under the necessity of taking up the cast-off clothing and symbols of antique pagan religions, rather than to get up something new and original?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

What I Don't Believe.—No. 28.

247. I do not believe that there is a close agreement between the narrative given in Exodus xxxiii, 11, about Moses talking with God "face to face, as a man speaketh with his friend," and the statement made in the 20th verse of the same chapter, "Thou canst not see my face; for there shall no man see me and live." If the last quotation is true, the first one must be false.

248. I do not believe that if it was impossible for Moses to see the face or front part of God and live that there would be any more safety in seeing his "back parts." It is highly probable that one side would be about as dangerous as the other. On a previous occasion (Ex. xxiv, 9, 10,) the statement was made that Moses and Aaron, Nadab Abihu, and seventy of the Elders, saw God and the paved work of sapphire-stone under his feet, and though so many of them saw him clearly, he did not even lay his hand upon them to hurt them. Those assertions about seeing God and not seeing him are too contradictory to be reconciled.

249. I do not think that Moses exhibited a very meek and patient frame of mind (albeit he has been called the meekest man that ever lived) on the occasion of the rebellion of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, when his anger became so great that he fell in a kind of fit to the earth. It seems that, so far from getting over his rage, he was still filled with wrath. It is very evident that he could not regard with any patience a dispute of his authority, and, like a fallible temporal king or governor, he was moved by fierce anger when his right to rule was questioned. It seems, however, that after a short parley with God, the latter took up on the side of Moses, and the ground separated and swallowed the three rebel conspirators and all who adhered to them, some two hundred and fifty in number. This story is very easy for the faithful to believe, and it matters little to them whether I believe it or not.

250. It seems to have been most unfortunate for God and Moses to have both lost their temper at the same time, for then the poor Israelites were bound to suffer. When Moses preserved an equable frame of mind, it mattered but little how angry God became, for Moses could easily pacify him and get him in good humor by arguing the case with him a few minutes. Moses had a very persuasive, soothing style which God could not easily withstand, and in nearly all cases he was persuaded to do as Moses wished. But when this rebellion against the authority of Moses took place he did not feel like holding God back, for it came too near home for him to maintain a placid frame of mind, and he did not try to keep the Lord from being rash when on the next day some fifteen thousand of the people were destroyed in a short time.

The killing of the poor Israelites was going on swimmingly, and it cannot be told now how many scores of thousands would have been destroyed had not Moses' better nature finally got the control. He saw that the Lord was very ferocious and yielding himself to his murderous disposition was killing off his chosen people by wholesale, and to checkmate this killing business which God was conducting so recklessly, Moses kindly took steps to counteract it. He sent Aaron in among the congregation with a censer containing incense and fire and ordered him to swing it among the people so that God might get a sniff of the burning odors. By this simple device the plague was stayed; the anger of the Lord was appeased, and large numbers of lives were saved. The destruction of life on that occasion might have reached fifty to seventy-five thousand as it did on other occasions when the Lord got angry at some trivial affair had not Moses directed the incense to be burned. How great a destruction of life a little prudence on Moses' part thus prevented, if this story can be fully credited! But it is hard to believe.

251. I do not think it was kind or brotherly in Moses to strike his sister Miriam with the curse of leprosy because she did not approve of his taking a colored African woman for a wife. I know I would not serve a sister that way and I do not begin to make the pretensions to piety and saintliness that Moses did.

252. I do not think that Moses exhibited an affectionate brotherly spirit in his treatment of his brother Aaron at the time of the latter's death. The old man was taken up on Mount Hor and was stripped of his clothing, and in that condition was left without food or the little comforts that a dying man would require, and was left to die at his leisure, unattended and alone. The old priest had mainly been faithful, and, with the exception of a slight disposition to rebel on a certain occasion, his career through life was not censured. For that one incident, however, he was cruelly turned out to die. A truly hard case. The Bible says the Lord commanded this course to be pursued; but I cannot believe it.

These were all taken to the tyrant, Moses, and when he saw that the wives and mothers had been spared he was extremely angry, and commanded them to be put to death at once, and ordered that none be spared alive save those who had never lain with men. It is enough to make the blood of the most hard-hearted person run cold to contemplate the order which Moses gave: "Kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him; but all the women children that have not known a man by lying with him keep alive for yourselves" (Num. xxxi, 17, 18). It is not told how the assassins decided which to kill and which to keep alive, but 32,000 young girls were saved for the use of the bloody and lustful murderers, while probably 50,000 mothers and male infants were fiendishly killed. O, what a shocking cruelty and outrage! Has this world ever heard of the like on any other occasion? Think of the fate of those 32,000 girls; after seeing their fathers, mothers, and brothers killed before their eyes, then to be turned over to gratify the sensual lust of the murderers! Did the wild Indians of North America ever do anything so horrible as that? And does it make the case any better to say that the God of heaven ordered it to be done? I think not. It was at best a villainous, robbing, and murderous enterprise. This, too, was after Moses had got to be a very old man, and when he ought to have been a much better individual.

253. I never shall think that Moses acted the part of a kind-hearted, humane man in his treatment of the Midianites. He married Zipporah, a daughter of Midian, for a wife. He spent about fifty years in Midian, with his father-in-law, Jethro, a priest of Midian, tending his flocks, studying Midianitish theology, etc., and then, under the frivolous pretext that the Israelitish men were being tempted by the Midianitish women, he waged against the peaceful agriculturists of Midian the most cruel, bloody, and relentless war that the world has ever known. Why, he sent over to Midian twelve thousand bloodthirsty assassins who murdered in cold blood the five kings of Midian and every male in the kingdom, from the gray-headed centenarian to the youngest babe on its mother's breast. All the cities and goodly castles were burnt to the ground and the women were taken captive. The booty of which the country was robbed consisted in part of 675,000 sheep 72,000 beef cattle, 61,000 asses, and probably nearly 100,000 women and children, to say nothing of jewelry, ornaments, etc., etc.

254. Moses died in the land of Moab at the ripe age of one hundred and twenty years. The Bible says the Lord buried him in one of the valleys of the country over against Beth-peor, and no man ever knew where his grave was located. The faithful can easily believe that God dug a grave and buried him, but I cannot. Josephus says a cloud came over him suddenly and he disappeared, possibly taken up into heaven as Elijah was afterwards taken, but the probability of such a finale to such a life is extremely diaphanous. It is said, again, that the devil contended with the archangel Michael about the body of Moses, but is not stated which was victorious in the contest, though it would seem it ought to be the former.

255. Many of the incidents in the cruel and tyrannical career of Moses must be passed over in silence; but enough has been considered to clearly show that though he was the priest and lawgiver of a numerous people, said to be specially chosen of God, he was a hard-hearted, exacting, malicious, relentless, revengeful, murderous, blood-thirsty tyrant. Many of the laws he established were unjust, oppressive, barbarous, and calculated to have a deleterious effect upon a people who accepted them. If he was the meekest, mildest and best man that the earth has produced, the Bible story does him great injustice.

256. The most pleasant feature to contemplate in the story of Moses is the great probability that there never was such a character, and that he was made up from Menu of India, Menes of Egypt, and Minos of Greece, who date farther back into antiquity than Moses. He was a lawgiver as well as they, a leader as well as they, and it is a very presumable case that his history was in part made up of theirs, or the original one at all events. One thing is not a little curious: the name of Moses is not once mentioned by the old prophets. If such a man had existed, it would seem they should have alluded to him.

The first four books in the Bible are usually attributed to Moses, but there are no grounds for the claim; there is no proof that the law, or any part of the Pentateuch, had an existence until Hilkiah, the priest, pretended to have found the Law of the Lord in the temple some six hundred and forty years before the Christian era, and more than a thousand years after Moses was supposed to have left Egypt. This is the first time it was pretended that the law was known among the Hebrews, and this was afterwards lost while the Jews were in captivity in Babylon. When, after seventy years of bondage, they returned to their native country, they had neither a written law nor a written history. These they felt the need of. Prior to the captivity the Jewish people had mainly been a semi-barbarous, warlike, marauding tribe or tribes, and they realized the need of a history running back hundreds of years. Under this impulse Ezra and his seventy scribes wrote up the principal part of the books constituting the Old Testament, using as a basis the Chaldean cosmogony, which they had learned during their captivity. Then it was that the characters of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and his twelve sons, Moses, Aaron, Joshua, Samson, Saul, David, Solomon, and hosts of others were written up for the first time, and who never had any other existence save in the fertile brains of their inventors, Ezra and his seventy scribes. It can be easily understood how seventy smart writers with active imaginations could in a few months write up such a series of books as constitute the Old Testament. It would require no superhuman ability. By drawing upon the cosmogony of the Chaldeans, the literature of India and Egypt, and their own traditions and legends, it could easily have been done, and that the old Scriptures were so made up is now the opinion of many learned men who have given close attention to the subject.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

W. S. BELL called upon us on the 1st inst. on his return from the Liberal Convention in Toronto and a tour in Pennsylvania and Ohio. He makes a favorable report of the progress of Freethought in the various localities he has visited, and the zeal which is evinced by our friends in many places. He had the pleasure of organizing several Liberal Leagues, and found Liberals favorably disposed to coöperate and work effectually together. He has delivered lectures in the several places visited, and by the letters received from friends where he has been it seems he has given excellent satisfaction. We had an interesting letter from him describing a portion of his tour, but it has got mislaid, so we are unable to lay it before our readers in this issue. Bro. Bell is a pleasant and effective speaker and a genial friend; he should be kept actively in the field.

B. F. UNDEWOOD AND REV. CLARK BRADEN.—The debate between these two gentlemen at Denver, Col., which is to be continued two or three weeks, commenced the evening of April 23d and is attracting not a little attention. We have received the daily papers of that city containing very satisfactory abstracts of the debate which we would like to lay before our readers had we the room. From these reports our champion is decidedly getting the better of his antagonist. It is not difficult for a contestant to win when he uses the weapons of truth. Those are the weapons which Mr. Underwood ably wields.

"Come to Jesus."

We received the following from some young friends with whom we were acquainted in our former Illinois home:—

PARIS, ILL.
DEAR DR. BENNETT: There has been a great revival here the past winter. Many of the young people have been converted to the cause of Christ—among them ourselves—and we also want you to become a child of God. We want our Savior to be your Savior too. We are praying for your salvation, and we believe our prayers will be answered, and that God, for Jesus' sake, will convert you. Please write us when our prayers are answered. Your friends,
CHAS. ELY. H. A. McCORD.
C. GEORGEAN. GEORGE BECK.
MARION MEYER.

REPLY—Fearing it may be some time before these prayers may be answered according to the desire of the young friends making them, we will take the opportunity to say a few words now.

Believing our friends to be quite sincere from the standpoint they occupy, we, of course, feel grateful to them for their kind desires in our behalf. If they have really found a valuable prize, it is generous in them to be willing to share it with us. As they doubtless think the prayers of many individuals are more effective in producing an influence upon the invisible power than the efforts of one or two merely, for the encouragement of our young friends we will say that they are having help in their labor of love. Kind friends in this city and other parts of the country are co-operating with them in prayer to God and Jesus that we may be converted to Christianity. It is, perhaps, hard to say what the result might be of so many earnest souls uniting in a single purpose, were it not counteracted by the efforts of a still greater number of equally pious Christians who are quite as earnestly praying that we may be cursed, that God would send his vengeance upon us, and even smite us with death. They do not ask that we may be brought to Jesus, but rather that we may be hastened to the Devil. Now, between these contradictory prayers we are left without any apparent result; the opposite prayers so nearly neutralize each other that we perceive the effects of neither, and are left to pursue the even tenor of our way, to quietly carry out the good work we have begun without any special "let or hindrance" from either God or the Devil.

We think we appreciate the zeal and earnestness of our young friends. They are passing through a phase of impulsive fervor and religious excitement which we ourselves passed through nearly forty years ago.

We have had considerably more experience than our young friends. They have scarcely reached their majority, while we some time ago passed the fiftieth milestone. We were where they now are more than a generation ago. We "found Jesus" long before our Paris friends were born, or thought we did, and for twelve or fifteen years we were prayerful, hopeful, and pious. We really accepted and believed what we afterwards regarded as erroneous. This was not because we lapsed into immoral practices but because our mind evolved, advanced, and took a higher and a truer range of thought.

We perceive how it is; a kind of a Moody man has been out to Paris the past winter, and by dint of loud talking, loud singing, pious intonations, and earnest exhortations, mingled with a certain magnetic influence, working upon the impulses, fears, and affections of those young people, they have been led to believe that they were fearfully lost from God, and then by certain manipulations and influences they have been made to imagine that they had found forgiveness and that Jesus had taken possession of their souls. They feel now, comparatively, as though they were in heaven, while the mass of mankind are pursuing the downward road to hell. In this business their ignorance, their inexperience, and their imaginations have been played upon instead of their reason being enlightened or their knowledge increased. An error has been held up to them and made to appear as truth. They have first been induced to believe that they were lost from God, that his wrath was almost hopelessly kindled against them, that the Devil held a first mortgage upon them which was about to be foreclosed, and then suddenly they were made to believe that the debt had been paid by another, and their damning score most kindly wiped out. Both forms of belief were erroneous. God was neither angry at them, nor were they lost from him. It is impossible to be lost from him, and he never gets angry at any human being. Neither can a person be so forgiven for any immoral deeds that he has committed that it will be the same as though never performed. When a deed is once committed it must stand as an accomplished fact, and no forgiveness can change it. If we violate the laws of health or temperance, no forgiveness on the part of any being can undo it. Pardon cannot wipe it away; and so it is with the violations of all other laws. We must inevitably pay the penalty for every infraction of nature's laws—and the blood of gods, demi-gods, or demons, cannot change it. The principle, too, of gaining happiness by the merits of another individual is a most unjust and fallacious one. We must win justification and happiness by our own efforts and exertions or we will never obtain them. We cannot be condemned by another's bad conduct nor justified by another's good conduct, though that person be the son of a god.

Every cause must produce its legitimate results, and faith in all the priests and all the dogmas in the world cannot change this principle, this great moral law. Guilt and innocence are not negotiable; they are not transferable.

We have not the slightest doubt of the sincerity and earnestness of our young friends. They have the same kind of sincerity and zeal that is felt by the Buddhist, the Mohammedan, the Mormon and the worshiper of Mumbo Jumbo. They are all impelled by an honest fervor which they think is the "divine afflatus," or the conviction of truth, and perhaps they are equally entitled to our sympathy and commiseration. If half-a-dozen of the devout worshipers of Mumbo Jumbo should send us a message from the coast of Africa that they were earnestly praying to their god that we might embrace their faith, that their god might be our god, while we must feel a certain degree of gratitude for their personal anxiety and good will, and while we could not help respecting their sincerity, we should, nevertheless, regret that they were so far in the darkness of error, as to revere a blighting superstition, to worship an absolute monstrosity, and to embrace a creed positively degrading and darkening to their better intellectual qualities.

The churches at Paris have, perhaps, been fortunate in drawing in so many young people, a certain percentage of whom they will, perchance, retain under their influence. Various arts and agencies are brought to bear to recruit the wasting numbers of the churches which occur from death and desertion. New soldiers must be brought into the ranks, or their numbers must become decimated, and finally the churches will die a natural death. To prevent this—to raise up additional supporters of the system—those who will pay the priests, and for the splendid churches, the cushions in the pews, and all the numerous etceteras, new recruits are absolutely necessary. Young men and young women must be persuaded and cajoled to come into the service. The preachers must be paid, or their preaching and praying will stop. No fact is more patent than that they preach for the sake of the money that is paid them. If the pay is cut off, poor souls may go to hell for anything they will do to prevent it. No pay, no preach, is a principle which nearly all preachers act upon. It takes $200,000,000 annually to pay the preachers of this country alone, adding other contingent expenses, and unless new members are obtained, in a few years this revenue, or this taxation, will, of course, not be forthcoming. Then what will the poor preachers do? Perhaps they will be compelled to go to work, like honest men, and produce something, or manufacture something!—occupations far more useful than holding out for the acceptance of the young the antiquated and worn-out superstitions and absurdities of thousands of years ago.

This being the case, every winter the Moodys are set at work to sound the alarm, and, unfortunately, large numbers of simple, but well-meaning, young men and women and middle-aged people are induced to add their names to God's elect, who are for millions of ages to stand around the throne of God and sing the endless song of Moses and the Lamb, while their unfortunate fellow beings are to hopelessly suffer the endless torments of hell!

We must say in all candor that we do not feel anxious to join that band. We prefer to cast our lot with men and women of intelligence who believe in Nature's laws, and who do not believe God to be a vindictive tyrant who created countless millions of fallible human beings to be tortured in the burning flames of damnation for interminable ages, and who devised the death of his own beloved son, that he might be able to pardon a moiety of the great human family, and allow them to behold the plains of Paradise, for no good actions of their own, but simply for having faith in a person said to have lived nearly nineteen hundred years ago.

We regard all this as a lamentable error, and believe it would be far better for these young friends of ours to inform themselves of the truths of science and reason, instead of filling their minds with the myths, fables, and superstitions of the dark ages of the past. We doubt not that ultimately a portion of our young Paris friends will see the mistake they have made, and will decide to be followers of substantial truth instead of mysticisms and traditions. They will have to unlearn the errors to which they are now yielding assent before they can be the children of truth, light, and knowledge. We shall continue to hope that they may see the errors they are now making, and decide to lead virtuous lives, without giving their hard earnings to support an idle, useless priesthood, and to darkening, dwarfing creeds and superstitions. In the meantime, should their prayers by any chance produce the effect upon us which they desire, we will promptly inform them of the fact.

REAL glory springs from the silent conquest of ourselves.

PASSIONS are like floods and streams; the shallow murmur, but the deep are dumb.

HOW TO SUCCEED.—If your seat is too hard to sit upon, stand up. If a rock rises up before you, roll it away or climb over it. If you want money, earn it. If you wish for confidence, prove yourself worthy of it. It takes longer to skin an elephant than a mouse, but the skin is worth something. Do not be content with what another has done—surpass it. Deserve success, and it will come. The boy was not born a man. The sun does not rise like a rocket, or go down like a bullet fired from a gun; slowly but surely it makes its round and never tires. It is as easy to be a leader as a wheel-horse. If the job be long, the pay will be greater; if the task be hard, the more competent you must be to do it.

Science Hall.

The lecture last Sunday evening before the Society of Humanity was delivered by Dr. E. G. Holland. His theme was Zoroaster.

The lecture was very instructive, and contained much valuable information in relation to not only this famous religious reformer, but of the system with which his name is connected, as is that of Christ with the less ancient Christian system.

We regret that the pressure on our columns this week will not permit of a more lengthy notice, which so able and instructive a lecture merits.

From Hull's Crucible.

TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS, upon a variety of subjects, by different authors. Vol. IV. D. M. Bennett's Liberal and Scientific Publishing House, 141 Eighth st., New York, 1877.

It is to be doubted whether any publisher in the field is doing more good than D. M. Bennett. He takes the proper method to get liberal thought before the greatest number of people. He first secures good, lively, pithy writers to write for his paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER; then he selects the best matter out of his paper, from week to week, and makes it up into book pages, and stereotypes it, and issues it in tract form. When he issues tracts enough, on different subjects, to make a book of about 500 pages, he binds them together in book form.

It is seldom anything is issued more readable than these tracts, especially the volume before us. Among the authors who have contributed to the present volume are D. M. Bennett, W. E. Coleman, John Syphers, A. G. Humphrey, M. D., Rev. John P. Hopps, B. F. Underwood, Mrs. E. D. Slenker, Charles Stephenson, Otter Cordates, Dr. D. Arter, Hudson Tuttle, Wm. Cooper, W. S. Bell, Selota, R. G. Ingersoll, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Prof. John Fiske, Prof. Thomas H. Huxley. The subjects treated include almost every subject of interest, from Moody and revivals to the unseen world and evolution.

When this Old Earth is Righted.

I searched the volume of my heart,
I spread its purple lids apart.
Its leaves, with inspiration's art,
And prophecy indited;
Entranced with trope and mystic rhyme,
I caught the symphony sublime.
The prelude of the coming time—
I saw the old earth righted.

Thou shalt lay cross and burden down,
Humanity, and take thy crown,
The bride of Heaven in lily gown,
With every wrong requited;
Enthroned for thy achievement vast,
With each ideal of the past
One grand reality at last,
When this old earth is righted.

The nations shall not then as now,
The cause of righteousness avow,
With "Ego" written on the brow;
But each to each united,
Shall wear the badge of sacrifice,
And drop the hypocrite's disguise,
And face high Heaven with honest eyes,
When this old earth is righted.

No more before Redemption's gate,
Stumbling at prejudice and hate,
America shall hesitate,
To Liberty half-plighted;
For truths that loosely lie apart,
Shall be inwrought into the heart
By Reason's skill and Wisdom's art,
When this old earth is righted.

And Freedom's march no more shall pause,
At God Almighty's broken laws;
The full requirements of her cause
Shall never more be slighted;
Nor civic strategy elude
Equality and brotherhood;
And Justice shall pronounce it good,
When this old earth is righted.

And woman's life no more shall be
The play-ground of hypocrisy,
But earnest, natural and free;
And Love shall stay unfrighted,
And reign in sacred, sweet content,
And offer service reverent;
For marriage shall be sacrament
When this old earth is righted.

Then urge the tardy courser, Time!
We watch to hail the blessed prime.
We listen for the morning chime
That heralds the long-plighted:
Humanity and the Divine
Shall wed at Nature's sacred shrine,
Completing Infinite design,
When this old earth is righted.

—Augusta Cooper Bristol.

When Will our Earth be Righted?

[A COUNTERPART TO THE ABOVE.]

This prophet of the yearning heart,
Did to my faith new life impart.
When she with inspiration's art
Her prophecy indited.
My own, though hope's prophetic strain,
It often uttered, now again,
Congealed before the sad refrain—
When will our earth be righted?

Unnumbered millions, all around,
From every land sent forth the sound,
While struggling with a grief profound,
And heart-strings nearly blighted:—
When will oppression's day have past,
And love, and toil, secure at last
A just return for labor vast,—
When will our earth be righted?

And, woman, joined the bitter wail
Which sounded over hill and dale,
Where morals false the sex impale,
And slaughter all the blighted:—
When shall our womanhood be free
From Pharisaeic slavery,
Nor longer need Hypocrisy,
When will our earth be righted?

And when I sought to well inspire
Their souls with confidence, and fire
To strike for right and never tire,
I found them disunited—
That Greed, with cunning craft and lies,
Divided them for sacrifice:
Who could but cry with tearful eyes,—
When will our earth be righted?

The opening gleams of morning light,
Of which my soul had caught a sight,
Seemed yielding to the gloom of night:
And seeing thus benighted,
Enslaved, the masses helpless lie,
I could but heave a bitter sigh,
And join the half-despairing cry—
When will our earth be righted?

Then on my heart, like showers of rain
Upon a dried and parching plain,
Her words prophetic, woke again,
Reviving life, clear-sighted:
I saw the growing discontent,
Its waking energy, unspent,
Which more and more its powers will vent,
Until our earth is righted.

I saw, when all shall come to see,
The "sins" they mourn, are really
Their nature's strife their souls to free—
When all the loves, unfrighted,
See needs are rights, they will combine.
And all at "Nature's sacred shrine,"
In freedom, "wed with the Divine,"
And earth will then be righted.

—Caleb S. Weeks.

Man's Evolution.

INSPIRED BY THE "FINE OLD ENGLISH GENTLEMAN."

There was a time, devoid of life, devoid of sense or motion,
When nothing stirred—no leaf, no bird, no fish,
no ocean—
Yet, somehow or other, things mixing together, atoms went into spasms and brought forth protoplasm.

Then sprouted, too, the monkey-man
Of the old silurian time.

For "cellulose growth" a-working put "to" upon a "pro,"
And "to," and "pro" together combined into
"proto."

Then "proto" with its gaping mouth takes root upon a "plasm,"
And altogether added up somehow turned pro-toplasm.

Into the fine old ancient gentleman
Of the ante-diluvian time.

His brow was low, his fur was long, his claws had grip of steel,
He roared at megathiriums with uncouth grunt
and squeal;

He walked erect or ran about as pleased him,
on all fours,
And never a house had he in his life, but lived
all the time out of doors—

Did this fine old active gentleman
Of those queer silurian times.

"Twixt him and his spouse there used to be rows

Which frightened strange beasts to their lairs;
For he'd bang her about with howl and with shout, and pull out her bristly hairs,
And chase her down caves and up into trees,
and "paste her delicate snoot."

Thus woman oppressed had her rights first suppressed
By mere physical strength of this brute,
This fine old furry gentleman
Of disorderly imocene time.

Wider his range of appetite the faster he progressed,

He shed his fur, grew tender-skinned, in other skins then dressed,
Cut by sharp flint, he took the hint, and made him knives and spears,

With which he stabbed his fellow-man and skinned the fallen deer.
Unlucky once upon a chase he saw a timid rabbit

Pounced on by wolf, but he was there exact in time to grab it.

And here we see he got an "idee," for the wolf
he trained to hunt.
And ever since of sportsman's toll the hound has borne the brunt.

Countless cycles passed away, and then electric flashes,
Consuming woods and game at once, roast meat
laid in the ashes.

Which smelling around he finally found, and hungry he did eat;
It tasted good, 'twas understood henceforth that roasted meat

Would suit prehensile gentlemen
Of the post-pliocene time.

The more front brain he grew the more then he knew, and kept on developing gumption;
Off changing his place, his wits grew apace, and with them his demand for consumption.
So to lighten his labors he stole from his neighbors,

And the pith of the joke is.

He called all his tricks his
Lawful, correct, and legitimate bizniz!
Did this greatly developed gorilla
Evolved from pliocene times.

'Tis only a few thousand years since he learned to read and write,
And post his recent history up, as he thinks correct and right.

And fast his angry tongue will wag and loud his bitter wail,
When he told of his progenitors, who by wholesale were re-tailed—

Such a vain, conceited gentleman
Is he of modern times.

His knowledge now is vast and deep of germs and protoplasm.

Of cosmics here and and psychics there, ozones
and microcosms.

His science, many syllabled, it strikes one with a thud,

And makes eternal mysteries, as ever—clear as mud!

To the fine old rudimentless man
Of the present high old times.

PRENTICE MULFORD.

Friendly Correspondence.

J. A. STEVENS, Bangor, Me., writes: I admire
THE TRUTH SEEKER for its bold, outspoken manner in denouncing the many errors of superstition and ignorance, and I hope to see the time when people will love to do right from principle, and not from any fear of an angry
God or the tortures of an orthodox hell. Now whatever of honor, truth, and virtue there is in me is founded on justice and in the belief of an unchangeable God, and in living in perfect obedience to the laws of nature.

DAVID CARWALHO, Quincy, Ill., writes: Enclosed please find eight dollars, two dollars for THE TRUTH SEEKER, three dollars for a copy of the "Sages," and three dollars for a copy of Lord Amberley's book. I feel as though I could not get along without your paper, and hope you may get a great number of new subscribers.
Your paper proclaims that great truth to which every liberal-minded man will cling. Although we are in the nineteenth century we find to-day among our priests and ministers thousands who, had they the power, would inflict torture and the thumbscrew. Thanks to our noble founders, we have truth and science to teach us true love and righteousness, and we should teach it in our schools and to our children. I for one do not allow my children to attend church. I do not profess to teach them, or have others teach them, what I myself do not believe in, and know that I would lead them the wrong way, like millions of our poor fellow creatures who are led by our priests and ministers of each of the various creeds.

JAMES BEDEL, Hudson, Mich., writes: The voice of the old Spanish Inquisition is heard in the land. The Odd Fellows of Hudson Lodge
No 26, I. O. O. F., are now trying James Bedel in their lodge, of which he is a member, on a charge of infidelity; Willard Stearns of Adrian for defendant, and Dexter Gray of Hudson counsel for the prosecution; G. L. White and Hiram Mann, complainants. This trial, no doubt, will be carried to the Grand Lodge of the State of Michigan. This trial will show in conclusion whether the lodge is secular or sectarian. This exhibition of the spirit of Torquemada is, no doubt, an outgrowth of a religious revival held in this place for four weeks. I will send you a paper, The Hudson Post, and will call your attention to a village ordinance just passed, which is a continuance of religious intolerance, superstition, and bigotry. The orthodox part of the community are venting all their rage on me, because I am the prime mover, and organizer of a splendid Liberal League of which notice is given in the paper I send you.

WILLIAM CAIN, Owen Sound, Ont., writes: I write to inform of the progress of Freethought in this place lately. We had billed the town for two lectures by Prof. B. F. Underwood, but his Denver engagement preventing him from coming, Mr. W. S. Bell filled the engagement for one evening. It was the first stand made in this place by Freethinkers, and made considerable "rattling among the dry-bones" in the pious circle of the town. Unfortunately the weather was thoroughly wet, so that we had scarcely as large an audience as we would have liked, but about two hundred and fifty were present, and gave a very quiet and particularly attentive hearing to the lecture. But the majority were sadly disappointed, as they fully expected to hear a perfect hurricane of abuse against their peculiar beliefs, and instead of that they heard a quiet, gentlemanly lecture, well delivered and each point well put home. It was so different from what their experience of religious lectures led them to expect; so un-parsonlike.
After the lecture a few of us gathered together and had a social time, and organized a Liberal Association; and I hope to be able to keep you informed as to our progress in the future. Of course, we have an immense amount of opposition to encounter, both publicly and socially, but I guess that we can stand it, though. Now that the ice is broken, we will be having Mr.
Underwood up as soon as he returns from the West, and I guess we can give the religious world here something to talk about then.

LEROY GATES, Kilbourne City, Wis., writes:
Inclosed is one dollar, for which send me such an assortment of Tracts and Leaflets as will be most effective in opening the eyes of and giving encouragement to some who have been kept in a half-fogged mental condition by the protracted revivals being held here. THE TRUTH SEEKERS that I have distributed in this town are yielding fruit. The wrath of Jehovah is upon me for the crime of opening people's eyes, and I must surely go to perdition. I cannot go to town without being forced into a discussion, and a large crowd is sure to gather round. Men are becoming changed rapidly.
Deacon Snode begged me not to tamper with those about to acknowledge "Jesus our Savior crucified," or hell would surely be my portion.
By the way, I will relate a little incident resulting from the distribution of your publications, and omit comments upon my discussions on the subject. S. B. Morris, with whom resides a true-blue Presbyterian old maid, received some of your papers from John Smith. She got hold of them and demanded to know from whom such poison stuff came. Morris informed her that they came from Smith. She flew about mad as a wet hen, and raised a rumpus in the Presbyterian camp. She caused a meeting to be called, which resulted in the appointment of a committee of women to investigate Deacon Smith, and ascertain the propriety of his distributing such trash. George Smith was unceremoniously brought before the tribunal and commanded to explain himself with despatch. Not understanding the matter, and being rather sensitive to compulsory treatment, he got his "dander" up, and left without a word of explanation. At a third meeting of this committee they were in the act of recommending the expulsion of the deacon, who was one of the oldest and most substantial members of this aristocratic society, when it fortunately occurred to one of them that it might have been John Smith instead of their deacon, which proved to be the case.

HARRY HOOVER, Clearfield, Pa., writes: The inclosed "moreau" indicates the kind of spiritual pabulum dealt out to the benighted heathens of the backwoods of Pennsylvania by the holy man of God who is charged with their growth in grace. The circumstances that so outraged the good man's feeling was the following: On the 3d day of November, 1876, a woman by the name of Maria J. Waple was found lying in the woods in Clearfield County, Pa., foully murdered—shot through the body and in the head. A man who had been intimate with her, named Martin V. Turner, was arrested and tried for the murder. The trial proved very tedious, continuing over two Sundays. The second Sunday, Judge John H. Orvis presiding, held court during Sunday (as he alleged, in the interest of humanity and justice). No sooner was it known that the Judge had decided to do so than there was a commotion in the camp of the faithful. The Rev. H. S. Butler hastened to expostulate with and threaten the Judge; but failing to intimidate him, he rushed into the pulpit and from thence into press, with the following result: "A sad breach of God's holy law is occurring in this community to-day. With whom the responsibility lies, I do not pretend to say; God knows, and he will visit it where it belongs. A short time since, the Christian sentiment of the country was shocked by a proposition to open the Centennial Exposition on the Sabbath, and at once that sentiment asserted itself so unmistakably that the evil was averted.
Little did we think that so soon the same question would be forced upon our own community with no apparent protest. May God forgive those who have erred in this matter, and may God avert from this community the curse which is sure to follow the trampling upon his law, even in the so-called interests of justice.
The duty of the hour, for every Christian and every lover of truth and order in view of this apparently uncalled for act, is, so clearly to express himself in regard to it, that those who are responsible shall understand that it is at least a dangerous experiment, and shall thus be deterred from such a course in the time to come."

Mrs. SALLIE J. MINER, Angola, Ind., writes:
The "Analysis of Religious Belief" is a work that every individual having any desire to learn the truth in relation to the history of the human race religiously should possess. It contains a vast amount of information and can be obtained at a very low price. It is not of much importance by what name we are called, but it is really important that we should all understand something of the history of our own race of beings. I attended the M. E. church a week ago last Sabbath, and I must say I never go to church that I do not go home feeling astonished. The Rev. gentleman made a great effort to impress upon our minds the great necessity of being washed in the blood of Christ. It was strictly a bloody sermon, he said he could not tell how it was done but it was "the Book, the Book," turning to the Bible. He very sanctimoniously told us how Moses wanted to see God's face, but that God told him he could not and live, so he placed his hands upon his hips and stepped along a step or two and said he placed him in a cleft of the rock and then took away his hands, saying he would show his back parts but he did not say one word about Moses having "talked with God face to face as a man speaketh unto his friend," and it is all in the same chapter, Exodus, xxxiii. I could not but ask myself the question, how many there were in that house that thought anything about the inconsistency of calling such stuff the word of God. When I look out upon this beautiful world and think for a moment of the great, incomprehensible creative power that exists, I always have a feeling of reverence for that power whence all things derive life and sustenance, but I do not expect ever to know anything more about that power than I know now. It is enough for me to make as good use as possible of the little that I do know, and continue to learn what little I can by studying the great book of nature. I can not see how any one can be edified by listening to such old threadbare doctrines as our ministers feed the people with every Sunday. The Rev. gentleman of whom I have spoken, always when I have listened to a discourse by him, tells us of something, to use his own language, "I have never saw and of some things I have saw," and I think if he could only "saw" that there is some things he could learn, it would be the most profitable "sawing"
he has ever done.

L. A. LEMIEUX, writes: It being Sunday, and as I am an observer of the Sabbath, it occurred to me that the day could not be sanctified in any better way than by telling you how the Infidels of this place are progressing. There are four of us who work for the cause, and our sympathizers—men who believe Christianity to be full of "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain," but dare not tell of it—can be counted by the score. All they need is grit, and I am in hopes of succeeding in putting some of that into some of them by and by, for we have a monstrous bump of stick-to-it-iveness in our occipital regions. Three years ago to speak a good word for Thomas Paine was simply to get this town "down on you." At present it is no job at all to get a dozen interested listeners to an "Oration on the Gods," an extract from the La-vestigator or TRUTH SEEKER. There are 1,500 people, six churches, and six saloons here (one church having died intestate about a month ago), and the patrons of the latter are generally the pillars of the former, but of such is the kingdom! We don't all go to the churches, or saloons either, but some of us keep our money to pay our honest debts with. We find that a great deal of good can be done with your tracts. We begin on them with the easy ones, and gradually increase the dose as our patient gains strength for mental food, always treating the leading symptoms, and keeping our man under the influence of good nature. For instance, any mild one like "Ruth's Idea of Heaven, and Mine" will do to start on; it will stimulate the invalid without aggravating the disease. Then "The Old Snake Story" will tear down a few more cobwebs, then "Sensible Conclusions" will burst a hole through the network. Now come on with your "Oration on the Gods." "Prayer to the Devil" may come handy in case of emergency, and if your subject has any sense at all to begin with he will soon get strong enough to digest "Underwood's Debates," "Age of Reason," and "Exeter Hall." When he gets through with those, I wouldn't give a "continental" for his religion, but the cobwebs are all gone, his knowledge box swept clean from rubbish, he is a good, common-sense man, and you can send him home with Darwin's "Origin of Species," a globe, and a philosophy on one arm, as emblems of what he is, and the Bible, a wide shingle, and a gorilla on the other arm, as lasting mementos of what he was. The work is trying sometimes, and we might easily be forgiven for saying as the boy did, "It's enough to make a preacher swear," or for swearing ourselves even. But, on the other hand, it is enough to make a cat laugh to hear the Methodists rant. So far as I can remember, this is the best world I ever lived in, and, if my judgment is good for anything, the only world I'll ever be in as a man; but what's the odds as long as we're happy?

Special Notices.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N. Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygeian Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

THE SEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION of the American Labor Reform League will be held in Masonic Hall, 13th street, between 3d and 4th avenues, New York City, Sunday and Monday, May 6 and 7, at 10:30 A. M., 2:30 and 7:30 P. M. each day. J. K. Ingalls, E. H. Heywood, Wm. Hanson, R. W. Hume, Geo. W. Maddox, Dr. E. P. Miller, S. Mira Hall, Dr. C. S. Weeks, Edward Palmer, and other speakers are expected.

WANTED—AN EXPERIENCED NURSE and house-keeper with approved morals, active, intelligent, and of sufficient age to give character to a Hygienic Institute. Would prefer a lady wishing treatment and board for impaired health, with a view to the position after it is restored. Address J. S. Lyons, M. D., Springfield, Mo.

Stereopticon for Sale, AND OVER TWO HUNDRED BEAUTIFUL PICTURES.—As I wish to procure more expensive apparatus for my next season's work, adapted to the largest halls, I offer my oxy-calcium stereopticon (one of McAllister's best, suitable for halls seating 300 people), and over two hundred elegant views, for sale. It affords a safe, pleasant business for any gentleman who is desirous of traveling. For particulars address W. F. JAMESON, Glenwood, Iowa.

Spermatorrhoea.

Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this LIFE-WASTING disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in insane asylums, many had falling-sickness fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS,

The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

ADAMANT

Hard Metal
High Polish
Adjustable
Beams
Wood & Iron
Run Steady
Light Draft
All Sizes.

Do the work of best steel plows, while much cheaper to repair. Agents wanted.

THE NEW YORK PLOW CO., 55 Beekman St., N. Y.

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for

THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN RELIGION AND SCIENCE. Truly one of the most valuable works that have appeared within the last ten years. By PROF. DRAFER. Price, $1.75.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY. By R. T. TRALL, M.D. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. 25,000 copies of this work have been sold. Finely illustrated, and a very important work. Price, $2.

E. P. Cooley, Manufacturer of

64 READE STREET, NEW YORK.

Dealer in Fixtures, Cords, Tassels, Hollands, etc.

Combining the beauty of a Lace Curtain with the utility of a Window Shade. IMITATION LACE SHADES A SPECIALTY. ORDERS BY MAIL PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO, and FORWARDED WITH CARE. Retail Orders delivered in any part of the country, C. O. D. In ordering special sizes give size of opening, also size of glass. State where you saw this adv. 3117

COPY YOUR LETTERS

Excelsior Copying Book,
Made of Chemical Paper.

Quickly copies any writing WITHOUT Water. PRESS, or BRUSH, used at home, library or office. For Ladies wishing to retain copies of letters, every business man, clergyman, correspondent, traveler it is invaluable—sells at sight. Send $3.00 and we will send a 300 page Book, letter size, BY MAIL paid to any address. We refer to any Commercial Agency. Send stamp for Agents' Circular. EXCELSIOR MANFG. CO., 110 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill. 5000 AGENTS wanted. 6114

WINTER'S

WONDERFUL HAIR RESTORER

is now offered to the people in the form of a recipe, sent post-paid to any address for $1.00. Is made of simple ingredients. No sulphur. No sugar of lead, nor any other poisonous substance. Restores faded, dry, harsh, and falling hair to softness and natural color. Restores hair to the prematurely bald-headed where all other hair restoratives have failed. Removes all unpleasant irritation, itching, and scaly dryness.

Three Reasons why every one who has lost or is losing their hair should buy this valuable HAIR RESTORATIVE RECIPE.

Firstly. It is the best and most successful hair restorative ever discovered.

Second. It contains no poisonous substances. Third. Every purchaser of this Wonderful Hair Restorative Recipe can make his own remedy at trifling cost.

Address J. C. WINTERS, CIRCLEVILLE, Pica-way Co., Ohio. 8mo6

The Resurrection of Jesus.

A new Lecture by W. S. BELL, of New Bedford, Mass., the able Liberal Lecturer. It is an excellent Essay. It costs but ten cents, mailed to any address. Send for a copy. Address D. M. BENNETT, SCIENCE HALL, 141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

DR. E. B. FOOTE'S PLAIN HOME TALK. A most valuable work on health and disease, with the most rational modes of treatment. It contains over 900 pages and 300 illustrations. As a work on Hygiene, it has hardly an equal. Price, with a beautiful chromo, $3.25.

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3.00; Leather, $4.00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4.50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,
141 Eighth St., New York.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"

In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit $12 and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1750

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First. "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second. "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

Sexual Physiology.....$2 00
Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book.....1 00
Health and Diseases of Women.....25
Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses.....50

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. TRALL, M.D., 21 E. Twentieth St., New York. 17

BURGESS-UNDERWOOD DEBATE, held at Aylmer, Ont., for four days, commencing June 20th, 1876. It gives the strongest arguments on both sides on the subject of the Bible and Christianity. Paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.00.

Window Shades and Opaque Cloths.

64 READE STREET, NEW YORK.

Dealer in Fixtures, Cords, Tassels, Hollands, etc.

Combining the beauty of a Lace Curtain with the utility of a Window Shade. IMITATION LACE SHADES A SPECIALTY. ORDERS BY MAIL PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO, and FORWARDED WITH CARE. Retail Orders delivered in any part of the country, C. O. D. In ordering special sizes give size of opening, also size of glass. State where you saw this adv. 3117

Bankrupt Sale of Jewelry.

GREAT FAILURE OF THE MILTON GOLD JEWELRY COMPANY IN LONDON

Their Entire Stock Consigned to us to Raise Money as Soon as Possible.

Everybody has heard of MILTON GOLD JEWELRY, it having been sold in this market for the last ten years, and worn by the best and richest class of our population. Still it takes an expert to distinguish Milton Gold from Virginia Gold. In order to dispose of this large consignment in the speediest way, we have put up lots which we offer to the public for the tenth part of their value.

FIFTY-CENT LOT.

One pair elegant sleeve-buttons, retail price $1 00
One set spiral shirt-studs, retail price..... 75
One beautiful scarf-pin, stone setting, retail price..... 75
One elegant gent's watch chain, latest pattern, retail price..... 1 50
One collar-button, retail price..... 50
One elegant wedding ring, very heavy, retail price..... 2 00

Total.....$6 50

Remember that we will send you the above-named six articles, which we have retailed for $6 50, by mail, post-paid, for fifty cents, 4 sample lots for $1 50, or 12 sample lots for $4.

ONE DOLLAR LOT.

One pair gent's sleeve buttons, stone setting.....$1 20
One set elegant spiral studs to match same 1 05
One beautiful ladies' band engagement ring..... 2 00
One gent's large seal ring..... 2 00
One ladies' long neck chain..... 2 75
One gent's heavy plate watch chain..... 1 75
One gent's "Lake George" diamond stud, 1 00
One beautiful scarf-pin..... 72
One pair ladies' engraved sleeve-buttons.. 1 00

Total.....$13 50

TWO DOLLAR LOT.

One set gold front pin and ear-rings.
One ladies' long neck-chain.
One elegant locket for the above.
One ladies' "Pompadour" watch chain.
One pair stone sleeve-buttons.
One pair engraved sleeve-buttons.
One amethyst stone ring.
One gent's large seal ring.
One ladies' band engagement ring.
One set spiral shirt studs.
One gent's Lake George diamond stud.
One beautiful scarf-pin.

FIVE DOLLAR LOT.

One ladies' opera chain with slide and tassel.
One heavy ladies' neck-chain.
One beautiful locket for the above
One ladies' Cameo pin and earrings.
One pair (2) elegant bracelets.
One pair amethyst sleeve buttons inlaid with pearls.
One pair onyx sleeve-buttons.
One set studs to match the above.
One fine gent's watch-chain with charm.
One amethyst ring inlaid with pearls.
One foral ring inlaid with pearls.
One ladies' heavy band ring.
One ladies' chemise button.
One gent's Parisian diamond pin.
One collar button.
One extra fine set studs.

The above figures are the prices these goods have been retailed at in our leading cities. We mention these figures to give you an idea of the goods.

A FINE SOLID SILVER WATCH FREE.

On receipt of $15 we will send by express, one dozen 50 ct. lots and one of each of the others; also one elegant Watch, Ladies' or Gents' size, guaranteed to be a good timekeeper. Such opportunity is offered but once in a lifetime.

We want our patrons and the public in general to understand that this is Milton Gold Jewelry and no common Plated Ware. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance or money refunded. Send money by P. O. order or registered letter.

Our Firm and Milton Gold Jewelry are endorsed by all the leading newspapers of the country. Goods sent C. O. D. if $5.00 is sent with the order, not otherwise. Address all orders to

RALSTON JEWELRY CO.,

Importers of Watches and Jewelry,
LaSalle and Randolph Streets, Chicago, Illinois.

THE Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-Smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT,
Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.
Paine's Monument.
Paine's Bust.
Voltaire.
Rousseau.
Humboldt.
Goethe.
Schiller.
Aug. Comte.
Heine.
Alex. Pope.
John Milton.
Goldsmith.
Shelley.
Byron.
Burns.
Washington.
Franklin.
Jefferson.
John Adams.
J. Q. Adams.
Madison.
Jackson.
Lincoln.
Lincoln's Monument.
Gerrit Smith.
Henry C. Wright.
J. S. Mill.
Sumner.
Edgar A. Poe.
Greeley.
Castellar.
Tennyson.
Darwin.
Tyndall.
H. Spencer.
Huxley.
Proctor.
Draper.
Bradlaugh.
Holyoake.
Ingersoll.
Underwood.
Mendum.
Seaver.
L. Colby.
Dr. Hare.
F. E. Abbot.
Frothingham.
Wendell Phillips.
Emerson.
Garrison.
Henry Bergh.
Peter Cooper.
D. H. Burt.
S. P. Andrews.
Walt Whitman.
Froude.
Max Muller.
Warren Chase.
Jas. Parton.
Wm. Denton.
Dr. Slade.
A. J. Davis.
Foster.
J. M. Peebles.
Frances Wright.
E. Y. Wilson.
G. L. Henderson.
Prof. Fiske.
Fred Douglas.
N. P. Banks.
P. V. Nasby.
Beecher.
Tilton.
Moulton.
G. W. Curtis.
Th. Nast.
J. G. Bennett.
Chas. A. Dana.
Phoebe Carey.
Alice Carey.
Elizabeth C. Stanton.
Susan B. Anthony.
Lucy Stone.
Julia Ward Howe.
Chas. Cheney.
Paulina Davis.
Mary F. Davis.
Emma H. Britten.
Lizzie Fowler.
Mrs. Slenker.
Susan H. Wixon.
D. M. Bennett.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc. at 20 cents each singly, or six for one dollar.

Neat Albums, by mail, to hold 30 photos., 80 cts., to hold 50, $1.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $3 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine. 11

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319 6th Ave., New York. 44 years practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters P. O. Box 4829 New York City. 171

THE WORLD'S SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS:

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OR

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - - $3.00
ARABESQUE, colored leather, red burnished edges, - - - 4.00
MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked head-band, - - - 4.50

A. L. J. S.

D. M. BENNETT,

Eating for Strength.

A NEW HEALTH COOKERY BOOK.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Which should be in the hands of every person who would eat to retain and regain health, strength and beauty. It contains, besides the science of eating and one hundred answers to questions which most people are anxious to know, nearly one hundred pages devoted to the best healthful recipes for foods and drinks, how to feed one's self, feeble babes and delicate children so as to get the best bodily development. Mothers who do not nurse their children will find full directions for feeding them, and so will mothers who have delicate children, and so will mothers who wish to know the best foods.

Price, $1, postage free.

For sale wholesale and retail by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

POSITIVELY

$50.00 WORTH OF INFORMATION

in form of a nice book of over 100 pages, well illustrated, sent post-paid for $1.00

BY A PRACTICAL CLOSE OBSERVER

How to keep the hens, and hen-roosts free from lice. How to feed to get an abundance of eggs, even in mid winter. How to manage setting hens, chickens, &c., and how to preserve eggs a great length of time. Best breeds of hens, &c. Enclose $1.00 with order.

E. D. BLAKEMAN, Circleville, Ohio.

Mr. Blakeman is a school-boy friend of ours. We know him well; he is entirely reliable, and the information he has to impart upon the poultry subject is valuable.—Ed. T. S.]

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1750

Gems of Thought.

A HEART unspotted is not easily daunted.—Shakespeare.
A BAD cause will ever be supported by bad means and bad men.—Thomas Paine.

THE frantic efforts of those who are interested in supporting delusions must always end in defeat.—Draper.

IT is glorious to be rightly born; terrible to be otherwise and held to the rack for the faults of others.—Hudson Tuttle.

NOTHING is more deeply punished than the neglect of the affinities by which alone society should be formed.—Emerson.

TO HAVE in general but little feeling seems to be the only security against feeling too much on any particular occasion.—George Eliot.

WHATEVER truth there is in the mutability of species, man is apparently the only species that is capable of indefinite improvement.—J. W. Chadwick.

THERE is no such thing as Providence, for Nature proceeds under irresistible laws. The vital force which pervades the world is what the illiterate call God.—Draper.

GET but the truth once uttered, and 'tis like A star new-born that drops into its place. And which once circling its placid round, Not all the tumult of the earth can shake.

GIVE up money, give up fame, give up science, give up the earth itself, and all it contains, rather than do an immoral act. And never suppose that in any possible situation, or any circumstances, it is best for you to do a dishonorable thing.—Thomas Jefferson.

EVERY Sunday-school has for its object the crushing out of every germ of individuality. The poor children are taught that nothing can be more acceptable to God than unreasoning obedience and eyeless faith, and that to believe God can do an impossible act is far better than to do a good one yourself.—Ingersoll.

DO we teach man that he should stretch his hand to the shipwrecked, show his path to the wanderer, divide his bread with the hungry? I could briefly deliver to him the formula of human duty: all this that you see, in which things divine and human are included, is one—we are members of one great body.—Seneca.

FROM the different creeds have been evolved the radical doctrines, that will wear no fetter forged by error. It was the horrible dogma of eternal punishment that evolved the salvation theory of John Murray. Popular religion is the projector and very thing that has compelled Atheism and Freethought.—Susan H. Wixon.

WHEN little boys thrust their hands into narrow-mouthed jars full of figs and almonds, when they have filled their hands they cannot draw them out again, and so begin to cry. Let go a few of the figs and almonds, and you'll get your hand out. And so you let go your desires. Don't desire many things, and you'll get what you desire.—Epictetus.

FROM the organization of the first church until the present, to think your own thoughts has been inconsistent with the duties of membership. Every member has borne the marks of collar, and chain, and whip. No man ever attempted seriously to reform a church without being cast out and hunted down by the hounds of hypocrisy. The highest crime against a creed is to change it. Reformation is treason. The Church rewards defenders and burns reformers.—Ingersoll.

YOU might sooner get lightning out of incense smoke, than true action or passion out of your modern English religion. You had better get rid of the smoke, and the Gothic windows, and the painted glass to the property man; give up your carburetted hydrogen ghost in one healthy expiration, and look after Lazarus at the door-step. For there is a true church wherever one hand meets another helpfully, and that is the only holy or mother church that ever was or ever shall be.—Ruskin.

THERE is no time in all the year when the beautiful is more intensely than in the early Spring. We behold it with a keen thrill of delicious pleasure in the starting bud and expanding leaf; in the tender uprising of the slender green blades of grass, and the gentle unfolding of tiny hillside flowers peeping with bright and laughing eyes of blue from their brown beds of dry leaves, and seeming as if they were emblems of purity, goodness, and virtue.—Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

LIFE bears us on like the stream of a mighty river. Our boat glides down the narrow channel through the playful murmuring of its grassy borders. The trees shed blossoms over our young heads, the flowers on the brink seem to offer themselves to our young hands: we are happy in hope, and grow eagerly at the beauties around us—but the stream hurries us on—still our hands are empty. Our course in youth and manhood is but a wilder flood, amid more striking and magnificent scenes. We are animated at the moving pictures of enjoyment and industry passing us, we are excited at some short-lived disappointment. The stream bears us on, and our joys and griefs are alike left behind us. We may be shipwrecked, we cannot be delayed; whether rough or smooth, the river hastens to its home, till the roar of the ocean is in our ears, and the tossing of the waves is beneath our eyes, and the land recedes from our eyes, and floods are lifted around us, and we take our leave of earth and its inhabitants, until of our further voyage there is no witness save the Infinite and Eternal.—Bishop Heber.

Odd and Ends.

A dwarf pear.—Tom Thumb and wife.
A DELICATE feat in surgery. Cutting off one's heir with a shilling.

THE West should step carefully. It is treading on eggs—grasshopper's eggs.

IT may be warm, but don't lay off your flannel too suddenly unless you wish to take on immortality.

THE Rev. William Brown married John Sard to Mary Dean. They are now happy Sard-Deans, two in a box and doing nicely.

"THE Widow Smithe," slowly uttered Blifkins, as he saw a woman warming the after parts of her fatherless son with a shingle.

A COUNTRY paper says a man may have the best education in the world and not be able to tell the difference between a woman's bonnet and her hat.

IT is said that Postmaster General Key, has thirteen children. Well done. Key pit up. It's a good way to keep out of mischief. Few men are equal to you.

THE balmy air of Spring now bathes the cheeks of beauty in roseate blushes, while its aching brain wonders what fellow is going to pay its ice cream and strawberry bills.

ONE of the fashion papers says: "All silk dresses are no longer seen." That may be so, unless you call it "my uncle's," where they have been deposited as a matter of necessity.

A PHILADELPHIA paper counselled a variety performer not to make too frequent the name of Deity in his "acts." When the paragraph was read to the "artist," he only said, "Who's he."

FORKS it appears are not ancient institutions. They were used by the higher classes only up to the middle of the seventeenth century. Now they are so common that they are fast superseding toothpicks.

AN exchange says: "Albert Smith threw himself under the cars at Lexington, Ky., rather than meet the wife he had deserted." Very natural. He preferred to risk the locomotive rather than a low commotion.

YOU can't most always sometimes tell. A sweet faced young man who spoke such beautiful melodious, mellifluous words about moral worth, Christian benevolence and all that sort of thing that positively made his tender-hearted landlady burst into tears has been known within three days thereafter to suddenly depart on business, leaving a month's board bill unpaid and no souvenir behind except a badly worn valise containing an old deck of cards, a testament, and two soiled paper collars.

WHEN a grocer's boy delivered a basket full of packages to a lady on Columbia street her quick eye detected the fact that she had only received 11 oranges in place of a dozen.

"Young man, you ate that other orange as you came along!" she exclaimed, as she recounted the number.

"Never—never!" he earnestly replied.

"Well, where is it then?"

"They probably counted wrong, ma'am."

"Well, I'll go right back with you and see."

"I didn't eat that orange," he began, after a little reflection, "but I'll tell you how it was. Down here about two blocks I saw an old chap out in his garden, hat hanging on a plum tree as he sawed a limb. He was the bald-headedest man I ever saw ma'am, and I've traveled all over the world."

"Well, what has that to do with the oranges?" she asked.

"Lots ma'am—heaps. If you was a boy and you saw such a head, and you knew you could hit it and get away all right, wouldn't you put an orange agin it?"

"It was very wicked," she softly answered.

"Well, I dunno but 'twas, but if you'd seen that old gent catch his legs and make a jump, and if you heard him yell out as he came down and grabbed for his hat, why, ma'am, you'd lend me another orange to pop at some one as I go back!"

IN THE SPRING.

In the Spring the young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love, And all animated creatures to the same emotion move;

In the Spring the birds of passage woo their mates upon the wing, And the kite deserts the small boy weeping o'er the broken string.

In the Spring the mother beckons,—calls the darling to her knee, Waves her silken slipper, saying: "Don't you play no tricks on me."

In the Spring the wild Canary carols from his happy heart, And the wild male kicks his owner over the potato cart.

In the Spring the turkey stupid roosts with Cupid on a limb, E'en the lizard in his gizzard feels the wizard poking him.

In the Spring the life throbs quicker in the pulse of innocence, And the bootjack seeks the cats conversing on the moon-lit fence.

In the Spring the housewife tries to make the turkey-gobbler set, And sows cabbage-seed on flower-beds, thinking it is mignonette.

In the Spring the youth and maiden linger in the evening air, And she sighs in broken accents, "Joseph! don't you muss my hair!"

In the Spring they saunter homewards, never dreaming it is late, And each keepeth each from falling as they swing upon the gate.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	6
4.	Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	2
9.	The Story of the Flood.	2
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	2
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arrangement of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. O. Sothoran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	5
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	5
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	2
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	1
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	2
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	1
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Fishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	3
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	5
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	1
56.	Bible Contradictions.	8
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—Their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	5
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	2
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. O. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	2
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 138th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	2
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	1
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hoppes, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	6
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsborg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off. As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

These eight Scientific Tracts are made into a pamphlet of 125 pages, at 20 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

Truth Seeker Leaflets.

Sent, assorted, or as desired, post-paid, at 4 cents per dozen; 25 cents per hundred, or $2 per thousand.

Let them be distributed freely in every town village and neighborhood. Addresses, D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St., New York

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth	50
" " with Examination of Prophecies	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	77
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jaccoliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 60an d	1 00
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Map, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Dilemmas.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols..	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent of Man, (Imp'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright.	35 & 60
Evans' History of all Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Prothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidel's Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo..	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneelands Review.	1 00
Hymns.	85
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Vale.	1 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology. 770 cuts.	3 40
" Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peepie's All Around the World.	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man, Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	20
" Rights of Man.	50
" Theological Works.	2 00
" and Miscellaneous Writings, Centennial edition.	2 50
" Political Works. 2 Vols., 1 8vo.	5 00
" Complete Works. 3 Vols., 8vo.	8 00
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D..	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man, Ethan Allen	60
Syntagma. Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature, D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols..	12 00
Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols., 8vo..	3 00
Sexual Physiology, Trull.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul.	2 00
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers.
" $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions. Bible Stories, etc., 75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and IV; 60 cuts.	1 00
The Outcast. Winwood Reade.	30
Talks with My Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D..	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	50 & 80
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE
& MORALS

FREETHOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 19. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY }
BY D. M. BENNETT.

New York, Saturday, May 12, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 5th St., } $2 per Year.
NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Temple church, London, is noted for its fine music, and now a whistler has been added to the choir. Prepare to pucker and worship the Lord.

ONE or two choir girls will do more towards making a revival a failure than ten regular spear-tailed devils. This is Moody's "private opinion," though he does not speak it out on all occasions.

A Boston man, at one of the Moody meetings where a collection was being taken up, subscribed five dollars in behalf of his mother-in-law. This shows how the Boston folks are growing in grace.

THE Toledo Blade says it sounds like low mockery to hear Moody warning young ladies not to marry unbelievers, when there are over 70,000 spinsters in Massachusetts that cannot get husbands of any kind.

THE Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston says: "We stand before structureless bioplasm and see it wearing organisms." Exactly so. Joseph has hit it to a dot. But why couldn't some of the rest of us thought of that pretty phrase just as well as Cook?

ONE of the founders and elders in Rev. Dr. Ouyler's church in Brooklyn, was suspended last Sunday, not for theological heresy, not for speculative skepticism, not for failing to make a fair contribution, not for disrespect towards the church authorities, but for dishonesty.

THE sewing-machine monopolies are soon to be removed, and any company can make sewing-machines that wishes to. They failed to secure a renewal of their patents. The result will be that sewing-machines will soon be offered at half the price, or less, at which they have been selling.

THE large cathedral at Metz took fire on the 7th and was greatly damaged by the flames. Providence seemed to be caught napping again or did not seem disposed to interfere to prevent the burning of one of his own buildings. The Emperor, the Crown Prince, and Von Moltke visited Metz during the conflagration.

MR. BROOKER, remarked Sunday that it "was impossible in any way, to localize Heaven even in the imagination. The minute you attempt to compress it in the form of a literal fact, you destroy it. Like a flake of snow, there is nothing more exquisite in form; but the moment you put it on the palm of your hand, you have it no longer. The best things that are inside of man are like nightingales, which sing if they think nobody hears, but won't sing when company comes." So much for Henry's opinion.

A PECULIAR feature of the trial of the Rev. Mr. Miller, of Princeton, is that a great many of the students in the Theological Seminary sympathize with his views. This is indicative of a possible crop of heterodoxical trials, when these young men become ministers. Mr. Miller's case was disposed of with far greater despatch than is common in ecclesiastical trials; but the verdict given by the Presbytery is not by any means the end of the matter. Miller is a man of grit. He appeals to the synod, and will carry the case to the General Assembly.

THERE was a great jollification on board the Russian Fleet the other day when Alexis read the good news that war had been declared against Turkey and that everybody might be shot. Then a requiem was sung and by implication at least, it was inferred that the God of Battles would be on their side and smite the hated Turk. Queer though, isn't it that the old Jewish God is always expected to step in and take a hand when spilling of blood and killing is to be consummated. What a god he must be, to be sure.

ORAZED BY THE REVIVAL.—Revival excitement has been too much for the brain of Luther Newton, a middle-aged and careful farmer, and leader in the religious awakenings at Phillips-ton this Spring. Among other insane freaks he pinched his father to the ground till the old gentleman forgave his enemies; commanded an express train to stand still, being, he said "snatched off the track by the Lord" just as the irreligious engine was about to crush him; and anointed his wife from head to foot with butter as a religious duty.—Springfield Republican.

DR. TYNG, Jr., in his sermon Sunday, remarked "There are 16,000 more single women in this city than there are single men. I am thankful that the stock of old maids is not run out." This seems a mysterious expression of gladness. We think it due from Dr. Tyng to rise and explain why he "is thankful that the stock of old maids has not run out," because, contentment, peace and happiness are not prominently associated with old maids. It is not good for man or woman to live alone. Ecclesiastical and secular authority seem largely unanimous in this opinion. General opinion and sentiment concur in the belief that the fullness of a woman's life is not realized until she legitimately ceases to be an old maid. Wifehood and motherhood give play to powers and capacities which otherwise seem liable to be turned in and prey and wear upon their possessor. Now, in view of these things, we ask again why should Dr. Tyng rejoice in the culture of old maids? or in the existence of 16,000 more old maids or possible old maids? It looks really like an almost fiendish exultation over human misery. It looks suspicious.—Graphic.

THE LICK ESTATE.—A prospect of troublesome litigation before the final settlement.—The settlement of the Lick Trust has developed a new phase of difficulty. At a meeting of the Society of California Pioneers, a resolution adopted by the directors was read, which is to the effect that the board would consent to the payment of $381,000 to John H. Lick, in addition to the sum given to him by the late James Lick, provided that all the societies sharing in the bounty of the deceased philanthropist should bear their proportion of the expense. These other societies had been led to believe that the $385,000 was to come out of the residue set apart to be divided equally between the Academy of Sciences and the Pioneers, and had filed their answers consenting to the payment on that hypothesis. The trustees of the Lick estate expected the two residuary legatees to accept that idea and to come into court to-day, so that the whole matter could be closed up. Both the residuary legatee societies, however, now refuse to consent that all the money required for the settlement should come out of their purses exclusively. Whether the other societies will now consent to pay the deduction of fifteen per cent., that being the amount needed, of the specific bequests given to them, is a question to be settled hereafter. There may yet be troublesome litigation in the estate.

CLERICAL DEFALCATIONS AND MISTAKES.—The following careful notice is from the N. Y. Sun of the 3d. It speaks for itself. "The Rev. Joseph Jones, a Baltimore clergyman of the Methodist denomination, particularly strong in revivals, got hold of a large bequest of $50,000 left to his church, invested it for his own benefit, got involved, was called to account by the church trustees, and thereupon, a few days ago committed suicide by taking poison. The Rev. E. J. Baird, a Richmond clergyman of the Presbyterian denomination and Secretary of the Presbyterian Publishing Committee, has just been on trial before the Presbytery at Pittsburgh for embezzling $22,000 of the Committee's funds, and he has been deposed from the ministry, after conviction of the crime. The Rev. Thomas B. Bott, a Philadelphia clergyman of the Baptist denomination, has been on trial during the last few days, in a criminal court there, upon a charge of criminal conduct towards a young lady of his church, brought by the young lady's father, deacon of the church. The Rev. Mr. Williams, a New Jersey clergyman, of the Dutch Reformed denomination, was on trial last week before the Classis of New Brunswick for courtship one young lady after he had secretly married another and denied the marriage, and the result was his dismissal from the church at Griggstown for the offense. These are a few of the latest and most melancholy instances of clerical misconduct. But the most singular case of a clergyman in trouble is mentioned in this week's issue of our religious contemporary, the Witness. It appears the Witness has been mailed from its office in this city to the Rev. Leaven Fausette, Port Hudson, Louisiana, and that a few days ago the publisher got a letter from the Postmaster at Port Hudson saying, 'The paper addressed to the Rev. Leaven Fausette is not taken out, so please discontinue the same,' and then, with striking brevity, the Postmaster added, 'Reason: he was hung last June, 1876, and is no more.' This is all the news the Witness has been able to obtain about the fate of the Rev. Mr. Fausette, and being troubled on account of the loss of a Port Hudson reader it is now trying to find out 'how so strange a thing as the hanging of a minister of the Gospel took place.'

THE trial of the Rev. Thomas B. Bott a Baptist clergyman of Philadelphia for adultery with Miss Louisa Younger, a young lady member of his church, which has been in operation ten days or more was terminated on the 8th. As is customary in trials for clerical adultery very hard swearing has been indulged in. The clergyman and the young lady each took the witness-stand and swore deliberately that they had never committed adultery; that they had never kissed each other, and that they had never been guilty of any impropriety together, although they acknowledged they had been much in each others society, especially at the secluded Fish House on the Schuylkill. In rebuttal the prosecution adduced a mass of testimony in overwhelming contradiction of the testimony of the guilty clergyman and the young lady. Their testimony that they had never met at the young lady's house was positively contradicted by the mother of the young lady who testified that he made frequent visits and staid long and that she had frequently caught her daughter in the clergyman's lap. Neighbors also testified that when the pair had been walking out together they had seen him skulk in the alleyway while the young lady entered the front door. By witnesses who resided at the Fish House it was shown that upon one occasion, while Mr. Bott says he was anxiously awaiting the return of his wife from the country, he was down at the Fish House in bathing with the young lady. He was attired in a night-shirt and a pair of overalls. She wore a white muslin wrapper. She stood tremblingly on the shore and he pulled her in, notwithstanding her suppressed shrieks. Upon the supposition that they were man and wife, the lady in charge of the Fish House, after they had gone from the water, ushered them into a room, from the floor of which she had previously removed the carpet, in order that they might change their clothing. Mr. Bott then hurried home, leaving Miss Younger behind, arriving at his residence about nine o'clock, in time, according to his own evidence, to inform his wife that he had been waiting for her at the cars, but, by mistake, had gone to the wrong depot. A pretty little girl, only eight years of age, a child of the lady in charge of the Fish House, told, as only a child could have told it, how she had accompanied Mr. Bott and Miss Younger blackberrying, and how the pastor hugged and kissed the young woman who he was pretending was his wife. Before going after the berries the little girl entered a room in the Fish House to obtain her hat, and there discovered Mr. Bott confidentially ensconced in a rocking-chair with Miss Younger in his lap. At the close of a three-hours' scathing speech by the prosecuting attorney, Mr. Heverin turned upon the clerical culprit thus: "Bott, you have been a pious fraud. You have prostituted the glorious opportunities of your holy avocation. You have been smirched, bedraggled, and besmeared the vestures of a holy calling for the infamous purpose of an infamous scoundrel. I arraign you here, as the law has arraigned you, and as the evidence has condemned you, as a perjured, lying, lascivious libertine. Look me in the eye, sir. [Bott here faced the counsel.] You entered that home as a religious teacher. You have brought shame and degradation on youth and scorn upon old age." Counsel then dared defendant to kiss the Bible and repeat the testimony he had given on affirmation, but when Mr. Bott offered to do so, told him it was too late. After quoting from Shakespeare and the Decalogue, counsel took his seat, and the Judge began his charge. At half past four o'clock the jury retired, and the court took a recess until evening. When the court reconvened, it was announced that the jury had not yet agreed, and an adjournment was ordered until to-morrow morning. It was currently reported in the court room that the jury stood eleven to one for conviction, the stubborn individual being a Baptist deacon. The Baptists generally do not uphold the reverend defendant, the ministerial conference having already erased his name from their rolls. It is probable that the jury will be locked up until they agree, as Judge Elcock is determined to get a verdict.

Events of the Week.

A LANDSLIDE occurred in Genevieve parish, Canada, filling a section of the Bastoon River and killing five persons.

A PASSENGER train on the Keokuk and Des Moines road jumped the track near Ottumwa, and some thirty passengers more or less injured and one man killed.

THERE is great commotion among the owners of dogs in our city. Licenses are to be procured, or fines imposed. Owning dogs is a luxury that hereafter has got to be paid for.

IN England the excitement dependent upon the war is active. One party is in favor of the government interfering in behalf of Turkey, while the opposite party is vigorously opposing the movement.

THE laborers who have been engaged at removing the debris where the fire was in Bond St., are taking out as high as 160 ounces of silver per day. These cellars are proving to be very fair silver mines.

A TERRIBLE famine is prevailing in parts of China. The suffering people have been compelled to eat grass and the leaves of trees. Large numbers are committing suicide to end the pangs of hunger.

DURING the last week the weather has been rather cool; heavy frosts have visited several parts of the country, and in the Western and Southwestern States much damage was done to peaches and other fruits.

THE President and wife with some members of the Cabinet are to visit this city on the 14th to attend the anniversary of the meeting of the Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Hayes and wife will be guests of Ex-Gov. Morgan.

MRS. SCHASCHT, Benton, N. J., attempted to fill a lighted kerosene lamp on Sunday night. Both lamp and can exploded; she and a babe in her arms were dangerously wounded. When will people learn to extinguish the flame when they wish to fill a lamp?

PERSPECTS of complications with Mexico are looming up. It is said that Lerdo will make an attack on Sonora and some of the other northern states of that distracted Republic. Doubtless the condition of that country would be greatly improved by being taken under U. S. protection, and the territory is rather tempting to our grasping tendencies.

THE religious war between Russia and Turkey is progressing vigorously, and Allah and the Turks appear to be getting the worst of it just now. The fortified town of Kars has fallen into the hands of the Russians, with 14,000 Turkish prisoners. Batoum is said to be the next place the northern bears will attack. The Turks in the meantime are bombarding Kalafat, and the Roumanians are vigorously returning fire.

LEAP FROM A FERRY-BOAT.—As a Pavonia ferry-boat left the dock for Jersey City last Saturday evening, a well-dressed German took a half-dozen photographs from his pocket, handed them to the persons near him, wished all good-bye, walked to the front of the boat, and jumped into the river. The boat passed over him, but he soon rose to the surface, and, after giving a piercing shriek, sank and was seen no more.

THE king of Abyssinia has declared war against the Khedive of Egypt for crossing the frontier. The rebellion in Darfur is increasing and the Egyptians will be compelled to capitulate. From these home difficulties the Khedive refuses to send assistance to the Turks, thinking he may have as much business on his own hands as he can well attend to. A Mohammedan rising is said to be imminent in Algiers and from present indications there soon may be fighting all along the line.

JOHN T. DALY, proprietor of the Windsor Hotel, on Fifth avenue, a man of great wealth and high position, committed suicide under painful conditions. For several days his mind seemed to be affected; he became melancholy, and finally went over to Long Island, and wandered into the country, where he entered an old deserted building, and ended his life by shooting himself and hanging himself with parts of his clothing. The event has caused considerable excitement and sorrow in the city.

Career of Religious Ideas.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.—Copyrighted.

CHAPTER III.

HISTORICAL REVIEW.—FETISHISM.

If any man love acorns since corn is invented, let him eat acorns; but it is very unreasonable that he should forbid others the use of wheat.

Savage man is depressed and overpowered by the objective world. He is the sport and buffet of the elements. The invisible wind, bearing on its wings clouds and tempest, through whose chambers the lightnings are flung and thunders bay; the ever-moving waters of river and sea; the sunshine flooding the earth—are grand and inexplicable mysteries to his feeble mind. He endows all objects with life; fires arrows to intimidate the lightning; undertakes hostile expeditious against offending winds; or shouts his battle-cry to frighten the monster devouring the eclipsed moon. Every moving thing has life and intelligence like his own. The animal world forms one great family, of which he is the elder brother. They understand each other and him. Like a child he converses with them. "Do not cry like a woman, but bear death like a brave," says the Indian to the wounded bear. "He keeps silent for fear of slavery," says the Negro of the baboon. His ardent imagination, unrestrained by reason, exalts the instincts of his brother animals. He is not far removed from them, and, astonished at their sagacity and the mystery of their instinctive actions, believes them his superiors.

He worships, because he fears, everything—rocks, trees, streams, mountains, sun, and stars. These are worshiped direct, and not as types or symbols of interior deities, as is often claimed, for the mind at this stage is not capable of any conception beyond the sphere of the senses. The object was worshiped as a god, not God behind a veil. Each individual, according to his caprice, selected an object of worship; at first only for a time, but afterwards for a longer period, even during life. Objects exciting fear, terror, or emotions of pleasure, were first selected. The savage is ruled by the passions. He cannot be said to reason. He is controlled by his emotions. He worships that which he most fears; or from which he expects the greatest assistance. His motive is fear. The dark is a monster—every obscure cavern, the jaws of destruction. Terrified by the life he cannot comprehend, he personifies that life; and coming to a belief that personalities stand behind visible effects, a sense of his own helplessness intensifies his fear. He believes these personalities interfere in the affairs of men, and may be influenced by prayers and incantations. He devoutly believes in witchcraft and sorcery. In this early theology, morality has no part. The gods do not interfere for the purpose of rewarding man's moral or punishing his immoral acts, for he has not arrived at the understanding of moral relations.

His dim consciousness of a future state is fraught with terror. Death, the surrender of existence to the elemental forces, is a frightful phenomenon to primitive man. The spirit then leaves the body, to wander an unseen shade, capable of assuming any shape, and inflicting torments on the living. Its name must not be pronounced, for fear of recalling it. The world of spirits is terrible from its invisibility; and the savage, fearless in battle with overwhelming foes, feels utterly powerless and prostrates himself before the mysterious and irresponsible beings of the air.

To enter this invisible world and subject its shades to mortal will—to approach the gods in their secret chambers, and engage them in the furtherance of mortal plans—has been from earliest times the daring scheme of theology. This is its basis, from which the most enlightened notions of antiquity did not arise. It is encouraged by Catholicism in holy relics, the cross, rosaries, and amulets; and by the Protestant in holy days and books. The metaphysical philosophers, when they assign a soul to Nature, and lose themselves in a bewildering Pantheism, return to Fetishism.

Here is the cradle of theology. It exists in its intensest form. The savage, by deifying all objects, dwells constantly in the presence of his gods. He cannot escape from them. He illustrates a state theologians never weary of applauding, wherein reason creates no doubt, nor examines with too curious eye the vague theories of cosmology. All ideas are theological. Every act of man's life has direct reference to his theological belief. There is no necessity for mediators between him and them, and priests are not serviceable. He appeals directly to his gods. There is no religious system, as each individual creates his own. All is indeterminate, vague, and unreal. When everything is regarded as subject to the caprice of controlling intelligences, there can be no conception of universal law or fixity of action. The spirit of investigation is dormant, or overwhelmed by the religious emotions. It is for this reason the Fetish state is one of intellectual stagnation, and progress out of it is extremely slow. The mind is so pre-occupied with its childish vagaries as to preclude correct observation. When Nature becomes thus idealized, there is no room for human effort. The gods rule arbitrarily, and nothing is left for man but to appease their anger or flatter their vanity by abject homage. Such conceptions cannot exert an elevating influence. They rather impede progress, and suffocate thought by superstition—the childish fear of evil beings. Man travels a long and weary road, one directly diverging from religion, before he gains the mastery of nature, and through moral sensibilities recognizes a benevolent being as Creator. This early condition has not yet been wholly outgrown, and too often is the spectacle presented of men of scientific acumen prejudiced by religious dogmatism.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

BENNETT'S REPLY. NO. III.

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Dear Sir: Should you, at any time, decide to bring out a work entitled, "How to Make Christians with Facility, in Six Easy Lessons," I think I could cheerfully give you a recommendation for special ability in that line. By your system almost any distinguished man who has passed away may be shown to have been a good Christian. Let us try it on a few acknowledged Infidels. To begin with, Thomas Paine: 1. He was born of religious parents who were "theoretically and practically believers in the Christian religion"; 2. Among his friends were persons who were regarded as excellent Christians; 3. In his writings he never denied the existence of God, nor a life beyond the grave; 4. He said nothing disrespectful of the author of Christianity; 5. He advocated the best of morals, and was actuated by a deep love for the human race. Among the many good things he said were these utterances: "I believe in one God and no more, and I hope for happiness beyond this life"; "I believe the equality of man; and I believe that religious duties consist in doing justice, loving mercy, and endeavoring to make our fellow creatures happy"; "It is impossible to be a hypocrite and to be brave at the same time"; "I believe that any system of religion that shocks the mind of a child cannot be a true system"; "Oh! ye that love mankind; ye that dare oppose not only the tyranny, but the tyrant, stand forth! Every spot of the Old World is overrun with oppression; Freedom has been hunted round the globe. Asia and Africa have long expelled her. Europe regards her like a stranger, and England hath given her warning to depart. O, receive the fugitive, and prepare in time an asylum for mankind"; "The world is my country; to do good my religion." A man who could pronounce such sentiments as these must necessarily be a good and religious man, hence a Christian. Had Paine been President, it is not at all unlikely that an effort would be made to prove him to have been an excellent Christian.

By a similar process R. G. Ingersoll can be shown to be a Christian. He was born of religious parents; his father was a clergyman; he regularly received religious instruction in his youth; his incentives are moral and humane; he has many friends who are Christians. He dined with our Christian President, and on Sunday; he is a friend to the human race, and has done naught to injure it. He has spoken many excellent truths; many matchless utterances have escaped his lips. Such a one is a good man, and hence must be a Christian.

B. F. Underwood, by a similar course of reasoning, can be shown to be a Christian. Moral; religious parents; received early pious instruction; is a friend to mankind; has been guilty of no immoral conduct; faithfully served his country in the late war—he cannot be other than a Christian.

Even your humble servant, by your process, could be made to count as a Christian were it desirable. Was born in a Christian land, of parents who accepted the Christian religion. His mother was a member of the Church; he had the benefit of early religious instruction; attended church and Sunday-school regularly in childhood; learned parts of the Bible by heart; tried to get religion at the age of twelve, but was not fully successful; was more so three years later; joined a church; believed in Jesus, and several times a day for a baker's dozen of years called regularly upon his name and that of his illustrious father; afterwards parted with some of his religious ardor, though not from any bad conduct; gradually lost confidence in prayer, and faith in what he had previously believed. Since then he has perhaps said some things that might be construed to be not exactly Christian-like, but having killed nobody; not having taken anything he could not carry away—if he had been President, had lain quietly in his grave while a generation or more had passed over his tomb, and it became desirable that he should be reckoned among the friends of Christianity, the unfavorable remarks he has made could, by your system, be charitably overlooked and forgotten.

Even that distinguished but much-abused individual, the Devil, by your easy process can be made a very fair Christian. He was of excellent origin or parentage; his early opportunities for moral instruction were of the highest character; but he had, according to Milton, a little unpleasantness in early life with his parent and was driven from home. He is said to have obtruded his advice on a certain occasion upon an inexperienced young man and woman relative to eating some fruit, and which is believed to have caused considerable trouble, but it cannot be shown that he was immoral in the transaction. It has repeatedly been intimated that he did not tell the truth, but if the record is closely examined, no instance can be found where he ever told a falsehood, ever killed anybody, ever wronged anybody, or even did anything that was contrary to the laws of morality or the rules of good society. I am sorry to say that the same cannot be truthfully said of his opponent. The Devil may be claimed as a Christian from his intimacy and friendship with the author of the system. They passed some time in each other's society, and made a remarkable exploring expedition together. His Satanic Majesty took his companion, first to the pinnacle of the temple, then to the top of a mountain so high that he showed his protégé not only the kingdoms on that side of the globe but on the opposite side as well. He evinced a disposition to enter into an extensive real estate operation with his friend, and proposed to transfer a very large amount of good land, town lots, mill sites, water privileges, etc., for a very moderate consideration; but it seems the trade was not perfected, owing, perhaps, to a supposed defect in the title. His willingness to negotiate, however, is not denied. It must be admitted, too, that he has exhibited very excellent qualities; that he has not shown himself immoral; has been patient under obloquy and aspersion; when he has been reviled he has reviled not again. When slander, abuse and all sorts of defamation have been continually used against him, he has presented an equable frame of mind and retorted not; is not vindictive, is not retaliative, but endures his aggravated wrongs with remarkable meekness and patience, never returning evil for evil but rather good for evil. He has shown himself a friend to the human race by befriending inventors, innovators, and reformers, and especially as a patron of science and learning. His great importance to the Christian system cannot for a moment be lost sight of, for he is the most important factor in the business. The principal character borrowed from Jewish theology could be spared from the system quite as well as the personage under consideration. Without a Devil there would be little use of creeds, churches, or preachers. So then, his immense importance to the system, joined with his meekness, amiability, and his many other excellent qualities of character, prove him, according to your easy process, to be worthy to be considered a Christian, should it be deemed desirable.

Pardon me if I have occupied too much space in illustrating your system. It works so easily and pleasantly that it is a perfect pleasure to put it in operation. As, however, a man's writings may be justly used to show what his opinions were, I will refer to some of Thomas Jefferson's in this reply, he being the individual at present most under consideration.

You allude to Jefferson's letter to his nephew and ward, Peter Carr—allow me to make a few extracts from that letter by way of showing the quality of Jefferson's Christianity: "Fix Reason firmly in her seat and call to her tribunal every fact, every opinion. Question with boldness even the existence of a God; because if there be one, he must more approve the homage of reason than that of blindfolded fear. . . . Read the Bible as you would read Livy or Tacitus. The facts which are within the ordinary course of nature you will believe on the authority of the writer as you do those of the same kind in Livy or Tacitus. . . . Those facts in the Bible which contradict the laws of nature must be examined with more care and under a variety of faces. . . . For example, in the Book of Joshua we are told the sun stood still several hours. Were we to read that fact in Livy or Tacitus we should class it with their showers of blood, speaking of statues, beasts, etc. But it is said that the writer of that book was inspired. Examine, therefore, candidly what evidence there is of his having been inspired. The pretension is entitled to your enquiry, because millions believe it. On the other hand, you are astronomer enough to know how contrary it is to the law of nature that a body moving on its axis, as the earth does, should have stopped, should not by that sudden stoppage have prostrated animals, trees, buildings, and should, after a certain time, have resumed its revolutions, and that without a second general prostration. Is this arrest of the earth's motion or the evidence which affirms it most within the laws of probabilities? You will next read the New Testament. It is the history of a personage called Jesus. Keep in your eye the opposite pretensions, 1, of those who say he was begotten by God, born of a virgin, suspended and reversed the laws of nature at will, and ascended bodily into heaven; and 2, of those who say he was a man of illegitimate birth, of a benevolent heart, enthusiastic mind, who set out without pretensions to divinity, ended in believing them, and was punished capitally for sedition by being gibbeted, according to the Roman law, which punished the first commission of that offense by whipping, and the second by exile or death in furea. See this law in the Digest, Lib. 48, tit. 19, § 28, 3, and Lipsius, Lib. 2, de cruce, cap. 2. These questions are examined in the books I have mentioned, under the head of "religion," and several others. They will assist you in your enquiries, but keep your reason firmly on the watch in reading them all. Do not be frightened from this enquiry by any fear of its consequences. If it end in a belief that there is no God, you will find incitements to virtue in the comfort and pleasantness you feel in its exercise and the love of others which it will procure you.

"In fine, I repeat, you must lay aside all prejudice on both sides, and neither believe nor reject anything because any other person or description of persons have rejected or believed it. Your own reason is the only oracle given you by heaven, and you are answerable not for the rightness, but uprightness of the decision.

"I forgot to observe, when speaking of the New Testament, that you should read all the histories of Christ, as well of those whom a council of ecclesiastics have decided for us to be pseudo-evangelists, as well as those they named evangelists. Because these pseudo-evangelists pretended to inspiration as much as the others, and you are to judge their pretensions by your own reason and not by the reason of those ecclesiastics. Most of these are lost. There are some, however, still extant, collected by Fabricius, which I will endeavor to get and send you."

I would be pleased to extend these extracts did space allow, but from these does it strike you that he talked just like a Christian? Is it not different from the advice that most Christian uncles would give their nephews and wards? Does it not, rather, sound like Infidelity? Did he not give too much importance to Reason and not enough to Faith? Would Talmage or Dr. Crosby give such advice?

In 1829 the Memoir and Correspondence of Jefferson, edited by his grandson, was published in four volumes, and in the same year appeared in the New York Observer (Presbyterian)—Sidney E. Morse, editor and founder, the following notice of the work, which does not strike me as being as appreciative as one Christian ought to be of the writings of another:—

"The Memoir and Correspondence of Mr. Jefferson, prepared by his grandson in four vols., 8vo, has just been published in Charlottesville, Va., and we observe that a brief notice of this work, expressed in terms of unreserved commendation, is going the rounds of the papers, and has been copied in some instances by the Truth of the religious journals. Before religious men, and especially Presbyterians, lend their aid to the circulation of this work, they would do well to examine its contents. Mr. Jefferson, it is well known, was never suspected of being very friendly to orthodox religion, but these volumes prove not only that he was a DISBELIEVER IN A DIVINE REVELATION, BUT A SCOFFER OF THE VERY LOWEST CLASS!"

BETTER to suffer without cause than to have cause for suffering.

What! by Presbyterian authority, a scoffer of the very lowest class, and still a Christian? Can that be Christianity? This Presbyterian brother, in quoting from the volumes, among other quotations gave the following:

"In a letter to James Smith, written a few weeks afterwards, he says of the 'doctrine of the Trinity':

"The hocus-pocus phantasm of a God like another Cerebus, with one body and three heads, had its birth and growth in the blood of thousands and thousands of martyrs."

"In a letter to John Adams, written in 1823, he says:

"The day will come when the mystical generation of Jesus, by the Supreme Being as his father, in the womb of a virgin, will be classed with the generation of Minerva in the brain of Jupiter." Is that pretty good Christianity?

"In a letter to William Short, written in 1822, he thus speaks of Christian Ministers and the Christian Sabbath:

"We have most unwisely committed to the hierophants of our particular superstition, the direction of public opinion, that lord of the Universe. We have given them stated and privileged days to collect and catechise us, opportunities of delivering their oracles to the people in mass, and of moulding their minds as wax in the hollow of their hands."

Friend Humphrey, do these utterances—those quoted from Jefferson particularly—please you as Christian injunctions? Did Thomas Paine say anything more pointed and explicit? Are these the kind of Christian sentiments that you delight to recommend to your hearers?

The Presbyterian editor of the Presbyterian Observer, in the following, gave this opinion of Jefferson—not very complimentary, truly, for one Christian to speak of another:—

"That he was a Humanitarian of the lowest class and a Materialist, appears from the following passage to President Adams, written in 1822:

"But while this Syllabus (he says) is meant to place the character of Jesus in its true and high light, as no impostor himself, but a great reformer of the Hebrew code of religion, it is not to be understood that I am with him in all his doctrines. I am a MATERIALIST; he takes the side of Spiritualism; he preaches the efficacy of repentance towards the forgiveness of sin; I require a counterpoise of good works to redeem it," etc.

"In the same letter, after speaking of the 'stupidity of some of the evangelists' and early disciples of Christ, and the 'rogue' of others, Jefferson says of Paul:—

"Of this band of dupes and impostors, Paul was the great Coryphaeus, and first corrupter of the doctrines of Jesus."

If Jefferson thus pronounced himself a "MATERIALIST," will you not find it rather hard work to make him a Christian in spite of himself? And is there not danger that you may be considered heterodox for claiming as a brother Christian one whom the pious editor of the New York Observer denounced as a "Materialist," and "a scoffer of the lowest class"?

In 1776, when Jefferson was in Paris, in a letter to his friend, Mr. Whyte, he used this language, which gives a clear view of his opinion of the clergy:

"If anybody thinks that kings, nobles and priests are good conservators of the public happiness, send them here. It is the best school in the Universe to cure him of that folly. He will see here with his own eyes that these descriptions of men are an abandoned confederacy against the happiness of the mass of the people. The omnipotence of their effect cannot be better proved than in this country, where, notwithstanding the finest soil upon the earth, the finest climate under heaven, and a people of the most benevolent, the most gay and amiable character of which the human form is susceptible; where such a people, I say, surrounded by so many blessings from Nature, are loaded with misery by kings, nobles, and priests, and by them alone." And more in the same vein.

As a proof that Jefferson did not regard Atheistical works, even, with disfavor, it may be stated that he had them in his library, and that he read them carefully and with approbation is proved by the notes he made. In D'Holbach's "System of Nature," the chiefest among the Atheistical works of that day, Jefferson made copious notes, most of which showed that he did not disapprove of a majority of the positions of the author. Want of space will not allow them to be quoted now.

He took no pains to conceal his aversion to the Christian dogma of the Trinity. In a letter to Col. Pickering he scouted "the incomprehensible jargon of the Trinitarian arithmetic, that three are one and one is three." Even after he had arrived at the age of eighty years he declared that in his opinion "it would be more pardonable to believe in no God at all than to blaspheme him by the atrocious attributes of Calvin."

What he thought of religious revivals, etc., may be gathered from what he said upon the subject in a letter to Dr. Cooper. "In our Richmond there is much fanaticism, but chiefly among the women. They have their night-meetings and praying-parties, where, attended by their priests, and sometimes by a henpecked husband, they pour forth the effusion of their love to Jesus, in terms as amatory and carnal as their modesty would permit to a mere earthly lover." He said, too, "The final and complete remedy for the fever of fanaticism is the diffusion of knowledge."

Does this language strike you as being peculiarly like a Christian's?

I could quote much more from Jefferson in a similar vein, but I have already occupied too much room and will defer further quotations for the present. If, however, your confidence is unshaken in the genuineness of his Christianity I will have to recur to his writings again. A man ought to know better what he believes himself than those who live fifty years later, whether it be Mr. Randall or any other biographer.

You admit that the New American Cyclopaedia of 1864 classed him as an "Infidel." That is high authority, and I do not wish to question it. The effort ten years later to modify the opinion, or to explain it away, is unsuccessful. It must stand that Jefferson was regarded as an Infidel.

It strikes me that you attempt to make too much difference between a Deist and a Theist. Deism is a belief in one God, and Theism is nothing more. A Theist may or may not believe in revelation and in the divine origin of the Scriptures, while a Deist is generally supposed to not so believe. That is the only difference. Both equally discard the divinity of Jesus and the dogma of the Trinity.

I am surprised that, with the fate of the Rev. Mr. Miller before your eyes, you still insist that "the doctrine of the divinity of Christ is not the dividing line between Infidelity and Christianity, but the divine origin of the Bible." You seem a little contradictory, too, when, afterwards, you allude to Christ as the "Founder of Christianity." If a belief in the Scriptures is all that is necessary to make a Christian, the Scriptures must be the "Founder of Christianity," and the Jews ought to be excellent Christians, for they accept the divinity of more than three-fourths of the Bible. It is a noticeable fact that the reputed "Founder of Christianity" did not specially enjoin a belief in the divinity of the Scriptures, but positively enjoined a belief in himself. He said expressly he was the way, the truth, and the life; and that those who did not believe in him could not be saved nor be his disciples. He said in the most positive manner, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." Did Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson believe, and were they baptized? No. Then they could not be Christians. They were neither believers nor can you sustain a claim that they allied themselves to any Christian Church. Peter, the leading disciple, and the one who did the heavy business of the concern, in speaking of the author of Christianity, said: "There is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." And when Paul—who, you will hardly deny, had considerable to do towards establishing Christianity—war with Silas, and was asked, "What must I do to be saved?" he laconically replied, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved;" and this injunction he virtually repeated in his epistles over and over again. Did he not pointedly say, "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life"? He said very little about the importance of acknowledging the divinity of the Scriptures, which assuredly he should have done if it is, as you assert, of more consequence than a belief in Christ. None of the disciples or apostles laid much stress upon the importance of a belief in the Scriptures, but faith in the Lord Jesus they represented as being the sine qua non of Christianity. I think you will hardly contend that you know better what constitutes a Christian than did Christ, Peter, Paul, and the rest of the apostles.

By making a belief in Christ of little or no consequence, you practically occupy the same ground which the Rev. Mr. Miller does who denies the Trinity, and for which he has just had a trial and been expelled from the ministry for heresy. With equal appropriateness could the Rev. Mr. Mott point his finger at you, as he did at the Rev. Mr. Miller, your brother clergyman, and say, "Brother Humphrey, I charge you with taking away my Lord and Savior, and I don't know where you have put him. You have robbed the character of Christ of its most precious attributes." I tremble for you, my friend, and almost fear your turn will come next.

I cannot at this time pay much attention to the views of Adams; and it is hardly necessary, for you have only shown him to be a Deist or a Theist. He surely did not accept Jesus as the Divine Being; and the letters which passed between Jefferson and himself establish the fact that they were of the same opinion as to Jesus being God. It is unnecessary to add more.

I will make one more quotation in reference to Franklin before we leave him too far in the rear. In his Autobiography, p. 186, he says: "Some books against Deism fell into my hands; they were said to be the substance of the sermons which had been preached at Baylis' Lectures. It happened that they wrought an effect on me quite contrary to what was intended by them. For the arguments of the Deists, which were quoted to be refuted, appeared to me to be much stronger than the refutation. In short, I soon became a thorough Deist." However distasteful the term Deist is to you, you here have Franklin's positive avowal that he became a thorough Deist, and if he gives no intimation that he changed from that belief, we must conclude that it remained unchanged. It matters little what pious biographers, whether D.D.'s or LL.D.'s, may say about his being a Christian. His own clear statement is of more worth than a thousand unfounded claims.

I am sorry that you deemed it necessary to make that unkind fling at Robert Dale Owen in connection with the Katie Kling business. For more than half a century he has been a prominent man in this country, and as a statesman, as a writer, and as a citizen, he has had but few superiors. His honor and truthfulness have never been called in question. If, in advanced life, he was deceived by a shrewd trickster, it is hardly necessary or kind to call attention to it. It certainly does not argue that he did not truthfully relate a statement made to him by the Rev. Dr. Wilson over forty years ago. He believed only what he saw, while there are millions of people, who claim to be intelligent, who believe not only what they themselves never saw, but at which nobody else ever saw.

I wholly dissent from your summing-up. You claim to have shown that Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson were Christians. I utterly fail to see that you have done anything of the kind. True, they were moral, upright men, but they did not accept the leading dogmas of the Christian faith; they did not believe that Jesus was God, nor that he was miraculously begotten by a god. I claim to have shown that, being unbelievers in the Trinity and the divinity of Christ, they were not Christians, but Deists or, in other words, Infidels.

Pardon the length of my remarks. I will try in future to be briefer. I wished to answer your several positions, that I may be ready to defend the great moral and patriotic hero, Thomas Paine, to whom you propose, in your next, to give a general over-hauling. I doubt not you will aim to speak truly of him, but allow me to say, if you do him full justice you will be about the first Christian who has ever done so.

Very truly yours,

D. M. B.

Cowardly Journalism.

MR. BENNETT:—The following letter I addressed to one of our local papers here, but it was evidently too strong diet for its baby-readers, and hence was not served out to them. Their digestive powers are too weak for meat or even good graham bread, so they live on "manna" and the "milk of the word." I do not blame the publisher of the Express. He has to supply his readers with such food as tastes well to them, and they can assimilate. In a note declining my communication he regrets that my letter is such that he cannot publish it, and adds, "if you write us on any other subject, we will thankfully give you a hearing through the columns of our paper." Now, as I happen almost always to blunder "onto an unpopular subject" I seldom get a hearing in the Express. Yet for such as I do get I am duly thankful. As your paper has several readers in Napanee I send the unpopular, obnoxious epistle to you, so that the paper and ink won't be entirely wasted.

To the Editor of the Napanee Express, Sir:—In your last issue is an account of the confession and execution of Elder Lee, one of the leaders in the horrible "Mountain Meadow Massacre," which took place in Utah some twenty years ago.

I respectfully ask a brief space in your columns to draw attention to some very important facts in this case. Lee, in his dying speech, among other things said: "My conscience is clear before God and man, and I am ready to meet my Redeemer. I am not an Infidel. I have not denied God or his mercy. I am a strong believer in these things. I am a true believer in the Gospel of Jesus Christ," etc.

Now, we, as Rationalists, are charged by our Christian opponents with holding and disseminating doctrines which lead to vice, crime, and immorality. Mr. Underwood was shut out of the Napanee Town Hall two or three years ago because he held opinions which the Town Council did not hold, and which they assumed were immoral. In reply to our opponents we have always protested that their charge was unfounded—that our doctrines, both intrinsically and in their fruits, were as good, indeed better, than their own. We assert that Bible doctrines, especially the "plan of salvation," in many cases lead directly to immorality and crime, that the latter doctrine does indirectly hold out a premium to vice, and inducement to crime, to humanity as now constituted; and this position is confirmed and well illustrated by Bishop Lee's case, as well as thousands of other cases in the history of the past, and at the present. Many of the greatest crimes ever perpetrated have been committed in the name of God and religion. No matter how bad a life the believer leads, he can finally get forgiveness and be "washed clean" in that "fountain." This dying Christian, Lee, with his hands reeking in the blood of innocent women and children coolly tells us that "his conscience is clear before God and man," and that he is "ready to meet his Redeemer;" that he is a "strong believer in the Gospel of Jesus Christ," and then has the effrontery to add that he is not an Infidel, as much as to say that a pure life with disbelief in the "Gospel of Jesus Christ" is infinitely worse than his wretched blood-stained life with a belief in the Gospel! Such was his opinion, and such is the opinion of many more in our midst, who regard Freethinkers and Infidels as very bad and wicked, having no rights they are bound to respect. They do not estimate a man's worth by his actions, but by the belief he holds, or the creed he professes.

We say emphatically that such a belief is demoralizing, and tends to vice and crime, and ecclesiastical history as well as present events prove the assertion. The blackest of criminals may seek refuge in this "fountain open for all sin and all uncleanness." It is not long since one of these, who swung from the gallows in our own province, declared before taking his exit, that now he was certain of heaven, but if "he had not committed the murder he believed he would have never got there." In the face of such facts, which are constantly transpiring, for us to be charged with holding doctrines tending to vice and crime, is amusing were it not so serious a matter. Indeed, it is we who do believe in virtue and morality, though we do not believe in faiths, creeds or confessions.

Religion in a man is no safeguard against crime. To be a Christian is no guarantee of morality. To be filled with "true inwardness" is no evidence of being full or half full of chastity, honesty, and morality. On the contrary, there are many who are so full of religion, and "strong belief in the Gospel of Jesus Christ," that there is little or no room for things so unimportant as honesty, honor, truthfulness and justice. These in the scales with those are exceedingly light. In looking sometimes at the fruits thereof, we feel justified in exclaiming that crime and immorality are in the ratio of religion. Hence our opposition.

ALLEN PRINGLE.

Selby, Ont., April 1st, 1877.

The creation of a thousand forests is in one acorn.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.
SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 12, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 22.

Great Jehovah, with thy consent, let us continue our enquiries of thee relative to the faiths that men have maintained in past ages.

Is it not true that the creeds and dogmas of the world, for the last five thousand years, have been outgrowths, one from another, descending from one nation to another, precisely as the symbol of the cross was borrowed by many nations and many religions from the same general source?

Was not the symbol of the cross equally as expressive and equally as sacred when used by the ancient fetish worshippers, by the ancient Phallic worshippers, by the ancient Hindoos, Thibetians, Arabians, and Egyptians, in memory of their incarnated gods, as when borrowed from them and used in a similar way by the Christians?

In the same manner was not the supposed birth-day of thy son, called the "Christmas Festival," which occurs on the 25th of December, taken, out-and-out, from pagan observances and traditions?

Has not the 25th of December been observed as a festival more than twice as long as Christianity has had an existence?

Was it not thousands of years ago piously commemorated in India, Chaldea, and Egypt? Was not its observance attended with pomp, hilarity and rejoicing?

Did not the ancient Druids also keep the same festival, and did they not at that time decorate their places of worship and their dwellings with the boughs of holly, mistletoe, fir, and other evergreens?

Did not this festival of December 25th originate with the star-worshippers of Chaldea as being the day when the sun of this solar system had its birth and began to rise—from the long night of darkness, cold and death in which for months it had been buried?

Does not the sun, in fact on that day begin to rise in the heavens and to throw his life-giving and beneficent rays more directly upon the earth, which receives from this source its light and heat and life?

Is it not easy to see that from this astronomical fact of the sun commencing to rise, or in other words, to be born, on the 25th day of December, has been the origin of all the birth-of-the-Son-of-God ideas with which the world has been filled? Was not the original conception purely of an astronomical character?

Has not the sun worship really been the parent of the numerous systems of religions and creeds that have prevailed over the earth? And as those ideas have spread in various directions, influenced by the ignorance and superstition which mankind have been cursed with, have not most crude and monstrous notions often been indulged in and have not most repulsive enormities been connected with those creeds?

Is it not true, too, that there is a decided discrepancy as to the time when Jesus was born, and is not the most certain fact we have in the case, that he was not born on the 25th of December?

Do not Christian authorities disagree widely as to the year and as to the time of the year in which Jesus was born? Is there not a difference of seven years as to the year, and of as many months as to the time in the year?

Did not the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol incline to the opinion that he was born in February, while Dr. Robinson contended that it took place in Autumn? Did not Dr. Lardner give it as his opinion that Jesus was born from August to November, while Weisler, the German chronologer, and Tischendorf adhered to February or one of the Spring months?

Are not the probabilities about as strong that he was not born at all as any other way? Are not the accounts of his conception, of his childhood, youth, and even his whole life so vague—as given by those writers called Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John—and so utterly unsupported by any corroborative history or biography, while partaking so much of the myths and legends that are known to have existed in the world hundreds of years earlier, that it is a very fair conclusion to come to that the entire story of his life and adventures is sadly in need of confirmation?

Is not this more especially the case when the real apocryphal character of those gospels is understood and the facts are known that there is not the slightest proof that those narratives were in existence, as they are now known, until one hundred and fifty to two hundred years of the Christian era had passed away?

Was not Immortality of the Soul a doctrine that was taught and firmly believed in by the pagans long before the Christian religion was established? Was it not distinctly taught by the Indian and Persian Magi, reformers, leaders and redeemers?

Was not the soul's immortality taught by Thales, Pythagoras, Plato and numerous others of the ancient sages and philosophers?

Has Christianity any just right to claim the paternity of the doctrine of immortality?

Was not Baptism a religious ceremony that was practiced in heathen countries long before Christianity adopted it? Did not the ancient Hindoos have great faith in efficacy of water in cleansing the soul from sin, and did they not have their periodical ablutions?

Was it not thought that the river Ganges was more holy than the water from other rivers, and that it was more efficacious in removing the stains of sin?

Was it not also believed that once in twelve years the waters of Lake Cumbachum were possessed of special power to wash away the effects of sin, and were they not resorted to with great religious confidence and earnestness?

Was it not also a regular ceremony with the Brahmins to sprinkle the infants with the holy water of the Ganges on the ninth day after birth? When a person was dying, did not the Brahmins hastily plunge into a river under the belief that by the action of water the soul of the dying man would be cleansed from the effects of sin?

Did not all the Asiatic nations attach great sacredness to water, and did they not all at stated periods practice ablutions as important ceremonies in their religions?

Was not the rite of Baptism and the veneration for holy water clearly borrowed by the Christians from the systems of religion that had an earlier existence?

In like manner was not the Eucharist—the Lord's supper—an old rite among the pagans? Was not the ceremony of the feast of the Lord's supper long kept up in the city of Eleusis and other parts of Greece in honor of the God, Bacchus, or the Sun, and called also the Son of God, and this long prior to Christianity?

Was it not held by the Grecians that the goddess Ceres gave her body to be eaten by her worshippers? Did not Bacchus in like manner give his body and his blood?

Was not the belief common also in the ancient Asiatic nations that holy bread had a direct influence in propitiating the anger of their gods, and was not the eating of holy bread often resorted to?

Did not the ancient Brahmins have a kind of Eucharist called "prajadom," and does not the writer, Alnitona, give an account of it?

Was it not also a custom among the ancient Peruvians when they had sacrificed a lamb to their gods, to blend the blood with flour and distribute the cakes or wafers thus made among the worshippers to partake of?

Did not Cicero, forty years before the birth of Jesus, in writing against the absurd rite of the Lord's supper, put this question: "How can a man be so stupid as to imagine that which he eats to be a god?" Could not the same question be as appropriately asked at the present time?

Is it not fully clear that the rite of the Lord's supper is another of the Christian sacraments borrowed from pagans? And is it not an additional proof of the dearth of Christian invention in getting up ceremonies new and original, in place of borrowing the antiquated and absurd notions of the older systems?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

What I Don't Believe.—No. 29.

257. The next noted patriarch who claims our attention is General Joshua, the son of Nun. And although he is represented as being one who enjoyed special favor with Jehovah, and although it is said that he performed a feat which no other being, human or divine, has been able to accomplish, I do not believe he was a model of excellence, saintliness, and humanity. If he is truly represented, he was one of the most blood-thirsty of men, and took more delight in shedding blood and taking human life than almost any man of whom history gives an account. It was his custom not only to put to death all the prisoners of war who fell into his hands—which among all civilized people is regarded as most barbarous and inhuman—but he also executed the old men and the women and children. This is below the average conduct of the bloodiest savages, for they usually pay some respect to the opposite sex. But Joshua seemed to be perfectly merciless. He caused women and babies to be executed in cold blood with as little compunction as he caused the fighting men to be slain on the field of battle. The worst feature about the whole business is, that it was done by the command of the King of Heaven! I cannot believe that the Universal Father ever commanded any such murderous massacres and slaughtering campaigns.

258. To take the story of the entrance of Joshua and the Jewish hordes into the land of Canaan; of his putting to death thirty-one kings and their armies, with the total destruction of nearly as large a number of cities, it is one of the cruellest tales of blood and wrong that has ever been written. The people who dwelt in the land of Canaan had as much right to their country as any people ever had to the country in which they lived. They seemed to pursue their course in life with as little intermeddling with the affairs of other nations as the average of people in that age of the world. Their great crime seemed to be that they occupied a portion of the earth's surface which the envious Israelites themselves wished to possess, and for this reason the most relentless, blood-thirsty war was persistently prosecuted against them of which we have any record.

259. Joshua's campaign of blood and robbery commenced at the city of Jericho, where he caused the walls of the city to be thrown down by the blowing of seven trumpets of ram's horns by seven priests for seven days (there must have been a charm in the number seven), and the shouting of the multitude—a singular way, truly, to throw down the walls of a city. As walls will not tumble now by that process, I do not believe they did then. That Joshua caused all the men, women and children to be put to death, except the harlot, Rahab, I can readily comprehend, because the same kind of cruelty was displayed on so many other occasions.

260. I cannot understand what God should want of the articles of gold, brass, and iron, of which the people of Jericho had been despoiled, and that every article of those metals should be added to his treasury, and that he should be so unwilling for anybody else to have a little. One would suppose he meditated starting an extensive junk-shop. Those in that business have a great fondness for gathering up old articles of gold, brass, iron, pewter, etc.

261. The fate of Achan was rather a hard one. In helping to despoil the citizens of Jericho of their valuables, he saw a nice wedge of gold and two hundred shekels of silver that he coveted, and, doubtless thinking that "to the victors belong the spoils," appropriated them for his own use and buried them in his tent. It seems, however, that God missed his shekels and became very indignant at being robbed in that manner. A search was instituted and an investigating committee set to work. When Achan and his theft were discovered, like Boss Tweed, he confessed and surrendered up the stolen property. But this did not procure his release nor save his life, and his fate illustrates how dangerous it is to pilfer anything that God takes a notion to. It mattered not how much was taken from the Jerichoites, nor how many poor men, women and children had to be killed to obtain it; that was all well enough, but if God took a fancy to the plunder so obtained, it was a most dangerous proceeding to purloin a particle of it. Poor Achan was taken into the valley of Achor, and his sons and daughters also, and there they were stoned to death. If it was justice to put Achan to death for taking the wedge of gold, I cannot see the slightest justice in putting his sons and daughters to death for the offense he had committed. That was divine justice, however, as administered by Joshua, and has since been further illustrated in a similar way.

262. The story of Joshua's deeds of blood and carnage is too distasteful to follow in detail. His wars upon the inhabitants of Canaan, his indiscriminate slaughter of men, women and children in the various cities that he overpowered and devastated—the people of which had as good a claim to the country they occupied as nations ever have to any country—those massacres and those butcheries, form a picture too painful to gaze upon. We are told that these were "holy wars"; that God commanded them and directed them, and that the numerous streams of blood that were made to flow alike from old and young, male and female, were produced by the immediate command of the God of love and mercy! I beg to dissent from this belief. I do not think that any good being ever planned such a murderous campaign. If God is equally the father of all men and all nations, why should he proclaim an edict that the inhabitants of Palestine—who for generations had peacefully occupied that hilly country—should be warred upon, massacred, murdered, and exterminated from the face of the earth, only that another nation—apparently no better, but more favored—should be allowed to possess the land? It was so cruel, so merciless, and so excessively unjust, that I cannot believe the kind Father of All ever commanded that such deeds should be performed. It was the work of the warrior, Joshua, and his bloody cohorts, and it was most base and false to charge it upon the merciful, peaceful, loving Ruler of the Universe. It was bad enough, in all conscience, for the bloody Joshua to commit all the murders and butcheries that are attributed to him, without charging them upon the Universal Father, if Jehovah is that Universal Father.

263. Having before alluded to the most stupendous falsehood that was ever uttered, that a brutal warrior like Joshua was able to arrest the sun and moon in their courses and to make them stand stationary in the heavens while he continued to slaughter beings, and for that purpose only, it is unnecessary to say much in reference to it here. The untruth is too grossly absurd for any person with three grains of sense to believe it; but, nevertheless, thousands and millions profess to believe it, and count it a virtue deserving a seat in heaven for millions of ages to believe that and kindred impossibilities and monstrosities. It would seem that if Joshua could have succeeded in holding the sun in its course it would have been quite sufficient without detaining the moon. What good it did to have the moon stand over the valley of Ajalon while the sun was pouring down its bright rays, is hard to understand. The merest school-boy knows that the moon shines with light borrowed from the sun, and that while the latter is above the horizon the former is scarcely ever visible. The writer of the big story probably did not think of that, and he made both the sun and moon do service while Joshua and his murderers put a few more thousand wretches to death.

264. We also previously alluded to the other very remarkable feat performed by Joshua—the dividing of the waters of the River Jordan when that rapid stream was so high that it could not be forded, thus enabling his immense army to pass over dry-shod. The story is too silly to be worthy of any sensible person's belief. It can be easily understood that a murderer, a brigand, a robber, with a few hundred thousand men like himself, could overrun a country, burn its cities, exterminate the men, and put the women to death with the sword, but we cannot understand how such a monster could in the slightest degree control the motions of the heavenly bodies and cause the waters of a rapid river to divide and wall up on either side while a vast number of people crossed safely over. These absurd recitals must be classed among the monstrous inventions of the crude minds in the age of darkness, mysticism, and ignorance, when miracles were believed in and were said to be performed.

Let us charitably hope that such a man as Joshua never lived, and that the deeds claimed to have been performed by him belong to a fabulous, mythical narrative invented and written a thousand years after the time in which he was said to have lived.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

A Plea for the Clergy.

NO. II

But now we come to the Solomonic and Davidic feature in the character of so many of the clergy—their illegal love for women. Can anything be said in defense or explanation of their conduct in this line? Let us see.

It is alleged that of the three learned professions—Law, Medicine, and Theology—a larger number pro rata of the clergy go astray with the fair sex than either doctors or lawyers. Admitting this to be the case, is it not easily explained? Is there another class of men in society who have more temptation, I mean opportunity? Doctors, it is true, mix a great deal with women, and have confidential relations with them, but it is professionally. Sickness in women is a bar to all amative indulgence. Besides, if a doctor were to make frequent visits, and to sustain such intimate relations to women in full health as they do to those who are sick, they would soon be suspected by husband or father, and their calls would be made, like angels' visits, few and far between. As for the lawyers—poor devils—their hearts are so hardened by their necessary professional association with crime and criminals, and so cankered and calloused with greed, that they would be as harmless among women as the black eunuch in the Sultan's harem in Constantinople. But the clergy are not so icy-hearted. They are just the reverse. They live well, see human nature, especially woman human nature, in its most captivating aspects. They sustain to their congregations the official relations of pastor or shepherd; the people are their sheep—and sheep are proverbially simple and gullible. The clergy lead their flocks, not only openly, as a drover with a pan of salt leads sheep through a Western town on their way to market, but they lead them also beside the quiet waters of retirement and obscurity. There is a very close relationship, in intellectual and emotional economy, between the religious love kindled by evangelical zeal on the one hand, and sexual love brought about by personal intimacy on the other, as is proven by the history of Methodist love-feasts, quarterly and camp-meetings. In times of revival, the pastor, in his love for souls, is brought into close relationship with the lambs as well as the ewes of his flock. They come to him with their spiritual troubles, their hopes, and their fears. He sympathizes with them, and soon gains their entire confidence. During these tender interviews he takes their hands in his, perchance brushes away a penitential tear, and the magnetic currents which they both feel, especially the woman, coursing along the nerves, are set down, in their ignorance, as signs of true religious devotion. At parting he greets her with a "holy kiss," and then retires to his study for reflection.

In the city of New York there are hundreds of married women who suffer from isolation and loneliness. Their husbands do business down town, leaving home after breakfast, dining at some restaurant, spending their evenings with their male companions, and not showing their faces again till ten or eleven o'clock at night. All day these women are alone; their servants are down stairs in the kitchen and the children are at school. The pastor calls, finds the lady of the house disengaged and only too glad to see him and to have an hour or two of chat. She is attractive in her person and manners, and pious withal, and is the very woman to appreciate such kind attention. In fact, he treats her with more consideration than does her own husband who too often considers that he has discharged his duty in the main when he pays the expenses of his home establishment. The lady and the pastor, being mutually pleased with such a visit, it is soon repeated, and when she expects him, as she does, she makes herself and all things else around very agreeable and convenient. In a little while an intimacy is formed which makes all things not only possible but probable; not only probable but certain. Can a man put, or allow to be put, coals of fire in his bosom and not be burned?

But, you say, the clergyman and the lady both being members of the church, and he a minister of the Gospel whose business it is to preach against everything that is wrong, there can be no danger of the beautiful vase of chastity being broken by rough handling between them. Why, bless your unsophisticated pagan heart, is he not the Lord's Anointed? Is he not an ambassador of Jesus Christ, his commission as such signed and sealed in the court of Heaven, as well as bearing the imprimatur of the conference? He would not propose or accept anything that was wrong; and the very fact that he proposes or consents to anything like it proves conclusively that the thing is not really wrong but only seemingly so to the world. You being a pagan, Mr. Editor, have no idea at all of the astonishing confidence most church women have in their pastors, especially those who live isolated in cities, and receive attentions from them such as I have described. Can you wonder, then, that when the temptation is so strong, and the opportunity so favorable, so many of the pastors should benevolently assist the absent brethren of the congregation in performing some of their marital duties? I can easily conceive that a fine-looking, well-developed, smart, and unscrupulous man, of strong amorous feelings and conscious magnetic power, who understands the meaning of a "paroxysmal kiss," should seek the gospel ministry, especially in a city, which, for such designs, is as safe as a wilderness, for the very purpose of spending a life of sensual gratification. In the Church the pastures are ever fresh and green, the bars all down, and such is the confidence reposed in the clergy that there is little danger of detection or suspicion.

If the clergy in this country should increase in number during the next hundred years as they did during the last, and increase too in the unsuspecting confidence of church-members, male and female, the state of things in society might be fearful to contemplate. We might have such times again as we read of in ecclesiastical history, when the priesthood, under the profession of saintly celibacy, were the greatest whoremongers in society, and no absent father of a family, if he had a handsome wife, could tell which of his children were begotten by himself and which by the priest.

Do not understand me as bringing a wholesale charge of debauchery against the clergy as a class. Among the sixty thousand of them who now guide the footsteps of the Lord's flock as shepherds, there are, no doubt, multitudes who are honorable and safe men, and who are above suspicion in their relations to women; who, having wives and daughters of their own to love, do not forget that other men, too, have wives and daughters whose virtue they prize above all price. The frequency of clerical delinquency, as published in the newspapers, has induced me to offer an apologetic explanation in their behalf, and to show that, being so exposed to temptation, as they are by the very constitution of the Church itself, it is not strange that they should go astray. The men of the Church themselves are the last ones who should complain when they see their wives and daughters getting into trouble that affects their reputation for chastity. With a stupidity that is at once astounding and unpardonable, under the name of religion, they bring the clergy and the women into such relations to each other as must, in the nature of the things, produce the effect we see in so many cases. In the excess of superstitious adulation, which exceeds that of the ancients for their priesthood, the clergy have been called the "Angels" of the churches, too heavenly in their thoughts and aims to care much for earthly things. But if their devotees would disrobe them to the skin and look, they would see no signs of wings growing out of their shoulders, not even rudimentary wings, proving, according to Darwin, that there had been real wings in the olden times when the Church was the all in all to the subjected and wondering nations of Europe.

But to abate somewhat the discouragement of the outlook, I ought to observe that the Church, like the tide of the ocean, has reached the limits of her flow, and begins to ebb. As the cauldron, when it boils, puts out the fire itself which causes the overflow, so the Church, by the extravagance and hardness of her claims, and by the facilities she affords for practicing the most awful corruptions under the guise of religion, is gradually opening the eyes of the people everywhere. Husbands, knowing the power and opportunity of the clergy over their weak women, who compose to so large an extent the membership of the Church, are beginning to be jealous of pastoral visits, whether made at their houses by the pastors, or at the pastor's study by the women, who go there to talk about the salvation of their souls and the welfare of their beloved Zion.

I used to be an advocate of woman's suffrage, but the revelations of late years have cooled my ardor in the cause. For such still continues to be the supremacy of the clergy over the sisterhood of the Church, who are zealous and adoring in proportion to their intellectual and moral weakness, that if God and Christ and the Bible were to be put into the Constitution of the Government, and women had a vote, those who are Infidels would find themselves, some bright morning, shaking hands with their friends through the grated doors of a prison.

OMICRON.

A Text from Deborah.

MR. EDITOR: It is surprising to me that clergymen do not sometimes use as a text the thirtieth verse of the fifth chapter of Judges, third clause of the verse:—"To every soldier a damsel or two." I found myself, last Sabbath, in a beautiful church, face to face with a mountain missionary whose rough manner of reading was so distasteful to me that, to forget it, I commenced repeating to myself Danish ballads. Just as I reached the verse,

"It was Sir Ebbe Skammelson Rode swift upon his way."

this saintly man finished his loathsome task, by raising his eyes to heaven in the most sanctified way, as he repeated the line from Deborah's song, "To every soldier a damsel or two," and presently, smoothing the plaits of his white robe, he exclaimed, "Here endeth the first lesson."

"O, what a lesson!" thought I, and I called to mind the frightfully disgusting passages that had been read within those walls during the last few months.

The men will not attend and listen to such revolting texts, but remain at home, reading newspapers and useful books, and I honor them for it.

So the congregation was made up of forlorn women, who felt a little unwilling to neglect the house of God; at the same time, I knew that if this mountaineer had displayed the sense of a fly, and discoursed beautifully upon science, art, or literature, they would have responded nobly, every one of them; for women have often great capabilities slumbering and withering in their souls, if there was anything to call them forth. How can it be otherwise, when the imperial tide that courses through their veins has warmed the hearts of orators, artists, geniuses, of all descriptions.

The sermon was on prayer, and was a piece of confusion double confused, into which the wretched bungler contrived to insinuate a brutal denunciation of the Methodists. He had himself been a Baptist, but was now an Episcopalian.

"Yes," whispered a lady to me, "he had better talk that way. He burned up a Methodist church a long time ago, I was told, to see the old ladies run. He was the worst boy that ever lived."

"I should think so," I replied. But he went on. "Spare them," muttered I, "I could be a Mohammedan or Methodist, but never a Baptist."

If I had been able to remember the outrageous medley that he inflicted upon us, with its absurd phrases and diabolical imagery, I could, on reaching home, have adapted it to a wild chant, which might have succeeded admirably as an incantation to be used by the witches in "Macbeth." How charmingly would its recital have brought up the roaring ebullition of their cauldron. Of course, my prayer-book should be sent as an accompaniment. The tiny volume, with its neat clasp, never once thinking, when it was at the bookbinder's, that it ever should be doomed to

"Grace a dance of witches."

But before the saint completed this elfish attempt at oratory, he informed the congregation that his family had not tasted snap-beans or pound-cake for two years.

To return to the damsel or two. How much longer are the American people to be humbugged by conventions which could so easily expurgate the Bible, and prevent the use of revolting texts in the church service; but who choose to spend their time in a more pompous way, talking largely of Lord-Bishops from Canada, and delegates from Greece, Rome, Constantinople, Abyssinia, and Barriaboola-gha. Still more, it would add nothing to the salaries of clergymen to attempt to raise woman from her degraded situation.

Age after age the church has witnessed her dishonor, and continues to pour into maiden ears expressions too coarse to be translated into the English language. So well acquainted, too, as they are with the records of the past; how in Egypt, long ago, and also in Europe, the bride was taken from her husband by the priest.

In early times, travelers have also found pagodas filled with lovely girls; merchandise being made of their charms to pay the expenses of the temple. This practice was resorted to by the Jews, certainly, until the time of Josiah. In the ancient world, when conquerors exacted tribute, numbers of virgins were always sent, while Euripides, the abused, irreverent poet, yet proverbial for tenderness, is the only one who drops a tear over those horrors; describing with feeling the shrieks that rang through the field, after the battle, as the booty was divided and a "damsel or two" handed to each soldier. If such things had been done during our late war, the Church, to be consistent, could only with deep reverence have exclaimed, "it is right; to every soldier, a damsel or two."

When the isle of Scio was taken by the Turks—the most abandoned set of ruffians that ever composed an army—refined and accomplished young men and women were sold into slavery, but so similar was this to the proceedings of the Jews, that I suppose the Church dared not lift up her voice against it; and it was the privilege of the barbarous Endicott of Massachusetts to distinguish himself by surpassing the villainous brutality of Jew and Turk. His savage treatment of young Quakers and Quakeresses is well known; and, I presume, his admirers also boast of his piety and consistent conduct as a member of the church.

The revolting want of respect to women displayed by the sacred writers has, I presume, steeled the hearts of the great church dignitaries of England, so that the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, and other great men of angelic piety, have nothing to do but dine and wine in their palaces, and fare sumptuously; after which they can roll in state to some exquisite chapel, and repeat those words, so holy and ethereal that they must certainly smash in the windows of the seventh heaven as they rise to that sublime height, and seek entrance, "To every soldier a damsel or two."

At the same time, women come out and lift heavy trunks from English stages; and nice English girls are compelled to follow men to their rooms, where they kneel before them, ready to remove their boots from their feet; but what difference would that make to the Archbishop? He can devour his rich dinner and enjoy his wine just the same, with none to molest or make him afraid.

Some of the great professors in our institutions of learning are not as innocent as lambs in this connection; refusing to ladies a collegiate course, with the use of their fine libraries, cabinets of minerals, lectures, and philosophical apparatus; contemptuously denying them all these advantages; remarking, no doubt, the next moment, that women are inferior, and can never be elevated to an equality with themselves. After making such remarks, I presume they have often walked with pious decorum to some edifice "where dark towers thrilled with a heavenly chime," and after listening to rich intoning with celestial accompaniments, they gazed devoutly upon the preacher as he read many sentences disgraceful to woman and to the human race. The ladies just mentioned took refuge in an institution established expressly for their benefit, where, to elucidate to the eager mind of woman the great principles of nature, and to reveal to her enraptured eye the mazy paths of development and retrogression, they found upon a small shelf—placed there by some distinguished scholar, no doubt—a dried fish and a hornet's nest! But what has stupified thus the human heart, naturally so generous? The deadly and withering breath of St. Paul has corrupted the heart of the centuries and fastened fetters upon the soul and hands of woman; so now, to finish, she might as well be locked up in a chicken-coop, and carried about like the women of Asia, at least seeing the country and taking the air. Let the Caucasian race, if it will, invite and welcome influences certain to undermine its strength, poison its splendor, and it will have the happiness of bowing its proud head, and at last, following swiftly in the footsteps of its dwindling predecessors.

ZILLAH.

If a man hold himself dear let him watch himself carefully.

Bonaparte's Grave.

(Said to have been written by one of his marshals.)

On a lone, barren isle, where the wild roaring billows
Assail the stern rock, and the loud tempests rave,
The hero lies still, while the dew-drooping willows,
Like fond weeping mourners, lean over the grave.
The lightnings may flash, and the loud thunders rattle—
He heeds not—he hears not—he's free from all pain—
He sleeps his last sleep—he has fought his last battle—
No sound shall awake him to glory again.
Oh, shade of the mighty, where now are the legions
That rushed out to conquer when thou ledst them on?
Alas, they have perished in far hilly regions,
And all, save the fame of their triumph, is gone—
The trumpet may sound, and the loud cannon rattle,
They heed not—they hear not—they're free from all pain—
They sleep their last sleep—they have fought their last battle—
No sound can awake them to glory again.
Yet, spirit immortal, the tomb cannot bind thee,
For, like thine own eagle that soared to the sun,
Thou springest from bondage, and leavest behind thee
A name that, before thee, no mortal had won—
Though nations may combat, and war's thun-
ders rattle,
No more, on the steed, wilt thou sweep o'er the plains—
Thou sleep'st thy last sleep—thou hast fought thy last battle—
No sound shall awake thee to glory again.

SUPPLEMENT.

The undemonstrative, who fights his own battles—
No well-marshalled legions to march in the van—
No trumpet—no bugle—no loud cannon's rattle—
Is more than a hero—he's a well-balanced man.
Though friends should all fall him, or seemingly do so—
Though hell loose her minions, and heaven
look away—
In the midst of a throng, though more lonely than Crusoe—
He faints not—he fears not—would you like to know why?
He does not believe in the high-ding-e-diddle—
The heaven where flunkies crawl under the moon—
Nor does he believe that the cat's in the fiddle.
Nor that the dish runs away with the spoon.
He believes in a heaven of lilies and roses,
Where well-behaved people are in for a share;
No despot could breathe there—urbanity disposes
Magnanimous people to do what is fair.
A congress of sovereigns, who know their own duty—
No police is needful to keep them in line—
They are kings, in all wisdom, and queens in all beauty—
They have passed from the human—they have reached the divine.
Should duty require them, they are ready for action,
To scale the stern rock, or sweep o'er the plain—
Of heaven's calm sunshine, they allow no refraction;
They sleep not—they shrink not from glory
again.
Shakers, Jan. 1, 1877.

Book Notices.

Do THEY MATERIALIZE? Dissertation on the Biblical Evidence of Spirit Materialization.
By Moses Hull.

In this compact little pamphlet of twenty-six pages, crammed with Scriptural citations, Brother Moses parades proof palpable from the Bible that they do materialize. No pulpit-pounder alive can finger that holy old fiddle-like Moses. When he gets after the orthodox he makes as sorry havoc as ever did his "meek" and murderous namesake among the Midianites. He has probably given the godly as great grief as any heretic of this generation. He knows how to "go for" the gospels every time. When he gets to quoting Holy Writ the parsons had better "pass."
Any question he takes up gets to be a "Terrible Question" by the time he is through with it. Those who know anything of Moses won't enjoy a contented mind till they have enclosed ten, fifteen, or twenty cents (whatever the price may be) to the Crucible Office, 18 Eliot st., Boston, Mass., for a copy of his last "clinch."

THE SPIRITUAL OFFERING is the name of a bright, sprightly, well-executed monthly magazine form devoted to Spiritualism and to the interests of humanity—Nettie Pease
Fox, editor, and W. P. Kremer, St. Louis, printer, No. 1, of which has been received.
The initial number contains 24 pages, and subsequent numbers will contain 16 additional pages. In the salutatory the editor speaks as follows: "We pledge ourselves that the Offering shall be a firm, unflinching friend of human rights, and while unwearing in its efforts to present the highest Spiritual truths, it will not forget that man is a spirit to-day, and that life, liberty and truth are as essential to his happiness and well-being on this plane as they can be in Spirit Life. With this understanding of our work, we shall seek earnestly for the latest revelations of science, philosophy, and religion, ever willing to receive the grand thoughts that fall like silver dew from lofty minds in the supernal spheres." Price $1.25 per year,

75 cents for six months. Address Nettie
Pease Fox, Editor, 3,600 North Ninth st.,
St. Louis, Mo.

EHRLICH'S FASHION QUARTERLY for Spring
—of 74 pages—has been laid upon our table.
It is illustrated with nearly two hundred fine wood-cuts, and many of them large, representing the latest styles of fashions for ladies, children's and infant's dresses, hats, bonnets, head-dresses, etc. It appears to be an excellent guide or directory for those who wish to learn the latest styles and where to buy goods at the very lowest prices. It is issued by Ehrlich & Co., 287 and 285 Eighth Avenue, this city. They have built up a large business, and we learn are giving the best of satisfaction to their numerous customers.
Their published rules are, no one is allowed to misrepresent. The price of every article is marked in plain figures. One price to all.
For unsatisfactory articles the money refunded. Clerks instructed and paid to serve all politely. No one allowed to sell under these prices. Send to them for one of their Fashion Quarterlies, and learn all about it.

Anti-Usury Society.

The fourth annual meeting of the above named Society was held at Masonic Hall in this city May 7, 1877. Mr. Edward Palmer, the President, took the chair at 10 a. m., and, after addresses by Messrs. Hanson, Heywood, Maddox, Weeks, etc., the following resolutions were presented by R. W. Hume and were unanimously adopted.

Resolved, 1. That this Society commends to the notice of our Jewish brethren, attention to the three sets of laws promulgated by Moses against the taking of usury or interest, to be found in Exodus, Leviticus, and Deuteronomy.

2. That this Society commends the action of the Jewish Rabbis, who, it is believed, universally condemn the practice of taking usury between Jew and Jew.

3. That this Society commends a careful perusal of the third and thirtieth chapters of the Koran, which condemns usury-takers to hell fire, to all the followers of Mohammed.

4. That this Society commends to the serious attention of the Christian world the teachings of Jesus of Nazareth on the subject of money—viz: Give to him that asketh of thee and from him that would borrow turn thou not away—also on loans—"For if ye lend to those from whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye?
For sinners also lend to sinners to receive as much again. But—do good—and lend, hoping for nothing again."—Luke, vi. 34, 35.

5. That this society commends the action of the Pagan Romans who in the 411th year of the city of Rome forbade the legalization of usury in that city.

6. That this society commends the constancy of the Catholic Church which has ever condemned the taking of usury, and the wisdom of many of the pontiffs of that church, who, in their addresses have placed usury in the same category with theft.

7. That this Society commends the action of the Protestant Bishops of 1545 who, in the first act of Parliament legalizing interest for money in Christian England were permitted to and did ease their consciences by branding the taking of usury, even in the act authorizing it as "mortal sin."

8. Lastly—that this Society basing its demand on the authority of the wise and good of all nations and all ages, respectfully solicits from Congress the withdrawal of all laws sustaining usury or interest for money in any form among us; believing all such edicts to be highly detrimental to the interests of American citizens and the welfare of the human race.

The Free Labor and Anti-Usury Convention
continued two days, which were pretty well occupied by speeches from different advocates of Land Reform, the Rights of Labor, and Opposition to Monopoly and Usury. We were too busy to put in an attendance.

The Source of Morals.

PAWTUCKET, R. I., May 1, 1877.

MR. EDITOR: Your correspondent, Clay
C. Clinton, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 28th asks: "From what or whence do Infidels derive their moral code of law? or from what do they derive their sense of right or wrong?"

You answer that "morality or the moral code is derived from the great sense of right or wrong inherent in the breast of humanity."
The italicizing is mine. I mark the words because I dispute the "inherent great sense in the breast of humanity." The answer savors so much of what a religionist would give that I cannot let it pass as an "Infidel" answer to that question. The answer is so contrary to your usual rational and commonsense replies, that I feel bound to come out of my shell of self-satisfaction and exhibit my light, that others may be benefited by it, hoping it will lead them to a better understanding of this abstruse and greatly befogged subject. Moralists in all ages have maintained that the aim and end of morality is health and happiness. And yet there are scarcely any two writers upon this subject who agree upon what morality is. All systems of morality, whether Jewish, Christian,

Buddhist, Hindoo, Brigham Young's, or Ann Lee's, are but arbitrary systems, without any universal definite basis for foundation.
Hence we can account for all the conflicting notions of what is right or wrong. Morality is defined as ethics; and Webster defines ethics to be "a particular system of principles and rules concerning duty whether true or false." The principles of morality, to be of good and beneficial effect, must be of universal application to every person, at all times, and in all places. I propose to demonstrate such a system, based upon the constitution of man. I therefore assert, 1. That man is a purely physical being; 2. That man is not a moral being; 3. That that which we call moral has reference to the act or conduct of the man, and not to nature or being of man. Man being a physical, organized being, he is governed by certain organic laws; and a proper use of, or acting in conformity to these laws produces health and happiness; and an abuse of, or acting in opposition to these laws, produces degradation and misery. The Thug of India who meets a traveler on the highway and strangles him to death believes he is performing a religious and moral obligation, and is just as conscientious in the performance of the same as is the Brahmin who believes it to be a sin and an immoral act to take life, even that of the smallest insect. And the Christian who takes his wine "for the stomach's sake" and because it "cheereth his heart," is as conscientious as the Mohammedan who believes it to be immoral to do so. Thus we see that what is called moral at one time and place by some individuals is called immoral at other times and places by other individuals. Moral principles or correct rules of conduct will operate the same, at all times, in all places, and in every individual. Right is always right, and wrong is always wrong, at all times, in all places, and by whomsoever practiced. And anything set up as a moral principle that comes short of this is spurious, is productive of evil instead of good, and is not a correct rule of conduct. Civil, religious, or municipal laws are but arbitrary standards of what is right or wrong, and are changeable; but the moral law is as unchangeable as the organic laws of man's being. Man is not naturally bad. Every germ in his nature (however it may be vitiated by heredity) has a capacity for good; but it may be educated to bad. To make mankind moral and virtuous it is necessary to instill a knowledge of facts, especially the organic laws of the animal organism, or, in other words, the different functions of the various organs of the body, and a desire to healthfully exercise the same, as a means of producing well-being and happiness in themselves, in their children, and in posterity. If the three words, "Man, know thyself," which were placed on the front of one of the temples of antiquity, were to be taken as a guide for the education of youth, mankind would become as perfect, physically, intellectually, and morally, as it is possible for him to be.
Then would exist that halcyon age, when every man may sit under his own vine and fig-tree, and no one willing nor daring to make him afraid.

From the foregoing I maintain there is no inherent sense of right or wrong in the breasts or in the brains of mankind. Man must be correctly educated to give him a correct

character. With best wishes for your success in your various enterprises, I remain

Yours truly,

THOMAS ROBINSON.

REPLY.—We cannot see that, after all,
there is such a wide difference between Bro.
Robinson and ourself. When we said,
"The sense of right and wrong is inherent in the breast of humanity," we meant much the same that we presume he does when he speaks of the systems of morals being "based on the constitution of man." With him we believe man to be a physical being, and that all the qualities he possesses proceed from that physical organization. Morals meaning simply manners and customs—the ideas of right and wrong that prevail in various nations—and man, connected as he is with the great universe of matter and force, his organization being the immediate source whence he derives all his sensations, all his convictions, and all his sentiments, it would seem perfectly legitimate to say his moral sense comes from the sense of right and wrong inherent in his nature, or in the breast of humanity. To our conception, there is no other source whence it can come. There is no supernal source whence it can emanate.

True, man is a physical being in the strictest sense of the word, and from that physical nature he derives all that he possesses.
He may derive knowledge and information from his fellows, but they belong to the same kind of organization that he is of. It is hardly correct to say that man is not a moral being. Morals are only habits and customs, and as man is a being of habits and customs, he is essentially a moral being.

We disagree with our friend in his position that "right is always right and that wrong is always wrong" so far as this:—
Right and wrong, like good and bad, are relative terms, and they are right or wrong according to existing conditions. What is right at one time may be wrong at another.
What is good at one time may be evil at another. It is right, as a rule, to respect a neighbor's property, to not kill his dog, but if that dog becomes rabid, and the lives of the community are endangered then it becomes right to kill him. It is wrong, under ordinary circumstances, for the authorities of a city to disturb a man's house, but if a devastating fire is sweeping through the town, and the destruction of that man's house is the only means of arresting the flames, it is perfectly right to blow it up. Almost every thing in existence is good or evil, right or wrong, according to circumstances and conditions. Thus, fire and water, properly used and properly conditioned, are good, but when out of place, when masters instead of servants, they become great evils.

Morals, we know, vary in different parts of the world and in different nations and races of people. No code of customs are wholly right, and none are wholly wrong.
All contain good and all contain evil. The systems are all the results of human physical nature which has not yet arrived at a state of perfection. The highest code, the truest judge, the wisest umpire of which we have any knowledge, resides in the great family of humanity. It is our mission to elevate this great family, and thereby raise the standard of moral excellence. The inherent sense of right and wrong which has its seat in the great breast of humanity may be cultivated and improved. The morals of the race must necessarily improve in the same ratio with its physical and mental health and culture. When this is elevated to its highest possible condition the great breast of humanity will evolve a much higher code of morals than has yet prevailed in the world.
—[Ed. T. S.]

Friendly Correspondence.

HUDSON TUTTLE, Berlin Heights, O., writes:
Your singing book will meet a great want, and I hope your efforts to furnish a cheap literature to Freethinkers will be appreciated. I will do all I can to help you.

WM. DENTON, Wellesley, Mass., writes: I have been much pleased with the manly position taken by you in THE TRUTH SEEKER. You are doing good service. When I visit New York again I shall gladly call.

MARY E. FISHER, Shell Rock, Iowa, writes: I hail your paper as it comes each week freighted with rich truth, with great pleasure; and I wonder that any person with common sense can fail to understand the philosophy of its teachings.

GEO. D. MATHESON, Columbus, Ga., writes:
Enclosed please find P. O. order for $3.20 for which please send the following—viz: THE TRUTH SEEKER for one year. Send it to John W.
Brown, Columbus, Ga. He says you may date his subscription from the first of January and send the back numbers if you have them. I showed him my paper, and he was delighted with it and said he is only sorry that he did not know about it before so that he might have subscribed. Is not my subscription out? If so please advise me and I will forward money to renew at once. For the balance of the money please send twenty tracts and much oblige.

F. E. ASPINWALL, M. D., Loudonville, N. Y., writes: I wish to say that now after having read your paper for more than a year, I am even far better pleased with it than at first I anticipated.
I would be. I cannot but contrast its excellent common sense with some of the absurdities of "theology." One of the first ministers of Albany lately remarked in a sermon that he believed that deserts, swamps, quagmires, vegetable monstrosities and diseases, violent storms, earthquakes and volcanic eruptions were all the result of man's sin. This is no hearsay. I heard him say it. Verily the people are fed on hush.

RICHARD COMPTON, Volo, Ill., writes: I send you an anecdote too good to be lost, and it should be published in your paper. I heard a mother catechising a couple of boys on their Sabbath-school lesson, and she inquired, "Why did God forbid our first parents to eat of the fruit of one particular tree in the garden of Eden?" After a moment one of the boys answered, "Because he wanted the apples of that tree saved for his own use." I placed my hands over my outraged heart and gasped for breath and shed tears over that answer, which tends to elucidate a knotty point that never before was satisfactorily answered. The Freethinkers here are quite numerous, and those that run to the gospel-mills and dove-ology works have quite a wholesome regard for their images, and keep very quiet and reticent; if not they are smashed at the first and every provocation. THE TRUTH SEEKER is a first-class iconoclast, and has done and is doing excellent service here in quieting fanatics and fanatics, and showing them that "an honest God is the noblest work of man."

J. W. SCOTT, Mastersville, Texas, writes: After compliments to you in your noble enterprise devoted to Freethought and human happiness allow me a little space in the columns of your most excellent paper for the description of a gigantic under-jaw-bone and tusk of an enormous extinct animal recently found in this vicinity. The jaw-bone was about two feet above the bed in the escarpment of a small stream, at least fourteen feet below the surface of the soil. The tusk was lying in the bed of the stream, nearly uncovered. About half the impression it made in the soft sand-stone measured four inches in diameter. The gentleman who found it says it was four or five feet in length. It broke in fragments getting it up, plainly showing it was ivory. The jaw-bone was lying on the same sand-stone, the escarpment being nearly perpendicular, the washing of the water had only exposed a small portion of it. In digging it out they broke the jaw in the middle, also the upper end of each side, though in large pieces, so they could be put together to measure the dimensions accurately. Seemingly it is short in proportion to its enormous size. From the chin to the terminus or hinge is twenty-seven inches; from hinge to hinge is twenty-six inches; circumference at largest place, each side, twenty-six inches. One tooth, evidently the granitivorans, on each side, of the following dimensions: Length, ten inches; breadth, three and one-half inches at widest part, narrowing slightly to oval at each end. There are irregular grooves crossing the face of each at right angles. What is meant by the length is the face of the tooth horizontal with the jaw-bone. The formation above the jaw-bone is a clay upward to a deep black soil peculiar to this locality. The bed of the creek is almost covered with large submarine shells apparently petrified—no signs of petrification in the jaw-bone or tusk. My object in writing this and giving the best description I could of the formation in which this enormous bone was found, is that it may meet the eye of some naturalist or geologist—perhaps yourself—who probably would write an article giving us an idea as to what kind of an animal the jaw-bone and tusk belonged to, and how long it is supposed to have been since it existed upon the face of the earth. I have seen the fragments of tusk, and can assure you there is no exaggeration in the description above given. I cannot close without wishing great success to you in the glorious work in which you are engaged.

Special Notices.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N. Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygeian Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

WANTED—AN EXPERIENCED NURSE and house-keeper with approved morals, active, intelligent, and of sufficient age to give character to a Hygienic Institute. Would prefer a lady wishing treatment and board for impaired health, with a view to the position after it is restored. Address J. S. LYONS, M. D., Springfield, Mo.

POSITION OFFERED, to an industrious, enterprising man with a small capital, to become proprietor of a Health Institution where immediate returns will be realized. A Hygienic Physician preferred. Correspondence solicited. Address A. G. HUMPHREY, M. D., Care Western Health Institution, Galesburg, Ill.

THE SEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION of the American Labor Reform League will be held in Masonic Hall, 13th street, between 3d and 4th avenues, New York City, Sunday and Monday, May 6 and 7, at 10:30 A. M., 2:30 and 7:30 P. M. each day. J. K. Ingalls, E. H. Heywood, Wm. Hanson, R. W. Hume, Geo. W. Maddox, Dr. E. P. Miller, S. Mira Hall, Dr. C. S. Weeks, Edward Palmer, and other speakers are expected.

HEALTH TO THE AFFLICTED.—Every form of disease permanently and radically cured without drugs. Terms liberal. Send for circular. Address A. G. HUMPHREY, M. D., Galesburg, Ill.

WATER-CURE.—Dr. Lyon's Hygeian Home for the reception of patients for board and treatment, was established in 1874, and is meeting with marked success, both in numbers and cures. Send for circular, etc., to J. S. LYON, Box 247, Springfield, Mo. 12119

Stereopticon for Sale, AND OVER TWO HUNDRED BEAUTIFUL PICTURES.—As I wish to procure more expensive apparatus for my next season's work, adapted to the largest halls, I offer my oxy-calcium stereopticon (one of McAllister's best, suitable for halls seating 300 people), and over two hundred elegant views, for sale. It affords a safe, pleasant business for any gentleman who is desirous of traveling. For particulars address W. F. JAMIESON, Glenwood, Iowa.

Spermatorrhoea.

Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this life-wasting disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition: had been in insane asylums, many had falling-sickness fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS,

The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

E. P. Cooley, Manufacturer of Window Shades and Opaque Cloths.

64 READE STREET, NEW YORK.

Dealer in Fixtures, Cords, Tassels, Hollands, etc.

Combining the beauty of a Lace Curtain with the utility of a Window Shade. ORDERS BY MAIL PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO, and FORWARDED WITH CARE. Retail Orders delivered in any part of the country, C. O. D. In ordering special sizes give size of opening, also size of glass. State where you saw this adv. 8117

Just Issued! ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3 00; Leather, $1 00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4 50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher.

141 Eighth St., New York.

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

Sexual Physiology.....$3 00
Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book.....1 00
Health and Diseases of Women.....25
Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses.....50

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. TRALL, M. D., 21 E. Twentieth St., New York. 11

BANNER OF LIGHT,

The oldest journal in the world devoted to the

SPIRITUAL PHILOSOPHY.

ISSUED WEEKLY

At No. 9 MONTGOMERY PLACE, BOSTON, MASS.

COLBY & RICH,

Publishers and Proprietors.

ISAAC B. RICH.....Business Manager.
LUTHER COLBY.....Editor.
JOHN W. DAY.....Associate Editor.
Aided by a large corps of able writers.

THE BANNER is a first-class, eight-page, Family Newspaper, containing forty columns of interesting and instructive reading, embracing a LITERARY DEPARTMENT; REPORTS OF SPIRITUAL LECTURES; ORIGINAL ESSAYS—upon Spiritual, Philosophical and Scientific Subjects. EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT. SPIRIT-MESSAGE DEPARTMENT. CONTRIBUTIONS by the most talented writers in the world, etc., etc.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION IN ADVANCE.
Per Year.....$3 00
Six Months.....1 50
Three Months.....75

Postage fifteen cents per year, and must accompany the subscription.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Money-Order on Boston, or a Draft on a Bank or Banking House in Boston or New York City, payable to the order of Colby & Rich, is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Draft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the sender.

Specimen copies sent free.
ADVERTISEMENTS published at twenty cents per line for the first, and fifteen cents per line for each subsequent insertion.

COLBY & RICH,

Publishers and Booksellers,

No. 9 MONTGOMERY PLACE, BOSTON.

KEEP A FULL ASSORTMENT OF

SPIRITUAL, PROGRESSIVE, REFORM, AND MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS,

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

Catalogues of Books Published and for Sale by Colby & Rich sent free. 4119

The Evolution, No. 9.

Contents for MAY.

Rip Van Winkle: A Sun Myth.
Poetry, Music, and Science.
The Revelation.
Subjugation of Sentiment in Women.
Industrial Education.
Relation of Legislation to Society.
Ethics of the Positive Philosophy.
The Southern Problem.
An Eastern Reformer.
Hypocrites of Nature.
Sewer Gases.
The Telephone. Illustrated.
Spinoza.
Voices of the People.
Personals.
Scientific Notes.
Book Notices: Gen. Pleasanton.
The Blue and Sun Lights.

Among the Eminent Contributors to the EVOLUTION are:

James D. Bell, Prof. G. Barzillotti, Augusta Cooper Bristol, Caroline H. Dall, Henry Edger, Henry Evans, Edgar Fawcett, Prof. A. R. Grote, Col. T. W. Higginson, Sidney H. Morse, George Edgar Montgomery, Elmina D. Slenker, S. J. Tabor, M. D., B. F. Underwood, Sara A. Underwood, Prof. W. Watkins, Prof. T. P. Wilson, M. D., Prof. A. Wilder, M. D., F. A. S., Susan H. Wixon.

Ask your Newsdealer for THE EVOLUTION, or address (enclosing 15 cents) ASA K. BUTTS, Editor and Publisher, 34 Day St., New York. $12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit $12 and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1750

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"

In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

Bankrupt Sale of Jewelry.

GREAT FAILURE OF THE MILTON GOLD JEWELRY COMPANY IN LONDON

Their Entire Stock Consigned to us to Raise Money as Soon as Possible.

Everybody has heard of MILTON GOLD JEWELRY, it having been sold in this market for the last ten years, and worn by the best and richest class of our population. Still it takes an expert to distinguish Milton Gold from Virginia Gold. In order to dispose of this large consignment in the speediest way, we have put up lots which we offer to the public for the tenth part of their value.

FIFTY-CENT LOT.

One pair elegant sleeve-buttons, retail price $1 00
One set spiral shirt-studs, retail price.....75
One beautiful scarf-pin, stone setting, retail price.....75
One elegant gent's watch chain, latest pattern, retail price.....1 50
One collar-button, retail price.....50
One elegant wedding ring, very heavy, retail price.....2 00

Total.....$6 50

Remember that we will send you the above-named six articles, which we have retailed for $6 50, by mail, post-paid, for fifty cents, 4 sample lots for $1 50, or 12 sample lots for $4.

ONE-DOLLAR LOT.

One pair gent's sleeve buttons, stone setting.....$1 20
One set elegant spiral studs to match same.....1 05
One beautiful ladies' band engagement ring.....2 00
One gent's large seal ring.....2 00
One ladies' lang neck chain.....2 75
One gent's heavy plate watch chain.....1 75
One gent's "Lake George" diamond stud.....1 00
One beautiful scarf-pin.....75
One pair ladies' engraved sleeve-buttons.....1 00

Total.....$13 50

The above figures are the prices these goods have been retailed at in our leading cities. We mention these figures to give you an idea of the goods.

A FINE SOLID SILVER WATCH FREE.

On receipt of $15 we will send by express, one dozen 50 ct. lots and one of each of the others; also one elegant Watch, Ladies' or Gents' size, guaranteed to be a good timekeeper. Such opportunity is offered but once in a lifetime.

We want our patrons and the public in general to understand that this is Milton Gold Jewelry and no common Plated Ware. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance or money refunded. Send money by P. O. order or registered letter.

Our Firm and Milton Gold Jewelry are endorsed by all the leading newspapers of the country. Goods sent C. O. D. if $5.00 is sent with the order, not otherwise. Address all orders to

RALSTON JEWELRY CO.,

Importers of Watches and Jewelry,

LaSalle and Randolph Streets, Chicago, Illinois.

THE Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-Smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.
Paine's Monument.
Paine's Bust.
Voltaire.
Rousseau.
Humboldt.
Goethe.
Schiller.
Aug. Comte.
Heine.
Alex. Pope.
John Milton.
Goldsmith.
Shelley.
Byron.
Burns.
Washington.
Franklin.
Jefferson.
John Adams.
J. Q. Adams.
Madison.
Jackson.
Lincoln.
Lincoln's Monument.
Gerrit Smith.
Henry C. Wright.
J. S. Mill.
Sumner.
Edgar A. Poe.
Greeley.
Castellar.
Tennyson.
Darwin.
Tyndall.
H. Spencer.
Huxley.
Proctor.
Draper.
Bradlaugh.
Holyoake.
Ingersoll.
Underwood.
Mendum.
Seaver.
L. Colby.
Dr. Hare.
F. E. Abbot.
Frothingham.
Wendell Phillips.
Emerson.
Garrison.
Henry Bergh.
Peter Cooper.
D. R. Burt.
S. P. Andrews.
Walt Whitman.
Froude.
Max Muller.
Warren Chase.
Jas. Parton.
Wm. Denton.
Dr. Slade.
A. J. Davis.
Poster.
J. M. Peabody.
Frances Wright.
E. V. Wilson.
G. L. Handerson.
Prof. Fiske.
Fred Douglas.
N. P. Banks.
E. V. Nasby.
Beecher.
Tilton.
Moulton.
G. W. Curtis.
Th. Nast.
J. G. Bennett.
Chas. A. Dana.
Phoebe Carey.
Alice Carey.
Elizabeth C. Stanton.
Susan B. Anthony.
Lucy Stone.
Julia Ward Howe.
Olas. Cheney.
Paulina Davis.
Mary F. Davis.
Emma H. Britten.
Lizzie Fowler.
Mrs. Slenker.
Susan H. Wixon.
D. M. Bennett.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc. at 20 cents each singly, or six for one dollar.

Neat Albums, by mail, to hold 30 photos, 80 cts., to hold 50, $1.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $3 a day sure to all. SIMMONS & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine. 11

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319-6th Ave., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters P. O. Box 4329 New York City. 171

THE WORLD'S

SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS:

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT,
Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - - $3.00
ARABESQUE, colored leather, red
burnished edges, - - - 4.00
MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked
head-band, - - - 4.50

Address, D. M. BENNETT,

WINTER'S

WONDERFUL HAIR RESTORER

is now offered to the people in the form of a recipe, sent post-paid to any address for $1 00.

Is made of simple ingredients. No sulphur. No sugar of lead, nor any other poisonous substance. Restores faded, dry, harsh, and falling hair to softness and natural color. Restores hair to the prematurely bald-headed where all other hair restoratives have failed. Removes all unpleasant irritation, itching, and scaly dryness.

Three Reasons why every one who has lost or is losing their hair should buy this valuable HAIR RESTORATIVE RECIPE.

Firstly, it is the best and most successful hair restorative ever discovered.

Second, it contains no poisonous substances.

Third, Every purchaser of this Wonderful Hair Restorative Recipe can make his own remedy at trifling cost.

Address J. C. WINTERS, CIRCLEVILLE, Piquette Co., Ohio. 3m06

COPY YOUR LETTERS

USE

Excelsior Copying Book,

Made of Chemical Paper.

Quickly copies any writing WITHOUT Water, PRESS, or BRUSH, used at home, library or office. For Ladies wishing to retain copies of letters, every business man, clergyman, correspondent, traveler it is invaluable—sells at sight. Send $3.00 and we will send a 300 page Book, letter size, BY MAIL paid to any address. We refer to any Commercial Agency. Send stamp for Agents Circular. EXCELSIOR MFG. CO., 110 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill. 5000 AGENTS wanted. 6114

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1760

Gems of Thought.

As men's prayers are a disease of the will, so are their creeds a disease of the intellect.—Emerson.

Suspicion is the companion of mean souls, and the bane of all good society.—Thomas Paine.

PRINCIPLE, like truth, needs no contrivance; it will ever tell its own tale, and tell it in the same way.—Thomas Paine.

He whose heart is firm, and whose conscience approves his conduct, will pursue his principles unto death.—Thomas Paine.

The hocus-pocus phantasm of a god, like another Cerberus, with one body and three heads, had its birth and growth in the blood of thousands and thousands of martyrs.—Thomas Jefferson.

All things that we love and cherish,
Like ourselves must fade and perish.
Such is our rude mortal lot—
Love itself would, did they not.

—Shelley.

Who shall measure the subtlety of those touches which convey the quality of soul as well as body, make a man's passion for one woman differ from his passion for another, as joy in the morning light over valley, and river, and mountain top, differs from joy among Chinese lanterns, and glass panels.—George Eliot.

There needeth not the hell that bigots frame
To punish those who err; earth in itself
Contains at once the evil and the cure;
And all-suffering nature can chastise
Those who transgress her law—she only knows
How justly to proportion to the fault
The punishment it merits.

—Shelley.

THOMAS PAINE'S career was wonderful, even for the age of miraculous events he lived in. In America he was a revolutionary hero of the first rank, who carried letters in his pocket from George Washington thanking him for his services; and he managed besides to write his name in large letters in the history of England and France.—Atlantic Monthly.

We have most unwisely committed to the hierophants of our particular superstition, the direction of public opinion, that lord of the Universe. We have given them stated and privileged days to collect and catechise us, opportunities of delivering their oracles to the people in mass, and of moulding their minds as wax in the hollow of their hands.—Thomas Jefferson.

THIEVES may break in and bear away your gold,
The cruel flame may lay your mansions low,—
Your dues the faithless debtor may withhold,
Your fields may not return the grain you sow;
A spendthrift steward at your cost may live,
Your ships may founder with their precious store;
But wealth bestowed is safe—for what you give,
And that alone is yours forevermore.

Translated from Martial.

THAT man I think, has had a liberal education, who has been so trained in youth that his body is the ready servant of his will; whose intellect is a clear, cold, logic engine; whose mind is stored with a knowledge of the great and fundamental truths of Nature and of the laws of her operations; one, who, no stunted ascetic, is full of life and fire, but whose passions are trained to come to heel by a vigorous will, the servant of a tender conscience; who has learned to love all beauty, whether of nature or of art, to hate all violence, and to respect others as himself.—Ruskin.

Rest is not quitting
The busy career;
Rest is the fitting
Of self to one's sphere.
'Tis the brook's motion,
Clear without strife,
Fleeing to ocean,
After this life.
'Tis loving and serving
The highest and best;
'Tis onward unswerving,
And this is true rest.

—Goethe.

The day will come when the body and the mind will be cherished as our first and greatest care, and the soul will be acknowledged as only a chimera of men's imagining. In that glad time we shall carefully cultivate the real man, the real humanity. We shall deem it a sin to do anything that is not calculated to advance the highest development of our nature. We shall be as much ashamed of catching cold, complaining of dyspepsia, neuralgia, headache, cholera, or other diseases, as we are now of committing mortal sins, for these ailments are only visible manifestations of sins committed against the body, and are we not deserving of reproof for them?—Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

Is it possible that an infinite God created this world simply to be the dwelling-place of slaves and serfs? simply for the purpose of raising orthodox Christians? That he did a few miracles to astonish them; that all the evils of life are simply his punishments, and that he is finally going to turn heaven into a kind of religious museum filled with Baptist barnacles, petrified Presbyterians, and Methodist mummies? I want no heaven for which I must give any reason; no happiness in exchange for my liberty, and no immortality that demands the surrender of my individuality. Better rot in the windowless tomb, to which there is no door but the red mouth of the pallid worm, than wear the jeweled collar even of a god.—Ingersoll.

Odds and Ends.

WHAT lovers swear—To be true till death.
What husband's swear—unfit for publication.

THE editorial critics have been discussing the proper height of female hose. One suggests that a little above two feet would be the correct thing.

THE Rome Sentinel says: "It is this lying awake nights trying to determine whether to leave your fortune to an orphan asylum, or a home for old men, that makes the newspaper business so wearing."

WHEN a Buffalo girl bids good night to her beau, in the kindness of her heart, she says:—"Now, William, if you were to kiss me, you might fear mother would hear us, but if I creak the gate, she will not know the difference."

A COUNTRY girl writes to her lover, "Now George, don't you fail to be at the singing school to-night." George wrote back that "in the bright lexicon of youth—Webster's Unabridged—there's no such word as fail."

WHEN you see a tomat with glaring eyeballs and back hair erect come scratching out like lightning from under a board fence and a second afterwards hear a brickbat strike the fence on the inside, the process of a posteriori is not a difficult one.

THE difference between men and women. When a young man sees a friend with a new hat he immediately steps up and tries it on. When a young woman sees an acquaintance with a new bonnet, she scornfully elevates her nose and wonders "where the thing got that horrid fright."

SOME ASSORTED EPITAPHS.

Here lies the body of Mary Hatch,
Who ended life. Strange story.
She slipped one day on a parlor match,
And was carried off to glory.

Here rests my wife, Maria Bell,
The sweetest of her sex,
I never loved a dear gazelle,
But it handed in its checks.

This stone is sacred to Horace Munn,
Who could eat from dawn till the set of sun
One day he did eat till he fairly bust,
Ashes to ashes, dust to dust.

Beneath this stone sleeps Martha Briggs,
Who was blest with more heart than brain,
She lighted a kerosene lamp at the stove,
And physicians were in vain.

This monument is erected
To Ebenezer Brown,
By the stricken bar-tenders
Of his native town.

Here sleeps John Murphy of Kilkenny,
In person he was long
And thin;
His troubles in the world were many,
But he suffered and was strong
Of gin.

Beneath this grave slab rests in peace,
Our aged cook, Jane Skinner.
The stern death-angel snatched her off,
While shelling peas for dinner.

THE CHAMPION RAT KILLER.—A tall man with a nose like a muffin, went into a Main street boarding house one day last week, and asked for a dinner.

"Owing to the general depression of business and consequent scarcity of the rhino," said the proprietor, looking the tall man over, a dinner will cost you thirty-five cents in advance."

"I have nothing with me but a check on a Boston bank," observed the tall man.

"Checks on Boston banks ain't worth a copper," remarked the landlord; "I guess you'll have to dine more sumptuously elsewhere."

"Can't I do something for my dinner?" asked the tall man, as a hungry pang gripped him.

"You can pay," said the proprietor impressively.

"You give me my dinner," said the tall man; "I'll agree to clean your house of every rat in it. I have performed the feat in many hotels throughout the country, with most satisfactory results."

The proprietor accepted the bargain as a most advantageous one to himself, and the tall man seated himself at the table, where he did fearful execution among the victuals. He finished his dinner in half an hour, picked his teeth with his fork, called for a cigar, and proceeded to enjoy it.

"Now then," said the proprietor, when the tall man had finished his smoke, "let's go to business. Go for the rats."

"Ah, yes," returned the tall man; "with pleasure. Procure me a light iron bar, about four feet in length, and I will proceed to business."

The iron bar was produced, and the loafers gathered around to witness the interesting proceedings.

"Now begin," said the proprietor, "where will you commence first?"

"Right here," replied the tall man, as he carefully rolled back his cuffs, spit on his hands, and grasped the bar with a firm grip, while the proprietor stood by with a great anxiety depicted on his countenance.

"Now," said the tall man impressively, as he slowly elevated the bar, "are you all ready?"

"All ready," returned the proprietor excitedly.

"Then," said the tall man, "bring on your rats!"

For the space of five minutes the excitement of an entire Presidential election filled the room. When it subsided the tall man was nowhere to be seen, and the proprietor was standing before a glass trying an oyster over his left eye. The rats still revel in their native freedom.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Ots.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arraignment of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	2
9.	The Story of the Flood.	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	2
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arraignment of Priesterast.	8
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike, Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	3
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snod. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. O. Sothoran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	5
31.	Gods and God-houses.	5
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	2
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	2
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	1
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	1
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	1
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	5
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marbles-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	5
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Heroafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	2
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	1
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ishabod Crane Papers. W. S. Bell.	10
97.	Special Providences. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsbarg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth 20 per cent. off; on five dollars' worth 40 per cent. off; on ten dollars' worth 50 per cent. off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

These eight Scientific Tracts are made into a pamphlet of 125 pages, at 20 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall,
141 Eighth Street, New York.

Truth Seeker Leaflets.

Sent, assorted, or as desired, post-paid, at 4 cents per dozen; 25 cents per hundred, or $2 per thousand.

Let them be distributed freely in every town village and neighborhood. Address,
D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall,
141 Eighth St., New York

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth.	50
" " with Examination of Prophecies	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jaccoliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols. 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 500 p. 8vo.	1 00
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Krishna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Dally.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch. Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.	1 75
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
" Descent of Man. (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible, Wright.	35 & 60
Evans' History of all Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Fuesbach. 40 and Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense. D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought. Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.	1 00
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and etc. Large Edition.	50
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidel's Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneelands Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Val.	1 00
Lewis' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology. 770 cuts.	3 40
" Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peoples' All Around the World.	2 50
Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	20
" Rights of Man.	50
" Theological Works.	2 00
" and Miscellaneous Works.	2 50
" Miscellaneous Writings, Centennial edition.	2 50
" Political Works. 2 Vols. 8vo.	5 00
" Complete Works. 3 Vols. 8vo.	8 00
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	60
Synagma. Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature. D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus. 2 vols.	12 00
Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols. 8vo.	8 00
Sexual Physiology. Trail.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul.	2 00
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers.
" $3.00, $4.00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc.	75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts. Vols. I, II, III, and IV. 60 cts. &	1 00
The Outcast. Winwood Reade.	30
Talks with My Patients. Mrs. Gleason, M.D.	1 50
Underwood-Marbles Debate.	50 & 80
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	6 00

THE TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE,
MORALS

FREE THOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 20. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY
BY D. M. BENNETT. }

New York, Saturday, May 19, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year.
NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

It is said that Sankey will summer in Cohasset, one of the quietest, rockiest, coolest nooks on the whole coast. "Hold the Fort," Sankey.

PROFESSOR PROCTOR says the earth is growing larger. We are glad to hear it (adds the Danbury man), for real estate has shrunk fearfully in the past three years.

"THE moral law ought to be modified to fit different natures," said Mr. Beecher on Sunday. "We ought to be measured over for it every six months, as children are for shoes."

THE Graphic says: "Mr. Grasshopper has decided not to visit Kansas this summer, at which the farmers shouted hallelujah so loudly as to scare the corn out of three weeks' growth."

THE Rev. A. J. Mundy, who is now preaching in Nashville has been clown in a circus, tight rope walker, clog-dancer, and professional gambler. Will the good man never stop in his wild career?

OGDEN, Utah, May 12.—Brigham Young refused to let Bob Ingersoll use the Mormon theatre for an infidel lecture, and the irreligious lecturer had to break his engagement.

ELI PERKINS.

ANOTHER member of Dr. Cuyler's church, in Brooklyn, has been guilty of robbing the widow and six fatherless children. It is to be feared the clergyman's restraining influence is not as great as it should be.

A MRS. BACHELOR of Scottsville, Va., Married when 13 years old; her daughter, born a year after, also married at 13; and a few days ago the daughter bore a son, making Mrs. Bachelor a grandmother at 28.

THE KAISER tells the Alsations that their absorption into the German Empire was the work of Providence. The Alsations distrust a revelation that attributes to Providence the employment of Uhlans and Krupp artillery.

ALLEN HANNAH of Jersey City was recently married to Miss Hannah Allen. The late Miss Hannah Allen is now Mrs. Hannah Hannah, and is probably the only woman in the whole world who can spell her entire name backward and forward with the same letters.

PROFESSOR of Chemistry—"Suppose you were called to a patient who had swallowed a heavy dose of oxalic acid, what would you administer?" Jones, who is preparing for the pulpit, and who only takes chemistry because it is obligatory—"I would administer the sacrament."

THE Catholics of Nebraska are offering up prayers for protection from grasshoppers this year. It is to be hoped that the masses of the Church will prevail against the masses of the hoppers.—Graphic. It is to be regretted that Providence should in the first place have deemed it necessary to send the hoppers to render so many prayers and masses needful.

ANOTHER MINISTER IN TROUBLE.—For some time past a scandalous story imputing gross immorality to the Rev. J. E. Vanston, Methodist pastor of North Saugus, has been circulating in that and neighboring towns. He is forty years of age, has a large family, has been very active in revival work, and has hitherto borne a good reputation. He prints a denial.—Boston Herald.

LET us have no prejudice against the heathen. Thousands of them are probably better than the average Christian; thousands more as good as the Christian who is high above the average. One of the great lessons which people with white complexions and professing Christianity have yet to learn is, that beings of other races and other religions are often, in all essential respects, quite as good as themselves.—Telegram.

PART of the plan of the new "Ministerian Bureau" in this city is stated to be to make an effort toward "circulating well-written sermons." This must mean an exchange of sermons among ministers. In England this is an extensive and well-recognized industry; but it is a novelty for this country. Among lazy ministers who can afford to pay for the use of the brains of others it ought to be made successful.

An anecdote is told of Col. Bob Ingersoll which runs about this wise: He was arguing a case in court before an Illinois magistrate who was not, perhaps, quite as well posted in legal lore as he might have been, when the Colonel had occasion to quote "Moses on Mandamus," whereupon the magistrate enquired: "What Moses are you quoting—he who delivered the law to the Jews?" "No," replied the Colonel, "I was alluding to Moses on Mandamus; the one the Court indicated was Moses on God-dam-us."

MR. GALL, the returned passenger on the City of Richmond from the City of Brussels, says he'll never go to sea again with a band of pilgrims bound for Rome. He says they prayed in the saloon of the steamer morning, noon, and night; before meals and after meals. Gall says it was galling to him. He felt more than ever the gall of bitterness, for the shaft broke, and more than $30,000 worth of fresh beef on board spoiled. If less attention to prayers had ruled the loss would not have been any more excessive.

THE editor of the Banner of Light says that spirits often come to him for religious advice, and he gravely narrates as follows: "A preacher of the Gospel, who passed to spirit life some years ago, came to us after his decease, in great perplexity, as he had found nothing in the spirit world as he expected. He could not believe the statements made to him by spirit friends whom he met; and they finally told him he had better return to earth, and learn of mortals who knew more about the spirit world than he did. And he had come, he said, to solicit an expression of our views. We pitied his condition, he appeared so earnest and sincere." The editor then describes the advice he gave.

THE theological seminaries are now turning out their annual supply of incipient ministers. From one seminary there came forty-five, from another forty, and from others in proportion. There is absolutely no work for nine-tenths of these young men to do, unless they do it at their own charges. Most of the churches which are vacant have no money with which to pay ministers. Those which are able to pay are beset by candidates at the rate of twenty-five or thirty to one church. If these young men can find occupation in any other honest calling they will do well to accept reasonable offers at once. What a pity that some honest and useful employment cannot be devised for these young candidates for divinity at which they can be usefully and profitably occupied.

THE character of Judas Iscariot is now being brought prominently before the public, apparently with a view to the whitewashing of his memory. Several lectures have been delivered, and a number of newspaper articles written, to prove that he is a misunderstood man. His advocates represent him as an earnest and enthusiastic person of considerable talent and marked executive ability. They declare the accusations against him to be the result of stupid blundering and malevolent ignorance. Still, the public seems to cling to its long entertained notions about Judas, and neither churches nor babies are called by his name. We suggest that in consideration of the essential service performed by the individual in the great scheme of the salvation of man, that he be promoted to a sainthood, and he be known hereafter as Saint Judas.

THE ESTHETICS OF EATING.—It is a grave error and an ungrateful deed to swallow well-cooked, palatable food at such a pace as to prevent your getting the full amount of pleasure out of the act of eating, and which renders you indifferent to your cook's skill. There are some supremely virtuous beings who condemn epicurism as something horrible, and as likely to lead to murder, petty larceny, and other objectionable crimes; but, good souls, they often confound refinement and discrimination in feeding with gluttony, and, in their desire to avoid this, and set a high example of indifference to the flesh, adopt a scornful regard to what and how they eat and drink, and pretending to be above such mundane considerations, bring themselves to a chronic state of ill health, which it takes years of strict regimen to recover from. No; you must linger over the taste of your food as you linger over the smell of a flower. Nature demands of you this concession to health, and there can be nothing more sinful in indulging the sense of taste than the sense of smell.

A WEAK church in Brooklyn has thirty applicants for its pastorate. This is not so bad, however, as one in Westchester county, which, being able to pay about $1,000 salary, has over forty applicants. Some plan ought to be devised by ingenious ecclesiastics which would prevent such an absurd state of affairs. About half of the applicants for vacant pulpits are men who are out of employment. The other half are men who have churches but want what is commonly called "a wider field of usefulness." A church whose pastor resigns or dies is at once beset by an army of candidates, each clamoring, either in person or by his friends, for the appointment. How anxious those good shepherds are to serve their master and to get handsomely paid for it.

IN popular languages people say him, meaning him or her, on the principle that "man embraces woman," which is very good as a joke, but very bad taken seriously as an excuse for injustice, whether in civil relationships, or in grammar. In my class in Athalo, I have occasion to point out daily, to the students, what passes unsuspected, and which is, that language and languages are as completely permeated and honeycombed by relative depreciation of the female sex, as are our civil institutions and beliefs: so that anything approximating to the equality of the sexes must involve the idea of a new language. This peculiarity is so sifted through all the languages of the world, and through the intimate structure of each, that it will admit of no remedy, short of the scientific and complete revival of the very basis of language itself, such as is offered by Athalo.—Stephen Pearl Andrews in the New Age.

IT was unfortunate that the pastor of Trinity German Lutheran Church in Baltimore, while suffering from temporary illness on Easter Sunday, yielded to the suggestion that he should take some wine as medicine. Having swallowed the wine, a beverage to which he was entirely unaccustomed, it went to his head, and caused his pulpit utterances to become incoherent and disjointed. He was obliged to bring his services to a sudden conclusion, the result of which was that he handed in his resignation. The better part of his congregation sustain their pastor, and testify that he is not addicted to indulgence in intoxicating fluids. But wine is not the very best thing for a minister to take on going into the pulpit, to fortify himself against an attack of vertigo. Had the good clergyman been willing to yield to his physical condition, and omit the services for the day, all would have been well with him.

A BIG CHURCH QUARREL has been raging at the Methodist church in Northville, L. I., N. Y. The Rev. Henry Newman Wright has had trouble with his parishioners, and much scandalous gossip has circulated in the neighborhood. The trustees notified him that the church would be closed against him and that he must leave in thirty days. A portion of the members took sides with the pastor. Two or three weeks ago the trustees and their friends guarded the church so that the pastor and his friends could not gain admittance. The latter offering resistance, a fight took place. Last Sunday Sheriff Smith, amid great excitement, dispersed the contending parties. On Monday the excitement was higher than ever, and on Monday night the church, which cost $7,000, was set on fire and burnt down. Each party accuses the other of burning it. How those Christians do love each other, to be sure!

DR. PACKARD, editor of the American Naturalist, one of the members of the grasshopper commission acting under authority of the government, estimates that the losses to the entire country from grasshoppers have been as great in the aggregate as the entire cost of the late civil war. He estimates the average annual loss for the last five years from grasshoppers and similar insects amount to $200,000,000, or $1,000,000,000 for the five years. Now if our Christian friends can pray down this crying evil, the immense value of prayer as an economical measure, will be happily demonstrated. Still the question will remain why a kind Providence ever permitted such a scourge to come upon the land at all. Was it to demonstrate after a term of years his ability to remove it, by being duly called upon and after many millions of dollars' worth of the food of man has been destroyed by the miserable pests? What a pity our praying friends could not have known in time of the pending evil and have prevented its advent by a few efforts at prayer.

Events of the Week.

SUICIDES are evidently on the increase. They are becoming too numerous to record.

THE old established paper-mill of Z. Crane, Dalton, Mass., was destroyed by fire. Loss $75,000.

THE President and three members of his cabinet passed two or three days in this city this week.

WE have had a big dog-show at the Hippodrome in this city. Fine display of blooded stock. Total receipts $15,000.

JOSEPH HART, of the Eagle theatre, has sued Anna Dickinson for $2,000 for breach of agreement—rather an expensive Spring suit.

THE weather, after being two or three weeks cool and backward, has turned warm and pleasant. Vegetation is now pushing on rapidly.

SIXTY coal miners have been poisoned in La Salle county, Ill. Arsenic was mixed with their food. It is thought some of the men will die.

J. G. BARTON, Professor of English Literature in the New York College, aged 66, highly respected, committed suicide by drinking strong sulphuric acid.

FOUR thousand dogs have been licensed in this city within a week, and $8,000 added to the treasury. Common curs, not worth two dollars have to yield up the ghost.

JOHN GUNSER, a saloon-keeper of Newtown, N. Y., was killed by a heavy blow with a gun while asleep in his bed. His wife was also fatally injured. The murderer unknown.

GEO. FRANCIS TRAIN delivered his last lecture in this city last Saturday night. He predicted that all the savings banks in this city would break in ten days; that in sixty days Jay Gould would be broken into a thousand pieces, and all the principal railroads of the country bankrupt.

THE extensive linseed oil works of Campbell & Thayer burned in Brooklyn last Sunday. The loss in stock, $200,000; in machinery, $78,000; in buildings, $64,000. It was the heaviest establishment of the kind in the country. The fire was thought to have originated by spontaneous combustion.

THE Eastern war is progressing with sufficient earnestness. The Turks gained a decided advantage over the Russians, the loss reported at 4,000 men and many guns, but 40,000 Russian soldiers have crossed the Danube, and are doubtless now spreading over the Turkish territory. The Turks lost a gun-boat near Kalafat.

CORNELIUS J. VANDERBILT has brought suit against his brother, Wm. H. Vanderbilt, for $1,000,000, as being his due from the father's estate. Mrs. Victoria Woodhull and her sister, Tennie, thinking they are entitled to a portion of the old Commodore's money, have brought suit for $100,000. To get away from these persistent litigants, W. H. Vanderbilt has gone to Europe.

A "CARNIVAL" came off in this city on the 15th. A large number of carriages of all kinds were decorated, some in attractive and some in grotesque style, and various trades and manufactures were represented. A grand march was made in mid-day and another in the evening, which was succeeded by a ball held in the Moody and Sankey Hippodrome building. The pageant perhaps hardly equalled the expectations that had been aroused in reference to it. The most distinguishing feature was the numerous crowds who filled the streets for miles in extent to see the sights.

EXTENSIVE forest fires have prevailed in Northern New York. Dense smoke overspread the country for hundreds of miles. Three thriving villages were burned up. In Clinton Mills forty-five families were burned out—not a house left standing. Burned-out families have huddled together in the woods where they could find a place of safety. Forest fires have also prevailed along the Hudson within one hundred miles of this city, and much valuable timber burned. Forest fires are also doing much damage in Eastern Massachusetts and New Hampshire. Many have turned out to fight the destructive element. Similar reports come from Scranton, Pa., Montreal and St. Johns, N. B.

Career of Religious Ideas.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.—Copyrighted.
CHAPTER III.

To understand the feelings and ideas of savages, we must place ourselves in their position. Standing on the high ground of the present, we find it difficult to appreciate their sensations; but if we imbibe the true Fetish spirit, we shall be astonished that infant man, placed in a strange world, which appeared to him like a gigantic phantasmagoria, was not led into greater errors by his theories, founded as they were on illusions instead of correct observation. It is usual for theologians to regard the systems of Paganism as impostures, and their priests as jugglers; but no fact is more patent than that all these systems are legitimate outgrowths of the mind, and these jugglers are the parents of the present race of theologians. The Puritans were shocked at the pow-wows of the Indians, referring them to the Devil; but the Indians were undoubtedly as sincere as the rigid Puritans. Theological ideas are born of the necessities of their time. Artifice and dissimulation may answer immediate ends, but they can never be received by whole races of men. Those whom it is customary to regard as impostors were thoroughly convinced themselves, and found responsiveness in those they led: The dreadful extravagances into which they fell are sufficient proof of their own entire sincerity.

The worship of plants and animals may have served a beneficial purpose before their usefulness could be learned. The savage is intent on destruction alone, and without some check might destroy himself by thoughtlessly exterminating the animals which supplied him with food. Each selects an object for his own individual worship—a tree, an animal, a rock, a stream—and addresses his prayers direct. Any uncommon occurrence—as an earthquake, tornado, or falling meteor—attracts general attention, and from many elicits homage. A black stone became the shrine of, or rather at first was, Cybele. Rough blocks of stone, from some singularity of form, were worshiped by the ancient people of Greece. The glory of the rising sun—the activity of life evoked by its presence—the calm repose of his going down, are among the most surprising events of Nature. The splendor of the starry hosts of night, if not as startling, is full of awful mystery. The sun, as source of life, is chief among the gods, and the stars are living souls. When blind adoration advanced to star-worship, the borders of Polytheism were reached. The Fetish of the individual became that of his family; when the family enlarged to a tribe, it became that of the tribe; and as it still enlarged by growth or conquest, it became the chief of the nation's gods. During this growth the conception of the Fetish changed. The object was no longer worshiped, but a spirit behind the object. A generalization was made by the worshiper. It was no longer an individual tree he adored, but the Spirit of all the trees; not the brook, or sea, but the Spirit of all the waters; not the different winds, but the god of the wind.

A part of Fetishism was the Phallic worship which lies at the foundation of all religions, and is among the oldest faiths. The mysterious process of creation, typified by the male and female organs of generation, the phallus and yoni, early attracted the attention of savage man. He worshiped the symbols of those organs, called his gods by their names, and invented rites and appropriate ceremonies. The bull, the horse, the ram were taken for symbols, and the sun, source of all creation, was worshiped as the chief god.

The unity of god grew out of the worship of the yoni, while the trinity developed from the devotion to the triple character of the male organs, or phallus. Hindostan furnishes an illustration of this early faith, and the ideas connected therewith. The phallus became the cross, emblem of eternal life, spiritualized from the type of material creation.

With this enlargement of their spheres, the character of the beings worshiped changes, becomes spiritualized, yet transcendently human. The Anthropomorphism is not lost for a moment; it is constantly magnified. The gods are removed from man by the intervention of physical objects—by whole provinces of physical objects. They become active forces. The necessity of a mediator to interpret their will becomes felt, and priests are introduced. The medicine-man of the Indian, the juggler of the African, are illustrations of the early priesthood. They, by observing certain customs, more or less absurd, come in nearer contact with their deities. They can avert evil, bring rain, make the chase or war-path successful, assist their friends, or overwhelm their enemies.

At first they have little power, but they soon come to be feared as much as the gods whom they interpret. As love of power is a dominant motive with man—and especially on this low plane, they were not tardy in grasping any means and putting forth their strength. They surrounded their gods with mystery, invented ceremonies, sacrifices, and forms innumerable, by which the gods were removed beyond contact with common people, and their own office rendered more necessary. By keeping the people in profound ignorance they made them willing dupes, and from age to age strengthened the power of theology. It became tyrannical, usurped political as well as spiritual dictatorship, and at times rested on the prostrate nations like a horrid vampire, paralyzing their strength and crushing every effort of advancement.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Do not bore a business man, particularly an editor, with long visits. Make a personal application of Napoleon's saying, "More head and less tongue."

SOME people look upon Truth as an invalid, who can only take the air in a close carriage, with a gentleman in a black coat on the box.

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

HUMPHREY'S LETTER No. 4.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I will review your last letter in my next, and then try to close the discussion of this proposition. Let us now endeavor to ascertain what were the most prominent facts in connection with the life and labors of Thomas Paine.

Apart from articles in Cyclopedias and sketches in Histories, there are five Lives of Paine still extant; though, unfortunately, they are not all in print. They are "Oldys," Cheetham's, Rickman's, Sherwin's, and Vale's. These are all alike marred by considerable passion either for or against their subject. The first two were given to coloring too darkly, and the last three were no less desperate as whitewashers.

Paine's life divides itself naturally into three parts. The first is the Period of his Obscurity, extending from his birth to his departure for America. This part of his life may be outlined in a few words: Born in Thetford, England, Jan. 29th 1737—goes to grammar-school until thirteen—hates the dead languages—staymaker—goes to London and Dover—seaman—settles at Sandwich—marries—his wife dies—moves to Margate—back to Thetford—London again—school teacher—goes to Lewes—remarries—tobacconist and grocer—he and his wife separate—writes the "Case of the Excise officer"—returns to London—a business failure—meets Franklin, who encourages him to embark for America.

It has been asserted that Paine was the writer of the celebrated Junius Letters, which appeared between 1767 and 1772. This is not even probable. Those Letters exhibit a certain peculiarity of style, a knowledge of the classics, and a familiarity with Court life and State secrets, which Paine did not possess. The best critics ascribe those letters to Philip Francis (See Macaulay's Essay on Warren Hastings, and Junius by Woodfall, London, 1850, Vol. ii. pp. 11-90).

This is only equaled in absurdity by the claim that Paine was afterwards the author of the Declaration of Independence. Historians uniformly give that credit, undivided, to Jefferson. Besides, if Paine was the writer of that document, a lie has been engraved on Jefferson's monument, and that at Jefferson's own request!

The Period of Paine's Fame began with his landing in America in 1774, and ended with his return to Europe in 1787. On his arrival in Philadelphia, his introduction by Franklin secured him at once a favorable consideration. He soon obtained a position as editor of the Pennsylvania Magazine. Some of his editorials were well written. The breach with England kept widening. Paine took a lively interest in public affairs. In Jan. of 1776 he published his "Common Sense." It had an enormous circulation. As was shown in my first letter, that pamphlet did not create the idea of independence; but it probably did more than any other publication to accelerate, solidify, and energize that idea. The Declaration was made in the following July. As the struggle continued, and the Colonists became occasionally disheartened, Paine reinspired them with successive numbers of the "Crisis," until Independence was established and recognized in 1783.

Now, I do most heartily acquiesce in all that such historians as Botta, Allen, Cassell, Randall, Morse, Ramsay, Grimshaw, Gordon, Bancroft, and such statesmen as Madison, Rush, Monroe, Adams, Jefferson, and Washington have said in praise of these productions. It was no more than just for Pennsylvania and New York to reward the writer in a tangible way. Mr. Paine deserved it all.

But was Paine an Infidel at this time? I am inclined to think he was; for he implies as much in his "Age of Reason." Furthermore, John Adams, speaking of an interview with him soon after the appearance of "Common Sense," says: "I told him that his reasoning from the Old Testament was ridiculous, and I could hardly think him sincere. At this he laughed, and said he had taken his ideas on that point from Milton; and then he expressed a contempt for the Old Testament, and indeed for the Bible at large, which surprised me. He saw that I did not relish this, and soon checked himself with these words: 'However, I have some thoughts of publishing my thoughts on religion; but I believe it will be best to postpone it to the latter part of life'" (John Adams' Life and Works, vol. ii, p. 508).

But if Paine entertained Deistical views at that time, he did not avow them publicly. He "checked himself" in that respect. There is not a word in anything he wrote before 1787 that would create a suspicion that he did not believe the Bible. On the contrary, his allusions to it and quotations from it invariably convey the impression that he regarded it as the Word of God. Witness a few specimens: "Not to be led into temptation" is the prayer of divinity itself" (Case of the Excise Officer, 1772). "As the exalting one man above the rest cannot be justified on the equal rights of nature, so neither can it be defended on the authority of Scripture; for the will of the Almighty, as declared by Gideon and the prophet Samuel, expressly disapproves of government by kings" (Common Sense, 1776). "We claim brotherhood with every European Christian, and triumph in the generosity of the sentiment" (Ibid). "Let a day be solemnly set apart for proclaiming the charter; let it be brought forth, placed on the divine law, the word of God" (Ibid). "The writer of this is one of those few who never dishonors religion, either by ridiculing or caviling at any denomination whatsoever" (Epistle to the Quakers 1776). "I wish, with all the devotion of a Christian, the names of whig and tory may never be mentioned" (Crisis No. 1, 1776). "As individuals we profess ourselves Christians" (Crisis, No. 7, 1778). It is clear from such language as this that Paine did not speak like a Deist during the "times that tried men's souls."

There are, moreover, several circumstances which unite to prove that Paine had not aroused as much as a suspicion that he was a Deist. 1. Even the most illiberal of Christians praised him without reserve—a thing they would not have done had they surmised that he was an Infidel. 2. When he did publish his Deistical notions, the Christian world was surprised, shocked, and repelled from him. Samuel Adams said in a letter to Paine in 1802: "When I heard that you had turned your mind to a defense of infidelity, I felt myself much astonished and more grieved." Dr. John W. Francis said: "The 'Age of Reason' on its first appearance in New York was printed as an orthodox book, by orthodox publishers, doubtless deceived by the vast renown which the author of 'Common Sense' had obtained." Dr. Rush, who was intimate with him during the Revolution, did not renew his acquaintance after his return to America. 3. When Rev. John Witherspoon opposed his appointment as Secretary to the Committee for Foreign Affairs, he did not mention infidelity among his objections to him (Life and Works of John Adams, vol. ii, p. 509). 4. "Oldys," who wrote in 1791, and said every evil thing of him that had even a shadow of foundation, did not stigmatize him as an Infidel. This shows that up to that time his anti-Christian sentiments were not publicly known. Had he died before 1787, or even previous to 1791, history would not have recorded him a Freethinker.

From this it follows that Thomas Paine rendered his services to the cause of Independence by pretending to be a Christian, and by using Scriptural arguments! "The sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God" was one of the weapons which even he had to employ to secure the grand result!

Paine was not much of a statesman. In the words of Madame Roland, he was "better fitted to sow the seeds of popular commotion, than to lay the foundation or prepare the form of government. He enkindled a revolution, better than he concurred in the framing of a constitution. He took up and established those grand principles, the exposition of which struck every eye, gained the applause of a club, or excited the enthusiasm of a tavern" (Memoires Relatifs a la Revolution Française, Paris, 1850, Tome Sec. p. 12). This, with his breach of trust when Secretary to the Committee for Foreign Affairs, may account for the singular fact that, although he remained in the country over four years after the close of the war, he was never elected by the people to any position of honor! He left America in the very year that the Constitution of the United States was framed!

The Period of his Infamy opened with his departure for France in 1787, and closed with his life in 1809. He was received with clat by the French, on account of his American fame. He soon returned to England, where he wrote his "Rights of Man." This, though not the most influential, was by far the most able and elaborate of his works. Like his former writings, it implies an indorsement of Christianity. Jefferson, and other republican statesmen, entertained a very high opinion of it. In 1792 Paine was elected to the French National Convention, where he at first exerted considerable influence.

In 1794 he wrote his "Age of Reason." He had no Bible when he composed the first part of it. It does not contain one original thought. All its cavils had been familiar to the world ever since the days of Celsus and Porphyry. It owes its notoriety not to its matter but to its manner. Many Infidels of the higher type are ashamed of it. Such men as Strauss, Renan, Colenso, Comte, Huxley, Mill, Tyndall, etc., take no account of it. Many Christians that are styled "liberal" have not hid their disrespect for it. De Quincy alludes to its author contemptuously as "Tom Paine" (Essay on "Protestantism"). Referring to it Parton says: "I think his judgment must have been impaired before he could have consented to publish so inadequate a performance" (Life of Jefferson, p. 592). Theodore Parker said: "Paine's theological works are not always in good taste, nor does he always understand the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments he comments upon" (Life and Correspondence, vol. ii, p. 425). John Adams' Works abound with such expressions as the following: "The worthless and unprincipled writings of the profligate and impious Thomas Paine" (vol. ii, p. 153). "Let the black-guard Paine say what he will" (vol. iii, p. 421). "That insolent blasphemer of all things sacred, and transcendent libeller of all that is good, Tom Paine" (vol. iii, p. 93). "His billingsgate, stolen from Blount's Oracles of Reason, from Bolingbroke, Voltaire, Berenger, &c., will never discredit Christianity" (vol. ix, p. 627).

In 1796 he published his Letter to Washington, wherein he abuses the leading statesmen of America, and most of all Gen. Washington himself. It concludes with the following sentence: "And as to you, Sir, treacherous in private friendship (for so you have been to me, and that in the day of danger), and a hypocrite in public life, the world will be puzzled to decide, whether you are an APOSTATE or an IMPOSTOR? Whether you have abandoned good principles, or whether you ever had any?" No wonder Oliver Wolcott wrote to Alex. Hamilton: "Tom Paine has published a book against the President, containing the most infamous calumnies" (Works of Hamilton, vol. vi, p. 185).

Paine became very unpopular in France. In a letter to Robert Morris, dated Sainport, June 25th, 1793, Gouverneur Morris wrote: "He (Paine) is so completely down that he would be punished if he were not despised" (Life of Gov. Morris, vol. iii, p. 46). There were but few regrets when he came away.

In 1802 he returned to the United States. In recognition of his Revolutionary services, Jefferson provided him with a safe passage in a man-of-war, and entertained him on his arrival. He was either accompanied or soon followed by a Mrs. Bonneville with her three children, but without her husband. Mr. Bonneville neither came after her, nor, as far as is known, corresponded with her afterwards (Sherwin's Life of Paine, p. 209). Paine supported her until his death, and bequeathed a large share of his property to her and her family. Vale says he was "godfather" to her youngest child, "who had been named after him" (Life of Paine, p. 145). Cheetham intimates that Paine was that boy's man-father (Life of Paine, p. 227). For my part, I suspend judgment in regard to this whole affair. I will only say that, were a clergyman to do precisely the same thing, every infidel paper in Christendom would pronounce him a vile hypocrite.

Paine was a drunkard in his latter years. Only Vale, who wrote his biography about twenty-eight years after his death, twenty-eight years later than Cheetham, and eighteen years later than Sherwin and Rickman, has had the desperate hardihood to deny this allegation. Sherwin admits the charge, and Rickman does not dispute it. Joel Barlow said explicitly that "he gave himself very much to drink" (Vale's Life of Paine, p. 136.) We have already seen that John Adams pronounced him "profligate." Gouverneur Morris testified that he was "besotted from morning till night" in France (Sparks' Life of Gouverneur Morris, vol. ii, p. 409; vol. iii, p. 46). Cheetham makes this so clear that no one can reasonably question it. The Encyclopedia Britannica, the English Cyclopaedia, and the Cyclopaedia Americana all assert the same thing. Parton says "poor Paine" could not "represent a clean, sober, orderly people in a foreign land" (Life of Jefferson, p. 606). Lossing says: "Paine became very intemperate, and fell low in the social scale, not only on account of his beastly habits, but because of his blasphemous tirade against Christianity" (Lives of Celebrated Americans, p. 229).

He did not always tell the truth. In Crisis No. 2 he declared that he "never published a syllable in England in his life." Rush and John Adams testify that he told them the same thing. But it is now known and acknowledged that he did write at least the "Case of the Excise Officer" in 1772. And the claim that he wrote Junius Letters is an admission by even his admirers that his word is not always to be believed. Cheetham says "he was not always veracious" (p. 29). John Adams remarks in his Autobiography: "At this day it would be ridiculous to ask any questions about Tom Paine's veracity, integrity, or any other virtue" (Works, vol. ii, p. 510).

He was self-righteous and self-conceited. He said in his Will, written by himself: "I, Thomas Paine, of the State of New York, author of the work entitled Common Sense, written in Philadelphia, in 1775, and published in that city the beginning of January, 1776, which awakened America to a Declaration of Independence, on the fourth of July following, which was as fast as the work could spread through such an extensive country!" "I have lived an honest and useful life to mankind; my time has been spent in doing good." No wonder Paine disliked a Book which says: "Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth" (Prov. xxvii, 2). With such self-puffing before us, we cannot but believe Dumont: "His egregious conceit and presumptuous self-sufficiency quite disgusted me. He was drunk with vanity. If you believed him, it was he who had done everything in America. He was an absolute caricature of the vainest of Frenchmen" etc., etc. (Recollections of Miraheau, London, 1832, p. 271).

I do not relish this recounting of a dead man's faults. I do it in order that the whole truth may be known about Thomas Paine. So many attempts have been made of late to canonize and apotheosize this man that an exposure is absolutely necessary. The "testimonials" to his "merits" that are so often paraded are frequently garbled and misleading. And they are seldom taken from the original sources. There is so much second-hand material—so much of quoting quoters of quoted quotations in this matter, that it is become quite a trial to one's patience.

By way of recapitulating and summing up, I will refer you to the following points:

1. The "Testimonials to the Merits of Thomas Paine," which are so triumphantly cited, are mostly from Christian men, and refer exclusively to his political services and writings.
2. Paine was a man of talent. His style is very readable. He might have excelled as a poet or engineer, no less than as a political pamphleteer.
3. His assistance to the cause of Independence was very great. He did not, however, render it as an Infidel, but as a Christian, using Scriptural arguments, and appealing to the prevalent religious belief. Hence, Infidelity deserves no credit whatever for his Revolutionary services.
4. He had his good traits. He was honest. Nor was he uncharitable. He abstained from profanity, and rebuked it in others. He opposed slavery. Many will endorse his condemnation of Masonry. He was not the worst kind of Infidel. He believed in a personal God. He considered "Atheism a scandal to human nature." In the language of Col. Ingersoll, an Atheist, "he was orthodox compared with the Infidels of to-day." He held his opinions sincerely. He died as he had lived, a Deist.
5. His latter years were neither happy nor irreproachable. His former friends had mostly deserted him. He was peevish, penurious, quarrelsome, egotistic, and intemperate. And he maintained to the last a very queer relation to another man's wife. Yours very truly,

G. H. HUMPHREY.

RELIGION AND SCIENCE. The Psychological Basis of Religion considered from the standpoint of Phrenology. 12 mo. paper, 20 cents. New York: S. R. Wells & Co., publishers, 737 Broadway.

This neat pamphlet is worthy of an attentive reading by all who take an interest in that most important question of the day, "Is Science in conflict with Revelation." If it does not occupy the most extreme or radical ground, it will be found interesting. It is calm, measured, and careful; declaring it to be the work of one whose method is that of the thorough scientist.

Where was Jesus Born?

BY S. H. PRESTON.

He was not born anywhere. There is not a particle of proof that such a person ever was born. In short, Jesus Christ, historically, is a huge humbug. But so long as superstitionists take stock in him as their savior they will seek to support his historical claims. And ever since the unscrupulous Eusebins, priests have known how to produce proof enough, in one way or another, to satisfy the pious. There has never been a lack of sacred evidence. But such is ceasing to have weight in this generation. The world begins to see its worthlessness. Tell's cross-bow in the Zurich arsenal, and his lime tree at Altdorf, have not a feather's weight now-a-days against the ascertained facts that contemporary chroniclers knew nothing of him, and that an interval of one hundred and eighty-six years elapsed ere the apple story was told.

Sacred evidence assigns both Bethlehem and Nazareth as the birth-place of the founder of the Christian faith. There is as particular and pious proof that he was born in one place as the other, and as much positive proof that he was born in both places as that he ever was born. Those "born again" in him are left at liberty to follow the preference of their own private judgment in this unimportant particular; also as to whether their Savior's birth took place in a manger or a cave.

According to Justin Martyr, who cites the oldest authorities, he was born in a cave in Bethlehem. (Dial 78.) Jerome, who lived in Bethlehem, "laments that the place was overshadowed by a grove of Tamuz, (or Adonis), and that in the cave where the infant Christ once cried, the lover of Venus was bewailed" (Smith's Bib. Dict. iii. 1433). And there at Bethlehem, over that cave, Helena, the mother of Constantine, the first Christian emperor, built a church. This holy place has been kept by pious monks for many ages, and they can point out the exact place of birth, the very spot where the wise men sat, and the pit into which Herod threw the murdered children. It was there that the genuine cross was found. There are the mortices in the rock in which the crosses stood, and the rent caused by the earthquake. There can be seen the spot where the Marys sat, the sepulchre in which Jesus was laid, the stones upon which Jesus sat when he was crowned with thorns, the "stone of unction" upon which the body of Jesus was laid to be anointed for the tomb, and the stone which the angel rolled back and sat upon when he said, "He is not here." These things are devoutly believed by millions and millions of Christians. To doubt them is infidelity. Yet other millions of as devoted and conscientious Christians contend that Herod never killed any children, and that Christ was not born in Bethlehem, but in Nazareth. To doubt them is infidelity.

But the evidence that Helena identified the genuine birth-place and holy sepulchre is as satisfactory as the angel's announcement to Joseph in a dream that Mary's son was by the Holy Ghost. She was "warned in a dream" just where to dig. Having dug by divine inspiration, the workman found three crosses. The one upon which Jesus had been crucified was identified by touching it to a sick person, who was instantly cured. But it appears that the Galilean followers of Jesus, and the succession of Christian bishops of Jerusalem had forgotten the spot. A Christian empress from Rome carried the knowledge of the holy place into Palestine.

A fact which still further adds to the perplexity of the pious, is that upon the very site selected by Constantine and his mother in the fourth century, a pagan temple had been standing for at least one hundred and fifty years. For a century and a half this very cave had been worshiped as the birthplace of Adonis. For generations the Syrian women had there celebrated the yearly seven day's festival of the death and coming to life again of the lover of Venus. To that temple of the Canaanite Venus yearly came the devout damsels of Syria searching for the body of Adonis. There, in the very place of Jesus' birth and burial, a whole age of Adonis worship comes between us and him. For a long time that temple had been a Pagan holy place, and it was full of Pagan holy relics. This was a fact of which Helena could not have been ignorant. She only converted it into the Church of the Nativity.

Thus the evidence furnished by the holy sepulchre fails in the fourth century, and all the historical traces of Jesus disappear as they are followed back toward the period in which he is said to have lived. As the knowledge of the place of his birth was brought into Judea from Rome, so all that was ever known of Jesus was imported there from Pagan lands. Julius Africanus asserts, in his story of the Magi, that "Christ first became known from Persia" (Ant. Nic. Lib. ix. ii. p. 196).

The truth is, Jesus Christ is a fabulous being. "What! Didn't Josephus write about him?" No, not a single syllable. Josephus was of the sacerdotal line, related to Herod's wife, Mariamne, and his father must have known all about Jesus and his wonder-workings. And the fact that neither Josephus nor any Roman historian alludes to him, nor makes the merest mention of the murdering of the fourteen thousand infants by Herod, of the appearance of the new Star in the East, of the darkness which, on his death, covered the whole earth three hours at mid-day, of the rending of the temple, and the multitude who walked forth from their graves, sufficiently show that no such person existed at that time. These were the most miraculous events of which mankind had ever heard; and is it likely that such prodigies took place in Judea, a Roman province, under the eyes of a Roman governor and garrison, without any account of the same being given by any contemporary writer? These were occurrences which would not have been overlooked by the most careless chronicler. Josephus gives long and dry details of all the notable characters and transactions of those times, but not one word of the life or death of a Jesus Christ.

Are there still people so piously weak and ignorant as to point to that passage of four interpolated lines in his work? Why, every Christian of candor and intelligence long ago gave that up as a gross fabrication. No one but the extreme zealot can now justify such a flimsy fraud, albeit it was a very pious one. The falsified passage makes Josephus say, "He was the Christ." How absurd for the bungling forgers to make Josephus, the obstinate Jew, speak like a Christian! Only four lines relating to the most wonderful being and works ever heard of in the history of the whole world, closing with the strange assertion that "He was the Christ!" (As though Josephus believed in him, and was a Christian himself). A more monstrous imposture was never invented.

Jesus Christ is simply the Pagan Adonis dressed in a new garb. Christian scholars, not far in the future, will be forced to accept this fact; and it will become a part of genuine Jewish history that no such man as Jesus Christ ever was born, either at Nazareth or Bethlehem.

Pseudo-Liberals.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I wish through the columns of your paper to say a few words to that class of individuals who call themselves "Liberals" when in company of Liberals, and yet who publicly shun the company of known Free-thinkers; who would not be caught taking a TRUTH SEEKER or an INDEX out of the post-office; who go to church because it is respectable, and pay the preacher to keep up appearances; who send their children to Sunday-school to have their young minds poisoned with superstitious dogmas that they themselves do not believe, and who are either too lazy, ashamed or afraid to attend a meeting of the Liberal League in the immediate neighborhood of their homes. The actions of these men when compared with their professions, not only astonish, but sicken and disgust me. If they are truth seekers in earnest, why not act as such? If they have tasted of the pure waters of Nature's well-spring of truth, and found them sweet to the taste, why not say so? If they possess a single spark of moral courage or vestige of individuality, why not face the world like men and defend their principles? Are they ashamed of what they believe, or disbelieve either?

Do men who cannot stand erect in the awful presence of Mrs. Grundy, or whose craven knees smite each other whenever they hear the orthodox Mumbo-Jumbo howl, deserve the name of free men or that of Liberals? I can count forty such in this town (amongst them a dozen men of means and high social standing) and yet if five genuine Liberals known and read of all men, were required to save the place it would meet the fabled fate of Sodom and Gomorrah. I wish to say to these men:—"Are you sincere when you privately express liberal sentiments? If so, why should you be ashamed to express the same sentiments publicly?"

Do you imagine that Christian bigots will respect you or your opinions as long as you suppress your honest convictions and play the hypocrite by professing publicly to be orthodox when it is privately known that you are heterodox? There is but one way to obtain the respect and confidence of the public, and that is to deserve it.

If you conscientiously disbelieve in any particular orthodox dogma (or all of them for that matter) do not hesitate on all proper occasions to avow the same. Be always ready and willing to give a reason for the faith (or lack of it) that is in you.

Show that you came by your opinions honestly and are not ashamed of them, and further, that under the protecting ægis of the United States Constitution you claim the same right to entertain, express, and maintain your views as other persons of any persuasion whatever. Then you will deserve public respect, and not until then will it be accorded to you. We, as Freethinkers have just as good a right to hold meetings either private or public as any Christian denomination in the land; but so long as we are afraid to attend a Freethought meeting (except on a very dark night) we will deserve and receive the denunciations of the clergy.

Let us look over the field. How does the case stand? With all the supineness, indifference, and cowardice of the Liberals, the clergy find it necessary to constantly preach against Infidelity, and last winter a prominent clergyman, after trying two weeks to get up a revival, declared: "It is no use, brethren, the Infidels have got this town;" and more recently an eminent divine when challenged to prove the divine authority of the Christian Sabbath did not dare to reply.

How would the case stand if we were true to our principles and manfully defended them? I will tell you. Freethought would immediately become respectable. Scores of priest-ridden, would-be Freethinkers would crawl out of their hiding places and flock to our standard. Weak-kneed Liberals would find themselves equal to the task of standing up to be counted. Lovers of Mammon more than Truth would suddenly discover that to arouse liberal sentiments did not in the least "injure our business you know."

Liberal husbands would no longer be obliged to send the children to Sunday-school to avoid being "talked about" and to go to church "just to humor my wife." The walls of bigotry and prejudice would fall down without blowing any rams' horns.

We could soon build or rent a hall where an Underwood, a Bell, or a Mills might break to us the bread of life. Christians would hasten to discover something good even in a Liberal Nazareth. Our motives would undergo a marvelous metamorphosis. The clergy would find themselves obliged to reply to our arguments, and instead of being condemned and persecuted we would find ourselves masters of the situation.

"This above all, to thine own self be true, and it must follow as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man."

Clearfield, Pa., April 23, 1877.

HARRY HOOVER,

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.
SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 23.

Great Jehovah, in addition to the other rites and dogmas borrowed by the Christians from Pagans, was not the idea of a personal Devil also borrowed?

Did not the ancient Hebrews, including Moses, have a very imperfect conception of thy great antagonist?

Is it not true that the name Devil is not mentioned once in the Old Testament; and that Satan, a name supposed to apply to the same individual, is mentioned but five times?

Did not the Jewish system of theology recognize in a slight degree only, the existence of a personal Devil, while all the Pagan systems of religion had Devils in great abundance?

In the Hindoo system of theology or mythology was not their Siva, the Destroyer, one in their grand trinity? Did they not also have a legion of Evil Spirits called Rakshasas, at the head of which was the grand chief, Ravana?

Did they not also believe in hosts of other wicked spirits which they called Sooras and Asoras, which they believed to be step-brothers in perpetual hostility?

Did not the ancient Persians in their system have a grand Devil whom they called Ahrimanes, and who was brother to their chief god Ormuzd?

Did they not also have their evil spirits called Devs and Arch-Devs, as well as a lower class of evil spirits called Fervors, all of which opposed and counteracted the influence of the good spirits, or angels, called Izeds?

Did not the Egyptians have their great Devil, named Typho, and was he not also brother of their grand deity, Osiris? Were there not numerous subordinates under this chief devil of the Egyptians?

Did not the Grecians and Romans also have their evil deities or devils like Pluto, who reigned in a dismal, subterranean, sulphurous region, and Typhon, the father of Cerberus, a monster of a dog with three heads, whose body was covered in a terrible manner with snakes in place of hair, and who was the porter or door-keeper of hell?

Did not, in fact, every ancient system of religion that existed on the earth before the dawn of Christianity have its devils and evil spirits, and is it not fair to conclude that Christians borrowed their devilish ideas from those sources?

In like manner did they not obtain from the Pagans the gloomy idea of hell—a dark, dismal, subterranean place of horrors, where unfortunate wretches who once lived on the earth were said to be confined for an indefinite period of time?

Was not the Jewish idea of hell—Sheol, Hades, or Gehenna—a limited one, and confined wholly to this world?

Did not the word in Hebrew apply only to the valley of Hinnon outside of Jerusalem, a ravine or gulf, where carcasses were thrown to get them out of the way, where maggots and worms were gendered in great numbers, and where fires were kept up to consume the rubbish and bodies of animals thrown into the foul place?

Had the Hebrews any other hell in their system of belief than this valley of Hinnon or Gehenna? Did they have any definite idea of a future life either in a state of happiness or of misery?

Did not their entire theology, their moral teachings, their ideas of rewards and punishments relate solely to this earthly life?

Didst thou ever give them, through the patriarchs, the divine lawgiver Moses, or any of the prophets, any definite idea of a future existence, either in a state of happiness or in a state of wretchedness?

Is it not, then, perfectly clear that Christians are indebted to the Pagans almost entirely for their ideas of a devil and a hell?

Did they not make a serious mistake in adopting these gloomy monstrosities into their system of religion instead of preserving the indefinite Hebrew conception of these enormities which was said to have been handed down from thyself?

Is it not, in fact, a little singular, if there is any truth in the crude conceptions of a Christian devil and a Christian hell, that thou didst never inform thy people at all upon the subject?

Can it be that thou didst deem instruction to thy people how to cut their garments, how they should trim their beards, and numerous things of that kind, of more importance than information about a personal devil and place of torment awaiting them in the future life and how best they could escape them?

Is it not rather a truth that this ideal of an eternal antagonist to thyself who is to spend an eternity in punishing thy unfortunate creatures who have offended thee, in a burning lake of sulphur, is one that was not taken from thy ancient teachings, but was borrowed from the heathens of the Pagan world?

In like manner, did not the Christians borrow from Pagans many others of their doctrines, creeds and ceremonies? Did they not get from Pagandom a belief in a final "day of judgment" and of future rewards and punishments?

Did they not get from Pagans their belief in the "resurrection of the body"?

Did they not get from the same source their belief in "angels and spirits"? Did not the Pagans believe in those thousands of years ago?

Were not "fasting and prayer" Pagan rites that were observed long before there were Christians to fast and pray?

Had not "monks" and "monasteries" an existence in Thibet and other Asiatic countries nearly a thousand years before Christians adopted the idea?

Was not the "second birth" taught by Pagans hundreds of years before it was by Christians?

Are not "confession of sins" and "absolution" Pagan rites much older than Christianity?

"Was not 'The efficacy of prayer' taught, and were not millions of prayers offered up thousands of years before a Christian ever uttered a prayer?"

Did not Pagan nations have their "priesthood" which ministered to them, which declared to them the will of the gods, which proclaimed the demands of heaven, and enjoined the most abject obedience on the masses, long, long before Christianity was thought of on the earth?

Is not, then, the Christian priesthood wholly an adaptation of Pagan usages which have been rife in the world since the early ages of crude fetishism?

Is there really any more good sense in Christians supporting a privileged class—which assumes to know more about God, the invisible world, and future existence than other people do, but really do not—any more than there was for the fetish-worshippers, the sun-worshippers, or those who bowed down to snakes, crocodiles, and images of stone, wood, and metal?

Did not all the old Pagan nations have their "bibles" or "sacred writings," which were claimed to have been delivered from their gods, and which contained hidden mysteries of a most important character touching the past, present, and future which man had no other means of learning, and this hundreds of years before Christians revered the Jewish Scriptures?

Were not "repentance" and "humility" taught as moral virtues thousands of years before a Christian lived to teach them?

Were not the moral principles, the moral injunctions, the lessons prescribing good conduct, and directing the proper intercourse between man and man, as fully taught and as strictly enjoined by the old sages and philosophers who lived centuries before Christianity was born, as was done by Jesus, his apostles, and by the early Fathers of the Church?

Jehovah, may we ask thee, then, if all these dogmas, all these symbols, all these rites, all these moral teachings, existed in the world hundreds, and some of them thousands, of years before the origin of the Christian religion, is it not fraudulent and false in Christianity to claim that it was the first to introduce them into the world?

Did Christianity invent or originate a single moral virtue, a single humane quality, a single good sentiment that now exists among mankind?

Have not all these existed in a more or less perfect degree as long as man has existed on the earth? Are they not inherent in the nature and organization of the constitution of man?

Has man really ever received a single divine attribute, moral quality, or noble incentive from any of the gods or any of the priests who profess to minister for them?

Instead of looking to gods, visible or invisible, or harkening to priests who pretend that they are commissioned to act for the gods, is it not far better for man to fully know himself, to develop his own nature, and to perfect it in the good qualities of which it is so grandly capable?

If, then, there are none of these "dogmas," "rites," "ceremonies," "sacraments," "points of creed," or "matters of belief," of which Christianity is composed which it really invented or originated, is there nothing which it can be credited as being the parent or originator of?

Can not she have the credit of introducing more extensively than was ever done before religious wars, persecutions, and bloodshed?

Has Christianity not been the cause of more sanguinary wars, more massacres, more slaughters, more inhuman persecutions, and far more agonizing and horrible deaths, than all the other religious systems combined which has been known before or since it came into existence?

In the bloody series of wars alone, called the "Crusades," which continued over a term of fifty years, which were instituted by Christians to crush the Mohammedans and to rescue the "Holy City" and the "Sepulchres of the Saints" from the control of the "unbelieving Saracens," is it not estimated that the blood of sixty millions of human beings was made to saturate the earth?

Was not the happiness of hundreds of thousands of families totally ruined and the utmost suffering and devastation spread over many lands?

Did not the Church for nearly five hundred years, with that worse than diabolical institution called the "Holy Inquisition," drag thousands and tens of thousands of hapless and helpless men and women from their homes—from their firesides, and from their beds, even—at all hours of the day and night, and, in the fastnesses of the most cruel prisons and dungeons, subject them to the indescribable tortures of the rack, the wheel, the pulleys, the thumb-screw, the chafing-dish, and numerous other infernal inventions, slowly but surely and most cruelly crushing the last throb of life from the wretched objects of torture?

Were not these enormities time and again committed without the unfortunate creatures ever being apprised of the offense with which they were charged or knowing who were their accusers?

Were not these arrests made in most cases because the victims to sectarian intolerance dared to think for themselves and had the temerity to question the authority of the magnates of the Church or the truth of some of the dogmas which it enjoined?

Were not thousands and thousands of poor wretches burned at the stake by slow fires and rapid fires, at the command of religious despots, and all in the interests of Christianity?

Was it not in the interest of Christianity that the Moors of Spain, the Waldenses and the Albigenses of France and Italy were so mercilessly persecuted and driven from their homes and put to the most ignominious deaths?

Was it not at the instigation of the Christian Church that that incarnate fiend of the Church, Alva, desolated the Netherlands in the sixteenth century, and who caused the death of some forty thousand innocent men and women?

Was it not the followers and adherents of the Christian system that instigated and executed the notorious massacre in Paris on St. Bartholomew's day in 1572, when fully forty thousand inoffensive men, women, and children were foully murdered?

Has not the same sanguinary system moved uncounted numbers of tyrants, persecutors, and oppressors, in various countries and at various times, to place the heel of oppression upon the necks of the suffering people who have thus been deprived of their civil rights and of their lives?

Hast thou not, Jehovah, in thousands of instances, had good cause to be heartily ashamed of the base conduct of those who claimed to be followers of thy son, and could thou not easily see that they committed far more enormities than did the adherents of all the Pagan systems to which we have alluded?

And hast thou not, during all the centuries in which these fiendish outrages have been committed in thy name and in the name of thy son, sat placidly and serenely on thy throne in heaven and viewed all this reign of carnage and blood, while millions of the helpless creatures were being most inhumanly put to death by the most aggravated tortures of which the human mind was capable of conceiving; hast thou not complacently and smilingly beheld all this without once lifting a hand or a finger to check the horrible wrongs or to stay the flow of blood?

Are we not left to conclude that as all things that transpire on this globe take place by thy will and approbation that thou didst not object to the shedding of blood and the slaying of men, women, and children without number which we have alluded to, and that thou caredst so little about it that thou didst not deem it worth thy while to make the slightest effort to arrest it?

Is it strange, in view of all this, that thousands of persons should come to the conclusion that there is no all-powerful Father and Friend residing in a heavenly mansion above the skies who benignantly looks down from his celestial abode with love and pity in his eyes for the sufferings his creatures are compelled to endure, who stretches forth his arm and uses his exhaustless power to avert danger and harm from those designing villains who, in his name, exercise all their ability and all their cunning to oppress and afflict their helpless victims?

Do not those who depend upon themselves and upon the light of science and truth to enlighten them and who do not still remain in the confines of mysticism, darkness, and superstition and do not look for any god to aid and succor them, get along quite as well as those who believe in one great, omnipotent God, or who accept a multitude of them?

Do not those who discard mystical, unfeeling, and unsympathetic gods and all the systems of religion which have been based on the ignorance and credulity of man, take decidedly the most sensible course?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

What I Don't Believe.—No. 30.

265. The next great Jewish warrior and patriarch, whose exploits are pretty hard to believe, is Gideon the son of Joash, otherwise called Jerubbaal. It seems after the wonderful man, Joshua, had slept with his fathers, notwithstanding the wonderful victories he had gained, the children of Israel got in a bad way, and seemed to be surrounded and oppressed by the most threatening enemies. The Amalekites were strong against them, and worse still, the Midianites, who a generation before, under the rule of Moses, had been utterly destroyed, man, woman and child, had again become a most powerful nation, able to send out an army whose numbers were compared to swarms of grasshoppers. That people must have had wonderful fecundating and recuperative powers, in such a short period to rise from nothing to be such a people.

266. Gideon seemed to be a common kind of a personage, without ambitious views or lofty intentions until he was visited by an angel of the Lord while he was threshing wheat near the wine-press. The angel sat down under an oak tree and told Gideon what the Lord wanted to do with him, and how by him he would deliver the Israelites from the oppressive Midianites. Gideon's ideas were somewhat aroused that he had received such a distinguished visitor, and being anxious to act the generous host with his heavenly guest, he desired him not to leave until he had prepared a repast for him. He then went into his tent, or house, and made ready a kid and prepared some cakes with flour, and took them in a basket, and some broth in a pot, to the angel who was still sitting under the tree, patiently waiting while all these preparations were being made. The angel told Gideon to place the kid and the cakes upon a rock, and to pour out the soup, which, of course, was done; but apparently not fancying Gideon's style of cooking, or the quality of the food he had prepared, he did not eat it, but put forth his staff and touched the fresh meat and the cakes, and there immediately arose fire out of the rock which consumed the dinner that Gideon had so carefully prepared; thus turning what the honest swain intended for a savory meal into a burnt offering—whereupon the angel at once made himself invisible. When Gideon perceived that his guest had departed, and that he must have been an angel, he became troubled in his mind about his own safety, and spoke to the Lord about it. The Lord, however, reassured him by saying: "Peace be unto thee; fear not; for thou shalt not die." Then Gideon, feeling better, built an altar unto the Lord and called it Jehovah-shalom, which was said to have stood there a long time, even till the narrative was written, some hundreds of years after. Now this may all have taken place just as related, but I have serious doubts upon the subject. It sounds to me more like romance than truth.

267. The Lord had farther conversation with Gideon the same night and directed him to take a seven-year-old bullock belonging to his father and throw down the altar of Baal, and to build an altar to himself, Jehovah, on which he was to offer a second bullock, using the wood for the sacrifice, the grove dedicated to Baal, which Joash had cut down. Gideon carried out these instructions, thereby incurring the anger of the men of his own nation, who had been bowing down to Baal. Nothing displeased Jehovah more than for the gods of the surrounding heathen nations to receive the homage which he considered belonged to himself. After this an immense number of the Midianites and Amalekites gathered together and pitched their tents to give battle to Israel.

268. Gideon felt some doubts about his really being chosen as a leader for the people, and he asked God for confirmation. He proposed to put a fleece of wool out where the dew was falling, and if the fleece only was dampened with the dew, while all around was dry, then he should understand that God was with him and would save Israel by his hand. This experiment worked satisfactorily: the fleece was so dampened that he wrung a bowlful of water from it, while all around was dry. But Captain Gideon was not yet quite satisfied, and asking God's pardon and not to be angry with him he proposed to reverse the conditions, and asked that the next night under the same circumstances the fleece might remain dry, while all else was covered with dew, whereupon God accommodated him and made the result as desired. There is nothing repulsive about this story, but it is so unnatural and improbable that I do not believe it is true.

269. It seems, according to the narrative, that Gideon got his forces together, ready to give battle to the hosts of the Midianites and Amalekites, who were marshalled against his people, when God made the discovery that the Israelites were altogether too numerous to answer his purpose, and he gave instructions to Gideon to send some twenty-two thousand of them home, retaining but ten thousand. Still finding himself oppressed with numbers, God directed Gideon to still greatly deplete them, and to effect it suggested a very novel plan, which was that the ten thousand be taken to the water to drink, and those who knelt and drank in a natural way were rejected, while those who lapped the water like a dog were to be reserved to conquer the vast army arrayed over against them. When the test was applied but three hundred were found to lap water dog-fashion, and it is to be inferred that this was the number God wanted to wipe out the vast enemy. The improbability of this story is so great I can see no reason why I should give credence to it.

270. The mode of warfare adopted by the Jewish captain, as commanded by God was a most singular one. "The Midianites and the Amalekites, and all the children of the East, lay along in the valley like grasshoppers for multitude, and their camels were without number, as the sand by the seaside for multitude." "He divided the three hundred men into companies, and he put a trumpet in each man's hand, with empty pitchers, and lamps within the pitchers." Thus armed and equipped for a formidable attack upon a powerful enemy they marched forth and surrounded the camp of the enemy, and upon a signal being given, the three hundred men blew their trumpets, broke their pitchers, and shouted, "The sword of the Lord and Gideon." This so frightened the forces of the enemy that in their consternation they commenced fighting each other throughout the entire army, when soon they fled to Beth-shittah, to Adiel-meholah, and Tabbath. This was undoubtedly one of the most remarkable routes of an immense army by such simple means that was ever heard of. It, however, sounds like fiction. It has not the ring of truth. It is so extremely improbable and unlikely that it would require something more than a simple assertion to justly command the belief of intelligent people.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Bradlaugh Trial.

The trial, in London, of Charles Bradlaugh and Mrs. Annie Besant for the publication of Dr. Knowlton's pamphlet, "The Fruits of Philosophy," is progressing very favorably for the defendants. Lord Chief Justice Cockburn has decided that the pamphlet is written honestly on a subject of scientific and social interest, and the case is to be tried before the Court of Queen's Bench instead of the Central Criminal Court, thus making it a trial of national importance. It would appear from the decision of Lord Cockburn that if the publication of the pamphlet conflicts with the laws of England, it is the fault of the law and not of the pamphlet. Mr. Bradlaugh and his co-defendant are at liberty on their own recognizances, and the prospects are that they will eventually be acquitted, which will be a great triumph, not only for them but also for the cause of progress generally.

"The Truth Seeker Collection"

OF FORMS, HYMNS, AND RECITATIONS.

We are making very fair progress with this volume, and shall probably have it ready for delivery in three weeks. We should be glad to receive a good many additional orders to those already received. Every family of Liberals and Spiritualists ought to have a copy of it. We believe it will be regarded as a very useful and interesting volume. Besides its five or six hundred Hymns and its Recitations, composed of some of the best poetical gems in the language, its Forms will be found very useful. Those for Funerals, especially, will often prove to be of great value. Every family is liable to lose members at any time by death, and in such cases how much better it will be to have in their own possession a form that can be read, than to employ one of the black-coated gentry to deal out his orthodox dogmas and cant, and perhaps insult the surviving friends by alluding offensively to the unbelief of the deceased. We, as Liberals and unbelievers, manage to get along through life without the services of the priesthood, and let us dispense with them at the hour of death. We want no priest to mumble or pray over our dead body, and we can hardly think any true unbeliever does desire it. Let us maintain our independence at all times.

The volume referred to is very low in price—less, in fact, on the first edition than cost—75 cents for nearly 600 pages in full binding, postage included. Let every reader order a copy. If our friends, after they have perused it, do not admit that it is richly worth double the price we ask for it, we will make it up with tracts, pamphlets, or something of the kind. Send in your orders.

CAPTAIN WATERS AND BILL, HIS BO'SON. A tale of the Ocean and Farm. By Charles F. Swain. John P. Jewett, New York. A very interesting story that effectually engages the interest of the reader from the first page to the last. For twenty-seven years the Captain and Bill trod the same deck, and when, wearied with "life on the ocean wave," he retired to his broad acres, his faithful bo'son bore him company, urging that the captain could not navigate the farm without him.

This is doubtless one of the most humorous and fascinating descriptions of ocean and farm life that has been presented to the public for long time. Those who have read this book think it is not excelled by any of the works of Cooper, Marryatt, or DeFoe. 300 pp.; 12mo, price, including postage, $1 00.

RADICAL Review, Vol. I, No. 1. Just as we are going to press, Bro. Tucker's bright and able Quarterly makes its appearance. It strives us most favorably, and must prove highly satisfactory to all cultured thinkers. Its 204 pages contain the following essays: "The Two Traditions,—Ecclesiastical and Scientific," Wm. J. Potter; "Practical Socialism in Germany," C. W. Erbst; "Theodore Parker as a Religious Reformer," D. A. Wasson; "System of Economical Contradictions," P. J. Proudhon; "The Influence of Physical Contradictions in the Genesis of Species," Joel A. Allen; "Our Financiers—their Ignorance, Usurpation, and Frauds," Lysander Spooner; "Current Literature," "Reviews," etc., "Chips from my Studio," S. H. Morse. Also two poems—"Ode to Spinoza," B. W. Ball, and "The Discoverer," E. C. Stedman. We wish the Radical Review much success. Price $1.50 per number, or $5.00 per year. Benj. R. Tucker, Editor and Proprietor, New Bedford, Mass.

Perversions in the English Version of the New Testament.

MR. EDITOR: The only systematic attempt at an apparently thorough exposition of the absurd mistranslations of the Hebrew Scriptures, and of the absurd ideas the Christian world founded thereon, was made by one who, probably, devoted himself to his line of study under the conviction that he would become thereby a pillar of orthodoxy, but who, like most other students in that line, became very heretical, though he, like the most of such students, did not publicly declare the extent of his heresy. He was known among the learned as a profound scholar and critic, and he was raised, by the "cream of the cream" of the English orthodoxy, to the highest pinnacle in the Temple of Fame as a Biblicalist and linguist; and was then crushed by their neglect to notice him, and by anonymous abuse; because he demonstrated truths which, if popularized, would have been fatal to orthodoxy: a result he perhaps did not desire to produce or to avert; he stated truths because truthful criticism of ancient languages and literature was his profession and his delight. This writer, John Bellamy, devoted a long life to the study of ancient languages, and particularly to those of the Semitic family, and to the study of the Hebrew Scriptures, and to all that could be learned of the ancient Hebrew people, and of the nations with whom, as friends or foes, the Hebrews had been connected; as a knowledge of the languages, usages, ideas, and expressions of these other nations was essential to a right conception of what, in many parts of the Hebrew Scriptures, is meant; and from ignorance of which many absurd mistranslations have been made in the earliest Latin and later English translations of these Scriptures.

In his intercourse with the dignitaries, scholars, and literati of the Church of England, Bellamy had urged them to consider how disgraceful to all Christians are their versions of the Hebrew Scriptures; he cited the opinions upon the subject of various Biblical scholars, who, during the preceding century, had declared, as he did, that a new and correct translation was demanded by truth and by common sense. He reminded them that "no translation had been made from the original Hebrew since A. D. 128; that in the fourth century Jerome made his Latin version from the Greek translation, and from that came the Latin Vulgate, and from that all the European translations have been made, and, therefore, all the errors in that, some of ignorance and some of dishonesty, have been perpetuated; that, 460 years ago, a cardinal requested of the Pope to be allowed to prove that there are 4,000 errors in the accredited translation; (Mr. Bellamy told me he could prove that there are 20,000) and, finally, he proposed that, if he could obtain a sufficient number of subscribers, he would make a new translation.

He soon obtained a magnificent list of subscribers, including the highest dignitaries of the Church of England, and, I believe, one or two royal dukes. The list was published; and in 1818 the first part of the new translation was published. The work was expensive, because there were so many long notes, critical and explanatory with references to supporting authorities. It was demonstrative, and destructive of much of the machinery and stock-in-trade of the Church; it destroyed angels and the devil; it demolished some miracles; and many monstrous narrations which the Church would be glad to be rid of, only that their destruction involved the destruction of the myriads of sermons and the mass of Biblical literature that had been preached and written in explanation and defense of these proved errors and absurdities; and it involved the demonstration of the impudence of the assertions of the authors that they are the "called of God" and are taught by the Holy Ghost.

Bellamy induced (though he did not state it) the general conclusion that there could not be any divine authority in a book that had been so perverted from its original meaning all the time of its being in Christian use; and, as an omnipotent and just Ruler would not permit ignoramus and rogues to, in his name, deceive all the Christians of all times, who had not rejected the Old Testament, the natural tendency of Bellamy's criticism was to create doubts as to the providence of a God. But, worse than this, for the Church, he demolished the pretended Biblical authority for the exorbitant tithing system of the Christian Church. The Romish and English "by-law-established" churches could say that, next to the power given to them by secular rulers from political motives, they owed their privilege of living by religion to the devil: therefore, in response to Bellamy, the churchmen must have said among themselves, not in plain, but in symbolical language, "Sirs, ye know" that this fiction has "brought no small gain unto the" Church. "Ye know that by this [devil] we have our wealth;" and not only is this "to be set at nought," but even the secular power which secures to us our tithing system is deprived of the Biblical authority on which that power has given us the legal right to make the people "stand and deliver." So the orthodox "were full of wrath;" but, instead of showing Bellamy that his translations and interpretations were erroneous, they discontinued their subscriptions for the Bible, ceased to notice him to the public, except to abuse him, chiefly, I believe, by anonymous articles in reviews; and they shouted, as loud as ever, "Great is" the Christian Bible, and so is the devil: though I think there is abundant evidence from Bellamy's arguments and from the admissions and assertions of certain Christian scholars; that they must have been convinced that Bellamy was right on the points I have referred to.

To abuse Bellamy was easier than to answer him. So I was assured of him that he had only a very small acquaintance with Hebrew, and was "totally destitute of judgment." That the appropriate title of his translation would be "The Holy Bible perverted from the original Hebrew, by John Bellamy." The list of original subscribers is the refutation of these charges, as it was Bellamy's known learning and critical skill that induced these subscribers to encourage him to undertake a work of so much importance to them. I have reason to believe that in private the learned among these subscribers continued to treat Bellamy as one having authority. Alibone says, "Only three parts of this translation have been published. It was too expensive in labor and in printing to be continued under the changed conditions." Bellamy was not obviously depressed by the abuse heaped upon him. I was introduced to him in 1832, and then, and in 1840, he appeared to be habitually cheerful, and to enjoy the war of criticism in which he continued to be engaged. He told me with a merry laugh that he had told Professor Lee of Cambridge University that "Asses did not speak in the time of Balaam, but they do now." He has shown that the Hebrew text supported his assertion as to Balaam's ass.

It must not be supposed that, because Bellamy desired to abolish the many absurdities and other errors in the English Bible which have their origin in ignorant, careless, and dishonest translation, that he had any higher respect for the Bible than those writers who make new and amended translations of Homer's Epics have for them. I have reason to believe that he was an Infidel, because I was introduced to him by a mutual friend who was helping me on the way to Infidelity by loaning to me the writings of Toland, Bellamy, and of other authors of like character. I was reported to Bellamy as one who was willing to accept truth on any subject, and on that visit, and after, his part in the conversations led me to believe that he was as much of an Infidel as was our mutual friend.

I will conclude in another article by giving some specimens of Bellamy's corrections of the English text. New Harmony, Ind. MARGARET CHAPPELLSMITH.

An Ode to the Flowers.

Welcome, ye sweet, shy budding flowers,
Fragrant with your fresh perfume,
Wooded in the nectar of Spring showers,
Welcome with all your rosy bloom.

Welcome, sweet arbutus, dear
Harbinger of the silent Spring;
Hiding, nun-like, shy with fear,
Unconscious of the joys you bring.

Welcome, snow-drops, pure and fragile,
Wavering in the balmy air;
Childlike with your vestal smile,
And pallid form, so purely fair.

And thou, sweet primrose of the wild,
I mourn your loss and absence still;
Hast thou no smile for me, exiled,
Of far away from vale and hill.

Welcome violets, sweet violets blue,
With odors of the silent wood;
Reminders of the joys I knew
In deepest, sweetest solitude.

Welcome my own, my pansies rare,
With your dear confiding faces;
Come and all my vigils share,
And brighten up these dreary places.

Buttercups and daisies come,
And tell me of the babbling brooks,
Of velvet lawns, and clover bloom,
And cowslips hiding in their nooks.

Welcome lilies, pure and holy,
Thrilling our hearts with odors sweet,
Blended with the joys and glory,
That in heaven the soul shall meet.

Welcome roses, darling roses,
Come till I press you to my breast;
Once where joy, now grief reposes,
Yet come once more, and make me blest.

Welcome all ye beauteous flowers,
Bursting fresh from Nature's mould,
Soothers of my dreary hours,
Harbingers of joys untold.—Lucy Brennan.

Underwood on Woman's Position.

The following abstract of the remarks recently made by B. F. Underwood, before the Woman Suffrage association at Denver, Col., we take from the Tribune of that city.

Mr. Underwood having been introduced by the President of the Woman Suffrage Association, said that without hint or suggestion from anybody, he wished to state that while speaking under the auspices of the Woman Suffrage Association, it should not, as a body, be held responsible for some sentiments which he, as an individual, might utter. If, said the speaker, we would know the condition of women in those ages of which we have no historic record, those ages of which we can form an idea only by the rude implements which have survived even the bones of the savage men who made them, we must go to the lowest men on earth, and see how woman there is regarded. She is the weaker sex and is treated as a slave, a beast of burden. Marriage is communal. Women are captured from other tribes with every circumstance of brutality. When a child is born, the father goes to bed and receives the visits of friends, while the woman waits upon him.

Coming down to historic times, we find Egypt when at the height of her civilization, treating woman better than she is treated in some of the nations of Europe to-day. In Greece the wife lived in seclusion, and, unfortunately for that land, the honors were reserved for another class of women. This is an anomaly in Greece. In Rome, although some of the laws at certain periods were rigorous, woman was always held in great respect. Monogamy was the form of marriage, and, except at a late date, divorces were very rare. There was no divorce for 520 years. There came to be three forms of marriage, but they were all monogamic. Women could hold property in their own name in the empire and sometimes loaned sums to their husbands, at heavy rates of interest. In many respects they enjoyed a liberty, as Sir Henry Maine remarks which, with the decay of Roman civilization, they lost and have never regained. The ancient Germans were the most chaste people of antiquity. And their women shared the honors of the Church and State. To Roman and Germanic influences woman owes her present position. The Teutons, be it remembered, were the fathers of the mightiest nations of modern times. In Judea woman was low. Polygamy was common, divorce was at the option of the husband, and a father could sell his own daughter to be a slave and concubine of her master. Under early Christianaity asceticism was encouraged, hence the monasticism of the centuries that followed. In the middle ages woman's condition was low. Monasteries frequently were hot beds of vice in its abnormal forms. Woman was burnt or hung for offenses for which men were but mildly punished. Woman's position improved with the renaissance. The crusaders and chivalry did something to promote respect for woman, foolish as they were. With the progress of enlightenment, with the growth of liberal sentiments the condition of woman is improved.

Even now and in the most enlightened centuries, men may do with impunity that for which woman is disgraced forever. Pre-nuptial chastity is hardly expected of man. A departure from it is worse than death to woman. In Pagan Rome, as Lecky correctly says, there never was such inequality in this respect as there is in the Christian nations to-day. And unwittingly women encourage this state of things by the seething scorn with which they treat a sister who errs, while they welcome with smiles and cordial words, men who are known to be libertines. The truth may not be palatable to some, but it is nevertheless unquestionable. It is popularly held now as in the past, that marriage and motherhood should satisfy the ambition and aspirations of woman. With man marriage is an incident; with woman the chief aim of life. Man pursues his plans, and labors for success in his trade or profession after marriage as before. But woman at marriage changes her name, and is supposed to be merged in her husband so completely as to lose her individuality, and to be known thenceforth only as a wife. While man's life continues one of growth and development, the woman's, circumscribed in its range, occupied with thoughts and cares of her family, with no knowledge of matters of public or general interests, in eight cases out of ten, becomes as much dwarfed as the husband's, by continual exercise and contact with the world, becomes expanded and enlarged. Her beauty-faded, her health impaired, without culture or the desire for it, with no interest in anything beyond the narrowest range of thought, she sinks into an ignorant, commonplace old woman, and at death is known as the "relict" of the one to whom she became a slave. In the popular estimation, this is proper and right. But intelligent men and women are beginning to see that marriage and maternity, honorable as they are and necessary as they are to individual and social well-being, should not be the sole end of woman's life or the means of deteriorating her intellectual nature. She should retain her individuality, and not subordinate herself to man. A marriage in which there is a feeling of equality, mutual respect for each other's preferences, an aspiration on the part of each to something beyond the common routine of existence—and there are many such—is the only one deserving the name.

Why should not women have aims and objects in life? Let the professions be open to them, let all the avenues of employment be open to them. The boy is encouraged in his studies by the thought that he may one day be a doctor, a minister, a merchant, a senator, or even a president. The little girl at his side is forbidden to aspire to anything of the kind. The height of her ambition is to be the wife of somebody, and soon she commences the common and approved tricks and deceptions for getting somebody to take her as a wife, which accomplished in the majority of cases, the woman begins to retrograde and to be a mere cipher. Millions of women are content with this state of things. This is the strongest proof of the essentially subordinate condition to which woman has become accustomed. It is sometimes said that women would vote against the rights of men, that they would throw all their influence in favor of legal disabilities on account of religious disbelief, that they oppose taxation of church property, favor the Bible in our common schools, work for the evangelizing of the national constitution, etc. No doubt many would as many of our sex now do. But I notice that the majority, very nearly all, of the women in favor of woman suffrage, that I meet, are pondering these subjects and take a very liberal view of them. Macaulay says the way to prepare a nation for liberty is to give it liberty. The only way to make women just and liberal to all is to be just and liberal to them. This woman suffrage movement originated among Liberals and has been encouraged by them.

A resolution of thanks was offered to Mr. Underwood, at the suggestion of the President, and was unanimously adopted.

Ye Unspeakable Heathen.

Mr. Ten Wing Tze Way Shin Shua. Shing Tze Way Shing Shou Tan Tze Way Keo Ton Ye Che Poh Kow Shu Yu Lee Yeh Wong Chin Foo (bearing a few middle names left out for brevity's sake) addressed a small but very able audience on the evening of the 8th in Steinway Hall, on "The Damnation of the Heathen."

At about 8:15 the vivacious little heathen advanced with a quick, nervous gait to the front of the platform and said that on account of his copious name, which few Americans were familiar with, he usually introduced himself. He then, as a preface, apologized for his imperfect English in a fashion more modest than necessary and said that he was not responsible for being called a missionary, as he was not one, and did not think missionaries were needed in America any more than in China or elsewhere. He was, however, anxious to explain a few things in relation to his country. The missionaries, who he did not think intended to lie, had misrepresented the Chinese, partly on account of their prejudices, and partly on account of their imperfect knowledge. And it was for their interest to say what they did, for if they told the truth, the mission boards would not spend money to keep them there. In enumerating the wrong impressions the Americans have of the Chinese he said they thought nothing was raised in China but rice, and that the Chinese lived exclusively on rice and rats and puppies. "Why," said he, "I never knew rats and dogs were good to eat till I learned it from Americans."

Attacking his subject without further preamble, he said: "You have been told that we have no belief in God, and a critic in one of the newspapers attacks me on this ground, saying that there is no word meaning God in Chinese. If the word were translated into Chinese it would mean spirit, and we believe in the overruling spirit. The holiest word we have is heaven, and I defy you to find one among the 450,000,000 Chinese who will use that word lightly, excepting as they have learned it from the missionaries. They will swear in English, some of them. We don't need missionaries nor the Bible to show us God. Our own natures and all the wonderful works of Nature show us that there is a God. Do you think there are no philosophers in China? Do you think that the Chinese who have come in such numbers to America, or even that the lecturer before you is a fair representative of the Chinese literary men? If so, you are greatly mistaken. Aside from our wonderful history, look at the inventions of the Chinese. They did the first printing, made the first mariner's compass, the first porcelain, the first gunpowder, the first cannon, and the first system of laws. And if with all the intelligent statesmen who assist in governing 40,000,000 people here there is so much trouble in governing aright, how do the Chinese manage to govern their 450,000,000? All your intelligence, your higher religion, your greater laws, and your more excellent principles are powerless to prevent crime, and I affirm that you have ten times as many murderers as the Chinese with ten times as many people. And how do we accomplish this? I will tell you. It is by the excellence of our laws. These laws have come down through many generations of philosophical minds. And we don't choose our rulers by favor and by votes. Out of 50,000 men who have studied twelve or fifteen years the Emperor chooses three or four who can stand the best examination. And these men must not only have learned the laws but have mastered the principles. Can we not say, then, that half the population must be intelligent?

"They say we bow down to stock and stone. Yes, many of our people do exactly as the Christians do. I saw a very intelligent Roman Catholic gentleman praying for half an hour in front of a crucifix once, and when he got up I asked him if that was his god. He said no, it was an emblem. We use emblems also. But we do not consider them gods. Does any Christian suppose that the bread and wine you use are really the body and blood of Christ? It is only a humbugging way of representing them."

"I want to make two points: 1. That a form of religion is given by the Creator to every nation which is suited to it; 2. That missionaries going from one nation to another only confuse matters in general. The American and Chinese people are exactly opposite in almost everything. With you, gentlemen remove their hats in society. With us, if a gentleman should do this he would be thought a savage. You shake each other's hands till you give one another the rheumatism. We shake our own hands when we greet our friends, and the tighter we squeeze the more we honor our friends, but we only hurt ourselves. You take your soup first; we take it last. You take your wine first; we have it steaming hot, but we don't get so hot after drinking it. You ask about the health of one another's wives. If one should be guilty of asking a Chinese gentleman about his wife he would—well, he would reply politely, but he would say: 'She is altogether too insignificant a person to engage your attention for a moment. It is of no consequence about her health.' What would happen if an American gentleman should say this? I imagine he would have more trouble than Brigham Young. And you show your affection in public. I remember how amazed I was when I first saw a gentleman kiss and embrace his wife in a depot. I thought the Americans must have so much affection that they could not control themselves. But I found out afterwards these people who embraced one another in public quarreled with each other in private. In China we keep our affection for private life, and we are more careful about marrying, for we have no divorces. Perhaps the reason is that we have no lawyers to show us how to get rid of our husbands and wives. All our pleasures are different. I remember I went to hear a very famous piano player soon after I came to America, and I sat for half an hour waiting for her to begin. And when she went out I asked why she did not play, for I thought she had been tuning the instrument, and I was astonished that so beautiful an instrument should make such horrible noises. And I have seen Chinese musicians move a Chinese audience to tears and to laughter without affecting in the slightest degree two or three European gentlemen who were present. But because I did not enjoy it, was there no harmony in the piano playing? And because the Europeans were not affected, does it follow that the music of the Chinese was not good?"

"It is so with our religion. It differs from yours, but is that any reason for supposing that God has forgotten 450,000,000 of his creatures? If God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son to die for it, does it seem reasonable that he leaves the largest part of that world without the benefit of that sacrifice? If the particular denomination who passed a resolution lately that all adult heathen would be damned believed it, they would all go at once to heathen countries, or else they would be in danger of being damned themselves. If it is true, we need 40,000,000 missionaries at once. But why should they talk about adult heathen when one of the Presbyterian denomination has said, with equal reason, that hell is full of children five or ten inches long? But you all know this is not true better than I can tell you. The great religionist, Buddha, was our Christ, and he taught us our religion at least four hundred years before Christ. It has all the essential principles of Christianity. I don't see that this Christian religion is anything so wonderful that it should be advertised everywhere like Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup. What is this Christian religion? What is it to become a Christian? I take it to be becoming a Christman. Well, Buddha taught how to become one."

The lecturer then quoted at considerable length from the doctrines of Buddha, which are taught in different language, he said, in the New Testament, and continued: "Christians say that Buddha did not teach the immortality of the soul. That the nearest he ever came to it was in teaching the transmigration of souls. Well, the Buddhists don't understand it so. We think he taught the immortality of the soul as clearly as possible. And if we did not believe it, why should our religionists practice their terrible austerities, and torture themselves, and travel thousands of miles to learn more of religion, as they do?"

Confucius, he explained, was not a religious but a moral teacher, and had given China all her education.

He said that there had never been any persecution under the teachings of Confucius, and that Buddha explicitly taught toleration for the religion of others. Under Christianity thousands of men, women and children had been slain for their religious belief. "And this is kept up now. Even I am persecuted. They have followed me with all sorts of slanders and bloody-shirt business wherever I have lectured, and the papers have been full of stories about my 'beating' hotels and getting into all manner of disreputable scrapes. But," he continued excitedly, "why don't they prosecute me legally if it is all true. I defy any of the malicious Christians and editors who have circulated these stories to prove them. But pray pardon me for talking about myself. This persecution always excites me."

With a few graceful words of compliment to his audience, which he said was the greatest in criticism and the smallest in numbers that he had ever addressed, the gentleman, the little end of whose name is Wong Chin Foo, closed his lecture and was warmly applauded. World.

Obituary on the "Y. M. C. A."

From a New Haven paper.

CLOSED UP.—We have been handed the following for publication: Messrs. Editors:—Owing to inability to meet their regular expenses of rent, gas and papers, the Young Men's Christian Association of this city, find it necessary to close their rooms. The directors very much regret that they are obliged to take such a step, believing, as they do, that the work accomplished, and being accomplished by this organization is of great value in a community like this, not only for the population outside of church watch and fellowship, but as co-workers with the churches of all denominations; but feeling that the indications of Providence are not favorable to the continuance of our work under a considerable indebtedness, therefore we adopt this course in order not to increase our debt, and to take measures at once to liquidate what has already accumulated. By order of the board of directors C. B. WHITTELEY, Vice-President.

It passed away in early May,
This good Society,
Not from a lack of numbers, or
From "early plety;"
But "one thing needful" did it lack—
And 'tis so very funny—
It passed away themselves do say.
Just for the want of money!

But blame is laid on "Providence,"
Which, by some indication,
A sign had given, it "favored not"
Longer continuation!
Oh goodly souls! why not admit
God naught did do about it!
Admitting, too, society
Is better off without it!

When good men die, the living sigh,
Or when declines a nation;
But now, no sigh have you or I
For this association!
While here, dead, lies before our eyes,
As might have been expected,
"Y. M. C. A."—we hope it may Never be resurrected!

"Cause why?"—although it bore the name
Of Christianity,
'Twas not designed, we do well know,
For all humanity;
But only those, who should adopt
Sectarian orthodoxy,
Profess,—no matter if 'twas all
But rank hypocrisy!

Then persecution to all those
Who differed in opinion;
Let "Train" and "Lant" and "Woodhull" tell
Shut up, by "Comstock" minion!
Then, in oblivion, bury deep—
Y. M. C.'s Associations!
So deep, the earth shall purify
Their useless incantations!

And, from their ashes, Phoenix-like,
Spring an Association
Of universal brotherhood;
Knowing no creed or nation;
But, members of one family,
From South to Arctic region,
Shall strive to do each other good,
The only true religion!

New Haven, Ct., May 6th, 1877. FAIR PLAY.

Lord Amberley.

PORT HOPE, ONT.

FRIEND BENNETT: I received the copy of Viscount Amberley's work, "Analysis of Religious Belief," which I ordered from you. I have read it with a great deal of interest, and beg to thank you for publishing it in aid of the Liberal cause. It is a real "eye-opener," and should be in every hand; for it has so completely and thoroughly removed the mask from myths, superstitious creeds and dogmas. The writer is compelled, in doing justice to his subject, to be pretty hard on a good many of the Bible characters, and Paul and his faulty teachings he don't spare. The question is treated in a masterly manner, and I am not surprised at the effort in high circles in England to suppress the work. Now let the theologian and priest give "Tom Paine" a rest and dry their hand on Viscount Amberley. Yours very truly,

WILLIAM SISSON.

Grove Meeting.

The Northern Wisconsin Spiritual Conference will hold its next quarterly meeting in Bro. Wm. Scovel's Grove, Princeton, Green Lake Co., Wis., June 8, 9, and 10, commencing June 8 at 10 o'clock A.M. Capt. H. H. Brown and Dr. J. H. Severance are already engaged. Other speakers are expected to participate. Committee appointed at last meeting to co-operate in raising funds previous to meeting: Mrs. Burch, Appleton; James Slover, Mr. Sanford, Neenah; Isaac Orvis, Oakfield; R. C. Richardson, Mrs. L. Jones, Omre; Mrs. Hazen, Ripon; J. F. Hamilton, Berlin; Mrs. Bentley, Princeton; D. S. Woodworth, Oak Grove; M. F. Pease, Lowell; Mrs. George Gunn, Beaver Dam. A grand time anticipated. Let all true Spiritualists be in attendance.

Dr. J. H. Severance, President,
North Wis. Spiritual Conference.
Dr. J. C. P. Illips, Secretary.

New England Labor League.

The officers elected at the seventh anniversary of the above-named association were, R. W. Hume of N. Y. for President; William B. Greene of Mass., T. Wharton Collins of La., D. W. Hall of Me., J. H. Swayne of Cal., E. M. Davis of Penn., Sallie Holley of Va., L. K. Joslin of R. I., Thomas Boyer of Kansas, Mrs. E. C. Stanton of N. J., W. E. Lukens of Ill., J. C. Hanan of Iowa, Rachel Campbell of N. H., Mrs. L. M. Tilton of Mass., and T. J. Philpott of Kentucky, for Vice-Presidents; E. H. Heywood and Wm. Hanson for Secretaries; L. K. Joslin for Treasurer; Executive Committee, J. K. Ingalls, E. H. Heywood, R. W. Hume, W. Hanson, Mrs. E. M. Sparks and Dr. C. S. Weeks.

Special Notices.

Dr. R. T. Trull's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N. Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygienic Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

EXPERIENCED LADY TEACHER would like situation in Private School or Family. Would correspond with Liberal party, with view to a home. "Ellen." 2129

HEALTH TO THE AFFLICTED.—Every form of disease permanently and radically cured without drugs. Terms liberal. Send for circular. Address A. G. HUMPHREY, M. D., Galesburg, Ill.

WATER-CURE—Dr. Lyon's Hygienic Home for the reception of patients for board and treatment, was established in 1874, and is meeting with marked success, both in numbers and cures. Send for circular, etc., to J. S. LYON, Box 247, Springfield, Mo. 12119

Stereopticon for Sale, AND OVER TWO HUNDRED BEAUTIFUL PICTURES.—As I wish to procure more expensive apparatus for my next season's work, adapted to the largest halls, I offer my oxy-calcium stereopticon (one of McAllister's best, suitable for halls seating 300 people), and over two hundred elegant views, for sale. It affords a safe, pleasant business for any gentleman who is desirous of traveling. For particulars address W. F. JAMIESON, Glenwood, Iowa.

Spermatorrhea.

Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this LIFE-WASTING disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition: had been in insane asylums, many had falling-sickness fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS,

The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

MRS. BEVIER, ELECTRICIAN.

Cures Dyspepsia when all others fail; also by VITAL MAGNETISM

the most despondent are inspired with renewed life and energy. It imparts Electricity, Life, and Tone to the Brain, preventing Heart disease. I also have the VITAL SPARK, or Count Cagliostro's Secret.

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for

THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

THE WORLD'S

Sixteen Crucified Saviors.

OR, CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST

CONTAINING New, Startling, and Extraordinary Revelations in Religious History, which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a Key for unlocking many of its Sacred Mysteries, besides comprising the History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods.

BY KERSEY GRAVES.

Author of "The Biography of Satan," and "The Bible of Bibles" (comprising a description of twenty bibles).

This wonderful and exhaustive volume by Mr. Graves will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which he has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous. Indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape the student of freethought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows, to the mark.

Printed on fine white paper, large 12mo., 380 pages, $2. Address,

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

E. P. Cooley, Manufacturer of

64 READE STREET, NEW YORK.

Dealer in Fixtures, Cords, Tassels, Hollands, etc.

Combining the beauty of a Lace Curtain with the utility of a Window Shade. ORDERS BY MAIL PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO, and FORWARDED WITH CARE. Retail Orders delivered in any part of the country, C. O. D. In ordering special sizes give size of opening, also size of glass. State where you saw this adv.

Just Issued! ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3.00; Leather, $4.00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4.50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher.

141 Eighth St., New York.

BANNER OF LIGHT,

The oldest journal in the world devoted to the SPIRITUAL PHILOSOPHY.

ISSUED WEEKLY

AT NO. 9 MONTGOMERY PLACE, BOSTON, MASS.

COLBY & RICH,

Publishers and Proprietors.

ISAAC B. RICH, Business Manager, LUTHER COLBY, Editor, JOHN W. DAY, Associate Editor. Aided by a large corps of able writers.

THE BANNER is a first-class, eight-page, Family Newspaper, containing forty columns of interesting and instructive reading, embracing a LITERARY DEPARTMENT; REPORTS OF SPIRITUAL LECTURES; ORIGINAL ESSAYS—upon Spiritual, Philosophical and Scientific Subjects. EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT. SPIRIT-MESSAGE DEPARTMENT. CONTRIBUTIONS by the most talented writers in the world, etc., etc.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION IN ADVANCE.

Per Year, $3.00
Six Months, $1.50
Three Months, .75

Postage fifteen cents per year, and must accompany the subscription.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Money-Order on Boston, or a Draft on a Bank or Banking House in Boston or New York City, payable to the order of Colby & Rich, is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Draft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the sender.

Specimen copies sent free. ADVERTISEMENTS published at twenty cents per line for the first, and fifteen cents per line for each subsequent insertion.

COLBY & RICH, Publishers and Booksellers,

No. 9 MONTGOMERY PLACE, BOSTON.

KEEP A FULL ASSORTMENT OF SPIRITUAL, PROGRESSIVE, REFORM, AND MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS,

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

Catalogues of Books Published and for Sale by Colby & Rich sent free.

The Evolution, No. 9.

Contents for MAY.

Rip Van Winkle; A Sun Myth. Poetry, Music, and Science. The Revelation. Subjugation of Sentiment in Women. Industrial Education. Relation of Legislation to Society. Ethics of the Positive Philosophy. The Southern Problem. An Eastern Reformer. Hypocrisies of Nature. Sewer Gases. The Telephone. Illustrated. Spinoza. Voices of the People. Personals. Scientific Notes. Book Notices: Gen. Pleasanton. The Blue and Sun Lights.

Among the Eminent Contributors to the EVOLUTION are:

James D. Bell, Prof. G. Barzellotti, Augustus Cooper Bristol, Caroline H. Dail, Henry Edger, Henry Evans, Edgar Fawcett, Prof. A. R. Grote, Col. T. W. Higginson, Sidney H. Morse, George Edgar Montgomery, Elmina D. Slenker, S. J. Tabor, M.D., B. F. Underwood, Sara A. Underwood, Prof. W. Watkins, Prof. T. P. Wilson, M. D., Prof. A. Wilder, M.D., F. A. S., Susan H. Wixon.

Ask your Newsdealer for THE EVOLUTION, or address (enclosing 15 cents) ASA K. BUTTS, Editor and Publisher, 34 Dev St., New York. 3119

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"

In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN RELIGION AND SCIENCE. Truly one of the most valuable works that have appeared within the last ten years. By PROF. DRAPER. Price, $1.75.

INGERSOLL'S LECTURES (Cheap Edition) including "The Gods," "Arrangement of the Church," "Individuality," "Heresies and Heresies," "Thomas Paine," "Humboldt." Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents. We have also a splendid edition of the same at $1.25.

MONKS, POPE, and their Political Intrigues. By JOHN ALBERGER, containing an interesting history of the Crimes, Corruptions and Vices of the two hundred and ninety-seven Popes that have professed to fill the chair of St. Peter. Price, .75

Window Shades and Opaque Cloths.

64 READE STREET, NEW YORK.

Dealer in Fixtures, Cords, Tassels, Hollands, etc.

IMITATION LACE SHADES A SPECIALTY.

Combining the beauty of a Lace Curtain with the utility of a Window Shade. ORDERS BY MAIL PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO, and FORWARDED WITH CARE. Retail Orders delivered in any part of the country, C. O. D. In ordering special sizes give size of opening, also size of glass. State where you saw this adv.

Bankrupt Sale of Jewelry.

GREAT FAILURE OF THE MILTON GOLD JEWELRY COMPANY IN LONDON

Their Entire Stock Consigned to us to Raise Money as Soon as Possible.

Everybody has heard of MILTON GOLD JEWELRY, it having been sold in this market for the last ten years, and worn by the best and richest class of our population. Still it takes an expert to distinguish Milton Gold from Virginia Gold. In order to dispose of this large consignment in the speediest way, we have put up lots which we offer to the public for the tenth part of their value.

FIFTY-CENT LOT.

One pair elegant sleeve-buttons, retail price $1.00
One set spiral shirt-studs, retail price .75
One beautiful scarf-pin, stone setting, retail price .75
One elegant gent's watch chain, latest pattern, retail price .50
One collar-button, retail price .50
One elegant wedding ring, very heavy, retail price .20

Total $6.50

Remember that we will send you the above-named six articles, which we have retailed for $6.50, by mail, post-paid, for fifty cents, 4 sample lots for $1.50, or 12 sample lots for $4.

ONE DOLLAR LOT.

One pair gent's sleeve buttons, stone setting, $1.20
One set elegant spiral studs to match same, 1.05
One beautiful ladies' band engagement ring, 2.00
One gent's large seal ring, 2.00
One ladies' long neck chain, 2.75
One gent's heavy plate watch chain, 1.75
One gent's "Lake George" diamond stud, 1.00
One beautiful scarf-pin, .72
One pair ladies' engraved sleeve-buttons, 1.00

Total $13.50

The above figures are the prices these goods have been retailed at in our leading cities. We mention these figures to give you an idea of the goods.

A FINE SOLID SILVER WATCH FREE.

On receipt of $15 we will send by express, one dozen 50 ct. lots and one of each of the others; also one elegant Watch, Ladies' or Gents' size, guaranteed to be a good timekeeper. Such opportunity is offered but once in a lifetime.

We want our patrons and the public in general to understand that this is Milton Gold Jewelry and no common Plated Ware. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance or money refunded. Send money by P. O. order or registered letter.

Our Firm and Milton Gold Jewelry are endorsed by all the leading newspapers of the country. Goods sent C. O. D. if $5.00 is sent with the order, not otherwise. Address all orders to

RALSTON JEWELRY CO.

Importers of Watches and Jewelry,

LaSalle and Randolph Streets, Chicago, Illinois.

THE Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-smith, Ernestine L. Ross, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine. F. E. Abbot. Paine's Monument. Frothingham. Paine's Bust. Wendell Phillips. Voltaire. Emerson. Rousseau. Garrison. Humboldt. Henry Bergh. Goethe. Peter Cooper. Schiller. D. R. Burt. Aug. Comte. S. P. Andrews. Heine. Walt Whitman. Alex. Pope. Froude. John Milton. Max Muller. Goldsmith. Warren Chase. Shelley. Jas. Parton. Byron. Wm. Denton. Burns. Dr. Slade. Washington. A. J. Davis. Franklin. Foster. Jefferson. J. M. Peebles. John Adams. Frances Wright. J. Q. Adams. E. V. Wilson. Madison. G. L. Henderson. Jackson. Prof. Fiske. Lincoln. Fred Douglas. Lincoln's Monument. N. P. Banks. Gerrit Smith. P. V. Nasby. Henry C. Wright. Beecher. J. S. Mill. Tilton. Sumner. Moulton. Edgar A. Poe. G. W. Curtis. Greeley. Th. Nast. Castellar. J. G. Bennett. Tennyson. Chas. A. Dana. Darwin. Phoebe Carey. Tyndall. Alice Carey. H. Spencer. Elizabeth C. Stanton. Huxley. Susan B. Anthony. Proctor. Lucy Stone. Draper. Julia Ward Howe. Bradlaugh. Chas. Cheney. Holyoake. Paulina Davis. Ingersoll. Mary F. Davis. Underwood. Emma H. Britten. Mendum. Lizzie Fowler. Seaver. Mrs. Slenker. L. Colby. Susan H. Wixon. Dr. Hare. D. M. Bennett.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc. at 20 cents each singly, or six for one dollar.

Neat Albums, by mail, to hold 30 photos., 50 cts., to hold 60, $1.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

Sexual Physiology, $2.00
Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book, 1.00
Health and Diseases of Women, .25
Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses, .50

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trull's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. TRULL, M.D., 21 E. Twentieth St., New York.

THE WORLD'S SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS.

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT, Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, $3.00

ARABESQUE, colored leather, red burnished edges, 4.00

MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked head-band, 4.50

Address, D. M. BENNETT,

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY. By R. T. TRULL, M.D. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. 25,000 copies of this work have been sold. Finely illustrated, and a very important work. Price, $2.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION: or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CRAVEN. Price, by mail, $1.00. Address, D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319 6th Ave., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters P. O. Box 4829 New York City. 1y1

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $3 a day sure to all. SMYTHSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 36

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples Portland, Maine. 11

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y50

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit $12 and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1y30

Gems of Thought.

PREJUDICE is the child of ignorance.—Hazlitt.
 "THE best way to keep good acts in memory, is to refresh them with new."—Cato.

BE what you are; this is the first step toward becoming better than you are.—F. C. Havre.

It is impossible to be a hypocrite and to be brave at the same instant.—Thomas Paine.

WHEN we know how to appreciate a merit, we have the germ of it within ourselves.—Goethe.

PALE death beats with impartial foot at the hovels of the poor and the turrets of kings.—Horace.

MODERATION in temper is always a virtue; but moderation in principle is a species of vice.—Thomas Paine.

DEATH is the very friend whom, in his due season, even the happiest mortal should be willing to embrace.—Hawthorne.

It is the mind that makes us rich and happy in what condition soever we are; and money signifies no more to it than it does to the gods.—Seneca.

ALL the sects differ from one another because they are of man; whereas morality is everywhere the same, because it proceeds from God.—Voltaire.

I MUST choose to receive the truth, no matter how it bears upon myself; must follow it, no matter where it leads, from what party it severs me, or to what party it allies.—Dr. Channing.

THIS is philosophy: to make remote things tangible, common things extensively useful, useful things extensively common, and to leave the least necessary for the last.—W. S. Lador.

FEAR and wonder are the chief elements of superstition. These are supplied by ignorance. Courage and composure come of knowledge, and grow with it.—Gerritt Smith.

FOLLY soon wears her shoes out. She dances so fast, we are all of us tired. Golden wires may annoy us as much as steel bars. If they keep us behind prison windows.—Owen Meredith.

UPON the unsteady flower that rocks in the breeze the bee makes her perch, and gathers her honey; thus man enjoys the fleeting things of earthly life while all things rock under his feet.—Auerbach.

INTELLECTUAL gifts are like gifts of strength or wealth, or rank, or worldly power—splendid instruments if nobly used, but requiring qualities to use them nobler and better than themselves.—Froude.

EVERY man takes care that his neighbor shall not cheat him. But a day comes when he begins to care that he does not cheat his neighbor. Then all goes well. He has changed his market-cart into a chariot of the sun.—Emerson.

PROSPERITY is the very best dish in the world; but it does not prove us. It fattens and strengthens us, just as the sun does. Adversity is the inspector of our constitutions; she simply tries our muscle and powers of endurance, and should be a periodical visitor. But until she comes no man is known.—George Meredith.

MEN of sense learn from their enemies. Prudence is the best safeguard. This principle cannot be learned from a friend, but an enemy extorts it immediately. It is from their foes, not their friends, that cities learn the lesson of building high walls and ships of war. And this lesson saves their children, their homes, and their properties.—Aristophanes.

I KNOW not what discoveries, what inventions, what improvements may be made in the days to come. I know not what garland of glory may be woven in the loom of the years yet to come; but I do know that no greater blessing, no rarer gift coming down from the infinite sea of the future, will ever touch the shores of time than liberty for man, woman and child.—Ingersoll.

NATURE is as playful, as bright, as joyous on the Sabbath as on any other day. And what are children but nature on legs; and why should they be less happy than birds and all other forms of sportive life with which she has peopled the earth? The next warm Sabbath, dear friends, take your little ones out into the parks and fields and roadways, and let them romp, and play, and be happy.—W. H. H. Murray.

At the edge of a valley, at the foot of a mountain, or on the verge of a mighty forest, when the air is still and calm, the least breath of music or swell of sound travels afar, and comes back over the quietude with a clearness that is magical. So, when the heart is big with emotion, or the mind calmly ponders some truth only half grasped, how a little tone of love or sympathy or encouragement will bound over the heart's valley, up to its mountain peak, and through its trackless forest, and return with fourfold vigor, and seem, not as an echo, but a tone direct from the very chambers of heaven.—Earl Marble.

WHEN a certain ambitious self-seeker once clutched at the dominion of all Europe, stern disappointment met him in his path of invasion, flung a Russian snow-storm in his face, and out of the tiny snowflakes wove a shroud to wrap the flower of French chivalry. The lesson that the proud usurper would not learn at Aspern and Eylau was taught him in the agonies of Borodino, and in ghastly blood prints on the frozen banks of the Beresina. So, too, have we, in the defeat of our humbler plans of self-seeking, been made to hear the sharp teacher say: "Do not be selfish. Other people have rights as well as yourself." This lesson was worth all it cost us.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler.

Odds and Ends.

"Playing the Mischief"—Boss Tweed's confession.
 "Poor Humanity"—Tramps.
 "A Terrible Temptation"—The position of Bank Cashier.
 "The New Timothy"—This year's crop.
 "Hard Times"—The present.
 "The Race for Wealth"—The Human Race.
 "A Good Investment"—Getting your life insured, that is good for the insurance company.
 "Foul Play"—Cook-fighting.
 "Strangers and Pilgrims"—Rural visitors.
 "Only a Fiddler"—Ole Bull.
 "In Duty Bound"—Bonded warehouse goods.
 "Innocent"—That last clerical for true inwardness.

"One—not Wooded"—Susan B. Anthony.
 "He knew he was Right"—and she knew she was left.

TOE-NAILS are cut bias; corns are often cut by asses.

LA(R)GER BEER is quoted at 5 cts. a glass; smaller beer at lower prices.

THE hog harvest at Chicago is closed. The crop is said to have rooted well.

OAKEY HALL's favorite songs are "Do they miss me at Home?" "Over There."

VERY few people eat salt on ice cream; it is thought the cream spoils the salt.

It is unhealthy to eat R's in a month that has no oysters in it, or something that way.

UNRIPE fruits may be eaten with impunity by persons in the last stages of hydrophobia.

A POSTAGE-STAMP over the left eyebrow is considered, according to Stanley, full dress at Ujiji.

BOSS TWEED, of whom our readers may have heard, says, "Eternal confession is the price of liberty."

THE easiest way to dig a garden is to sit in the shade and watch a hired man doing the work at 75 cents a day.

ONIONS are good for a bad breath; two fresh onions, eaten just before going to an evening sociable are sufficient.

MUSTARD plasters are very good for intestinal derangements, and, taken with lemon juice, the taste is completely disguised.

WHEN you strike a match and it sputters and goes out, put it back in the safe. The next fellow that gets hold of it will feel good and swear.

VINEGAR, mustard, and oil, sometimes make a good dressing; but it's just as well to stick to flannels yet awhile till the weather gets warmer.

"GRANDMA, why don't you keep a servant any longer?" "Well, you see, my child, I am getting old now, and can't take care of one as I used to, you know."

THE St. Augustine hotel in Florida must be the largest hotel in the world, for a correspondent writes that among the guests are the Smiths of New York.

By a curious coincidence the distance from New York to Boston is just about the same as from Boston to New York, especially if you take the same route both ways.

GEORGE WASHINGTON never umpired a game of base ball; never sat on store boxes discussing the Louisiana question, and his education was deficient in other respects.

HE was sitting silently by her side one chilly evening last fall thinking of something to say. Finally he remarked, "How sad it is; the frost has come, and it will kill everything green." Thereupon the young lady extended her hand and said, in a sympathetic tone, "Good-by."

A PROVIDENCE deacon, a few evenings since, at a prayer-meeting in that city, arose and expressed himself as follows: "My friends, with great sorrow and regret I have just learned of the decease of our beloved Brother Jones. Let us now sing 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow.'"

WOUNDED IN THE CORNERS.—Brother Gardner was yesterday whitewashing the back end of an old house on Catherine street, when the staging gave way, and he had a fall of about fifteen feet. He was senseless when picked up, but a man poured about a gallon of water down his back and brought him to. Mr. Gardner thus explained matters to the reporters:

"Well, I was up dar, an' dar was de scaffold, an' dar we all was. I was jess drawin' dat brush aroun' to kill when I felt a goneness. Seemed I was prancin' aroun' on de air, wid no chance to dig in my toes."

"Why didn't you fall at once, and have the matter off your mind?" asked a policeman.

"Why didn't I fall? Why, sah, I was fallin all de time. I went down 'bout fifty feet head first, an' den I changed an' went sideways, an' den I struck on one foot an' boaf ears. All dis time I was doin' some powerful thinkin', I was."

"Did you think of oysters fried with crumbs?" asked the reporter.

"Doan' be talkin' dat way, boy. I membered all my bad deeds while I was gwine down, an' I called out I would live a better life if de shock didn't kill me."

In the group was a colored man whose face brightened at these words, and he softly asked: "Brudder Gardner, doan' you member de two dollars you borrowed of me?"

"I do."

"Den pay it—han' it over. De shock didn't kill you, an' now begin on dat better life."

"Brudder Jones," solemnly replied Gardner, "de shock didn't kill me dead, but befo' I pay out any money I'ze gwine to wait de result on my nervous system. I pears to be all right, but possumy I may be fatally injured in some o de corners an' not know it in a month. G'long Brudder Jones, an' doan' rob the cradle an' de grae!"—Detroit Free Press.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Ots.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	6
4.	Arraignment of the Church. Ingersoll.	6
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	6
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	2
9.	The Story of the Flood.	2
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	2
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	2
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	8
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snodgrass. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses.	6
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	2
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	1
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	1
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	1
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	1
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	3
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	3
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	2
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	1
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	10
62.	The Jews and their God.	9
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	2
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	6
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hoppes, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates.	1
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	2
92.	The Bible: Is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ishabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et al.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennett.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Cappbro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	2
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll. 4 pp.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett. 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage. 8 pp.	1
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett. 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsborg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	5
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	5
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off. As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " with Examination of Prophecies.	50
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	71
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and 4.50	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jaccoliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 60an d	1 00
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and 60	15
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	1 00
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Digests.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.	1 25
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.	1 75
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright.	35 & 60
Evans' History of all Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and 80	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Grayes' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought. Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.	1 00
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and 50	50
" etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infallible Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneelands Review.	1 00
Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Vale.	1 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
Pro-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts.	3 40
Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peoples All Around the World.	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	50
" Rights of Man.	50
" Theological Works.	2 00
" and Miscellaneous Works, 2 50	2 50
Miscellaneous Writings, Centennial edition.	2 50
" Political Works. 2 Vols., 1 8vo.	5 00
" Complete Works. 3 Vols., 8vo.	8 00
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. L. B. Foote, M.D.	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20</

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE
MORALS

FREE THOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 21. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY }
BY D. M. BENNETT.

New York, Saturday, May 26, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year.
NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

THERE are, according to the Independent, 77 Presbyterian church members in the Ohio Penitentiary.

THE peculiar religious views of Prof. Adler, have caused his retirement from the chair of Hebrew Literature in Cornell University.

DARWIN's admirers in Germany have made a present to him of a magnificent album, containing the photographs of over 200 Darwinists.

A RELIGIOUS paper makes the discovery that the Russo-Turkish war is the real Armageddon. The real original Jacob. No connection with the house over the way.

WHEN the hot weather prevails all over the country and every thing is drying up, what a blessing it is to have a weather bureau to predict rain, and to keep on predicting until the rain really comes.

JULES SIMON was flung out of the French Cabinet the other day, and the Pope waved his fingers joyfully in front of his face, using the pontifical nose as a pivot, and cried out: "That is what I lived for."

A RICH man may be as great a fool as a poor man, but people won't tell him so half as quick.—Rheinbeck Gazette.

Riches spread their wings when they leave.—Rome Sentinel.

Only fifty tickets for Beecher's lecture were sold at Richmond, Ind., and the great and good man's engagement was consequently cancelled. Gourier Journal.

On Sunday last the day was generally respected; the number of citizens fishing at the draw-bridge was lessened one half.—Norwich Bulletin.

It is pleasant to reflect, now that all the fighting is being done in Europe, that a gun has been invented that will discharge 1,000 balls a minute.—Rochester Democrat.

So many people are going to Europe to spend the summer months in rambling among the Alps, etc., that the outlook for the hotels at the place of summer resort in our own country is not considered at all promising.

THE Rev. Dr. Ormiston has sailed for Europe. The Rev. Dr. Taylor is going. About half of the prominent clergymen of this city, will cross the ocean this summer. Most of the poor clergymen in the country will not.

HALF a barrel of oysters paid the debt of an Oil City church. The stew was palatable, though heavily watered, and the people who swallowed them at twenty-five cents per stew, felt that they were doing good religious service.

THE Rev. Jerome D. Hopkins or a man who so styles himself, has been swindling the Brooklyn people by representing himself as a poor clergyman having a sister lying very sick in Washington and that he has not money enough to go to see her. It is said that he has raised considerable funds in this way.

BISHOP COXE, who wrote the verses against the Turks, boasts that he never cast a vote in his life. It was he of whom his father, the venerable and eccentric Samuel Hanson Cox, D. D., said when asked how the final e got on his son's name. "I hope the Lord has forgiven me for having begotten such a fool."

"STOP thief!" was what the crowd cried the other day in San Francisco, when a minister clad in clerical costume, ran rapidly to catch a passing streetcar. The good brother was embarrassed by the excitement caused by the cry and consequent pursuit; but when explanation was made, there was a hearty laugh all round, and the hoodlums who had done the shouting were forgiven. But they thought they had never seen a man run that way unless he had stolen something.

A LECTURER'S SYMPATHY FOR TURKEY.—In a lecture before the German Freethinkers' Society, Mr. Charles F. Nathan, lately from Turkey, took strong ground against Russia as "a huge despotism and the enemy of liberty." He thought that other European nations would interfere to prevent Russia's absorption of more territory, but he had no theories to offer regarding any change in the map of Europe consequent upon the war. He sympathized with the Turks as a nation endeavoring to maintain the integrity of its present boundaries.

A CONTROVERSY is going on in some of the Western religious papers as to whether the Rev. Mr. Camp of Avondale, who was prominent in the recent McCune trial, spoke of himself as a "squib" or a "squire." The Pittsburgh Banner allows him to state, through its columns that, whereas the word was printed "squire," he meant to call himself by the comparatively inoffensive title of "squib." Perhaps the difference is not very great; yet it is well to be accurate in ecclesiastic nomenclature.

JESUS PAYS IT ALL.—His blood washes all the little offenses away. Charles Tommy, colored, was hanged at Americus, Ga., a few days ago, for the murder of Mrs. Caraway, white, on April 18. He confessed to committing rape before the murder, and sold his body to physicians for $3. On the scaffold he said: "I dread not death, Jesus is with me. Jesus has made my yoke easy to bear. I will soon be at rest forever. I have nothing more to say." At 12 o'clock the trap fell and after 15 minutes' agony, he was pronounced dead by strangulation. There were fully 5,000 people present. Mr. Caraway bought a license for his second marriage, and then went to witness the execution.

ONE of the great annual festivities of the Hindoos was lately celebrated upon the banks of the Sarju, a small tributary of the Ganges. The Brahmins and astrologers announced that a happy conjunction of the planets at the time would render the occasion especially favorable for all who desired purification of their sins by plunging into the river. Myriads of Hindoos rushed to the spot, determined to bathe without delay, but so great was the crowd that a number of persons were crushed to death. Their bodies were immediately thrown into the water with the idea that they would float direct to heaven.

DR. HEPPWORTH preached last Sunday on "God's providence" and "the certainty of his love for us." Dr. Talmage held forth on the same subject. The papers next day contained news items like these: Mother and child starve to death on Mercer st.; Wm. Vanderwater, a destitute mechanic, shot himself on Chatham st.; Annie Walker, colored, was stabbed to death by a white man, on Sullivan st.; two bodies found floating in the North River; fearful drouth in California and other parts of the country; wheat crop cut off; cattle and sheep dying by thousands; ruin prophesied for thousands of farmers in the San Joaquin valley. Are all these proofs of "God's kind Providences"?

THE Rev. Dr. E. T. Baird, of the Southern Presbyterian Church, who made way with $22,000 of ecclesiastical funds, now says that he used his official endorsement as secretary of the Publication Board for his own private uses; and that until February last, it never occurred to him that this was wrong. He also says that he knew nothing about business, or the keeping of accounts of bills payable. The simplicity of the board in trusting such a confessedly incompetent man with the entire management of its affairs, does not reflect credit on the men who compose it. Dr. Baird, who has run away and is hiding somewhere, writes from his place of concealment that his fellow ministers have treated him very harshly in putting him out of the ministry. He likened himself to his Savior, in that he "has no place where to lay his head." As a Richmond Jury has found an indictment against him, it is probable that if he can be caught, he will be provided with a place on which to lay his head—an iron cot, surrounded with substantial stone walls. Then he won't be so much like his "savior."

ANOTHER CLERGYMAN IN TROUBLE.—The Rev. J. H. Foster who for six months has been preaching to the saints of the Congregational church in Hannibal, Mo., has found his lines not to lie altogether in pleasant places. He was getting along swimmingly with the brothers and sisters of that pious city in his new field of labor, until the Rev. Mr. West, Superintendent of Congregational churches in Missouri visited Hannibal recently when he announced confidentially to some of the leading members that Brother Foster was a wolf in sheep's clothing, and had more fondness for the ewe lambs than for the souls of the aged brothers and sisters; in short that he had five wives living, from none of whom had he been divorced; that he led a dissolute life, was a gambler and all that. In fact, Mr. West produced documentary proof of the Rev. Foster's disreputable conduct. The two were confronted, when Foster was compelled to admit the charges against him. He lived for two days upon the ragged edge, when he was induced to hand in his resignation and look up some other field of usefulness. He is a fine looking man, wears a saintly, guiltless appearance and is very popular with the female portion of the church. They could hardly believe he was such a man; but "you can't most always sometimes tell."

THE St. Louis Globe Democrat has the following in reference to what our Governor had to say on the subject of God and women. "Something of the churlish celibacy of Tilden seems to have descended to his successor, Gov. Robinson, who has most superfluously and idiotically vetoed a bill giving women the right to hold office as members of School Boards; not that he has any prejudices on that point himself, not by no manner of means, but 'the Almighty has appointed different fields of labor and usefulness for the sexes, and His decrees can not be changed by legislation.' In an age of skepticism and irreverence it is really touching to see such devout confidence in a special revelation from the Almighty, but what becomes of his decrees in those impious States which have allowed the female sex to labor in that field of educational usefulness which the Governor of New York fences in for the exclusive occupation of the male sex? Do these States 'set aside the decrees of the Almighty by legislation,' or is the jurisdiction of these decrees continuous with Gov. Robinson's veto? The Governor of the greatest and wealthiest State in the Union seems to be an ignorant and bigoted blatherskite, and we advise the friends of progress and enlightenment to note this little incident, which is quite in keeping with other developments of Democratic statesmanship."

WORSE AND WORSE.—Quickly following upon the heels of the trial of the Rev. Thomas B. Bott, Baptist clergyman of Philadelphia, for adultery, comes now the case of still more damning guilt, of the Rev. John H. Morris also of Philadelphia and likewise a Baptist. He is a man of large and powerful frame, being over six feet in height. He has preached several times at the Passyunk Baptist church of that city. His age is forty-one. Two years ago Morris lost his wife when he married his wife's sister. Shortly afterwards he took a little girl to raise, named Mary Rue then eight years of age. About a week ago, Mrs. Morris detected her husband in bed, and in criminal connection with the little girl, at two o'clock in the morning. The wife insisted that the girl should leave at once. The Rev. six-footer took the little girl to her mother and informed Mrs. Rue that his wife had charged him with holding improper relations with the child, but as he was a God-fearing man, the charge was false. He asked Mrs. Rue's consent to place the child in the Northern Home for Friendless children, promising that when thirteen he would take her out and provide for her. Mrs. Rue reserved her decision for a few days. In the mean time by a series of well-directed questions, the astonished mother with horror learned that the clerical brute and villain had been holding criminal intercourse with her little daughter for a year. The little child said: "Mamma, if you won't send me to prison, I will tell you. Mrs. Morris found him in bed with me, and she carried on awful about it. He told me if I said anything about it, I'd be put in prison." The grief-stricken mother sought Alderman Carpenter and laid the facts before him. Morris was immediately arrested, and had a hearing. By evidence it was elicited that the man's guilty conduct had been continued for twelve months. Three physicians examined the little girl and gave it as their opinion that the child had been outraged in a shocking manner, and that her spinal column and brain had been injured. The Christian villain was held in $4,000 bail, in default of which he was lodged in Moyamensing prison until Friday last, when bail being procured he was released. Of such material are too many of the clergymen of this country composed. We would carefully inquire whether this godly man should not be suspended from the pulpit, for a few weeks at least, or from a lamp-post or the limb of a tall tree.

Events of the Week.

THE Russian fleet sailed from this port several days ago.

A WRECK is reported on the coast of Australia, by which thirty lives were lost.

ONE thousand ship carpenters have been discharged from the ship-yards on the Clyde.

MARY MEAD, a domestic in the family of Chas. Drescher, West Hoboken, N. J., came to her death by lighting a fire with kerosene. She won't do so any more, but others will.

A MAD dog ran into Knox's hat store, corner Fulton st. and Broadway, and caused the clerks to jump upon the counters and to hang themselves to the shelves, until a policeman was called, who shot the dog.

A HURRICANE passed over the village of St. Hippolite, Canada, and blew down a new Catholic church, and several dwellings. Two brothers working inside the church were killed. The ways of Providence are mysterious.

A TERRIBLE catastrophe occurred at Roach's Ship Yard at Chester, Pa., at the launching of the steamship Saratoga. The vessel started prematurely while laborers were working under and about it, and before they could save themselves, seven men were crushed to death and nearly three times as many more injured.

A BRICK church, nine miles north of Marion, Ind., was blown down last Sunday while a meeting was being held within it, the bricks falling plentifully upon the men and women, and effectually burying them. One young man was killed, and some fifteen or twenty badly injured. How many such warnings will have to be given before people will learn that it is a dangerous thing to go to church?

ACTIVE operations are still kept up between the Turks and the Russians. The latter were badly repulsed at Kars, which point was once reported to have been captured by the Russians together with 14,000 Turkish prisoners, but which turned out to be incorrect; while the Russians gained a victory and captured a large number of guns at Ardaban. The Russians are still massing their forces for a concentrated action on the Danube, and to make an entry there into the Turkish dominions.

AFTER several days of extremely warm weather, and many parts of the country being distressed with drouth, we have had timely showers in many localities, which removed the serious apprehensions that prevailed. Vegetation is now progressing finely. In Illinois and other parts of the West, there was far too much rain a few weeks ago, so that in its level country but little planting was done. Fears are entertained that corn now put in will not fully mature.

EUROPEAN NEWS.—Greece is said to be about ready to declare war against Turkey. The greatest uneasiness prevails in Austria. Hungary is anxious to take a hand in the war. Bismarck has been recalled to Berlin, and it is thought Prussia meditates enlarging her boundaries by taking Denmark and Holland, so as to give her greater facilities for seaports. England will hardly be able to keep out of the fray. In France a crisis has taken place; the Cabinet has been changed, Duc de Broglie appears to be running the government in the interests of the royalists. The republicans are greatly excited. Gambetta has made a most stirring speech on the present state of affairs. Great fears are entertained of the permanency of MacMahon's government.

DURING the holding of a Free-Love convention in Boston the other day, and while E. H. Heywood was speaking, some young students from Harvard College—of whom there were about twenty present, avowedly to break up the meeting—rushed upon the platform and acted very improperly. Mr. Heywood endeavored to preserve order, but the students being in the majority and the police valiantly remaining neutral or out of sight, the convention was forcibly converted into a "highly-moral," orthodox, theological circus, with a member of a leading Boston family as ring-master and his fellow students as clowns. After giving the free lovers a lesson in "Christian" forbearance the students went away and the meeting resumed business.

Career of Religious Ideas.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.—Copyrighted.

CHAPTER III.

Fetishism with our own race is of the remote past, yet its stain is indelibly fixed on our religious system. Christianity is full of it. Claiming, as it does, divine completeness and the worship of the one true God, there would be little left of it were its Fetishism stripped away. When pestilence smites our cities, the earthquake prostrates their proud towers in ruins, or storms devastate, prayers and sermons are sent forth from every Christian pulpit asking God to deal lightly, or charging these natural events to warning Providence. In seasons of drought, fasts are still held to invoke rain, in exactly the same spirit in which the Indian medicine-men shake their calabashes and call on the Great Spirit. Churches are peculiarly holy places, Sunday a holy day, and fasts, penance, and the sacrifice of worldly considerations peculiarly acceptable to God. The outbursts of the elements, in the Christian view, are acts of Providence. Recently the Californian earthquake called out an expression from clergy and laymen honorable to Fetish worshippers. Instead of seeing the activity of volcanic forces in the subterranean axis on which that country is placed, they saw only the warnings of an angry God. It would be difficult to say why California needs such warning more than New York, where the revenue of the most aristocratic church is derived from the rent of its estate occupied as drinking saloons, gambling hells, and houses of prostitution—whose sleek, high-salaried minister is, literally clothed by the activity of the purple fingers of starvation, and fed by the sale of human souls.

The annual Thanksgiving ordered by the American Government, and retched by the States, is a relic of Fetishism, and, as such, is degrading in its tendencies. It is a hopeful sign that year by year the "Proclamation" is becoming little more than a form, and we may hope, at no distant day, a chief magistrate may be elected having sufficient manhood to ignore this absurd and outgrown custom.

The lingering faith in miracles is a remnant of the belief that the gods manage everything. Miracles are at the foundation of all systems of religion; and it is maintained by leading theologians that the human mind is so constituted that it cannot believe religion of divine origin unless accompanied with miracles. Catholicism retains the miracle-working power, which its priests continue to practice, and the erudite Protestant divine stands up in his pulpit, a competitor with the African rain-maker. This belief is like some molluscs, found fossil in the rocks of all past ages, and with charmed lives flourishing in the seas of the present: it grasps the animal and emotional faculties, and, as long as they are in ascendancy, will not yield its tenacious life.

Polytheism constantly presents its Fetish origin. The family or tribe Fetish became the Panates of the Romans and the bull Apis of the Egyptians; the national Fetish, the Olympian Jove of Greece—the Capitoline Jupiter of Rome—the Caaba of Arabia.

It would be presumed that the Jews from the earliest period, carefully instructed by the only true God, would not show the least trace of religious progress, for their system was not of growth but revelation. Contrary to this inference—and infallibly indicating its human origin—they present all phases of growth, and, at the period of their greatest splendor, Fetishism and Polytheism blended with their vaunted Monotheism. The Seraphim of Laban was a family Fetish; the horses consecrated to the Sun in the Temple of Solomon (2 Kings xxiii, 2) were of the tribe, and the Cherubim and Most Holy Place were national Fetishes. The God of Abraham was a coarse Fetish. The Jews never escaped the influence of grossest idolatry. They believed that their Jehovah dwelt especially in the Holy Place of their Temple, and propitiated him by sacrifices, rites, and ceremonies innumerable. He is a mean, cruel, unjust, vindictive, blood-thirsty despot, to whom the purely human and lovable Jove of Greece must not be compared. The Jews reflected their own stern, grim, and revengeful natures in their God, and their religion nowhere indicates a superhuman origin.

Fetishism is emphatically a religion of fear, because it reflects most clearly the origin of what are called the religious feelings. It asserts the anger of the gods, and its priests are tireless in their efforts to invent methods by which they can be appeased. They run wild with a terrible hallucination. The more unnatural an action, the more pleasing to the gods. Mutilation—as cutting off a finger, knocking out a tooth, flagellation, sacrifices—often human—are required of the servile devotee. Knowledge is repressed. All ideas of fixed order or law are lost in creation resolved into a succession of miracles. As these are not always in accordance with the welfare of man, appropriate gods are assigned to each. Classes of gods are formed—one good, the other evil. Man become a buffet between the two. Sacrifice gains the favor of the first, and appeases the anger of the last. There is God-worship and Devil-worship—as illustrated in the Christian Church, which assigns in its theology the second place to the God of Evil.

The later phase of Fetishism—where every individual has his own particular object of worship—so far from exerting a moral influence, acts in the opposite direction. It loosens the moral bonds, if any exist, and the possession of the especial favors of a god makes its recipient selfish and overbearing. If the Fetish united the members of the tribe in closer union, it intensified their hostility to other tribes. The national Fetish would become jealous of those of others, and all wars would become religious crusades—the national Fetishes commanding and guiding their followers. The jealousy of the Fetishes or gods, arrays tribe against tribe—nation against nation. The words "foreigner" and "enemy" become synonymous. War becomes the normal state of mankind, and the slaughter of nations acceptable sacrifice to the gods, who love the steaming blood of their enemies. This instinct of destruction at times becomes so energetic that the life of the worshiper is jeopardized, the necessities of the sacrificial altar obligating incessant war to secure captives to appease the anger of the terrible gods. The Aztecs carried this slaughter to such excess that often in default of captives they drafted from their own ranks, and from this cause the nation was rapidly declining. The Jews furnish an appalling example of a people blindly obeying the commands of their Fetish as interpreted by their priests. Jehovah is a god of battles—commands the extermination of whole nations; the butchery of men, women, and children; the prostitution of the charms of woman; and countless unmentionable horrors. When the battle thickens, he guides the shafts of death, and even consents to stay the course of the sun to allow his butchers to accomplish their demoniac task. Only among the cannibals of the South Sea is there a parallel example. The sacred historian has recorded the slaughter of the Midianites, the dispossession of the comparatively refined and opulent Canaanites, with a heartlessness equaled only by the fiendishness of the commands of Jehovah.

The political influence of such a religion is to encourage a narrow, intense patriotism, and exclusive national isolation. It institutes two codes—one for the stranger, the other for citizens—a distinction retained by the Jews.

Fetishism evolves Polytheism by insensible degrees, and the two are inextricably blended. The worship of the object is transferred to the spirit, but to the very latest the image is preserved, and the Polytheist bestows quite as much adoration on the one as on the other.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Humphrey-Beaunett Discussion.

BENNETT'S REPLY. NO. IV.

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Dear Sir: I can see but little connection between the character and habits of Thomas Paine and the subject we have under discussion, but I nevertheless have no objection to considering either in this reply.

In the main, I think you fair and candid in your treatment of Paine and in the credit you accord him for the services he performed, but you repeat some of the slanders that have been so industriously circulated against him by his enemies. In the early days of the Republic his labors were duly appreciated, and he was accredited with patriotism, devotion, and great moral courage, and had he never written anything to offend bigoted sectarians, his praises would have been loudly sung to this day, and the entire country would be proud to honor his memory; but because he had the candor to express his honest convictions upon theological subjects, and to differ materially from the popular current of thought, he has been most vilely traduced therefor; and, besides, a persistent effort has been made to belittle his services in the Revolutionary struggle, and to blacken his name and reputation in every possible manner. You show more fairness in this respect than many others, and you are entitled to much credit for it.

Ingersoll states the case, with much clearness and truth, thus: "At the close of the American Revolution no one stood higher in America than Thomas Paine. The best, the wisest, the most patriotic were his friends and admirers, and had he been thinking only of his own good he might have rested from his trials and spent the remainder of his life in comfort and in ease. He could have been what the world is pleased to call respectable. He could have died surrounded by clergymen, warriors, and statesmen. At his death there would have been an imposing funeral, miles of carriages, civic societies, salvos of artillery, a nation in mourning, and, above all, a splendid monument covered with lies. He chose rather to benefit mankind. At that time the seeds sown by the great Infidels were beginning to bear fruit in France. The people were beginning to think. The Eighteenth Century was crowning its gray hairs with the wreath of Progress; on every hand Science was bearing testimony against the Church. Voltaire had filled Europe with light. D'Holbach was giving the Life of Paris the principles contained in his 'System of Nature.' The Encyclopedists had attacked superstition with information for the masses. The foundation of things began to be examined. A few had the courage to keep their shoes on and let the bush burn. Miracles began to get scarce. Everywhere the people began to enquire. America had set an example to the world. The word of Liberty was in the mouths of men, and they began to wipe the dust from their knees. The dawn of a new day appeared. Thomas Paine went to France. Into the new movement he threw all his energies. His fame had gone before him, and he was welcomed as a friend to the human race, and as a champion of free government."

It is pleasant, in recalling the early services of Paine to this country, to read what distinguished persons said of his efforts, before the religious element of the country became embittered against him. I will not take the space here to quote but few of the commendations of Paine for his heroic labors in the cause of American Independence. None excelled him in earnestness and courage, and he was in advance of the masses of the Colonists in daring to declare independence of Great Britain. It was Paine who first openly suggested that the Colonies disconnect themselves from the parent government. He was the first to propose an independent nationality, and to give a name to the incipient nation. It was his pen that first wrote the grand words—"The Free and Independent States of America."

The great results produced by his pamphlet, "Common Sense," can hardly be over-estimated. It did just what was necessary to be done to arouse the young country to the point of resistance. The effect it produced was unparalleled. It awakened the most active enthusiasm in the breasts of the Colonists. It performed an important part in the great drama, which if it had been omitted, success would never have been gained. I claim that, if with that pamphlet enthusiasm was aroused and victory ultimately was achieved, it was a most important factor in the great cause, and equal at least to any other portion of the means employed. Without it independence would not have been declared nor gained, and with it both were accomplished. Hence, to the author of "Common Sense" America owes her liberty to-day."

Edition after edition of the brave little work was issued. It circulated in every direction. It was read by every fireside, whether in the farmhouse or in the tented camp, and many times from the pulpit where the people gathered for worship. Its arguments were unanswerable; its reasoning was irresistible; and its logic most convincing. Well did Major-General Charles Lee express the truth in a letter to Gen. Washington two or three weeks after the pamphlet had appeared, when he said: "Have you seen the Pamphlet 'Common Sense'? I never saw such a masterly, irresistible performance. I own myself convinced by its arguments of the necessity of separation." Subsequently, in referring to this work of Paine, he said: "He burst forth on the world like Jove in thunder."

Samuel Bryan, in speaking of "Common Sense," said: "This may be called the book of Genesis, for it was the beginning. From this book spread the Declaration of Independence, and not only laid the foundation of liberty in our own country, but the good of mankind throughout the world."

Lossing, in his "Field Book of the Revolution," said: "'Common Sense' was the earliest and most powerful appeal in behalf of independence, and probably did more to fix that idea firmly in the public mind than any other instrumentality."

Morse, in his "Annals of the Revolution," said: "The change in the public mind in consequence of 'Common Sense' is without a parallel."

Wm. Howitt, in "Cassell's Illustrated History of England," says: "There was no man in the Colonies, nevertheless, who contributed so much to bring the open Declaration of Independence to a crisis as Thomas Paine. This pamphlet ('Common Sense') was the spark which was all that was needed to fire the train of Independence. It at once seized on the imagination of the public; cast all other writers in the shade, and flew in thousands and tens of thousands all over the Colonies. . . . During the winter and spring this lucid and admirably reasoned pamphlet was read and discussed everywhere and by all classes, bringing the conviction that immediate independence was necessary. The common fire blazed up in Congress, and the thing was done."

Henry G. Watson, in his "History of the United States," says: "'Common Sense,' written by Thomas Paine, giving in plain language the advantages and necessity of independence, effected a complete revolution in the feelings and sentiments of the great mass of the people."

Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, and many other distinguished personages, bore honorable testimony to the great services performed by Paine but want of room must prevent further quotations now.

Possibly the great good which was accomplished by "Common Sense" was only equaled by the grand results produced by "The Crisis." These were issued at irregular periods during the great struggle and when the exigencies of the times most demanded their aid. The contest was a long and unequal one on the part of the feeble Colonists. The people were poor, and the army was badly supplied with arms, provisions, and clothing, and they were contending with the most powerful nation in the world. It is not strange that desertions were very numerous; that the half-starved army became decimated, and that the greatest gloom spread over the entire land. The first number of "The Crisis" was issued at the time when General Washington was compelled, before superior forces, to retreat from this city across New Jersey, when, by numerous desertions, the army had become largely reduced, and when the greatest despondency had settled over the entire country. Then it was that Paine's burning words rang over the land: "These are the times that try men's souls. The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will in this crisis shrink from the service of his country, but he that stands it now deserves the thanks of man and woman. Tyranny, like hell, is not easily conquered, yet we have this consolation with us: the harder the conflict, the more glorious the victory; what we obtain too cheaply, we esteem too lightly." "Every generous person should say, 'If there must be war, let it be in my day, that my child may have peace.'" "He that rebels against reason is a real rebel; but he that in defense of reason rebels against tyranny has a better right to the title of 'The Defender of the Faith' than George the Third."

The first number of "The Crisis" was read in every camp, by every corporal's guard, and by every fireside over the land, and the stirring appeals of Paine had a wonderful effect; desertions were greatly lessened, enthusiasm was rekindled, enlistments were revived, and new courage was imparted to the whole country.

The success of the struggle was most unpromising. The fate of the country was like a balance, with the side of the Colonists about to "kick the beam." It was the critical moment of the young nation's existence. Something had to be done promptly or the cause was lost. Paine saved the nation he had called into being and had christened. May the people of this country never forget the great debt they owe this man. Without his services national independence would not have been secured.

I was nearly prepared by your third letter for your attempt to count Paine a Christian; at all events when he wrote "Common Sense" and "The Crisis," as he quoted a passage of Scripture or two and did not take the occasion to present his theological views; but the quotations you give from Adams, and Paine's own words at the commencement of the "Age of Reason," effectually refute the supposition that his religious opinions were of recent date. It was obviously improper to introduce theology into "Common Sense," "The Crisis," or "The Rights of Man," and he showed his good sense by not obtruding religious beliefs into political essays or discussions. Had he done so, you, doubtless, would have blamed him for it far more than you now do for the omission.

You quote a woman to show that Paine was not a statesman. Unless you can find a man or two among the thousands who knew him who expressed a similar opinion, it will be hardly just to condemn him on that authority alone as not being a statesman. Without doing yourself or Paine any injustice you might have quoted the lady a little more fully, where she says, "The boldness of his conception, the originality of his style, the striking truths which he boldly throws out in the midst of those whom they offend, must necessarily have produced great effects."

The portion of Paine's life after 1787, when he went to France, you are pleased to term The Period of his Infamy. There you assuredly wrong Paine and yourself. It was far from being a "period of infamy." There was no such period in Paine's life. His career in Europe may well be called glorious. After visiting France, besides attending to the introduction and manufacture of an iron bridge he had invented in this country, he visited his aged mother, where he passed some time, and ministered to her necessities. It was during what you characterize as the period of Paine's infamy that he wrote the "Rights of Man," one of the grandest pleas for Humanity ever made; a production that has won encomiums from men of the very highest ability and distinction. Richard Henry Lee, in acknowledging to Gen. Washington the receipt of a copy, said: "It is a performance of which any man might be proud; and I most sincerely regret that our country could not have offered sufficient inducement to have retained as a permanent citizen a man so thoroughly republican in sentiment and practice in the expression of his opinions." In reference to that production, Lord Erskine remarked: "Mr. Paine spoke to the people, reasoned with them, told them they were bound by no subjugation to any sovereignty further than their own benefit connected them." Andrew Jackson said: "Thomas Paine needs no monument made by hands; he has erected himself a monument in the hearts of all lovers of liberty. The 'Rights of Man' will be more enduring than all the piles of marble and granite man can erect."

Napoleon Bonaparte, even, by way of high compliment to Mr. Paine, said: "A statue of gold ought to be erected to him in every city in the Universe." He added, that he slept with "The Rights of Man" under his pillow, and he pressed Mr. Paine to honor him with his correspondence and his advice.

It certainly was not infamous to be promptly declared a citizen of France, and to be elected to the National Assembly from four different Departments. His career in that body was eminently honorable. He was early appointed one of the Committee to draft a Constitution for that country. He first made himself unpopular by his humane defense of the unfortunate king, Louis XVI, whom he wished to save from death and recommended that he be sent to America. For this noble act, Ingersoll pays this merited tribute: "Search the records of the world and you will find few sublimer acts than that of Thomas Paine voting against the king's death. He the hater of despotism, the abhorrer of monarchy, the champion of the rights of man, the republican, accepting death to save the life of a deposed tyrant—of a throneless king. This was the last grand act of his political life—the sublime conclusion of his political career." But, for this humane action, an insane people threw him into prison, and by the merest chance he escaped the guillotine. In my humble opinion it is well for the world that he escaped death at that time. Otherwise his "Age of Reason" would never have appeared.

This, his last great work, was written under the immediate apprehension of death, in a spirit of honesty, boldness, and fairness rarely equaled. He certainly did not write for popularity, for he took the unpopular side, but he penned what he believed to be the truth. For this act of self-sacrifice you and the Christian world are ready to consign him to the lowest degree of degradation and infamy. Why is this so? Because he was an honest man, and uttered just what he believed, though he shocked the prejudices of Christendom. He found contradictions, absurdities, and obscenity in the Bible, and had the candor and honesty to say so. Can you say he did not find them there? If you do, I think I can easily point out your error. Was it so wrong for Paine to give his real convictions that he should be doomed to the realms of infamy forever? No! No! No! Rather let pæons be sung to his memory, so long as truth is superior to superstition and error.

Of the "Age of Reason" you say: "It does not contain one original thought. All its cavils had been familiar to the world ever since the days of Celsus and Porphyry. It owes its notoriety not to its matter, but to its manner. Many Infidels of the higher type are ashamed of it." Allow me to say that I think in this language you do violence to truth. A more original work of the kind than Paine's "Age of Reason" has not been produced for two hundred years. Why did you not give some proofs of your assertion that leading Infidels are ashamed of it? Where are the proofs to be found? If he merely played the parrot and repeated the ideas of others, why have the anathemas of the Church been heaped upon his head a thousand times more than upon those who you say were the originators of his sentiments? If it is true that his writings cannot do any discredit to Christianity, please tell me why defamation, slander, and abuse have been so persistently thrown upon him by the Christian sects for three quarters of a century.

Is it not singular, too, that the writings of a mere plagiarist should have been so popular while the originals sank into comparative obscurity? Probably there have been more copies sold of Paine's "Age of Reason" than of all the books of the other Infidel writers you named. One hundred editions of the "Age of Reason" have doubtless been printed and sold in England and America; and hundreds more will yet be printed and sold. His Theological Works are selling to-day far more rapidly than the works of any other Infidel writer; and I believe this will be the case for the next hundred years. Few works on the Christian side have been equally as popular, and probably there has not been one copy sold of Watson's Reply to the "Age of Reason" to ten or twenty sold of the latter.

Allow me to say in this connection that I have now in press a fine edition of Paine's Complete Works, which will very soon be issued in one large volume, including his Life, also his Theological Works and his Political Writings, as well as each part separately. I am proud to be the publisher of the writings of Thomas Paine, and deem it one of the most commendable acts of my life. I shall be only too glad to furnish a copy of his works, or any part of them, to any person who wants them.

Paine spoke directly to the people and addressed himself to their plain common sense. This is the secret of his success as a writer. Jefferson expressed himself thus, regarding Paine as a writer: "No writer has excelled Paine in ease and familiarity of style, in perspicuity of expression, happiness of elucidation, and in simple, unassuming language. In this respect he may be compared with Dr. Franklin."

Stephen Simpson said of Paine: "Lucid in his style, forcible in his diction, and happy in his illustrations, he threw the charms of poetry over the statue of reason, and made converts to liberty as if a power of fascination presided over his pen."

You have quoted a few words from Theodore Parker; let me add a few more. In a letter to a near friend he said: "I see some one has written a paper on Thomas Paine, in the Atlantic Monthly, which excites the wrath of men who are not worthy to stoop down and untie the latchet of his shoes, nor even to bring them home from the shoe-black. . . . It must not be denied that he had less than the average amount of personal selfishness or vanity; his instincts were humane and elevated, and his life devoted mainly to the great purposes of humanity. His political writings fell into my hands in early boyhood, and I still think they were of immense service to the country. . . . I think he did more to promote piety and morality among men than a hundred ministers of that age in America. He did it by showing that religion is not responsible for the absurd doctrines taught in its name." Quotations from a few other clergymen may not be out of place. Rev. Solomon Southwick, among other complimentary remarks, said: "Had Thomas Paine been a Grecian or a Roman patriot in olden times, and performed the same public services as he did for this country, he would have had the honor of an apotheosis. The Pantheon would have been opened to him, and we should at this day regard his memory with the same veneration that we do that of Socrates and Cicero. But posterity will do him justice. Time, that destroys envy and establishes truth, will clothe his character in the habiliments that justly belong to it." Rev. M. D. Conway, in a discourse in Cincinnati on Paine's birthday, Jan. 29, 1860 (which I had the good fortune to hear), said: "All efforts to stain the good name of Thomas Paine have recoiled on those who made them, like poisoned arrows shot against a strong wind. In his life, in his justice, in his truth, in his adherence to high principles, in his disinterestedness, I look in vain for a parallel in these times." The Rev. David Swing of Chicago, and, I believe, of your own denomination, said: "I have read Paine's theological works with a great pleasure and profit. Indeed, judging by his writings, he was one of the grandest and best men that ever trod the planet."

In marked contradistinction to the tributes thus honorably bestowed stands such dishonorable tirades as you quoted from the envious and maligning pen of Adams. It seemed to wound his vanity to have praise accorded to Paine. He could hardly bear to have it go down in history that anybody but himself struggled to fire the American heart to deeds of daring and valor in the cause of national independence. I must confess that the strongest proof you have adduced in favor of Adams being a Christian are the quotations against Paine which you make from him. They sound exceedingly like Christian sentiments, and were it not true that he never accepted the fundamental dogma of Christianity, I would freely relinquish him to you and your cause. That his remarks about Paine were malicious, ungenerous and uncalled for, cannot for a moment be denied.

You say, "Paine did not always tell the truth," and as proof adduce his assertion that he never published a syllable in England. It is quite possible that he did not. Writing and publishing are very different operations. Many persons write for this paper, but I am the publisher, and equally so if I write not a word myself. Do you suppose for a moment that Mr. Paine meant that he never wrote a syllable in England? It strikes me that I can substantiate a much stronger charge of falsehood against your God, your savior, the patriarchs, the prophets, the apostles, and the popes, bishops and priests, from the earliest times down to the present. Should you desire it, it will be a cheerful task to me to accommodate you.

Paine did not claim to be the author of the Declaration of Independence, but only that his pamphlet, "Common Sense," led to it. This opinion is doubtless correct, and is corroborated by the judgment of thousands. Your charge of "self-righteousness and self-conceit" is indifferently sustained. It was no more reprehensible for him to name himself as author of "Common Sense" than for Jefferson to name himself as the author of the Declaration of Independence. Both were quite excusable. His statement that he had lived an honest and useful life was strictly true, and hardly justifies your fling at his want of faith in the Jewish Bible in connection therewith. Such as Paine was he attained by his own merits. He claimed neither grace nor virtue on the merits of another.

Few of his friends have claimed for him the authorship of the "Junius Letters," though William H. Burr, in his volume, "Junius Unmasked," gives in parallel columns a large number of extracts from Junius' and Paine's writings, and it must be confessed the similarity is striking.

You say "Paine became unpopular in France." This was due more to the peculiar fitful, mercurial character of the French people than to any other cause; though his praiseworthy defense of Louis XVI, as has been shown, made him temporarily unpopular. You say, also, that "he was penurious." Your estimate of him differs from that of others. Joel Barlow, a man of the highest veracity, and who knew Paine intimately, said: "He was one of the most benevolent and disinterested of mankind, endowed with the clearest perception, an uncommon show of original genius, and the greatest depth of thought. . . . He ought to be ranked among the brightest and undeviating luminaries of the age in which he lived. . . . He was always charitable to the poor beyond his means, a sure protector and friend to all Americans in distress that he found in foreign countries; and he had frequent occasions to exert his influence in protecting them during the Revolution in France." His subscription of $500, all the money he had in the world, for the benefit of the soldiers, in the darkest days of the Revolutionary War, did not look much like penuriousness. He headed the list by which £30,000, or $150,000, was raised, which was another means by which the cause was saved. His gift of the copyright of his works, never charging a cent for the same, did not savor of penuriousness. Had he seen fit, as many have done, to avail himself of the copyright, a large income could have been secured to himself. Had he been penurious, he would doubtless have done so. He was frugal but not penurious.

Another charge you make is that "Paine was a drunkard in his latter years." This is unkind, to say the least, and sustained only by slander and misrepresentation. He lived at a time when almost everybody drank more or less, and he made use of spirits; but he did not drink to excess, as many of his intimate acquaintances testified. The allowance that he restricted himself to was one quart per week, and this included what he placed before his friends when they called upon him. That amount would not suffice for a hard drinker. The amount used is proved by the statement of Mr. Burger, the grocer who supplied Mr. Paine, and I obtained additional confirmation from surviving members of the family with whom he boarded when at New Rochelle. Their statement was that he never exceeded one quart per week, and that they never knew him to be intoxicated. I have conversed also with Major A. Contant and Mr. Burger of New Rochelle, now very far advanced in life, but who distinctly remember Mr. Paine. They remember him as a pleasant, genial man, who lived on good terms with his neighbors and was not known to ever have been intoxicated. If he even did get intoxicated occasionally, it would hardly disprove his arguments, either upon political or theological subjects, and would not render him materially different from many of the brilliant minds who have graced our nation's history, among whom may be named Daniel Webster, Henry Clay, Thomas F. Marshall, Silas Wright, Stephen A. Douglas, Richard Yates, and many others, not to name Chandler and Grant of our own times. These men all made pretty free use of ardent spirits, but the Church has not tried to damn their memories on account of it. The facts are, Paine made an habitual use of the article, but he was not a drunkard. Had Paine become so intoxicated as to lie in a drunken sleep, exposing his person, as did the patriarch Noah, or like the patriarch Lot, to commit incest with his own daughters, or even like the Rev. Mr. Pearson of Pittsburgh, or that other respected clergyman in Baltimore who was so intoxicated in the pulpit as to be unable to continue his sermon, could you not have made out a much stronger case of intemperance against him than with the facts as they absolutely took place?

Your charge about his being "unhappy and quarrelsome" is hardly worthy of attention. In advanced life, when he felt that he had been denied the credit which a grateful people should have bestowed upon him, he might at times have been peevish and uncommunicative, as many aged people are; but amiability, geniality, and sociability were his general characteristics.

I am most sorry of all, dear friend, to see you willing to repeat or use the vile insinuations retailed by that ungentlemanly slanderer, Cheetham, in regard to an intimacy between Paine and Madame Bonneville, throwing out the imputation that he was the father of one of her children, when there was not a particle of proof that there was the slightest truth in the insinuation, and when you must have known that Mrs. Bonneville prosecuted Cheetham for libel, and sustained the action without the slightest difficulty, and that Mr. Sampson, Cheetham's lawyer, acknowledged in court that the charge was groundless—an unmitigated libel. I can hardly think your cause can be benefited by repeating those calumnies and low insinuations. In view of the notorious adulterous operations of Bishop Onderdonk, Rev. Mr. Wesley, of Illinois, Rev. J. S. Bartlett, Rev. Miriam D. Wood, Rev. J. M. Mitchell, Rev. L. D. Huston, Rev. A. T. Thompson, Rev. E. F. Berkley, Rev. Dr. Griswold, Rev. E. G. Ribble, Rev. B. Phinney, Rev. I. S. Killoch, Rev. Dr. Pomeroy, Rev. Tunis Titus Kendrick, Rev. R. H. Williamson, Rev. John Newland Maffit, Rev. Mr. Wilcox, Rev. E.

W. Schon, Rev. John A. Huckins, Rev. Mr. Deardorf, with hundreds of other libidinous reverends, from Henry W. Beecher, down to the Rev. Thomas B. Bott and the Rev. J. H. Foster, against all of whom most damaging proofs of adulterous improprieties were brought to light, it seems hardly worth your while to revive the false and exploded insinuation about Paine, whose record in that direction is singularly clear and untarnished. Occupants of glass houses, or people whose friends are, should not amuse themselves by throwing stones.

Mr. Paine never set himself up for a saint, nor have his greatest admirers ever claimed that he was a man without fault. He was human, and of course had his failings as well as other men; but take him "all in all," through the entire course of his life, and he will compare favorably with distinguished statesmen, theologians, and authors of the last two centuries. When, however, sectarians have been unable to refute his arguments (and it is safe to say that his theological arguments have never been refuted), their only recourse has been to slander, abuse, and call him hard names. They have seemed to think if they charged Paine with intemperance, uncleanness, and with having completely recanted on his death-bed, that they had set his arguments aside. It is not strange, then, finding this course so much easier than refuting his arguments, that they should readily resort to it. As you are candid enough to admit that "he died as he lived, a Deist," it is unnecessary for me to disprove the oft-repeated and silly assertions that he recanted on his death-bed and gave the lie to the honest convictions of his life.

In conclusion, allow me to make one more brief quotation from the matchless Ingersoll: "I challenge the world to show that Thomas Paine ever wrote one line, one word, in favor of tyranny—in favor of immorality; one line, one word, against what he believed to be for the highest and best interest of mankind; one line, one word, against justice, charity, or liberty, and yet he has been pursued as though he had been a fiend from hell. His memory has been execrated as though he had murdered some Uriah for his wife, driven some Hagar into the desert to starve with his child upon her bosom; defiled his own daughters; ripped open with the sword the sweet bodies of loving and innocent women; advised one brother to assassinate another; kept a harem with seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines, or had persecuted Christians even unto strange cities."

The fact that it requires more space to refute false charges than to make them must be my apology for the length of my reply.

I am truly yours, D. M. BENNETT.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.
SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 24.

Great Jehovah, let us leave for a time the consideration of such disagreeable subjects as Christian persecutions, Christian wars and bloodshed in the later centuries, and return to thy own ways and requirements of thy people in olden times. Let us enquire of thee of the observances and duties which thou didst demand of them in the times when thou wast daily with them and heldst direct intercourse with them.

We would ask of thee in reference to the Sacrifices which thou didst demand in former times of the people whom thou didst choose in preference to all the other nations of the earth.

Did not Offerings and Sacrifices of animals of various kinds afford thee great pleasure and often restore thee to good humor when thy feelings, from various causes, had been ruffled, and when thy wrath had been kindled to a high degree of heat and excitement.

Are we not led to conclude that the smell of the burning flesh, blood, bones, kidneys, cauls, fat, entrails, hair, hoofs, feathers, etc., of bulls, rams, he-goats, and birds of various kinds was most agreeable to thy olfactories, and produced a very pleasant and soothing sensation upon thee?

Was not thy nose gotten up upon a somewhat different plan from what the best arranged noses are now-a-days, to be pleased with such villainous smells?

Was not the construction of Altars upon which to burn and roast the carcasses of animals, and the instructions with reference to the manufacture of the pans, ovens, frying-pans, shovels, flesh-hooks, basins, etc., subjects which claimed thy special attention, and didst thou not make thy will known as to how they should be made and used?

Didst thou not give explicit directions how the priests should be dressed and decorated while attending to the slaying of the bulls, the rams and goats? Didst thou not say: "These are the garments which they shall make: a breastplate, an ephod, a robe, a bordered coat, a mitre, and a girdle. They are to be made of gold and blue, and purple and scarlet and fine linen?"

Did it not always make thee feel gracious and beneficent when the fumes of those burning substances arose to thy nostrils.

Did those fumes fill the office of food to thee, or were they simply a source of pleasure and gratification?

Didst thou not demand the best of the flocks and the herds for thy own use, claiming, in all cases, those without blemish or disease?

Wert thou not partial to the male sex in the choice thou madest of the animals to be sacrificed unto thyself? Was this because the bulls, the rams, and the he-goats had a more grateful smell in thy nostrils than cows, ewes, or she-goats?

Did it not give the place of worship about thy altars, where thy people so often congregated, and where the blood of animals was daily spilled, much the appearance of a slaughter-house? and did not the decomposing flesh and blood of the animals, especially in warm weather, send up a most offensive odor? Or was that also a sweet savor in thy nostrils?

In fact, was not the system which required such a constant slaughtering and burning of beasts rather a beastly sort of religion?

Did it not give Aaron and his sons, and after them the Levites and priests, much the appearance of butchers to be smeared with blood from head to foot; to apply the blood of bullocks, rams, etc., to their thumb-nails and toe-nails and to be sprinkled over their persons?

In instances where the hair, the intestines, and the dung of the animals offered unto thee were separated from the meat and burned without the camp, did not the offensive odors arising from the same reach thy nostrils just as much as though burnt upon the altar? Is thy nose really any more in one place than in another? Would not the bad smells of burning hair, hide, horns, and dung, reach thy organs of smell just as soon when burned without the camp as within?

Was it a real fact that thou didst truly delight in the smell arising from burning and frying meat, fat, and blood, or didst thou simply submit to it because of the good effect thou deemedst it would have upon thy people to engage in that bloody exercise?

Didst thou not have a far greater partiality for the fumes of burning animals than for vegetables? and was it not for this cause that thou wert more pleased with the offering of animals made unto thee by Abel than thou wert with the fruits of the earth presented to thee by Cain?

Is it not a truth in history and dietetics that people who live largely upon the flesh of animals, and who spill a great amount of blood, are more ferocious and savage in their dispositions than those who live mainly upon grains, seeds, fruits and roots?

Do not men and women, in a great degree, exhibit characteristics agreeing with the nature of the food they eat? Is it not the same with animals? Are they not mild or ferocious according to the nature of their food?

If, twenty-five hundred or three thousand years ago, thou tookest great pleasure in the smell of burning bulls and rams and he-goats, are we not correct in inferring that thy taste has changed somewhat, and that thou now carest much less for fresh meat, blood, fat, entrails, etc., than formerly?

If this is so, does it not prove that gods are subject to the same law of evolution that other beings are, and that they change in taste, appetites and desire as really as other people do?

If it was commendable in thy people to offer up burnt offerings of roasting animals three thousand years ago, is it not equally so at the present time? If it pleased thee then should it not please thee now? Does not the Book say repeatedly that thou art unchangeable?

To what, then, can we attribute this change in the programme of worship and oblation to thee? Is it because it was found that the practice of slaughtering animals and spilling so much of the blood of bulls and rams made a very filthy place around the altar and in the temple? or was it because thou changedst thy mind and concludedst that the service of the heart, and the actions of a good life were far preferable to blood of bullocks and goats? Or again, was it because the Israelites gradually evolved from a state of barbarism and no longer took pleasure in slaying and roasting animals as a religious rite?

Was it not a crude and savage idea of deity—of the Creator and Ruler of the vast Universe—to think that his highest pleasure consisted in smelling the fumes of burning and frying animals? And was not the idea borrowed from the primitive savage races who lived prior to civilization in the world, and who sacrificed the results of the chase to placate their exacting and malicious gods?

Is not the belief in local and tutelar deities, of tribal or household gods, by the offering of animals and other presents, with the view of appeasing their anger and securing their good will, far older in the world than the existence of the Jewish nation?

Does not the business of animal sacrifice, including the frying and burning of flesh, fat, and bones, more rightfully belong to the crude, barbarous age of the world than to the days of education and mental refinement?

Is not a God who can take pleasure in the smell of burning animal tissues far inferior to and more crude than one who takes pleasure in intellectual advancement and in a highly cultured condition of the human race? Does not the killing and burning of dumb beasts as a religious sacrament belong to the same phase of civilization as do religious wars and pious massacres?

Is such business fitted to any class of human beings, save those who are on the plane of ignorance and crudity?

Can it be that the shedding of blood of any animal, with the frying of its flesh and blood in addition, can do away with the effects of any wrong act which a man or woman may commit?

Is there any way in the world whereby a wrong act can be remedied so effectually as to discontinue the wrong conduct committed?

Is not the entire idea of one beast, or one person, atonement for the sins and misdeeds of another, the possibility of one person taking the guilt of another, a most fallacious one?

Is not the belief in it calculated to work a great mischief in the world? If a person believes that if he commits an absolute wrong the guilt can be transferred to another and that the good deeds, or the life of another, can be imparted to him as righteousness and virtue, is it not calculated to make him indifferent as to what his conduct is?

If a person is taught to believe that he can evade the responsibility of his acts, or that he can escape the consequences of a vicious course of life, that the debt so incurred may be paid by another, is it not directly calculated to make him careless and indifferent to what wrong action he is guilty of?

Is it not better that every intelligent being is taught that there is absolutely no forgiveness, no atonement, for any moral offense, or any wicked deed that he commits, and that he cannot by any possibility escape the legitimate effects of bad conduct; that if he violates the laws of health, of chastity, or any of the laws of Nature, whether physical or moral, that he is bound to bring the consequence upon his own head, which no animal and no being can remove or take away?

Is not the old Hebrew idea of the scape-goat which was periodically laden with the sins of the people and sent adrift into the wilderness, by which process the people were supposed to be freed from the evil deeds they had committed, a most senseless absurdity?

Is it possible for a goat or a sheep or a lamb, whether dead or alive, to remove a particle of guilt or crime from the body or the soul of a single living person?

Was the sacrifice of animals and of human beings also a part of thy original scheme of shedding blood and burning flesh for thy pleasure and benefit or for the good of a portion of the human race?

Was it not in keeping with this business of human sacrifice that thou commandedst Abraham to offer up his little son, Isaac?

Was it not in keeping with this sanguinary rite that Jephtha sacrificed his only daughter unto thee?

Is not human sacrifice recognized in thy Word where it says: "No devoted thing which a man shall devote unto the Lord of all that he hath, both of man and beast and of the field, in his possession, shall be sold or redeemed. Every devoted thing is most holy unto the Lord. None devoted, which shall be devoted of men, shall be redeemed, but shall surely be put to death?" (Lev., xxvii, 27, 28).

Was it not in keeping with this old idea of human sacrifice unto thee that the wars of extermination and the numerous sanguinary slaughters were conducted and perpetrated in thy name?

Was not animal sacrifices, as well as the offerings of fruits and vegetables and a numerous list of edibles, thousands of years ago, a part of the religious rites of fetish worshipers and pagans in a large portion of the nations of antiquity?

Were not baked meats, bread, wine, and a variety of dishes taken in to the gods and presented as a propitiation or as a means to secure their favor and good will?

Did not the wily priests derive a great benefit from this system of sacrificing to the gods? Did not they and their families thus come in possession of the rich viands which their dupes prepared for the gods to partake of?

In a similar way did not the Jewish priests derive a direct benefit from the great number of animals that were ostensibly put to death for thy benefit?

When Wave-Offerings, Heave-Offerings, Free-will-Offerings, Trespass-Offerings, and the other kinds of offerings made of fine flour, turtle doves, pigeons, etc., do with a view of producing a magical effect upon thy mind and feelings, did not the greater portion of it fall into the possession of the priests?

In fact, has not this been the result of nearly all the rites, sacrifices, and offerings that have been required of man for thy benefit—have not all finally inured to the benefit of the priests? Have they not made their living for thousands of years by claiming to minister to thee for the people below them and to stand as mediator between thyself and themselves.

Has not the trade of communing with thee in behalf of the masses, and with them in behalf of thee, long been a profitable occupation for almost countless thousands of priests? and has it not afforded them a lazy and respectable way of making an easy living, while the great bulk of toilers have been compelled to support them, a privileged class of idle drones?

Did not the great and mistaken system of sacrificing, of making atonement of one for another, whether the victim was an animal or a man, did it not culminate in the sacrificing thy own beloved Son to appease thy own anger, and to bear away the guilt of a sinful world?

Was not thy Son the embodiment of all the bulls, all the rams, all the he-goats, all the pigeons, all the turtle doves, and all the other sacrifices that have been slain and offered up for the last five thousand years?

Is not the sacrificing of an innocent, affectionate, devoted and faultless child for the offenses of others; the most revolting specimen of "divine justice" of which man is capable of conceiving?

Without wishing to be personal or invidious, may we not suggest that a parent who could lay a plan by which the cruel death of his own fond and inoffensive offspring should be a necessity to produce a forgiving state of his own mind and to make it possible for him to look with leniency upon the failings and errors of billions of his other creatures, must possess most monstrous characteristics, and is a being whom a just person can neither love nor respect?

Is not the sacrifice of a dear and only child on the altar of vindictive but mistaken justice more repulsive to the finer feelings of man and woman than the slaying and roasting of all the bulls, rams, and he-goats, from the earliest time to the present?

Is not, then, the Christian religion, founded upon the sacrifice—the offering up of the blood and life of a lovely, angelic son to the same God who once delighted in the smell of burning bulls, rams, and he-goats—more revolting to the finer sensibilities of human nature than any other system of religion the world has known?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

A New Edition of Paine's Works.

It is with much satisfaction and pride that we announce to our readers that we have in press the finest edition of the writings of Thomas Paine that has ever been published in Europe or America. It is on the largest, fullest type (small pica) of any edition we have ever seen, and is easy to be read by the aged as well as the young.

Besides furnishing the works of Paine on larger type than other editions, we are also making the price lower; as follows:

COMMON SENSE, paper cover, 15 cents.

THE CRISIS, Nos. I to XIV, paper 50 cents; cloth 80.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN, a Reply to Burke, paper 50 cents; cloth 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON, Parts I. and II., 12mo, paper 25 cents; cloth 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON and THE EXAMINATION OF PROPHECIES, 12mo, paper 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS, including "Common Sense," "The Crisis," and "The Rights of Man," with steel engraving of Paine, 12mo, cloth $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS, with a Life of Paine by Calvin Blanchard, containing "The Age of Reason," "The Examination of Prophecies," "Reply to Bishop Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," with steel-plate engraving of Paine, 12mo, $1.50.

PAINE'S GREAT WORKS COMPLETE, including all the foregoing in one large volume, crown-octavo, with steel portrait of Paine, cloth $3.00; leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF PAINE, by Calvin Blanchard, with steel portrait of Paine, paper 40 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Postage included in the above prices.

A fine opportunity is here presented for every person to obtain the works of Paine, complete or in parts, in good style, and at very low prices. Every admirer of Thomas Paine who has not a copy of his Complete Works should avail himself of this opportunity to have them, especially when he can get the entire volume at three dollars. Who is there not willing to give three dollars for the GREAT WORKS OF THOMAS PAINE, COMPLETE, including his Life and steel portrait?

We will be ready to fill orders in a few days, and hope to be kept busy at the good work. "First come, first served."

Prices Reduced.

To encourage purchasers we have decided to make the following reduction in prices:

THE UNDERWOOD-MARPLES DEBATE from 40 cents to 35 cents in paper, and from 80 cents to 60 cents in cloth binding.

BURGESS-UNDERWOOD DEBATE from 60 cents to 50 cents paper, and from $1.00 to 75 cents cloth binding. Sent by mail at these prices. Everybody can afford a copy now.

PHOTOGRAPHS.—We have also made a reduction in the price of photographs to 15 cents, singly, or eight for $1.00, post-paid and assorted as desired. We have added several to our list. Let low prices encourage increased sales.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COLLECTION OF FORMS, HYMNS, AND RECITATIONS is at length in press. As soon as the printers and binders have performed their part we will send them to those who have favored us with orders. Let those who have not ordered do so early. A bound volume of nearly 600 pages, largely of original matter, sent postpaid for 75 cents—richly worth double the money. Friends, how can you hold back when such bargains are offered?

If those who know themselves to be in arrears for THE TRUTH SEEKER,—all who have not renewed for the present volume—will be kind enough to send us the amount due they will confer a favor upon us and help the good cause along. Our expenses are heavy, times are dull, money comes in slowly, and we are needing every dollar that is justly ours.

Remember, also, that we are always glad to add new names to our list. Every one who sends us a new subscriber helps us to meet the inevitable expenses of the business. We can supply the back numbers from the beginning of the Discussion, or from any point during the year. To all new subscribers for a year we will send, extra, as a premium, ten numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER of Vol. III—1876. May we not hope for a few more additions to our list? A little effort will do it. In these unprecedented hard times every true friend to the cause should feel that he has a duty to perform to help push along the car of progress and truth. We do not want our cause to languish. Every two dollars received helps pay the bills, which must be met or the machine must stop.

B. F. UNDERWOOD lectures in Canada as follows: Lindsay, May 25; Toronto, 27; Meaford, 28, 29; Owen-Sound, 30, 31.

A Letter and the Reply.

Mrs. S.—: I have not yet finished reading "John's Way." It is a curious mixture of learning and misconception. It is a pity that one rails at what one does not understand. I should very much doubt the evidence of my own eyes or senses if I differed so totally from those who have studied the Bible by the aid of all the commentaries, and by the light of the time in which it was written. I never pretended to understand the Bible, and my Bible lessons so far have only taught me the a b c of it; but I know that a book that has stood two thousand years of criticism cannot be much hurt by even the author of "Studying the Bible," a book written, it seems to me, by one who did not know the alphabet of the writing. One who cannot separate, or knows no difference between spirit and matter seems to me as unfitted to talk of the spirit, as a person who never studied medicine is unfitted to deal in drugs. The more poisonous the drug, the greater the care—the more spiritual the book, the purer the judge. No art can make truth untruth, or right to be wrong, although one can make each appear the other. There goes the bell for prayer-meeting, so good bye, E.—.

FRIEND E.—: I am not at all surprised that thee cannot appreciate or understand "John's Way." When people get their plain, practical, common-sense mixed up with ideas of ghosts, spirits, and gods, they are apt to see dimly when they attempt to pass judgment upon the opinions of those who deal solely in facts and realities. They dwell amid visions of myths and castles in air till they almost cease to recognize actualities when they come across them. As to "John's Way," the little volume makes no pretensions to being "learned." It is only a simple home-story, founded upon common, every-day-life incidents, and which contains more of truth than fiction. As to "misconception," I shall be grateful to thee or any one who will be so kind as to point out a few of them. Infidels are ever ready to be made right if once convinced they are in the wrong.

Of course no intelligent Liberal thinker ever pretends that he "understands the Bible." One of the greatest objections to the book is its incomprehensibility! You Christians, though, are confident that "who runs may read;" and that a child can comprehend its teachings. Unbelievers have studied it for ages, generation after generation, but the more they study the less willing are they to accept it as the work of an infinite all-wise being! and the more unsuitable do they find it as a guide and rule of action. True, we can pick out good, great, grand and noble sentiments, ideas and rules, and so on from all other bibles. Then, again, we can select maxims, laws and practices that are low, vulgar, mean and ignoble, from each of these same "holy" volumes; and this proves them to be but weak, fallible and unstable guides. As records of ancient times, manners, and customs, they are valuable, just as all very old relics are, and they would be a million times more so could we but select the genuine from the false, the real from the forged, and truth from fiction. "Commentators" are poor guides, because no honest and reliable commentary was ever written. Were it possible for some pure lover of science and fact, one unbiased by a desire for or against Christianity, or any other system of belief, to get hold of the real original first manuscripts from which the Bible is made up, and from them make correct literal translations, and then other honest unbiased archaeologists get up true commentaries on that bible, we might then begin to speak of light and help towards understanding the book.

Talk not of its having stood 2000 years of criticism! Why it never has stood one year! It has always been doubted and disbelieved. More money, brains, power, and time have been consumed in forcing that book upon the people than any one can begin to compute. Skeptics, doubters, and unbelievers have always outnumbered believers by millions. It has been twisted into all manner of meanings in the endeavor to make it palatable, but the intelligent thinker always swallows the dose with a mental reservation. What reasonably intellectual person in your own church pretends to believe the old Bible tales? or the miracles of the New Testament? Who believes Noah's flood, Mrs. Lot's being turned to salt, the Lord talking to Moses out of a bush, all the plagues of Egypt, etc., etc.? Or that Jesus Christ was actually the only begotten son of God any more than was Parker or Lincoln? Who of you have any more faith in Joseph's dream than you have in your own? Who believes in raising the dead, turning water into wine, cursing trees till they die, moving mountains by faith, or in rendering deadly poisons innocuous the efficacy of the same "substance of things hoped for"?

As for the "difference between spirit and matter," I make no pretension of being able to conceive of spirit in any manner or shape, any more than I do the difference between heat and cold—perhaps not as much. The old school philosophies used to call cold "the absence of heat," consequently nothing. Now, spirit is the absence of matter, and that, too, is nothing. Matter fills all space, and therefore we find no place for nothing—for spirits. Now, things are realities, hence they are not legitimately comparable with the ethereal, sublimated essence of infinitesimal vacuity called spirit, therefore the analogy is not a correct one.

"Prayer meetings." I should really be glad to have thee inform me what thee has ever yet been able to obtain by prayer. Does thee suppose thee can coax, persuade, flatter, or bribe an unchangeable, infinite being? Does thee fancy thy pet preacher has power to do so? Was there ever a single prayer answered? Are praying people any better, healthier, happier, or more favored, than those who never put up a petition? Is not truth better than falsehood? Are not realities preferable to myths? Is not the new better than the old? Then why not do away as soon as possible with the whole system of mythology and theology and come down to plain fact, to reason and common sense, to pure science and truth?

While Christians pretend to live in the light of Godism and Bibleism, and to look to Christ as an infallible guide, and fancy that they alone are on the safe side, do we find them to be really and practically better citizens, neighbors, and friends than Infidels are? Look at New York city: Professedly a Christian city, yet every seventh woman existing by prostitution. Look at her gambling-hells, dens of thieves, and cliques and rings of all kinds. Would she be worse if every vestige of religion were swept away from her borders? No! a thousand times, no! Once put her on her own resources, she would feel that there was no atonement for sin, and that every man and woman would have to be their own scape-goat, and themselves bear the consequences of their errors and crimes, and therefore they would see the necessity of doing as they would be done by, and "Is it right?" would be the watchword, and "Reason" the guiding star.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

Why I Became an Infidel.

Some twenty odd years ago during a Methodist revival it was my fortune, or misfortune, to get bulldozed into the Church; had it been otherwise, perhaps to-day I would have been a believer to a greater or less extent in future rewards or punishments. Superstition and ignorance were stumbling-blocks to my further advancement, but as I had taken the road that was said to lead to everlasting life and happiness beyond this vale of tears, it was not my intention to turn back until I had seen something more than a shadow. Of course I got religion, the same kind that all do—emotional excitement. A "change of heart" was something that I could not comprehend. If it had been a change of thought, or a change of base, I think I could have more fully comprehended its meaning. However I went it blind, as all others have done before me, and concluded that my heart was all right, and performed the functions it was intended to perform. I put my mind on heavenly things, and the Bible was my constant companion during my leisure moments. After reading it through five times, I had "a change of heart" as the preachers call it. The scales fell from my eyes, and I saw that it was the writing of men instead of God. If the preacher had not told me to search the scriptures, perhaps to-day I would be wallowing in the mire, and be a strong believer in mystery and miracles. When I discarded the sacredness of the Bible and read it as I did any other book, I soon saw that it was not what it was claimed to be. The evidence was not at all satisfactory to convince me that God had anything to do with it. I found that the believer could not drink any deadly poison without hurting him any more than an unbeliever. I found that those signs would not follow the believer,—"In my name (Christ's) they should cast out devils, speak with new tongues," etc., any more than they would follow the unbeliever. I found that there was not a prophecy in the Old Testament in regard to Christ; and in old Joseph's dream I found no evidence whatever that Mary was gotten with child by a ghost. Neither did I find any evidence in Mary's vision to convince me that she told the truth in regard to her conception which some call miraculous.

I found instead that believing it to be so, was all the evidence we have, which is no evidence at all. I found by searching the scriptures that the Christian religion was founded upon an old man's dream, and that man in his dotage. I found that the faith of a grain of mustard-seed would not remove a mountain any more than the faith of a mountain would cause a rotten mustard-seed to sprout and grow. I found that the laws of Nature are supreme, and that we need no miracles nor thaumaturgy to convince us of the fact; I found that the Holy Ghost was of modern origin and was never known to have had an existence prior to the Christian Church, which was its maker. I found that the prayers of the righteous availeth nothing, and that a box of pills would do more good, and be of greater benefit to mankind than all the prayers uttered in Christendom. I found that the Christian God was deaf to our supplications and could only be seen through spiritual eyes, or in other words, imagination boosted up with the jack-screw, faith. I took particular pains in reading the Bible, so as to understand it, and I found myself amply repaid for the trouble. I found that the God of the Bible was only an imaginary being, entirely outside of the five human senses. He could neither be seen, felt, heard, tasted, nor smelt.

I was fourteen years a member of the church before the scales began to fall from my eyes, and then a preacher put a bug in my ear by saying that he could not reconcile all the writings in the Bible, and thought some of them were spurious. This put me to thinking, and I came to the conclusion that if some were spurious, it might be that all were. From that day on, I advanced in knowledge. Reason and common sense took the place of ignorance and superstition, and I found myself a free man. The God of Nature, I could comprehend in the laws of the Universe. Liberal books and papers I had never seen and therefore I had no idea that there were two sides to this important question until some angel of light and truth sent me a copy of the Boston Investigator. Words cannot express the pleasure I took in reading it. I found that I was an Infidel. My mind was my church, and "to do good my religion," and from that time forth I have never paid a preacher to think for me. I have done my thinking for myself.

Then came THE TRUTH SEEKER to pave the way still brighter, and the two papers together are worth more than all the bibles and testaments this side of Jerusalem. The "Interrogatories to Jehovah," which are contained in your little paper from week to week are eye-openers, and worth the subscription price without saying anything else in its praise. My best wishes are with you, Brother Bennett, and I shall pray to the Pagan gods that your Paris friends will not succeed in causing you to backslide and fall into the arms of Jesus. Let them read the Bible as long as you have, and throw away the blind faith and leather spectacles they call spiritual eyes, and natural eyes will be of some benefit to them. They will then see that there is not as much in Jesus and the Holy Ghost as they have imagined. This scarecrow is an emotional religion founded on faith and superstitious ideas, and the more ignorant a man is, the better Christian he will make. The advice I would like to give to your friends is, pray less, and search the scriptures more. C. C. BURNS.

To a Letter.

BY MISS LUCY BRENNAN.

Years passed by me, and in their swift decay,
Of summer's scorching heat, and wintry day,
I deemed myself the most of all forgot;
Securely hidden in this dismal spot

Still toiling on, though aching with the pain
That wrenched my heart from that sweet fleshy chain.

Years passed; how sadly slow, without a thrill,
But ceaseless fighting with a desperate will;

Till all at once before my gaze was cast
The voiceless words of all the thrilling past;
The joy and freshness of the verdant spring,
With balmy odors to my soul did spring.

Each tremulous word concentrates all my gaze:
The quickening pulse declares the whispered praise.

And loudly clamors to the yearning heart,
That writhes and struggles to maintain its part.

Why dost thou wound me so and break my rest
When holier thoughts gave promise in my breast?

I was not wretched in my solitude:
Parnassus' Mount supplied my soul with food.

The whispering winds along the silent shore
Are more to me than joyous days of yore;
The rippling bubbles on yon pebbly bed
Are sweeter far than all the words you said.

These charm the ear and calm the suffering mind.

While thou, so dear, art most of all unkind.

Visit of Hudson and Emma Tuttle to Chicago.

SPIRITUALISTIC REUNION.

The occasion of the visit of Hudson and Emma Tuttle to the Editor-in-Chief of the Religio-Philosophical Journal was seized upon by the Spiritualists of Chicago to secure one of the most delightful social entertainments that has ever taken place in the West.

Once decided upon, the following invitation was issued and sent to all subscribers of the Journal in the city, and many others known to be favorable to Spiritualism, who still cling to their old social organizations:

OFFICE OF RELIGIO-PHILOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING HOUSE,
CHICAGO, May 12, 1877.

Dear.....
We take pleasure in stating that the well-known author and scientist, Hudson Tuttle, together with his talented wife, Mrs. Emma Tuttle, also a writer of ability in the field of liberal thought, has kindly accepted an invitation to pay us a short visit. We have decided to accede to the request of some of the admirers of their writings, as well as personal friends, in giving an opportunity to meet our guests socially.

We have selected our editorial rooms as the most fitting place, where we shall be pleased to see you, together with such friends as you may desire to invite, on the afternoon of Thursday, the 17th inst., between the hours of three and six o'clock.

The occasion will be entirely informal, and, we hope, pleasant and beneficial to all who may honor us with their presence.

Very respectfully yours,

JOHN C. BUNDY,
Editor Religio-Philosophical Journal.

It is proper to state at this point that the new offices of the Publishing House and of the Journal are in the Merchants' Building, situated at the corner of Washington and LaSalle streets, diagonally across from the Chamber of Commerce, and opposite the Union National Bank building, and the Headquarters of Lieut.-Gen. Phil H. Sheridan, and are fitted up in the most modern style—convenient and elegant—large, airy, well lighted and ventilated, and in every way attractive.

After an hour of pleasant conversation and inspection of the various offices and circle room, the assembly was called to order by Judge Holbrook, who, in his usual pleasant way, expressed his pleasure at meeting our distinguished guests, and his admiration of the new home of the Journal; then calling on Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond for an invocation, it was given cheerfully and in that incomparable style and language so well remembered by hosts of Spiritualists on both continents. After which he appealed to Hudson Tuttle, as their guest to make some remarks.

Mr. Tuttle, in his usual felicitous manner, plunged directly at the heart of his subject. He said he was happy to meet so many friends, all of whom felt near and dear to him, on this pleasant occasion, though a shadow rested upon him in the memory of the last time (little over a year ago) he grasped the hand of S. S. Jones, and bade him good-bye. The image of the venerable man was still engraven on his mind. He could not speak of him as departed, as he was still with them. He had not only impressed his energetic character on the Journal, he still remained to watch over an enterprise to which he had devoted the best years of his life and a large portion of his capital. He had fallen, but he had left others admirably trained and qualified to bear onward the heavy burden.

We have four Spiritual periodicals—the Banner of Light, The Spiritual Scientist, The Spiritual Magazine, and the Religio-Philosophical Journal. Really, the Banner in the East, and the Journal in the West, are the grand columns on which Spiritualism rests. Since they were established a score or more of journals have gone out of existence. They are the platforms from which the Spiritual Philosophy has been expounded to an innumerable audience, and were they to go down to-day, the impression they have made on the age could never be eradicated.

Spiritualists have few demands made upon them. They have no church to support; none of the many projects of Christian worshipers. The only imperative one was the small subscription to the papers devoted to the cause they consider priceless. It was their duty to support those journals which were disseminating the true views of life and its future, and the very existence of the cause depended on their doing so.

Spiritualists should realize that they have duties; that life was not primarily for pleasure, but had obligations which, fulfilled, pleasure was secondary but sure to follow. If pleasure alone was sought regardless of right and duty, it would in the end prove a cup of gall.

From its editorial columns and from consultations with the present editor, he had learned as they would all learn in time, that the Journal had begun a new life. It would be broad and catholic in its treatment of all issues. While it would fearlessly and uncompromisingly oppose the wrong, it will as courageously defend the truth. It will be radical without fanaticism; conservative without prejudice or superstition; free without license, and independent on all questions.

It proposed to be an exponent not only of the phenomena of Spiritualism, as a development of modern times, but of the Spiritualism of all ages and races, in the broad sense in which it was expressed by its former editor, The Philosophy of Life.

For one grand code of spiritual laws penetrates the universe, and their elucidation necessarily embraces the realm of nature in the broadest sense of that word.

While he felt assured that the Journal would be conducted with a business ability of the highest order because trained and prepared for the work, its sphere of usefulness depends in greater measure on the good-will and helping hand of its subscribers.

Subscribers should feel that success depends on their individual efforts, and that the paper is essentially theirs, and published for them.

He knew he expressed their united sentiments when he should say that a new era dawns on the Journal; its horizon broadens; its sphere of usefulness extends, and that it is destined to continue a mighty power, not only in Spiritualism, but in the cause of liberal thought.

Dr. Kayner, of St. Charles, Illinois, being called upon, made a brief but earnest appeal for harmony among Spiritualists, which the assemblage of so great a number of persons, representative of almost every phase of Spiritualistic thought, indicated to him, was being accomplished.

Mrs. Emma Tuttle being called for, responded by saying that she was not a lecturer, but having an original poem, which she had brought but had not yet delivered to the editor of the Journal for publication, if it would add to the pleasure of the occasion she would give it—and scarcely have we ever heard a better recitation. Of the merits of the poem we need not speak, as our readers will very soon be able to judge for themselves.

Dr. Avery, being solicited, made a few well-chosen remarks, after which Judge Holbrook announced that the remaining time would be given to social converse and the examination of spirit pictures and paintings, engravings and other works of art and evidences of spirit power and control of the human organism, found upon the walls, and scattered through the offices, editorial rooms, and in the circle room; and that any who desired to visit the wholesale and packing departments of the Publishing House, in the lower stories of the building, would be conveyed by the elevator.

Not until the twilight approached, however, did the majority of guests depart; an evidence of the thorough enjoyability of the occasion, made more pleasant by the cheerful faces of all connected with the Publishing House and the Journal, while assisting to carry out the wishes of the manager and editor.

It would occupy too great a space were we to attempt to give a list of the visitors on this occasion, but will say in brief, that one will seldom see so intelligent and refined an assemblage of persons as was noticeable in this instance, among them prominent members of all the learned professions—divines, lawyers, and physicians, artists, teachers, authors and speakers, merchants, railroad superintendents, and managers of steamboat lines, and very many mediums from among our best families, developed and exercising their gifts only at their own homes, or with their personal friends, besides a large number of public mediums, whose gifts have been the means of bringing daylight to many a darkened soul.

We can only express our deep regret that all our friends and subscribers at a distance could not have been present; yet, as every such pleasant occasion is attended by hosts of friendly spirits who convey to absent ones in some degree, the spirit of joy and fraternal love which is engendered, we trust far greater good may result even than is discernable upon the surface.—R. P. Journal.

Mohammedan vs. Christian Slavery.

If the statements of the old abolitionists are to be credited, the orthodox churches of the North were the Malakoff of slavery in America; their last utterance previous to the War of the Rebellion was: "Slavery is not malum in se, not 'evil in itself,' and many eminent priests of the dominant sects of the Christian Church sustained it in their public addresses. The improvement in the national morality in regard to it, is not due to the teachings of the clergy but to the bayonets of our soldiers. Even the Catholic Church, which has a good record on the subject in Europe, here, as a Church, did not utter a prayer to aid the nation to exterminate it.

This conduct on the part of the Christian churches is the more reprehensible when we consider the fact that, of all slavery, that which has been legalized in Christian countries has ever been the most despotic and barbarous. The laws in the Koran respecting it have ameliorated the condition of Mohammedan slavery, as any one will admit who has traveled through Mohammedan countries. It is no disgrace in Turkey but an honor to have been born a slave, and the fact is remembered only to the advantage of those who have succeeded in obtaining their freedom. In America some millions of human beings living frequently compulsively in open violation of the marriage laws could not shock the churches into a condemnation of the evils of slavery; and, while Christians raised enormous sums of money to send what they call "the gospel" to savage peoples, the abolitionists for years vainly offered the Bible Society five thousand dollars to pay for Bibles, on condition that it would distribute them by its colporteurs among the slaves of the Southern States. Far different is the case in Mohammedan countries. In them, a slave who bears a child by her master is free by law, and it is a duty enjoined upon all Mohammedans to attend to the religious instructions of their dependants. But the superiority of Mohammedanism to Christianity, on the subject of slavery is best shown by the following extract which is taken from Harper's Weekly of the 19th inst:

"Edham Pasha, the present grand vizier of Turkey, though a Mohammedan by religion and education, is said to be a Greek by birth, a native of the Isle of Scio, where he was born in 1823. While still a boy, he was sold as a slave to the well known Turkish statesman, Khosru Pasha. His master soon perceived the extraordinary abilities of his young slave, and sent him to be educated in Paris. On his return to Constantinople he was appointed a captain on the general staff, and was rapidly promoted. In 1849 he was appointed Aid-de-camp to the Sultan, and filled successively several high civil offices. He afterwards became Minister of Foreign Affairs, and subsequently was Ambassador at several European courts. On the downfall of Midhat Pasha he was appointed to his present position."

Considering Edham Pasha's career, it would be very imprudent in him to change his religion, at least for that called "Christianity;" but as he has lived among Christians in France and other European Christian countries, we do not think he will need any warning or advice on that subject. R. W. H.

MARRIED.—Pugh—Whitacre. On the 3d of May, 1877, at the residence of the bride's father, in Lynchburg, Ohio, by Elder Wm. Hill, Mr. Geo. T. Pugh to Miss Deborah Jane Whitacre. All of Highland County, Ohio.

Friendly Correspondence.

JOSEPH BARNES, Waterloo, N. Y., writes: I almost forgot to signify my approval of "The World's Sages." It is something like the Centennial exhibition; it contains in small compass what we might hunt the world over elsewhere to find. I want your little book as soon as it is out, as I am satisfied there will be something in it appropriate for funeral services, as we have nothing but orthodox clergymen to officiate here on such occasions. I have thought of writing down my belief and have some one read it at my funeral, but since you have got up a work I will wait till it comes out, it may suit equally as well as if I wrote one myself.

EDWARD PALMER, Cambridge, Maine, writes: Will you do me the favor to inform the American Labor Reform League, through the columns of the T. S., that I much regret that I could not be with them at Masonic Hall on the 6th and 7th inst, not having received notice until the 5th? Will you also inform your readers that I shall be at the service of the Liberal public as a speaker, after the 1st of July, on any territory east of the Mississippi River? I would like to discuss through the columns of your paper with the Rev. Mr. Humphrey that "boundary line between Christianity and Infidelity."

H. S. HILLS, Cedar Falls, Iowa, writes: I was persuaded to subscribe for your valuable paper for three months. It exceeds my most sanguine expectation. It deals with mythological theories and dogmas in a matter-of-fact way, and they appear ridiculous. I have read the Independent and the Advance for years, and I can truthfully and fearlessly say that THE TRUTH SEEKER will stand the test of reason and common sense, and that is more than can be said of any orthodox journal. I care not who edits it. The patriarchs of old were compelled to "take off their shoes from off their feet" when they stood in the presence of the great I AM. So with devout believers of to-day. When they enter a church, or peruse an orthodox publication they must first lay aside their common sense. Is it a wonder they love to sing:

"Oh! to be nothing, nothing."

FRANK HANAN, Oregon, Wis., writes: Last night I had the pleasure of listening to Col. R. G. Ingersoll, in Madison, for the first time I ever saw or heard the gentleman. I must say it was the best speech that I ever listened to. His subject was "The Rights of Man, Woman, and Child," which was handled splendidly. Three or four of our professors from the State University were there (they being considerable on the old foggy order, and orthodox priests whenever the popular tide so dictates) and sit with their mouths wide open, like toads lapping lightning from the golden-fringed clouds. It fairly did my soul good to hear him pour forth such irrefutable logic, using such simple, familiar language that "a wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err" in comprehending it. The house was not as full as it would have been had it not been for some of these cowardly, one-horse editors that dared not call attention to the lecture nor say their soul was their own, unless they are on Mrs. Grundy's side. I am glad to see so much interest taken in forming societies of Freethought. We have got to turn the tide and let it run in another direction, and then these wily, useless parasites called priests will have to go to work and earn their own honest bread. Set my name down for one copy of your "Truth Seeker Collection."

JAMES BEDEL, Hudson, Mich., writes: The spirit of persecution is still in the land. The spirit of Christianity is persecution. It does seem strange at this day and age of the world, when Christianity has had undisputed sway since the time of the first Christian Emperor Constantine, that it has made so little progress, or no progress at all. The spirit of persecution is the same to-day that it ever has been. Occasionally we see it cropping out and raising its monstrous hydra-head. A case is just now at hand enacted right here in our very midst. It is as follows: A Rev. Shanafelt of the Clere Baptist church caused the arrest of a small boy who, among others, was witnessing a baptism taking place on Sunday, the 6th inst., in the small river running through this village. The testimony of this Rev. gentleman, with a white necktie is, that he had spoken to the boy on the street a few times, and on the occasion referred to, that he (the boy) was about eight rods away up in a small tree when he heard him use these words as he was baptizing a small boy: "O Jesus, didn't he give him a good ducking." The trial was before a jury, and after the pleadings were through the jury went out, and perhaps were gone five minutes, when they returned with their verdict of not guilty. A minister trying to blacken and forever ruin the character of a bright, active boy for life is a matter of no small importance, and our community are shocked at so barbarous a treatment of so young a lad, and some conclude that if this Rev. gent had this boy at his disposal, would either destroy his life or incarcerate him in jail for life, or at least until he was twenty-one years of age.

Geo. Wood, Hastings, Mich., writes: I have just become thoroughly acquainted with THE TRUTH SEEKER, and assure you that I esteem it very highly, and regret that I have been without it so long. However, the back numbers which you sent make up for some lost time, and contain a number of articles that I would not like to have missed. I believe I am the only one in this city who now takes your paper, but I herewith send you the name of one new subscriber, and will send you others soon. I am a young man, have just started in business on borrowed capital, and, of course, am not flush, but I shall manage to invest a few dollars a year in your reading matter. I was recently "taken in hand" by a Methodist priest who seemed to be very anxious for the welfare of my soul. After a few moments' conversation, he informed me that my proper place was in an "insane asylum." I told him he never had a more willing subject to accept his doctrines, if he would only convince me of their correctness. But he declined to argue the matter, and gave me up as lost. How indifferent they are for a person's salvation if you but question the truth of their assertions, and ask for a little "proof positive." Another minister of this place informed me of the fact (?) that Col. Ingersoll had received a challenge from a preacher—whose name I have forgotten—to hold a debate, and that "our Bob" dare not tackle him. Your debate with Rev. Mr. Humphrey is very interesting. I hope you will prove equal to the occasion, and I believe you will. I wish you success with your paper, and shall always contribute my mite.

A FRIEND at Plattsmouth, Neb., writes: As usual after a season of great rejoicing, "I thought I would drop you a line to let the good sisters and brethren know what great things had been done for us." We have just passed through, I was going to say, a most glorious and heart-refreshing revival. But that is not just exactly the true statement of our case. So I'll try again. We have had a most magnificent shower of truth poured out into our midst by Prof. W. F. Jamieson. He delivered the first Liberal lecture (last month) ever delivered in this city. The first evening his audience was quite small at first, and grew beautifully less as he proceeded to unmask Genesis. Some of our good old orthodox brethren and sisters present had to leave. "I will not sit and hear that good old Book slandered thus." But truth is mighty and will prevail. His audience grew larger, until, on the evening of his sixth and last lecture, the hall was crowded to overflowing with ladies and gentlemen. He has done a good work for the cause amongst us. In Bro. Jamieson Liberalism has a most unflinching advocate and thorough expounder. He literally sifts each and every branch he touches to the bed-rock. He is a thorough scholar and genial friend, gathering friends to himself and the cause wherever he goes. May he continue to sow the good seed of free thought and free speech throughout the land till every man and woman will think for themselves, and, thinking, act an honest part. We will gladly extend the hand of hospitality to welcome him again in our midst. There has been quite a demand for Paine's "Age of Reason" since he came here.

MISS CARRIE SMITH, Dunleith, Ill., writes: The little city of Dunleith has remained in the back-ground long enough, in regard to its Liberalistic views. I think that I must tell you of our progression. I fear that were it not for our earnest worker, D. R. Burt, your paper may not possibly have gained admission in some of our families, and done the good work it has. You are a noble worker, Bro. Bennett, and your paper meets with the success it so richly deserves with us. We are endeavoring to teach some of our Christian friends some of its facts and truths; but as yet have not made much headway. They still adhere to the principles laid down by the Christian religion, that there must be so much kneeling, begging, etc., done so as to atone for the death of a man, who was simple enough to let the Jews crucify him. We have hopes yet, and to the wise we are willing to use our best efforts. If they would only allow themselves to think over the absurdities of some of their teachings, our progress would be more rapid and our efforts better appreciated. It is said, "A word to the wise is sufficient," but it is our opinion that it takes a great many words, and very emphatic and forcible ones too, to remove the errors, superstitions, and fallacies which has been taught them from infancy by their well meaning, but ignorant parents, and also by that class of men called priests whose living is gained by forever keeping in view their dogmas and creeds. We hope to live and see such teachings as Harriet Martineau's, Francis Wright's, etc., in the minds of every one; then we will grow to be wise and good; our thoughts rise higher and our principles nobler. We wish that every man and woman could keep this in view, "Do good, because it is good; do right because it is right." I fear I am taking up space, but I wish to tell you of our churches. We have two—a Catholic and a Methodist. The Catholic is supported very well, owing to their ignorance. But the Methodist, O dear! A minister volunteers to come from Galena, a distance of 17 miles, and sufficient funds cannot be raised to pay his fare! Now, we are sure we cannot tell whether it is our progress, lack of means, or disregard for the welfare of our souls! They say we are going from bad to worse. Possibly some are. But those that stay at home, mind their own business, read THE TRUTH SEEKER, Investigator and various other good papers and books are not retrograding, but learning how to live, and to teach others how to live, that they may be ornaments to humanity and to themselves. Wishing you success in your good work, I sign myself your Liberal friend.

Special Notices.

Two young men of average brains and conceit, and rather skeptical in matters of faith, would like to correspond with two young ladies similarly afflicted. Object—addition to both qualities. Address, Jerome or Everett, care of TRUTH SEEKER.

EXPERIENCED LADY TEACHER would like situation in Private School or Family. Would correspond with Liberal party, with view to a home. "Ellen," care THE TRUTH SEEKER. 2129

HEALTH TO THE AFFLICTED.—Every form of disease permanently and radically cured without drugs. Terms liberal. Send for circular. Address A. G. HUMPHREY, M. D., Galesburg, Ill.

WATER-CURE.—Dr. Lyon's Hygienic Home for the reception of patients for board and treatment, was established in 1874, and is meeting with marked success, both in numbers and cures. Send for circular, etc., to J. S. LYON, Box 247, Springfield, Mo. 12119

INTELLIGENT lady, without incumbrance, would like to make herself useful in the home of Liberal party. Small salary. AMIABLE, Care TRUTH SEEKER.

Spermatorrhoea.

Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this LIFE-WASTING disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition: had been in insane asylums, many had falling sickness, fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS,

The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N. Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygienic Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

Heathens of the Heath;

A ROMANCE, BY WM. McDONNELL,
AUTHOR OF "EXETER HALL," ETC.

This work is rich in romantic and pathetic incidents, and exhibits with an overwhelming array of facts the atrocities committed by the Church. It shows that the purest morality exists without the Bible, and that many of the heathen philosophers were lovers of virtue. The folly of Christian ministers is fully portrayed, Hypocrisy and bigotry are clearly exposed, and the road to virtue and true happiness plainly marked out. A most pleasing romance is woven into the work, in which much opportunity is afforded the author for fine descriptions and beautiful sentiments which he so well knows how to give utterance to. The characters in the tale are invested with much interest; the hero and heroine gain the love of every reader. "On the whole, it is the work of a master hand—a work of unaffected beauty and the deepest interest." "One of the most valuable features of the work is, its positions are all proven. Every thinking, enquiring mind should peruse it." 600 pp., 12mo. Price, in paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:
Sexual Physiology.....$2 00
Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book.....1 00
Health and Diseases of Women.....25
Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses.....50

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. TRALL, M.D., 21 E. Twentieth st., New York.

MRS. BEVIER, ELECTRICIAN.

Cures Dyspepsia when all others fail; also by VITAL MAGNETISM

the most dependant are inspired with renewed Life and Energy. It imparts Electricity, Life, and Tone to the Brain, preventing Heart disease. I also have the VITAL SPARK, or Count CAGLIOSTRO'S SECRET.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN RELIGION AND SCIENCE. Truly one of the most valuable works that have appeared within the last ten years. By PROF. DRAPER. Price, $1.75.

E. P. Cooley, Manufacturer of Window Shades and Opaque Cloths.

64 READE STREET, NEW YORK.

Dealer in Fixtures, Cords, Tassels, Hollands, etc.

IMITATION LACE SHADES A SPECIALTY.

Combining the beauty of a Lace Curtain with the utility of a Window Shade. ORDERS BY MAIL PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO, and FORWARDED WITH CARE. Retail Orders delivered in any part of the country, C. O. D. In ordering special sizes give size of opening, also size of glass. State where you saw this adv.

Just Issued! ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3 00; Leather, $4 00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4 50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher.

141 Eighth st., New York.

BANNER OF LIGHT,

The oldest journal in the world devoted to the

SPIRITUAL PHILOSOPHY.

ISSUED WEEKLY

At No. 9 MONTGOMERY PLACE, BOSTON, MASS.

COLBY & RICH,

Publishers and Proprietors.

ISAAC B. RICH.....Business Manager.

LUTHER COLBY.....Editor.

JOHN W. DAY.....Associate Editor.

Aided by a large corps of able writers.

THE BANNER is a first-class, eight-page, Family Newspaper, containing forty columns of interesting and instructive reading, embracing a LITERARY DEPARTMENT; REPORTS OF SPIRITUAL LECTURES; ORIGINAL ESSAYS—upon Spiritual, Philosophical and Scientific Subjects. EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT. SPIRIT-MESSAGE DEPARTMENT. CONTRIBUTIONS by the most talented writers in the world, etc., etc.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION IN ADVANCE.

Per Year.....$3 00

Six Months.....1 50

Three Months.....75

Postage fifteen cents per year, and must accompany the subscription.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Money-Order on Boston, or a Draft on a Bank or Banking House in Boston or New York City, payable to the order of Colby & Rich, is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Draft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the sender.

Specimen copies sent free. ADVERTISEMENTS published at twenty cents per line for the first, and fifteen cents per line for each subsequent insertion.

COLBY & RICH,
Publishers and Booksellers,

No. 9 MONTGOMERY PLACE, BOSTON.

KEEP A FULL ASSORTMENT OF SPIRITUAL, PROGRESSIVE, REFORM,
AND MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS,

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

Catalogues of Books Published and for Sale by Colby & Rich sent free.

THE WORLD'S

Sixteen Crucified Saviors.

OR,

CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST

CONTAINING

New, Startling, and Extraordinary Revelations in Religious History, which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the

Christian New Testament,

and furnishing a Key for unlocking many of its Sacred Mysteries, besides comprising the History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods.

BY KERSEY GRAVES,

Author of "The Biography of Satan," and "The Bible of Bibles" (comprising a description of twenty bibles).

This wonderful and exhaustive volume by Mr. Graves will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which he has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape the student of freethought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows, to the mark.

Printed on fine white paper, large 12mo., 380 pages, $2. Address,

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for

THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

MONKS, POPES, and their Political Intrigues. By JOHN ALBERGER, containing an interesting history of the Crimes, Corruptions and Vices of the two hundred and ninety-seven Popes that have professed to fill the chair of St. Peter. Price, 40c.

Bankrupt Sale of Jewelry.

GREAT FAILURE OF THE MILTON GOLD JEWELRY COMPANY IN LONDON

Their Entire Stock Consigned to us to Raise Money as Soon as Possible.

Everybody has heard of MILTON GOLD JEWELRY, it having been sold in this market for the last ten years, and worn by the best and richest class of our population. Still it takes an expert to distinguish Milton Gold from Virginia Gold. In order to dispose of this large consignment in the speediest way, we have put up lots which we offer to the public for the tenth part of their value.

FIFTY-CENT LOT.

One pair elegant sleeve-buttons, retail price $1 00
One set spiral shirt-studs, retail price.....75
One beautiful scarf-pin, stone setting, retail price.....75
One elegant gent's watch chain, latest pattern, retail price.....1 50
One collar-button, retail price.....50
One elegant wedding ring, very heavy, retail price.....2 00

Total.....$6 50

Remember that we will send you the above-named six articles, which we have retailed for $6 50, by mail, post-paid, for fifty cents, 4 sample lots for $1 50, or 12 sample lots for $4.

ONE DOLLAR LOT.

One pair gent's sleeve buttons, stone setting.....$1 20
One set elegant spiral studs to match same.....1 05
One beautiful ladies' band engagement ring.....2 00
One gent's large seal ring.....2 00
One ladies' long neck chain.....2 75
One gent's heavy plate watch chain.....1 75
One gent's "Lake George" diamond stud.....1 00
One beautiful scarf-pin.....72
One pair ladies' engraved sleeve-buttons.....1 00

Total.....$13 50

The above figures are the prices these goods have been retailed at in our leading cities. We mention these figures to give you an idea of the goods.

A FINE SOLID SILVER WATCH FREE.

On receipt of $15 we will send by express, one dozen 50 ct. lots and one of each of the others; also one elegant Watch, Ladies' or Gents' size, guaranteed to be a good timekeeper. Such opportunity is offered but once in a lifetime. We want our patrons and the public in general to understand that this is Milton Gold Jewelry and no common Plated Ware. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance or money refunded. Send money by P. O. order or registered letter.

Our Firm and Milton Gold Jewelry are endorsed by all the leading newspapers of the country. Goods sent C. O. D. if $5.00 is sent with the order, not otherwise. Address all orders to

RALSTON JEWELRY CO.

Importers of Watches and Jewelry,

LaSalle and Randolph Streets, Chicago, Illinois.

THE Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-Smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.	F. E. Abbot.
Paine's Bust.	Brothmham.
Paine's Monument.	Wendell Phillips.
Voltaire.	Emerson.
Rousseau.	Garrison.
Humboldt.	Henry Bergh.
Goethe.	Peter Cooper.
Schiller.	D. R. Burt.
Aug. Comte.	S. P. Andrews.
Heine.	Walt Whitman.
Alex. Pope.	Froude.
John Milton.	Max Muller.
Goldsmith.	Warren Chase.
Shelley.	Jas. Parton.
Byron.	Wm. Denton.
Burns.	Dr. Slade.
Washington.	A. J. Davis.
Franklin.	Foster.
Jefferson.	J. M. Peabody.
John Adams.	Frances Wright.
J. Q. Adams.	E. V. Wilson.
Madison.	G. L. Henderson.
Jackson.	Prof. Fiske.
Lincoln.	Frederic Douglas.
Lincoln's Monument.	N. F. Banks.
Gerrit Smith.	P. V. Nasby.
Henry C. Wright.	Becher.
J. S. Mill.	Tilton.
Sumner.	Moulton.
Edgar A. Poe.	G. W. Curtis.
Greeley.	Th. Nast.
Castellar.	J. G. Bennett.
Tennyson.	Chas. A. Dana.
Darwin.	Phoebe Carey.
Tyndall.	Alice Carey.
H. Spencer.	Elizabeth C. Stanton.
Huxley.	Susan B. Anthony.
Proctor.	Lucy Stone.
Draper.	Julia Ward Howe.
Bradlaugh.	Chas. Cheney.
Holyoake.	Paulina Davis.
Ingersoll.	Mary F. Davis.
Underwood.	Emma H. Britten.
Mendum.	Lizzie Fowler.
Seaver.	Mrs. Sienker.
L. Colby.	Susan H. Wixon.
Dr. Haré.	D. M. Bennett.
Judge J. W. Edwards.	W. S. Bell.
Lizzie Doten.	J. C. Bundy.
Mrs. J. Conant.	S. S. Jones.
Dr. Mary E. Walker	Asa K. Butts.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc. at 15 cents each singly, or eight for one dollar. Neat Albums, by mail, to hold 30 photos, 50 cts., to hold 50, $1.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"

In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

THE WORLD'S SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS:

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT, Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - - $3.00

ARABESQUE, colored leather, red

burnished edges, - - - 4.00

MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked

head-band, - - - 4.50

Address,

D. M. BENNETT,

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY. By R. T. TRALL, M.D. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. 25,000 copies of this work have been sold. Finely illustrated, and a very important work. Price, $2.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Price, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CHAVEN.

Price, by mail, $1.00. Address

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth Street, New York.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319 6th Ave., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters P. O. Box 4329 New York City. 191

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $3 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples Portland, Maine. 11

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $6 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1950

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1760

Gems of Thought.

THE greatest prayer is patience.—Buddha.
It is more dishonorable to distrust a friend than to be deceived by him.—Rocheffoucault.
WHATEVER elevates, inspires, refreshes, any human soul is useful to that soul.—Dr. Holland.

If the best man's faults were written on his forehead, he would draw his hat over his eyes.—Gray.

BE noble-minded! Our own heart, and not other men's opinion of us, forms our true honor.—Schiller.

THE wealth of a man is the number of things which he loves and blesses, which he is loved and blessed by.—Carlyle.

WHEN death, the great reconciler, has come, it is never of our tenderness that we repent, but of our severity.—George Eliot.

I BESECH you to treasure up in your hearts these my parting words: Be ashamed to die until you have won some victory for humanity.—Horace Mann.

I HAVE a belief of my own, and it comforts me—that by desiring what is perfectly good, even when we don't quite know what it is, and cannot do what we would, we are part of a divine power against evil, widening the skirts of light, and making the struggle with darkness narrower.—George Eliot.

You ask me, "Is pleasure the legitimate and proper end of life?" I answer that it is the legitimate and proper end of life, provided it transgresses no law and injures no person. That is the limitation and the only limitation that I put touching my own pleasures; that is the only line which I allow any man to snap in front of my feet touching my amusements.—W. H. Murray.

I HAD rather have forty acres of land and a log-house with one room; yes, and the woman I love, and some lattice-work over the window, so that the sunlight would fall checkered on the baby in the cradle, and a few hollyhocks at the corner of the house; I would rather have that, and a nice path leading down to the spring, where I could go and hear the water gurgling; I would rather live there and die there than be a clerk of any government on earth.—Ingersoll.

THE Presbyterian clergy are the loudest, the most intolerant of all sects; the most tyrannical and ambitious, ready at the word of the lawgiver, if such a word could now be obtained, to put their torch to the pile, and to rekindle in this virgin hemisphere the flames in which their oracle, Calvin, consumed the poor Servetus, because he could not subscribe to the proposition of Calvin, that magistrates have a right to exterminate all heretics to the Calvinistic creed! They want to re-establish by law that holy inquisition which they can now only infuse into public opinion.—Thomas Jefferson.

WHAT then are the lessons of history? It is a voice sounding forever across the centuries, the laws of right and wrong. Opinions alter, manners change, creeds rise and fall, but the moral law is written on the tablets of eternity. For every false word or unrighteous deed, for cruelty and oppression, for lust or vanity, the price has to be paid at last; not always by the chief offender, but by some one. Justice and truth alone endure and live. Injustice and falsehood may be long-lived, but doomsday comes at last to them, in French Revolutions and other terrible ways.—James A. Froude.

NATURE has written upon the flowers that sweeten the air, upon the breeze that rocks the flower upon its stem, upon the raindrops that swell the mighty river, upon the dew-drops that refresh the smallest sprig of moss that rears its head in the desert, upon the ocean that rocks every swimmer in the channel, upon every pencilled shell that sleeps in the caverns of the deep, as well as upon the mighty sun which warms and cheers the millions of creatures that live in its light—upon all is written, "None of us liveth to himself."—Sawyer.

I PLEAD for light, for room, for opportunity for the human soul. Let everybody think, and let everybody have the courage to express that thought. While I live I am going to do my own thinking, and to express that thought; whether popular or unpopular makes no difference to me. Before my time men had the goodness to talk in favor of the liberty of the human soul. I have reaped the benefit of every one of those courageous and divine acts—every one; and if I accept that benefit I want to hand the torch along to the next generation with a little intensity added to the flame. That is all I ask—liberty. I have feet, I walk, I have eyes, I see, I have lungs, I breathe, I have a brain, why not think? And if I am going to think anything, why not think my thoughts?—Ingersoll.

"A THING of beauty is a joy forever." All who increase the sum total of the beautiful add to the growth of the world's happiness. Let us, then, each do our share by making beautiful our own little worlds around us, our homes and our surroundings. Let us place in our windows vases of bright-hued flowers, and collect and gather around us all that is sweet and lovely. Let us train up in our gardens the red, red rose, and the tender clinging vine, and cherish the fair lily and the gay tulip, the sweet pink, the gentle snow-drop, and the modest violet. Let us have borders of flowers along our walks and bright patches and little clusters of them everywhere. Say not they are a bother and a trouble, or that a row of beans or onions would be of more profit; "To live is not all of life." The eye and the mind must receive food and nourishment as well as the body, else what better shall we be than the "stock and the stone"?—Mrs. E. D. Steinker.

Odds and Ends.

MATTER of form: fitting a dress.

ELOPING women are said to belong to the hooking liddle company.

THE man who wears a finger-ring will always have something on hand.

"OH, MAMMA," said the youngest darling yesterday, "I tried to read, and I rode!"

How do canary birds pay for themselves? Why, they give their notes, of course.

WHY is a man's life safest in the last stages of dyspepsia? Why, because he can't digest then.

A NEW YORK store is occupied by two firms; on one window is the word "Dyeing," and on the other "Undertaker."

AT an antiquarian meeting in Oxford, Maine, it is stated that a lady of 102 years took part and spun. This looks like a yarn.

"WIFE," said a gentleman of New Haven, "has Willie been baptized?" "No, my dear, not yet; why do you ask?" "Because there is a great deal of small pox about, and it ought to be done at once."

"HIO!" ejaculated a tipsy husband as he stumbled up stairs. "Jacet," added the wife, completing the quotation, as he fell on the landing.

THE Harvard Advocate says that this is the last thing from an impassioned lover to his mistress: "Would that you were an exclamation point and I a parenthesis (1)!"

"MY boy," said a clergyman, "don't you know that it is wicked to catch fish on Sunday?" "Guess I hain't sinned much yet," said the boy, without taking his eye from the cork; "hain't had a bite."

A YOUNG lady sent a poem to a British newspaper entitled, "I cannot make him smile." The editor ventured to express an opinion that she would have succeeded had she shown him the poem.

A LITTLE boy was asked the other day if he knew where the wicked finally went to. He answered, "They practice law a spell here and then go to the legislature." It was a painful operation for the boy to sit down for a few days.

"ARE you there?" said an Orangeman to a Ribbonman in "grate," being about to be hanged. "I always said you would come to be hanged." "You're a liar," said Pat, "if it was the last words I had to speak; I did not come; I was brought."

JULIUS CAESAR was terribly afflicted with boils at one time, and when asked how he accounted for them he proudly replied: "To the victor belongs these boils!" This may be relied upon as the true origin of this famous expression. We had it from an intimate friend of Caesar, who now runs a milk-wagon.

A BOY on his way to Sunday-school found 75 cents. This good fortune was held up to him as a reward for being found in the path of duty. He was very much struck with the idea until he heard that another boy had found a dollar while he was setting up pins in the ten-pin alley. And now he doesn't see his way in the future quite so clear.

A TEN-YEAR-OLD boy was asked by his teacher to write a composition on the subject of water, and the following is the result: Water is good to drink, to swim in, and to skate on when frozen. When I was a little baby the nurse used to bathe me every morning in water. I have been told that Injins don't wash themselves but once in ten years. I wish I was an Injin.

A WITTY old infidel, riding along in the outskirts of Boston one Sunday, met a clergyman and invited him to ride. The clergyman accepted, and as they went along they passed the gallows that remains as a warning to all offenders. Said the clergyman, "Where would you be to-day, Mr. S., if that gallows had its just dues?" "Riding into Boston alone, sir," was the ready reply.

A FUNNY story regarding a Mr. S. and an acquisition is told in the Amsterdam Recorder. S., who was traveling in Kansas, received the following telegram: "Return immediately. You are a father." On the eve of his return, his lady friends determined to play a joke on him, procured from the neighborhood three other babies, placed all four in a row on a bed in an adjoining apartment, and covered them up. S. arrived, embraced his wife in great delight, and was then led forth to behold his first-born. When the cover was raised, an indescribable look of surprise overspread his countenance, as he exclaimed: "Great God! Did any of them get away?"

A LAUGHABLE story is related of Dunning, an English judge. It is said of him that frequently, in the examination of witnesses, he displayed great coarseness, and drew upon himself the animadversion of his brethren. On one occasion, wishing to establish the identity of a party through the instrumentality of an unsophisticated old woman (occupying the witness stand), the following highly amusing colloquy is said to have taken place between Dunning and the old woman:

"Was he a tall man?"

"Not very tall, your honor—much about the size of your worship's honor."

"Was he good looking?"

"Quite contrary—much like your honor; but with a handsomer nose."

"Did he squint?"

"A little, your worship; but not so much as your honor by a great deal."

These replies produced a roar of laughter in the court, in which Lord Mansfield (who was on the bench) is said to have joined.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Ots.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	5
9.	The Story of the Flood.	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	5
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arrangement of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	2
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snodgrass. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheman.	10
29.	Paine's Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses.	5
32.	The God of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	3
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	8
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	3
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	2
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	2
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	1
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	1
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	5
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marple's Underwood Debate. Underwood.	5
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	2
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	9
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wilson.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	3
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	2
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	1
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible: is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	5
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	10
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et al.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennett.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Caphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	2
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	2
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	1

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsborg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	5
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	2
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off. As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth	50
" " with Examination of Prophecies	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth,	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works	27 00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus-Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jaccoliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Krishna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch. Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diagnosis	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge, Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.	35 & 60
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent of Man. (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright.	35 & 60
Evans' History of all Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frithingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense. D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.	50
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneelands Review.	1 00
Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard.	1 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology. 770 cuts.	3 40
" Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peoples All Around the World.	2 50
Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. 30 & 50	1 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	60
Syntagma. Taylor.	1 00
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3 00
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1 50
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
System of Nature. D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Harbert) Entire Work.	35 & 50
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus. 2 vols..	12 00
Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols., 8vo.,	8 00
Sexual Physiology. Trall.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall (Prof. John) Entire Works.	2 00
The Christ of Paul.	75
The Case against the Church.	2 00
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers.	4 50
$3 00, $4 00, and	1 00
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts. Vols. I, II, III, and IV. 60 cts. &	1 00
The Outcast. Winwood Reade.	30
Talks with My Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D.,	1 50
Underwood-Marplea Debate.	35 & 50
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE,
MORALS

FREETHOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 22. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY }
BY D. M. BENNETT.

New York, Saturday, June 2, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year.
NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

It is said that efforts to recover the $3,000,000 sunk near Hell Gate ninety-six years ago are soon to be resumed.

A Boston man says that he has received a ten-dollar bill in answer to prayer. He is going to "keep on praying."

The Graphic man says that, according to the authority of Col. Blavatsky, the late cold spell has been bad for the Buddhists.

A ZEALOUS brother prayed in meeting: "Lord have mercy on us, for thou knowest we are the wickedest company ever gathered together."

GEORGIA has a jug-factory at last, after getting along one hundred years without one. It is a public convenience which her citizens ought to appreciate.

THE human voice has nine perfect tones, but these can be combined, it is said, into 17,502,044,414 different sounds, but no living person has ever made one-fourth that number.

SOME of the Boston clergymen are afraid that the converts made by Moody will backslide after the close of the revival, and have requested him to remain and look after them.

A MINISTER who had twice married (the same couple—a divorce occurring between the two marriages—remarked that he didn't wish to add a repairing department to his business.

DURING the first three months of this year nine railroads in this country, with a mileage of nearly 1,100 miles, representing a cost of $97,000,000, passed into the hands of receivers.

THE death of six cardinals within the last six months leaves only six members living of the "sacred college" who were appointed by Gregory XVI. The other fifty-eight were appointed by Pius IX.

DEBROGIE is virtually the ruler of France, and he is ruled by Jesuitism and the Vatican. There is little doubt that the Jesuits are playing a deep game in the politics of Europe. Good can hardly come of it.

CANON JEROME, preaching at Westminster Abbey lately, expressed his belief in the existence of "a nobler class of doubters, who are, perhaps nearer heaven than many of the orthodox whose faith had never been tried."

IN the war of 1823 the Russians lost 50,000 men by sickness alone in Bulgaria. In the following year they lost 60,000 between the Pruth and Adrianople, while out of 120,000 men, not 6,000 ever returned to their homes. Such is war.

AN exchange says:—A dear old lady presented her son, on his departure for sea, with a Bible. On opening it during a gale it fell from his hands, and out of it dropped a fine-tooth comb and the admonitory book-mark, "Search daily."

WE regret exceedingly to state that "Red-nosed Barney," one of the converts of the Dwyer movement, has been guilty of stealing a watch and getting drunk. And Barney would have been such a feather in the cap of the revivalists!

IN the pending trial of the Ellentown rioters who killed several negroes in South Carolina, the defense set up is that the rioters shot at random, and that "the hand of Providence guided the balls." This is charging God with being an accessory.

IT seems that Mr. Francis Murphy, the teetotal crusader, was arrested in 1869 in Portland on a charge of murder and convicted of manslaughter. Murphy was keeping a sailor's boarding-house and fell down stairs in a scuffle with a drunken man.

MR. BEECHER sides with Russia. He believes her conquests will carry with them civilization. He condemns the English Anti-Russia governing class. He wants Turkey ground to powder, possibly by gunpowder. Thus he is siding with the strong against the weak.

THE Chicago Presbyterian General Assembly condemn Sunday papers as being a violation of the Sabbath. They say nothing about Monday papers, the work on which is nearly all done on Sunday, while that of the Sunday papers is done on Saturday night. Consistency.

THE Rev. Dr. Henson, one of Philadelphia's most popular Baptist ministers, sometimes lectures. The subject of one of his best lectures is "Fools." On a recent occasion the tickets were printed "Lecture on Fools—Admit one," and the house was full.

BISHOP COXE's poem of vengeance against the Turks meets with condemnation from nearly all the religious papers. It is suggested by some of them that possibly he is a little reader to urge others to go and exterminate the Turks than to go himself.

TAKING time by the forelock. Statistics show that there are more marriages in January than any other month in the year. It is the way of some people; when they have anything disagreeable to do, to hurry up and be done with it as early as possible.

IN the church trial between the Rev. Mr. Sweetser against the Rev. Mr. McCarthy, the latter stated that on one occasion he tried to open a prayer-meeting at the Bleecker st. church, but one old lady wouldn't have it unless her own dear young Mr. Sweetser was present to conduct it. What a pity that he should be absent.

THE reverend wife-poisoner, Elder J. H. McGee, made an attempt to slip the halter by inducing his young daughter to copy a sham confession he wrote for the purpose, making her to confess herself guilty of the crime of poisoning which he had committed. In that way he hoped to escape justice, but his plan did not work. The daughter exposed him to the Court.

THE Telegram says the reason why we have had such unseasonable and outrageous weather lately is because Congress failed to make an appropriation to meet the expense of the Meteorological Bureau. Even "Old Probabilities" requires some funds to meet his current expenses; and unless he has sufficient money furnished to meet the wants of him who fixes up the weather for us, how can we expect a first-class article?

GEORGE WASHINGTON BEATTY, a Methodist Episcopal minister of San Rafael, dabbled in stocks in San Francisco, doing business with Smith & Blake, stock brokers. Smith & Blake have gone up, and taken the Mr. Beatty's $1,021.80 due him upon settlement of account, which he left with them "to accommodate Mr. Smith." Now Mr. Blake is under examination in the San Francisco police-court on the charge of embezzlement.

A LONG report was recently read before the French Anthropological Society, the purport of which was to show that Druidism still exists in Britain, some country people still adhering to primitive paganism in spite of the efforts of the priests to prevent them. It was noticed that the clergy were anxious to destroy members and other similar relics. A petition has been addressed to the French Ministry to suppress the iconoclastic zeal of the priests.

THE Peace commission between the Khedive of Egypt and the King of Abyssinia has come to naught. King John says: "Egypt declared war by entering my territory; I am justified in defending my boundaries by force of arms. I decline to take Massowah as a gift, but will reconquer it. I will accept no presents, and my army shall resume hostilities immediately." King John's obstinacy and rebellion in Darfour are causing serious embarrassment to the Khedive.

THE following story is told by a Hartford clergyman: On his way home from church he found himself behind three ladies engaged in a lively discussion over the music of the service, one condemning the soprano and another the tenor, while the third stoutly defended both. As the discussion became warm, the third lady sought to pour oil on the troubled waters, and, in the words of the clergyman, "did so to perfection by a judicious and truthful remark, to which all of them at once assented: she simply said, 'Well, it was a miserable sermon, anyhow.'"

"It was at that critical moment of the battle," said a Dubuque minister last Sunday, in an impassioned burst of eloquence, "when the Wuke of Dellington—I should say—the Delk of Wulington—I mean the Wolk of Dullington—that is, when the Dule of Welkington, at the Wattle of Balerloo-er-um"—and then somehow the passage seemed to him to be so badly mangled, that he didn't think it would pay to repair it, so he said "seventhly and lastly, my brethren," and went on. Had this orator been other than a minister, he might have been thought spiritually inclined.

THE Christian Intelligencer gives fourteen bits of advice to vacant churches seeking pastors. Bit No. 7 is "Beware of a buffoon." Such a caution, issued by a grave and reverend authority, is a confession of the grave and melancholy fact that there are buffoons in the ministry. The question as to how these objectionable persons effected an entrance into the sacred ranks would be interesting in its bearing on the management of some of the theological seminaries. It is to be feared that injudicious friends and unwise professors have done mischief in inducing young men who have no fitness for the calling to become ministers. To remedy the evil, after they have been ordained, is a difficult business, full of complications. The best way to avoid future trouble, on account of foolish and incompetent men, is to keep them from entering the ministry at all.

THE Rev. Samuel Sheffield of this city on Sunday last, the Rev. John Davenport, also of this locality, and the Rev. Wiley Jones of Norfolk, Va., made the declaration that the end of the world is near at hand; that the time of the Gentiles is ended; that the kingdom of God is soon to be set up; that the Son of God will soon appear, and the earth will be snuffed out like the wick of a candle burnt down to the socket. These men do not pretend to have received any private dispatches touching the coming doom, but they see in the war now in existence in Turkey a fulfillment of the prophecies of Ezekiel & Co., and they think a general smash is soon to take place. It is this class of silly, unbalanced minds that have long ruled the world and frightened weak-minded men and women nearly out of their senses. Despite their dolorous predictions the old globe will doubtless continue to rush and to whirl through space for thousands, and perhaps millions of years, as it has done in the past.

THE trial of the Rev. Charles P. McCarthy in this city has been in progress nearly two weeks, and has attracted much attention. The principal prosecutor is the Rev. Mr. Sweetser, who has made himself quite busy in bringing proofs against his brother clergyman for unministerial conduct. He has proved that McCarthy run up bills that he did not pay; that he used very considerable quantities of ale, beer, wine, etc.; that he purchased $60 worth of canary birds, etc. McCarthy replied that he aimed to live respectably, so as to draw a respectable audience to his church; that the canary birds were not for himself, but that he bought them for a church fair. In return he called the Rev. Sweetser a villager, a retailer of falsehoods, a liar, a mean fellow, etc. On one occasion when a witness was testifying, both the clergymen wished to possess themselves of a document in possession of the witness. They both seized the paper, and for some time contended for its possession. They have quarrelled repeatedly, and applied to each other most uncomplimentary epithets. They are scandalizing the office of clergymen.

RUSSIAN PRIESTS.—Russian priests are a disgrace to Christianity. "He has priests' eyes," is a proverb which means that the person so characterized is lustful, greedy, and self-seeking. Moreover, they are, in a drunken nation, the most drunken. A friend of mine, who stayed several months at a Russian country-house, says it was a common sight to see two priests lying in a cart, as pigs do when they are driven to market. One saint's day, he tells me, the priest came to chapel too far gone to read the service; instead of being struck dumb with shame, he actually whined out an apology: "We poor fellows spend all our time in praying for others, and have no one to pray for us; no wonder, therefore, we fall under temptation." Things are just as bad in Bulgaria. An English engineer, who has just written a book of his experiences there, went over one Sunday to attend a church, whose "pope" had a great reputation for sanctity. There was no service, for the "pope" was lying dead drunk among the nettles at the back of his vodka (whiskey) shop. "I heard," quaintly adds the writer, "that for the five previous Sundays his place had been among those vegetables." Is it any wonder the Turks look on a religion which has such teachers as fitter for swine than for men?—All the Year Round.

Events of the Week.

GEN. GRANT and wife arrived in Liverpool, and are being cordially received by the English people.

THE City of Brussels, the steamer long thought to be lost, arrived at last safely at Liverpool.

Two children, nine and eleven years of age sons of Henry Tower, were burned to death at North Clarendon, Mass.

FOUR men were crushed between two trains on a hand car near Hackensack, N. J. Three died at once. One may recover.

WALKERTON, a Canadian village in Bruce Co., was burned out on the 28th ult. Nearly fifty stores and dwellings were consumed.

THE Japanese Government is making extensive purchases of blooded stock in this country for the purpose of shipping to Japan.

OVER thirty suicides were committed in this city within a month. The boon of existence seems not to be highly appreciated by all.

FLETCHER HARPER, the last remaining member of the original firm of Harper Brothers, died at an advanced age on the 29th of May.

AFTER a term of unreasonably cold weather, during which time it snowed four inches in Berkshire County, Mass., and in other places, it has come off again warm and pleasant.

CAPT. THOMAS CRAPE and his wife left New Bedford, Mass., for Europe in a small sail-boat twenty feet long. It is said to be smaller than any vessel that ever crossed the Atlantic.

SECRETARY EVARTS has written a vigorous remonstrance to the Diaz government of Mexico against the raids made across the border into Texas. If this business is not speedily stopped Gen. Ord will be sent on to attend to it.

TEN persons were baptized last Sunday in the tank of Dr. Sheppard—the good shepherd—Turkish baths, Columbia Heights, Brooklyn. They might have been enemies to Russia. There was utility in the bath, if none in the baptism.

MRS. MARY STEINMACHER of Brooklyn committed suicide by taking poison because her husband refused to let her return to Germany and discontinue living with him. Before she was buried he shot himself and fell upon the corpse of his wife.

DECORATION DAY was largely attended in this city on Wednesday last. The procession of the military, civic societies, fire companies, wagons of blooming plants, wreaths and evergreens, was most imposing, and occupied about two hours in passing a given point.

G. D. HOWELL of the Pennsylvania Railroad has been charged with embezzling the company's money, and applying it to his own benefit. Great confidence was placed in him, as he was such a good, pious man. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and a teacher in the Bible class, as well as manager in a Lyceum association. He has made way with a large sum of money.

Two pious Christians have come to grief in Connecticut. One was a bank president, and the other a cashier. They have been sent to States prison to hard labor, for fraud in deceiving the State Comptroller, one for five and the other for six years. They were leading church members, and their fate proves that even Christians must be wary that they do no not yield to temptation.

THE Turco-Russian War is being vigorously prosecuted. The Russians have thrice been repulsed before Kars. Ardaban has fallen into their hands. They massed their forces upon Erzeroum, where doubtless a hotly-contested battle is soon to take place. The Russians have blown up a Turkish gunboat on the Danube, making the second that has been destroyed for the Turks. The condition of affairs is reported very critical in Constantinople; much dissatisfaction exists; the Sultan is forced to take the field in person, and is strongly urged to declare the war a "holy" one. The Russians are suffering somewhat from defections and desertions on the part of the Circassians.

Career of Religious Ideas.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.—Copyrighted.
CHAPTER IV.

HISTORICAL REVIEW—POLYTHEISM.

Who does not see that the abyss becomes every day deeper under the belief of the past, and that science at a given moment will become the foundation of more perfect morality?—POUCHET.

The primary claim of theology is that man could not have attained a true religion without a revelation. Plunged in idolatry, he could not have extricated himself, but would have sunk deeper and deeper without such divine guidance. The Old Testament accomplished little for the Jew, and the New produced no sudden effect. There was steady but slow growth from Fetishism to Anthropomorphism, and the transition from Paganism to Christianity was an almost imperceptible change. Such must be; for the gods being projections of the minds of their worshipers, change with their mental growth. The reception of a superior god presupposes superiority in the recipient. Metaphysical speculation on the character and origin of the gods of Polytheism belong to an age long subsequent to their active worship. The devotees have no attenuated theories of godly existence, else they would be philosophers, and not devotees. All the fine theories by which writers have sought to involve ancient mythology in allegory and fable only show how little their authors entered into and comprehended ancient life. Apollo was not the sun to his worshipers, but a godlike man. Zeus was not the sky, but a man who ruled the sky. There was no allegory, no mystic meaning, to the early worshipers. A deity stands behind the object and receives homage. As the intellect commenced its grand self-analysis, purely intellectual conceptions began to be defined. The confusion which has arisen in the study of mythology is the result of its reception as a whole, and not as a production of successive advances. It would be as accurate to speak of the fossils of geology as a whole, without distinguishing the ages to which they belong.

The gods are the active energies of the world, while matter is inert and passive to their will, a doctrine which has been almost universally held until the present conception of "force" as the energizing power inherent in matter. As the human mind cannot conceive of the existence of a higher type than itself, the gods must be human in all their qualities. Even the Olympian Jove was human in passions, emotions, and desires. The gods are born and nourished, are married and become parents, but are immortal and never grow old. They gather around the festive board in Olympus, quaff nectar, and partake of celestial food. The Polytheist dwelt in a charmed world. Every object breathed poetry. He was an especial ward of the gods, some of whom, go where he would, he was sure to meet. Pluto, Neptune, and Jove divided between them the domains of the nether world—the ocean, the land, and sky. The sun and moon had their deities. Ceres brings the harvest; the Muses inspire the golden tongue of Poesy; Mars drives the chariot of war. Every act of life or occupation has especial deities; every nation has its chief god: Zeus, Athena, Juno, Baal, Osiris, Jehovah, Odin—partial to their particular people, and more powerful than the gods of others. These chief gods, possessing human propensities, can be tempted at times to transfer their power to other nations. Jacob made a bargain with Elohim, and the Romans prayed the gods of other nations to join their conquering standard. When nations fought, it was rather to test the strength of their respective gods rather than their own. When the conquerors forced their religion on the conquered, it was rejected until it was determined whether the defeated gods were only temporarily banished to caves or mountains, or overthrown. The Romans adopted the conquered gods into their Pantheon, but the Aztecs shut them up in a temple for that purpose.

The apotheosis of great and good men intensified the anthropomorphic conceptions of the gods. Men who serve their nations in important and critical missions—overthrowing their enemies, or introducing ameliorating improvements—receive the worship of their grateful countrymen, and are enshrined with the gods. As the Semite was overawed by the dim sense of an overruling power received from the sameness of the deserts inhabited by that race, the early Greeks or Pelasgians were impressed in a manner exactly opposite by the diversity Nature presented. Of quick sense and fancy, deeply sympathizing with the external world, they, out of the exuberance of their own life, imparted that principle to every object. Nothing was inert or lifeless. The teeming earth, the rushing winds, the wild clouds, the grand mountains, the glorious sun, the moon and stars—all by their motions manifested life. They felt not so much awe, as affection and kinship with Nature. Savages they were, but savages with fine fancy. They gave names to the elements, and at first had no conception of an individuality separate from them. Then, in process of growth, the moving power was referred to intelligence, but that intelligence preserved the former name. Zeus, or Deus—the upper air, or the sky, when personified and made a god, retained the name of the celestial regions. He it was who dwelt on the summits of mountains and drew clouds around him as a mantle. As the Supreme Deity, the gods of inferior position gathered in a great family around him, quaffing ambrosia and feasting at his table. His nod is the unchangeable decree of Fate, and his eternal serenity can by no means be disturbed. The fixed order and succession of events are his, and from him all power is primarily derived. The Greeks were worshipers of Nature. Their deities were human—immortal—but requiring food, and the savor of sacrifice was agreeable to them. They loved, hated, were jealous and capricious, and often involved Jove himself in their quarrels.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

HUMPHREY'S LETTER NO. V.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: You said in your first letter that "England had no deadlier foe to American freedom than was John Wesley." That, I think, is an incorrect statement. Like a great many other Englishmen, of every species of belief and unbelief, Wesley thought the British the best form of government in the world; and he regretted to see a disruption between the Colonies and the Mother country. But he was not a "deadly foe to American freedom." He pronounced the slave trade "that execrable sum of all villainies" (Works: London, 1810; vol. v, p. 47). He wrote and spoke in defense of religious toleration and freedom of conscience (vol. vi, p. 237, 401). He and his friend Gen. Oglethorpe endeavored to make Georgia a free State (Greeley's American Conflict, vol. i, p. 32). In a letter to Lord North, dated June 15, 1775, after receiving fuller information than he at first possessed about the true state of affairs, he said respecting the Colonists: "In spite of all my long-rooted prejudices, I cannot help thinking, if I think at all, these, an oppressed people, asked for nothing more than their legal rights, and that in the most modest and inoffensive manner that the nature of the thing would allow. But waiving this, waiving all considerations of right and wrong, I ask, is it common sense to use force toward the Americans? . . . They are as strong men as you; they are as valiant as you, if not abundantly more valiant, for they are one, and all enthusiasts—enthusiasts for liberty" (Parton's Life of Franklin, vol. i, p. 548). Does this look like deadly enmity to American freedom?

You promised to show that James Madison was an Infidel! I wonder more at the promise than at the non-fulfillment. Madison was a thorough believer in the Christian religion. When he died, "he had fulfilled, nobly fulfilled, the destinies of a man and a Christian" (J. Q. Adams' Eulogy, p. 4).

So of Gouverneur Morris. You will hardly attempt to prove that he was a Deist after seeing his uncomplimentary estimate of Paine.

In your third letter you quote from Franklin's Autobiography to prove that he was a Deist. Franklin was referring to himself when fifteen, where he said, "I became a thorough Deist." We have already shown that he passed through a "regeneration," and "returned to the sentiments of his ancestors" after that. Your quotation is like citing what a man has said when tipsy, in order to show how much sense he has when sober.

You make a special effort to convince the reader that Jefferson was an Infidel. Many of your quotations only show Jefferson's views concerning the "corruptions and abuses of Christianity." You can find similar things in sermons, and, for that matter, in the New Testament. He advised Peter Carr to take nothing for granted—to doubt everything. Perhaps you are not aware that a course in a modern theological seminary is based on a similar principle. The student is not taught to assume but to prove the existence of a God. Descartes began with universal doubt. He "questioned with boldness even the existence of a God." But was Descartes therefore an Infidel? No; he "lived and died a good Catholic" (Huxley's Lay Sermons, p. 342). In the inculcation of this principle, then, Jefferson did not differ from Christian philosophers and theologians.

But Jefferson called himself a "Materialist." Yes; and he called himself a "Christian" also. Now, these two statements cannot be reconciled in your favor; but they can in mine. Jefferson could not be a "Christian" in any sense and be a "Materialist" in the Atheistic sense. But he could be a Christian consistently with Webster's second definition of the word Materialism: "The tendency to give undue importance to material interests; devotion to the material nature and its wants." His writings prove abundantly that he was not a "Materialist" in the sense of "one who denies the existence of spiritual substances." It follows that Jefferson flatly contradicted himself, or else he used the word "Materialist" in a sense consistent with a belief in the Scriptures.

And he called Paul a "Coryphaeus." That was rather a hard name to give the great Apostle. But you must know that avowed Christians sometimes give vent to unguarded expressions of this kind. Some women that want to preach, when reminded of certain injunctions to "silence in the churches," speak of Paul rather lightly as an "old bachelor." Martin Luther called James' Epistle "an Epistle of straw;" and he did it with considerable earnestness, too. But you will hardly claim that Luther was an Infidel. Then why be so sure that Jefferson was, since he did not speak more disrespectfully of Paul than Luther did of James?

If Jefferson was an Infidel why did he call the imputation of Infidelity a "libel," a "malignant distortion and perverted construction"? If he was an Infidel of the Paine type, how was it that he did not allude, disciple-like, to Paine in one of the twenty-five private letters that he wrote between the time of Paine's death in June and the close of the year? If he was an Infidel, how could Samuel Adams write to Thomas Paine, in 1802, such words as these: "Our friend, the President of the United States, has been calumniated for his liberal sentiments, by men who have attributed that liberality to a latent design to promote the cause of Infidelity. This and all other slanders have been made without a shadow of proof;" and why did Paine not claim him in his reply? If he was an Infidel, why did he always deny it, and claim that he was a Christian? When will poor Jefferson cease to be the subject of "libels," "slanders," "calumnies," "malignant distortion and perverted construction"?

You devote a considerable part of your letter in defense of Paine to showing what I had already acknowledged. I must give you credit for candor in not denying that Paine labored for American Independence by assuming to be a believer in the Bible, and by appealing to Christian sentiments with Christian arguments. What I meant by the "period of Paine's infamy," was the period in which he became infamous. You refer rather contemptuously to Madame Roland as "a woman." I gave her opinion simply because she was a skeptic, esteemed very highly among Infidels. The whole American people expressed the same opinion that she did by not electing Paine to any position where statesmanship would be required. You try in vain to defend him against the charge of falsifying. Your distinction between writing and publishing seems to me very much like a quibble. John Adams said in regard to this matter: "He was extremely earnest to convince me that 'Common Sense' was his first-born; declared again and again that he had never written a line nor a word that had been printed before 'Common Sense'" (Works, vol. ii, p. 510). In regard to Paine and that French woman, Mrs. Bonneville, I only gave facts which no one denies. Let every one draw his own inference. You say truly that when Cheetham was prosecuted for libel he failed to prove his insinuations. Very well; but do Infidels drop their insinuations against professing Christians when similar charges are made against them, and fail of proof in a criminal court? The first instance is yet to be produced.

Permit me to say a word about the incorporation of religious freedom in the Constitution. That was not the work of Infidels, but the achievement of believers in the Holy Scriptures. On this subject Judge Story says: "We are not to attribute this prohibition of a national religious establishment to any indifference to religion in general, and especially to Christianity (which none could hold in more reverence than the framers of the Constitution), but to a dread by the people of the influence of ecclesiastical power in matters of government." "Probably, at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and of the amendment to it, now under consideration, the general, if not the universal, sentiment in America was, that Christianity ought to receive encouragement from the State, so far as such encouragement was not incompatible with the private rights of conscience, and the freedom of religious worship. Any attempt to level all religions, and to make it a matter of State policy to hold all in utter indifference, would have created universal disapprobation, if not universal indignation" (Exposition of the Constitution, New York, 1868, pp. 259-261).

It would be relevant to our subject to show that believers in the Bible have done much more than unbelievers to bring about the abolition of American Slavery. But time and space compel me to confine what I have to say on that matter to a mere outline:—

1. Slavery is older than the Bible; therefore the Scriptures did not create nor establish that institution.
2. Slavery among the ancient Hebrews was much milder than among the surrounding nations. The Mosaic law provided a periodical emancipation of all bondmen. The whole régime was virtually a scheme for the gradual abolition of slavery, similar to that which the French Infidel Condorcet recommended.
3. The cardinal principles of the Scriptures involve a condemnation of Slavery. Christ so expounded them: "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets" (Mat. vii, 12). As far back as the age of Isaiah, we find among the Jews such sentiments as the following: "Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke?" (Isa. lviii, 6).
4. It is true, however, that many professing Christians have sanctioned slavery; and the Bible has been pressed into the service of the slave-holder. But the remedy for these evils in the Church has always arisen from within herself. The voice that has taught and corrected her members has emanated from her own altars. The Christian has always been the best friend of the oppressed. I need not remind you of Wilberforce, the leading Abolitionist of England. In our own country, the movement which culminated in the Emancipation Proclamation was in the main a movement of religious people. Henry Wilson says on this subject: "It has been fashionable to couple the charge of Infidelity with the mention of the Abolition effort. Nothing could be more unjust or untrue. Anti-slavery was the child of Christian faith. Its early and persistent defenders and supporters were men who feared God and called upon his name" (Rise and Fall of the Slave Power in America, vol. iii, p. 718). In this magnificent work he shows that John Eliot, Judge Sewall, Burling, Saniford, Lay, Woolman, Benezet, Wesley, Whitfield, Rush, &c., &c., opposed slavery (vol. i, ch. 1); that the earliest Abolition Societies were "loyal to the precepts of Christianity"; that Rev. Dan'l Worth suffered imprisonment for circulating anti-slavery literature (vol. ii, p. 668); that "the great body of the Protestant clergy condemned the Fugitive Slave Law" (vol. ii, p. 310); that the "Underground Railroad" was the coöperation, "generally, though not exclusively, of members of Christian churches" (vol. ii, p. 65). But, perhaps you do not like Henry Wilson, because he was such a thorough-going Christian. Take a more "liberal" man, then—a man that could too frequently "swear like a trooper." I mean Horace Greeley. In the first volume of his "American Conflict"—dedicated to the "Christian Statesman," John Bright—he shows that Jonathan Edwards, Jr., preached against Slavery in 1791 (p. 50); that John Wesley, Oglethorpe, Washington and Jefferson opposed slavery (pp. 32, 34, 51); that the devout John Jay was the first President of the New York Manumission Society (p. 107); that Franklin was President and Rush Secretary of a similar Society in Pennsylvania (p. 107); that the "pioneers of modern Abolitionism were almost uniformly devout, pious, church-nurtured men" (p. 121); and that the first martyrs of Abolitionism—Rev. Elijah P. Lovejoy and John Brown—were fervent Christians (pp. 141, 296-7).

It is clear from all this that the earliest, most earnest, persistent, and numerous friends of the slave were found in the Church, and not among Infidels. In the campaign of 1860 when Slavery and Liberty were fighting their last desperate battle at the polls, where was "the matchless Ingersoll" that has been prating so much of late about the "liberty of man, woman, and child"? Of course, he was among the friends of universal freedom! Not a bit of it. He was with the pro-slavery party, doing all he could to defeat Lincoln, and rivet his shackles on the slave! What if he did turn his political coat afterwards! That was policy. Country people would not think very much of a fellow that had kept aloof from the bee-tree until it was felled and the bees' wings were all burned off, and then came forward with a big brass pan to claim the honey.

It has been claimed that Lincoln was an Infidel. Having seen the assertion that Colfax said so in his lecture, I wrote recently to Mr. Colfax to ask whether that was true or not. He replied: "I did not say in my Lincoln Lecture that Mr. Lincoln was not a believer in the Christian religion, but that he was not a member of a church." In a speech delivered in 1860 Mr. Lincoln said: "I know I am right, because I know that Liberty is right, for Christ teaches it, and Christ is God" (Arnold's Life of Lincoln, p. 688). When leaving Springfield to assume the Presidency he said: "He (Washington) never would have succeeded except for the aid of Divine Providence, upon which he at all times relied. I feel that I cannot succeed without the same Divine blessing which sustained him; and on the same Almighty Being I place my reliance for support. And I hope you, my friends, will all pray that I may receive that divine assistance without which I cannot succeed, but with which success is certain" (Ibid, p. 168). In his first Inaugural he said: "Intelligence, patriotism, Christianity, and a firm reliance on Him who has never yet forsaken his favored land, are still competent to adjust in the best way all our present difficulties." Mr. Arnold says of him: "All through his troubles, he earnestly solicited the prayers of the people, and they were his" (Life of Lincoln, p. 169). "He seemed ever to live and act in the consciousness of his responsibility to God, and with the trusting faith of a child, he leaned confidently upon his Almighty Arm." "The support which Mr. Lincoln received during his administration from the religious organizations, and the sympathy and confidence between the great body of Christians and the President, was a source of immense strength and power to him" (Ibid, p. 688). "This great family, with a continent for a homestead, universal liberty, restrained and guided by intelligence and Christianity, was his sublime ideal of the future. For this he lived, and for this he died" (Ibid, p. 690). Raymond endorses a similar testimony concerning his "religious experience" (Life and Public Services of Abraham Lincoln, N. Y., 1865, pp. 730-5).

In opposition to such authorities as these what is the value of a "they say so," or an "it is said"? Simply nothing. Lincoln was indisputably a profound believer in the Christian Religion.

I now close my discussion of the first proposition. I have endeavored to show that "believers in the Bible have done more for civil liberty in the United States than unbelievers in it"—more for Independence; more for Religious Freedom in the Constitution; and more for the Abolition of Slavery from American soil.

Yours with respect, G. H. HUMPHREY.

Fallibility of Revelation and Inspiration.

MR. EDITOR: We have a multitude of books that have been written by men calling themselves apostles, and of which books we can read translations and transcripts only. The original writings of these reputed apostles are lost, and if they were not lost, there are but few who would be able to read them in the original languages. We have reason to believe, that of all the transcripts and translations of the writings of the apostles, there is not one that was made by an infallible hand,—not one that is perfect or correct. Of all the ancient transcripts and translations of the apostles, there are not two that are exactly alike. Some contain more, others less; and others again contain the same amount of words, but differently printed and differently placed. There are many things which are not correct in the English translation. There are some things that no apostle ever wrote. There are some things in the English translation which are known to be forgeries. There are some whole books in the English that are of doubtful origin. And if the translations and the original transcripts are imperfect, there is the same ground for the uncertainty, as if the original writings were imperfect. But suppose that we had the original writings of the apostles before us, the very copies which they are said to have written in Greek and Hebrew, without either addition or subtraction, or alteration—suppose we were sure that we had the original writings of the apostles before us, and that we were also sure that the apostles were infallible, and that their writings were unmixt truth, and untainted and unsoiled by any imperfection whatever, could we have fuller certainty of the truth of our religious views derived from those writings? I say, nay. There we are, we will suppose we have pure and perfect copies of the apostles' writings, with full assurance that the apostles when they wrote them, were beyond the possibility of error, but are we therefore raised above uncertainty as to the doctrines which we collect from these writings? Are we placed any beyond the danger of error? Not at all.

We cannot read the original writings perhaps, so we will have to depend upon a translator. And what advantage is it to have infallible original writings unless we have infallible translations also? There may as well be a doubt about the original, as doubt about the translation. A doubt as to the infallibility of the translation is as likely to produce uncertainty in our minds, as a doubt as to the infallibility of the writer. Yes, but some will say, we can translate the original for ourselves. What then? Suppose you can translate the original and suppose that you have the ability to translate the original and raise yourself above the region of uncertainty and doubt, it will not raise others above that region, who are not able to translate for themselves. How are they to be raised above uncertainty? Are none to be freed but those who can translate Hebrew and Greek? But you will say those who cannot translate for themselves may read your translation; but how are they to know your translation is correct? You are not infallible; and if you were, others may not have any certain or indubitable proof that you are. And others could have no fuller assurance of the correctness of your translation, than you could have of the correctness of translations made by other fallible men. And if the original writings of the apostles were in existence, in the apostle's own hand-writing, only one person could have them in his possession. Can we believe that a God would make certainty in the belief of religious doctrines to depend on something which could be possessed by only one man?

Suppose we had the original writings of the apostles, and an assurance that the apostles were infallible, it would not make certain the truth in religious opinions. Are you an infallible translator of Greek and Hebrew? If not, what proof have you, that your translation is not defective or erroneous? And if doubt in one point, destroys certainty in all, you are lost again. How can you know you are an infallible translator of Greek and Hebrew? They are both dead languages, and to obtain a full and perfect knowledge of them, so as to become a perfect or infallible translator is impossible. You have to get your knowledge of the languages themselves by the help of grammarians and lexicographers; but where will you find grammarians and lexicographers that are infallible?

Perhaps you will say that you can read Greek and Hebrew authors, and so correct the errors of the grammarians and lexicographers. But you must be dependent on your grammarians and lexicographers for your ability to read and understand the Greek and Hebrew authors. Besides supposing you have got a better knowledge of the Greek and Hebrew languages than the grammarians and lexicographers themselves possessed—suppose that you have acquired so correct and comprehensive a knowledge that you can even detect and correct the grammarian's and lexicographer's faults, how will you become infallibly certain that the apostles have used words in exactly the same sense as other writers? How will you become infallibly certain that some of the words in those dead languages have not lost or changed their signification? And lastly, suppose that all this is perfect,—suppose the apostles to have been infallible,—suppose yourself to be in possession of their works in their own hand-writing,—suppose that you have good grammarians and lexicographers to enable you to translate their writings into English,—suppose that you have actually translated their writings into the best and fittest English phrases possible; are you sure that you have an infallible understanding of all that the apostles have written? And if you have an infallible understanding, so that you know when you are reading, that you perceive the true and perfect meaning of the apostles; are you sure that you have an infallible memory, so as to be able always to recollect or remember all that you once understood? You have no such thing. A want of infallibility in transcribers or translators, or a want of infallibility in your own understanding or memory would surely and inevitably throw uncertainty around Christianity, as a want of infallibility in the apostles themselves.

It will be said by some, we have something above all these we have, "faith or a voice within us which prompts us to a knowledge of what is just and right." Now let us see what this faith or voice within signifies; let us see if it is not a very convenient sort of reason for cheats. Faith or a voice within can be established upon the principles of reason. Feeling is living. A man without the capacity of feeling would be dead. To feel without thinking is impossible, as thought is a series of sensations. The propensities, intellectual faculties, and moral feelings of each individual, are nothing more than the various modified and always modifying sensation experienced by such individuals. Reason is the expression of individual sensation, as the aggregate of human reason is the aggregate of human sensations. As to feel is to live, so to think is to reason. It is impossible to reason without thinking, or to think without reasoning, or to feel without living, or to live without feeling. Then, according to these views, there is no such thing as faith and voice within not founded upon reason. This, I think, will appear true to every intelligent mind who takes the trouble to consider that reason must be convinced or satisfied before we can have faith in anything. Moore has justly said:

"Faith, fanatic faith, once wedded fast
To some falsehood, hugs it to the last."

I am with all due respect, your well wisher, J. PETTY.
LaCrosse, Wis.

Jehovah's Answer to D. M. Bennett's Prayer.

D.—M. BENNETT: Who art thou, that thou shouldst dare take my holy name upon thy sin-polluted lips? Knowest thou not, that thou art hell-born, hell-bound, and hell-deserving? Had I been strict to mark iniquity thou wouldst, long ere this, have been lifting up thine eyes in outer despair, where hope and mercy never come, where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched. Were it not that I am slow to anger and long-suffering in mercy, I would even now cast thee down to hell, and make thee a companion for the Devil and his angels in that lake of fire and brimstone which I have prepared from the foundation of the world for them that doubt my Holy Word.

Thou son of perdition, knowest thou not that thou shalt not be heard for thy much speaking? Why seest thou to be wise above that which is written? Who art thou, that thou presumest to pry into my secrets? Answer me if thou canst. Who formed thee in the womb, or who packed the mud to make thee? Wert thou there when I, thy potter, formed thee of the clay, and half baked thee. Have I not power over the clay to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor? Shall the vessel say unto him that formed it, "Why hast thou formed me thus?" If I have made thee a vessel fitted for destruction, and in my hot displeasure cast thee down to hell, for the glory of my justice, who art thou that thou shouldst reply against me? Wert thou with me when I laid the foundation of the earth, and dug deep and laid the corner-stones thereof, that thou goest about to prove that the earth is round and hung upon nothing? Fearest thou not my fierce anger? When it is kindled but a little, thousands are consumed by it. Did I not set my servants upon Copernicus and Galileo when they sought to know more of this Universe than I knew myself? And thinkest thou that thou art better than they? Vain man, thinkest thou to escape eternal damnation? "Hell is even now opening her jaws to receive thee." Why askest thou whether I be "corporeal or spiritual?" Hast thou not read how, with the blast of my nostrils, I plowed a road through the Red Sea forty miles long, twenty miles wide, and, on an average, one half mile deep, and concealed the depths in the midst of the sea? That is, it was diametrically opposed to a "hell of a blast," for it froze the sea from top to bottom, twenty miles either way, a wall sufficient to hold that mighty body of water back. Contemplate my almighty nose which made that mighty blast. Comprehend it if thou canst. Was it not corporeal? Come the mortal that thinkest to measure arms with all mightiness! Comprehend if thou canst the almighty face that possessed this almighty nose. What think you were its proportions? and the balance of the almighty head, what were its dimensions? Answer me if thou canst. And what of the almighty body that sustained this almighty head? Compass it about if thou canst. What thinkest thou of my almighty lungs that could inhale such an almighty cold blast?

"O faithless generation of vipers, how long shall I be with you, how long shall I suffer you?" Why spend so much time and treasure excavating the rocks in the depths of the East River, and placing there dynamite and nitro-glycerine? Had ye faith as a grain of mustard-seed ye would have asked of me, and with one blast of my almighty nose, I would have blown a channel through Hell Gate a mile wide and ten thousand feet deep, that all the earth might know there is a God outside of the Constitution.

Hast thou read how, nearly a year ago, "my anger waxed hot" against the heathen on the numerous islands in the Bay of Bengal, and being exceedingly mad against them for worshipping other gods and knowing nothing of me, I just stuck up my nose at them and gave a snort, which came down in a regular cyclone, and swept into hell in the short space of twenty minutes two hundred and fifty thousand men, women and children of them? Does not this make thee tremble and hide thy face in confusion?

Why hast thou, too, like Israel of old, "gone whoring after other gods," and made inquiries of me of them? Of course there are thousands of other gods, and it took a multitude of us to make this little world in a week, as we had no mud to make it of. Why have my servants corrupted the Scriptures? Verily, I have blinded their eyes and darkened their minds that they should not understand, lest the world be too soon converted and I should heal them. For must not my justice be vindicated in damning the many? and my mercy in saving the few? Say, O mortal man, doth not the original Hebrew read that "in the beginning the gods created the heavens and the earth?"

But "I am a jealous God," and thou shalt have no other gods before me." There is "the god of this world," also called by my son (who is me) "the prince of this world," Diabolus by name. He is a h—ll of a fellow, though. He has everlastingly been tearing down the floors of heaven and raising hell, till he has them nearly on the same plain at this present date. He has nearly torn down my "mansions in the skies," and made the better part of men believe that hell is better with knowledge, and an understanding, thinking mind, than heaven with ignorance, superstition, and thoughtlessness. But I have promised to give him h—ll, that is if I can (keep this to yourself). For is it not written, "And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand (the devil has stolen the key, and the chain is lost; this is confidential, keep dark), and he laid hold on the dragon (he does not know him so well as I do), that old serpent which is the Devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years (Wh-e-w!) and cast him into the bottomless pit (guess who knocked the bottom out) and shut him up, and set a seal upon him (better set the "hell-hounds" upon him!) that he should deceive the nations no more?"

There, doubt that if you dare! "He that doubteth is damned." Away with your questions about my mother and sister and brother and grandmother and the like. Why weary me with your long prayers? Knowest thou not that I turn a deaf ear to all such inquiries? (the reason is I can't answer them) and have sworn eternal vengeance upon all those that make them? Stop! stop! Away! away! I will no more! I won't listen. I—I—have business with the man in the moon! Going, going, gone!

Given this 23d day of April, 1877, through my amanuensis, the Rev. Theologian, D.D., at Edinburgh, Ind.

OMNIPOTENT L. G. * JEHOVAH.
Mark.

We have, perhaps, but little grounds for doubting the genuineness of the above communication from the personage whose name stands at the close of the letter (the letters "L. G." we presume stand for "Lord God"). There is just as much authority for believing this to be genuine as anything that has ever appeared in his name. All that we have in any case is the word of the medium or speaker. The language evidently sounds much like what used to be spoken in his name. We wish it would suit his Divinity to answer our interrogatories in full.

D. M. B.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 25.

Great Jehovah, we would ask of thee relative to another rite, which thou didst institute in olden times, and to which thou seemedst for a time to attach great importance—the rite of circumcision.

Did the cutting off of a small portion of the persons of the males among thy people—the prepuce—change them in any essential manner, either physically or morally? Did it make the impure more pure, or did it impart integrity to the dishonest?

If thou didst prefer thy people to be in the condition of the circumcised, if they were thus more acceptable unto thee, may we ask why thou didst not create them originally in that condition? Why didst thou form them with a redundant portion of the body which gave thee offense, or which thou wishedst to have removed?

Did a little piece of skin, more or less, make any special difference with them or thee? Was there really anything vile or offensive in the small part cut off? If so, would it not have been better not to have created it in the first place?

If it was insisted on as a "covenant" between thee and thy people that though mightiest better know them, or that they might appear more acceptable in thy sight, didst thou take pleasure when the ceremony was performed? Was it especially pleasing unto thee when the rite was afterwards performed upon the babies eight days old?

Was it because the law or requirement of thine to circumcise all the males among thy people was of more importance than thy other laws and requirements, known as the "Ten Commandments," and all the other rites and ceremonies which thou didst institute by thy servant Moses, five hundred years later, that this was revealed so long before the others?

Are we not to understand that, as thou gavest this law to Abraham five centuries earlier than thou gavest thy other laws, this was more vital and of more consequence? May we enquire why at the same time thou didst not institute thy other laws, which at a later date thou didst introduce with much pomp and demonstration?

If circumcision was of so much more consequence than the other rites and ceremonies that thou deemedst it necessary to enjoin it five hundred years before the other, is it not a little singular that thy favorite and chosen lawgiver, Moses, should have attached no more consequence to it?

Is it not a little noticeable, too, that, under the administration of thy great leader and lawgiver, Moses, very little or nothing was said about circumcision?

How is it that thou allowedst the ceremony to so fall into disuse that scarcely anything of it was done during the forty years thy people were making that journey of a few hundred miles?

Why was it, when thou wast in almost daily intercourse with Moses, that thou didst not allude to the subject, did not command its revival, and that it was left for Joshua to bring into use again after Moses had passed away?

If the rite of circumcision was really vital to the welfare of thy people, or to thy own peace of mind towards them, why didst thou not enjoin it in the time of Moses, and why did not thy own son Jesus also commend it the time he was upon earth to make known thy entire will?

Does it not look to an outsider that in the first place thou feltst particularly urgent about it and afterwards became less so, and that thou finally relapsed into indifference upon the subject?

If thou now regardst the importance of the rite in the same light thou didst five thousand years ago wouldst thou not wish thy people of the Christian persuasions to practice it?

Is not the fact that thou dost not now enjoin the performance of this rite another proof that gods, even, are subject to the great law of change that governs the Universe and everything it contains?

Upon this principle may we not expect that still greater changes may take place in regard to what is ascribed to thy will and requirements? In one or two thousand years from now, if men still believe in thee, will not their notions of thy requirements and demands be likely to be greatly modified from what they are now?

Will not rites and ceremonies which are crude and physical in their nature be esteemed of far less importance in the eyes of men than they were a few thousand years ago? Will not the mental qualities, the improvement of the mind, the cultivation of the intellect, be the studies that will engross the attention of coming time far more than when mankind was in its infancy.

Is it not true that circumcision has been practiced by many pagan nations in various parts of the world? Was it not long practiced by the Colchicians, the Egyptians, the Ethiopians, and Phœnicians? Was not, in fact, the observance of this rite wide-spread among the nations of Africa, as well as in Asia?

Is it not practiced in several of the savage nations and tribes of Africa even at the present day? As it is found the rite has been observed in the world for thousands of years, does it not seem more probable that the Jews borrowed it from the Egyptians and the neighboring nations rather than that the Egyptians should have borrowed it from a nation whom they despised and almost abhorred, thy own specially chosen people?

Is there anything about the ceremony so esthetical or elevating that any nationality should wrangle for the honor of originating it?

If it was so important that mere children should have this ceremony performed upon them, and if they were thus in the slightest degree made more happy or more eligible to heaven, should not something of the kind have been gotten up for the female children also? Should they not have been allowed to participate in the benefits conferred by this ceremony?

Do not several of the pagan nations of the world practice among the females a ceremony somewhat akin to circumcision in the males?

Ought not the origin of a rite for the present or future happiness of females to be considered just as divine or heavenly as those expressly for the benefit of males?

Have not many similar rites and ceremonies, more or less sacred, been adopted by many of the nations of men who have lived upon the earth?

Were there not rites at festivals, of which there were many, rites at birth, rites at puberty, rites at marriages, and rites at death?

Were not the rites performed at puberty, especially with the males, as practiced by some of the pagan nations, of a most severe, cruel and painful character?

Have not these been observed with a religious veneration as deep and as earnest as was the rite of circumcision, as performed by the Jews?

Were they not all just about as divine in their origin as the rite of circumcision, which we have had under consideration?

Were not all these crude ceremonies mere outgrowths of man in a semi-barbarous state, environed by ignorance and superstition, and with little correct appreciation of what is best calculated for the true adornment and happiness of the human race?

As men become more and more advanced in truth and knowledge, and occupy the plane of intellectuality, will they not have less and less use for the crude rites and ceremonies of the Paganism and Fetishism of olden times?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

What I Don't Believe.—No. 31.

271. It is pretty hard to believe that the army of the Midianites became so demoralized at the breaking of the three hundred pitchers that they fell upon each other and slew one hundred and twenty thousand of their own men before they found out their mistake. It is also hard to believe that; when Gideon pursued the fifteen thousand who escaped with two of the kings of Midian, he with his three hundred tired and famished pitcher-men should be able to slay them all and take the two kings prisoners. If this account is true, those three hundred men were the most valiant that were ever known in the world. In all the wars and battles that history gives any account of there is nothing like it. That an inexperienced general with a band of three hundred men, unarmed save with pitchers and lamps, should be able to put to death one hundred and thirty thousand fighting men, and this without losing a man, is altogether too improbable a story to be credited in this matter-of-fact age of the world. Perhaps such stories will answer for children and mental imbeciles in the days of myth and fable, but they will not do now for men of intelligence. They do not sound like realities.

272. It is quite possible that Gideon and his three hundred men could assassinate the two kings of Midian after the fifteen thousand men had been disposed of, and also to rob them of their golden ornaments, or that he should have been able to whip the elders of the city of Succoth, and to break down the tower of the city of Peniel, but it can scarcely be thought that his conduct was governed by the law of kindness.

There cannot be any doubt, if the story is true, about his being a brave old Patriarch. He sported many wives and concubines, and had seventy sons of his own begetting, to say nothing of daughters. The Big Mogul of Tartary, the Grand Vizier of Constantinople, or Brigham Young himself, of Utah, can hardly be considered his superior in the patriarchal business. Take him all in all, his like has seldom been met with in the world.

It cannot be claimed that Abimelech, one of the seventy sons of Gideon, acted very honorably or righteously in undertaking to become king of Israel, to carry out which design he hired seventy reckless fellows to be his followers, entered his father's house, and murdered sixty-eight of his brothers. It would seem that if they possessed but a tithe of their father's valor they ought to have made a better defense than to be murdered in that manner. By this murderous course Abimelech became king and ruler three years, when the only brother that escaped the general massacre saw fit to contend for the throne and kingdom. A civil war was the result, in which Abimelech was at first successful, until, trying to set fire to a tower in which the people had taken refuge, a woman dropped a mill-stone upon his head and cracked his skull. It would naturally be supposed that, after this severe injury, he would have become unconscious, but he kept his mind admirably, and, looking up to see who had thus thrown the mill-stone upon his devoted head, he discovered that it was a woman, when he felt so unwilling to die at the hands of a woman that he immediately ordered his armor-bearer to kill him at once. Thus ingloriously ended the house of the valorous Gideon, and unless it was known that it was God's peculiar and chosen people we are reading about, we could not tell that their conduct was materially better than that of other nations under similar circumstances, and who could not boast of the special presence and assistance of Jehovah!

274. After the inglorious career of the sons of Gideon, God's people seemed to get along very badly. They went "whoring after other gods," and did not seem to have any more grace or goodness than their neighbors. The next leader that distinguished himself was Jephthah, the son of a harlot. When the chosen people got in a bad way with the nations that surrounded them and were near being overpowered, the elders were glad to send for this son of a prostitute to fight the battles of the Lord. The story goes that the spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he made a vow that if the Lord would deliver the Ammonites into his hands that he would sacrifice unto the Lord whatever or whoever, upon his return home, should first come out to meet him. It turned out that it was his own daughter, his only child, that came forth to meet him with timbrels and dances in honor of the victory her father had gained over the Ammonites. The father undoubtedly felt bad, to be under the necessity of sacrificing his own beloved child, but he had made his vow, and he was one of the kind who, when they make a vow to the Lord it has got to be lived up to, so after allowing the girl two months to mourn her virginity, he executed his pious vow and sacrificed his own child to his God. If the monstrous story is true it is to be hoped that God and Jephthah both felt better after the horrid deed was performed. Possibly that occurrence may be considered as a prototype of the somewhat similar sacrifice which God himself is said to have made of his only child some thirteen hundred years afterwards. I cannot commend either act as a work of mercy or necessity or even of good sense.

275. I cannot think it was a very merciful act of Jephthah to cause to be put to death forty-two thousand men because they could not pronounce the word "Shibboleth" correctly, as described in Judges, xii. It is much in keeping with the murders and massacres of tens of thousands, and sometimes of hundreds of thousands, for trifling provocations as are so often described in other parts of the Bible. It was, a small provocation for which to murder so many men in cold blood. Those were truly barbarous and ferocious times. It is to be wondered at that as God directed the conduct of his people he should permit such acts, but we are left to suppose that that kind of conduct pleased him as well as any.

276. The next great man of God worthy of attention that ruled in Israel was Samson, and he was a very remarkable character. As he has already passed under review it is hardly necessary to again consider at much length his remarkable feats of strength, his fox-killing enterprises, etc. I think I dropped a hint that I did not believe that he slew a lion with his naked hands; that he slew thirty men to get their garments with which to pay a bet; that he caught three hundred foxes, and tying their tails together in pairs, with a torch between each pair of tails, sent them through the standing corn of the Philistines, thus setting it all on fire; that, being bound by his own people with strong new cords or ropes, he broke them like threads upon being delivered to the Philistines; that he slew one thousand men with the jaw-bone of an ass, or that he carried off the gates and posts of a city and deposited them on the top of a high mountain. It is easy to believe that he dallied with the harlot, Delilah, and that he informed her that his strength was located in his hair instead of in his muscles, but it is not easy to understand that upon her cutting his hair he became weak like other men, especially as it was claimed that his remarkable strength was direct from the Lord. The story of his laying hold of the pillars of a temple with his hands, and thus pulling the structure to the ground, killing ten or fifteen thousand people, is wholly incredible.

Various nations have had their strong men, or their legends of strong men, as the Greeks had their Hercules. It is, in fact, highly probable that Samson was a clumsy copy of the Grecian Hercules, who also killed lions and performed other feats of strength. Both were doubtless myths, having no real existence, though Samson is claimed to have been a ruler in Israel twenty years. To us it seems difficult for a sensible person to believe that such a person ever lived, but probably there was as much reality in his existence, and about as much truth in his remarkable feats of strength, as in many of the accounts and exploits of Moses, Gideon, and many of the other remarkable mythical Bible characters.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

BROTHER JOHN SYPHERS' Agitator for May has made its appearance. No one could well entertain a doubt of its being written and issued by the humorous, eccentric and comical John Syphers. It is Sypherian all over. Large numbers of the Liberals and Spiritualists of the country will hail it with pleasure, and give it a cordial welcome. It ought to speedily build up a good circulating business. We extend to it the right hand of fellowship. We welcome it to the rugged field of journalism, and wish it all the success in the world. It is a monthly of eight pages—not quite so large as this paper. Price $1.00 per year in advance. Address John Syphers, Lockport, Ill.

"The Truth Seeker Collection."

We would again call attention to this work which we have just issued, and which will in a very few days be ready for patrons. It is remarkably cheap, and will certainly be very useful. A book of six hundred pages for 75 cents is very cheap indeed. The forms for funerals, and other services, are alone worth the money. The recitations are also worth the money, and the 525 Liberal hymns are worth double the price asked for the entire Collection. We are absolutely selling the first edition at less than cost, being anxious that it should have a wide circulation. Let every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER order a copy without delay, and induce half a dozen, at least, of his neighbors to take a copy each.

We have said that if any one ordered a copy of it and did not find it worth double the price asked for it, we would exchange, giving them something else instead. We still adhere to this offer. Let the orders roll in. Who cannot afford to send 75 cents for such a volume?

OUR readers are doubtless aware from our notices from time to time of the lectures before the Society of Humanity in Science Hall that an effort is being made here by the adherents and admirers of Auguste Comte to make the public better acquainted with his philosophy. This movement takes shape in the organization of a Church or Society of Humanity. To those of our readers who have not read the works of Comte—or of his English disciples, Harriet Martineau, Frederick Harrison, Dr. Bridges, and others—and who may be interested to know "what it is all about," and how Constructive Liberals differ from other Liberals, the discourses advertised in another column under the head of "Radical Constructive Literature" will no doubt prove valuable.

SOCIETY OF HUMANITY.—On Sunday evening last Mr. T. B. Wakeman gave the closing lecture for the season. It was upon "The Gospel of Science," or a true classification of the sciences. He pointed out in a very clear and able manner the regular gradations from concrete matter of the universe, or the infinite, up through the various forms of organized life to the social and psychical sciences. He presented the nature of the "Positive Philosophy" in clearer light than we remember to have heard before.

MARRIED.—At the Avenue House, Beloit, Kan., May 15, 1877, by Mr. Charles Brown, Justice of the Peace, Mr. A. J. Brown, of Webster City, Iowa, to Mrs. Maria M. De Ford, of Cawker City, Mitchell Co., Kan.

Social Science.

PALM-SUNDAY.

Palm-Sunday with the Catholics is an important memorial occasion, instituted to give attraction to the Catholic Church, and to solemnize what in social science would otherwise present a ridiculous aspect. But the day for solemnizing absurdities is fast drawing toward its evening. Its crimson tint hardly now beautifies the sky, and the clouds look dun over superstition, which were once charming. Science is held responsible for the lost charms, and the question is boldly propounded, what can you give as a substitute? We give the clear facts, however much they may change the pleasant sky. People love facts more than they love illusive charms. There is no one who does not prefer the worst of a case in truth to the best of a case in doubt; and, moreover, no one ever can abandon an item of lovely faith until he gets a substitute for it, which he prefers before it; though the faith be charming as a summer sunset, and though the substitute be somber and death-telling as the shadows of night. "Tell me the worst of my case," says the criminal at the bar, "though it be to hang"; and sociology knows no exception to that preference, and no one is responsible for the truth. No scientist hunts for substitutes for charming hopes, and no one calls for such substitutes but the one in doubt, who lacks information as to the truth of his faith. In regard to the elements of sociology, that science is as inexorable as chemistry or geometry.

In giving the theological aspect of a case the Bible also gives the scientific aspect. In literature it cannot be otherwise, for the scientific facts are essential to make the theological view. Thus, a thief finds a wallet containing a thousand dollars, and he appropriates it to his own use, hiding it from its owner. The money, appropriating it, hiding it from its owner, are the socialistic facts which demonstrate a thief. The case is clear—fully made out by the facts; but the thief is a theologian, and he takes the case Godward for an explanation, and arranges the theological story that God watches over him, and has graciously provided for his wants in causing the treasure-trove to be placed where he could find it; and he sees in the case a new evidence that he is a subject of God's special care—a saint of God, most unmistakably! All of the old Jewish prophets, Jesus Christ, and his apostles, practiced in the same way, interpreting natural facts theologically, till the theological scheme has become a great social institution; and they seek from it their business, as the thief doubtless could enjoy the stolen treasure. The facts are all in. Even theology cannot leave them out; so Palm-Sunday is for a high mass distorted from a ridiculous train of socialistic facts, commemorative of Jesus riding into Jerusalem astride of two asses.

Most people think Jesus rode only one ass into Jerusalem when they shouted and threw palm branches in the road before him; but that is a mistake. He rode two; and probably that is what made the people shout at him. At that time it was a ridiculous feat; but taking it Godward for an explanation, its theology makes it both solemn and marvelous. The shout was a repetition of the word "hosanna," which meant the same as our word "hurrah," and the Hebrew word "hallelujah"—a word for sport. So when the boys hurraed for Jesus astride two asses, and threw palm-twigs at him, they little thought they were evolving the scientific facts for a world-renowned Palm-Sunday. They meant sport, out of which theology has made asses of men. Jesus himself was full of it—either the sport or the theology of it, it is not made certain which, but probably the latter; for when the policemen overhauled him and requested him to conduct himself in a proper manner, he declined, saying, "If the multitude were silent the stones would cry out," and the hurrah was sounded again most lustily—all very natural for city people, upon seeing a verdant countryman riding both the old mare and colt at once. They did not know, probably, that he was by that feat trying to get himself recognized as king on the prophecy of Isaiah, their renowned prophet, who, seven hundred years before, wrote the following to the daughters of Zion—a hill in Jerusalem where Isaiah had been petted by the ladies: "Behold thy king cometh unto thee meek, and sitting upon an ass and a colt, the foal of an ass." But the book declares that that was the point with Jesus, to see himself recognized as king. He was just verdant enough to suppose all Jerusalem would declare him king, if he acted in accordance with those words of Isaiah. (See Mat. xxi, where the facts are all given.) He, Jesus, says he did that feat that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet. Of course, Jesus was not the subject of Isaiah's words, for Jesus was never a king, and Isaiah spoke of a king; but Jesus, poor boy, from the age of twelve to thirty, lived in the wilderness, a tragolite, with no instruction only what he got from a book of the old prophets. That, with a keen recollection of his mother's Gabriel-story—how he was sired by a god—filled him with the monstrous conceit which made him apply all the mysterious passages in the old prophets to himself; so it was quite natural, in a scientific sense, for him to mount two asses and ride them into Jerusalem, in accordance with Isaiah's words, which he applied to himself. Isaiah puts the plural number to the steeds for his king to ride, and Matthew also asserts the same plurality for Jesus' ride. They put their garments on them both—the old mare and colt, and Jesus sat thereon.

Thus the socialistic, scientific facts give us a grotesque and ridiculous picture; and theology paints them in a curious direction to get up a god-howl in the institution of Palm-Sunday. But a change soon came over the spirit of Jesus' dream. He seems to have found out that people were making fun of him instead of declaring him king; so he rode his donkeys up to the temple in Jerusalem, dismounted, and went in, mad, as we should infer, as a March hare, forgetting entirely the dignity of a king, for he made a scourge of ropes with which he thrashed the market-men and brokers, and overturned the tables, raising a hell of a rumpus in general—not much like the mild, meek and lowly Jesus, of whom the clergy delight to talk.

A wonderful man was that double-up rider of Palm-Sunday. He played many characters. His highest aspirations seem to have been to play the role of a god; then the role of a king, a savior, a marvel vender, and a successful caster-out of devils, and a tyrant, or great threatener of dire calamities, and a great promiser of beneficent gifts, all postponed indefinitely, to an unknown day of judgment, to all of which unseemly pretensions he adhered with all the pertinacity of a maniac to his absurdity; yet when Palm-Sunday comes around we only hear of the imaginary king, sitting on an ass, and a colt, the foal of an ass, riding after a kingdom, beseeching people to believe all the words he uttered, that he might save them when he got a kingdom, and killing everybody who did not believe what he said.

"Alas, and did our Savior bleed?
And did our sovereign die?"
Then, goodly gander, you must lead,
And, goosey, you must fly.

Never mind the ass-riding. Never mind the palm-boughs. Money is what a king most needs. Aye, the Lord's treasury! And the last Bible account given of the hero of Palm-Sunday by the last one who sighted him was, that he had seven eyes and seven horns and a woolly head, like a sheep. Wonderful indeed is theology!

Just one paragraph more.

Theologians disparage ridicule. They tell us it is disgraceful, and they try to have us kill it, as if God did not know what he was about when he made us with that faculty; but we guess the theologians are mistaken; for social science tells us that ridicule is the proper handling for everything ridiculous, like the institution of Palm-Sunday; and Aesop tells of a fox that lost his tail in a trap and seriously proposed that all foxes have their tails clipped, when ridicule saved all of their tails. Just so it is with regard to religion. Ridicule will save a soul from hell far better than the woolly-headed gentleman off in the sky, with seven eyes and seven horns. Only those who seek hell chant hell for others; and only those who seek gods chant gods for others; and certainly ridicule is more happyfying than prayers for salvation from hell. Procle est profani should be the motto of the scientist to religious devotees, while ridicule points to saving truth. We can only point religious devotees to the truth. To reason their minds are impervious. Faith—blind, ignorant faith—they install as the reliable governor of intellect; and their reason must cater to that or die.

CARLOS TEWKSBURY.

The Law.

Indissoluble relation of cause and effect is the LAW.
Earths and Heavens may pass away, but not the LAW.
Divine justice and mercy demand that every jot and tittle of the law be fulfilled.
Habits are stubborn things—Were the LAW—the relation of cause and effect—repealable, or evadable, there would be no hope for poor frail humanity—such as have become confirmed in habits that are naughty.

"Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he reap."

In some of the worlds, if not in this, some poor fellows will, like Lord Cornwallis, become "crop sick"—Sick of their crop—and in unendurable agony, will ejaculate with the same immortal Hiram Abif—"Is there no help?"

And they will hear a voice from the interior, saying, "Put away the evil of your doings—cease to do evil and learn to do well. Blood—your own blood—your new life—must bleach out the stains of past transgressions of your divinest perception of the good and the true.—Amen. PRENTISS.

Prayer and Aspiration.

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

In aspiration the disbelievers in prayer cordially believe. It is their noble substitute for prayer. Aspiration after beauty, truth, goodness, serenity, peace, is a distinguishing quality of the rational being, natural as the plant's longing for the sun. Aspiration differs from prayer in several respects, in each of which it has the advantage in point of spiritual dignity. Prayer is mechanical, aspiration is vital. Prayer encourages the feeling of dependence on foreign and unseen powers; aspiration encourages the growth and expansion of the longing soul. Prayer makes one a fool; aspiration makes one a fountain. Prayer is never sure of answer, is seldom supposed to be answered directly, is hampered with so many conditions, that answer to it is practically impossible; while aspiration is always responded to, is satisfied by the law of supply and demand, as inevitably as color and fragrance come to the healthy plant that has found the sunbeams. Because I help my brother man it does not follow that God will help him. It is because I am persuaded that God does not, and will not for any supplication, that I do; therefore I contend that prayer to God for benefits we can earn for ourselves, is practically demoralizing. It is conceded by all philanthropists that earning is better than begging, even from men. How much better than begging from imaginary beings.

What is Christianity?

"The doctrine of the Divinity of Christ is not the dividing line between Infidelity and Christianity; but the doctrine of the Divine origin of the Bible."—G. H. HUMPHREY in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 5th.

CATHOLIC CATECHISM.

Q.—What is a true Catholic Christian? A.—The faith of a true Catholic is a firm belief, without doubting, in all that God has revealed, and teaches through the holy Catholic Church.

Q.—Is it not enough for each one to read the Holy Scriptures and to believe only what he finds in them? A.—No. For two reasons. First, because the "Word of God" is not contained in the Bible alone, but also in the traditions of the Church; and secondly because the Church is the only authorized teacher and interpreter of the Word of God.

Q.—Why must we believe without doubting? A.—Because the Catholic Faith has been revealed, by God, who cannot be deceived, and is incapable of deceiving us, and who has promised that his holy Church shall never err.

Q.—Is it necessary for every one to know all the truths which God has revealed to his Church? A.—No. For many persons this would be impossible. Some of these truths, however, are necessary for all to know, the rest confide in the Church, believe what she believes!

Q.—Are there any doctrines which everyone is bound to know under pain of mortal sin? A.—Yes; it is absolutely necessary for all to know God in substance. The mystery of the Holy Trinity, the Redemption of mankind by the Incarnation and death of Jesus Christ, and a Future State of reward or punishment. All who are ignorant of these things cannot receive the Sacraments.

Taken from Father Liguori. John B. p., New York, Sept. 8, 1853. Mission Book.

Now, brother Bennett, according to the Catholics, and all orthodox Protestants, you and I must go to the hot skillet. "What is God?" asks the Catholic. A.—"God is the supreme and infinitely perfectly Being." We must know him in substance. "There is no such thing as Providence," says Prof. Draper. "Nature proceeds under irresistible laws. The vital force which pervades the Universe is what the illiterate call God." And a thousand other names! But brother Humphrey says "The dividing line between Infidelity and Christianity is the doctrine of the divine origin of the Bible." If the miraculous, superhuman, divine origin of the Bible is not proven, what then? It is not—cannot be!

JOSEPH NOYES.

THE habit of carrying burdens upon the head as practiced by the women of Spain, Italy, and India, increases the strength of the neck, strengthens the back, and expands the chest. If this practice could become as popular here as the health-lift, we might see ladies walking up Broadway with the results of their morning shopping snugly packed in a bucket, carefully poised upon the top of the head. Another advantage of this would be the necessity of abolishing two and three-story head-gear.—[Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

"INFIDEL" has come to mean one whose religious opinions differ from the one who uses the term, and is oftentimes an unintentional compliment.—Golden Age.

DEAL gently with those who stray. Draw back by love and persuasion. A kiss is worth a thousand kicks. A kind word is more valuable than a mine of gold.

It is a truth that a man who has no enemies is a drone in the great hive of humanity.

True Greatness.

BY HORACE L. TRAUBEL.

Addressed to a friend who mourns that he is not gifted with a great intellect.

Why mourn you that you are not great?

Why sorrow that you have not name?

Are all alike destined by Fate

To gain the world's capricious fame?

Much better 'tis as Nature willed;

Who, by a wise and just decree,

Within our many forms instilled

Minds of infinite diversity.

Be they great or be they small,

Use the gifts great Nature gave thee;

Use them well and use them all,

E'en though thy deeds do not outlive thee.

Through all the many scenes of gathered ages

A mighty truth hath each assault withstood;

Echoed and re-echoed by the sages—

The truly great are but the truly good!

Among the Daisies.

BY MISS LUCY BRENNAN.

Dear little modest gems so fair,
Flashing in the morning air,
Glistening with the pearly dew,
How much I'd give to be like you.

Dear little daisies, my heart is sad,
Trodden, like you, with the cares of life;
Like you, I try to outlive the strife
That ears and eyes and breath doth stife,
Yet each dawn finds me still as sad.

Why are ye so lowly? last
Little gems on the velvet sward,
Trampled by commonplace feet,
Rushing ye down as they passed.

Yet each morn I find ye as fair,
Sparkling with sunshine and dew;
Blossoming above all despair;
Would that my life were like you!

Rocked in the balm-scented breeze,
With your tiny petals of gold,
Ripe for the food of the bees,
All tremulous now for their hold.

Dear little daisies, modest flowers,
Myriads of blossoms have ye;
Met by the cool vernal showers,
Springing up from the briny sea.

Beecher and the Czar.

It will doubtless afford the Czar of All the Russias the highest satisfaction to learn, when the important news reaches him, that in the holy war in which his legions are engaged he enjoys the support of Plymouth Church. There can be little doubt that he followed, with that absorbing interest which we all felt at the time, the various exciting phases through which the celebrated Brooklyn trial passed. Indeed, we have reason to believe that during that long period of suspense, so trying to the nerves of the entire Christian community of the country, which stubborn or conscientious jurymen protracted beyond all reasonable limits, in their vain efforts to agree upon a verdict, His Imperial Majesty was in the constant receipt of cipher dispatches from the Russian Legation at Washington, and we may shrewdly conjecture that the results of every ballot, so far as they could be ascertained by the ubiquitous agents of the Russian Government, were instantly known at St. Petersburg. It was only natural that as Russian sympathy at that time was entirely withheld from Messrs. Tilton and Moulton, the Czar should expect in return a cordial endorsement of his policy of massacre, in the name of religion, from a body exercising so powerful an influence throughout the United States—we had almost said the civilized world—as Plymouth Church.

Considerable doubts have of late existed upon this point, in consequence, probably, of the delay which has taken place on the part of the pastor to express himself decidedly on the subject, and serious apprehensions were entertained in Russia that, owing to the domestic relations sanctioned by the Mohammedan religion, which could not fail to possess a certain fascination for Mr. Beecher, his sympathies in the present struggle might be wavering, and might finally declare themselves in favor of the Moslem. All doubts upon this point have now been happily set at rest. The reverend gentleman took advantage of a prayer-meeting on Friday night to explain to his congregation the European policy of Plymouth Church. There was something singularly appropriate in the solemnity of the occasion for the exposition of these views. Whether he was on his knees when he made known his desires, and those of his congregation, "that the Russian power should be increased" and that "the Turkish Government should be ground to powder," we are not informed. At any rate, he came to pray and remained to curse.

It must be manifest to our readers that no more fitting time or place could be chosen, moreover, for giving vent to a sentiment so sacred, and at the same time so obscure, from a geographical point of view, as his prayer that Russia should "force her way through the Mediterranean sea, and have a port there in which she will have connection with the rest of the world." When, at the commencement of the Franco-Prussian war, the late Emperor Napoleon sent an urgent request to the Pope for his prayers and blessing on the French arms, the Catholic Pontiff replied that he regretted that it was quite impossible to accede to this request, as he had promised to observe a strict neutrality. Plymouth Church has no such scruples. It is boldly besieging the Throne of Grace in favor of the Cossack. "We have a right," says its beloved pastor, "to look out upon this thing as part and parcel of a great movement of Divine Providence, by which the world is to be brought to a knowledge of true religion." Of the close tie which appears to subsist between the Greek Church and that of Plymouth, we are now made aware for the first time, and we are bound to say that it accounts for much that has hitherto seemed strange and even inexplicable. In no Christian denomination are the Clergy so utterly degraded as in this Church in which Mr. Beecher has found "true religion." With too few exceptions, they are ignorant and profligate drunkards, gamblers, and cheats, while the superstitious practices which they inculcate have reduced the Russian peasant almost to the condition of a Pagan. Still, it must be admitted, they show indications of conscience which prominent members of Plymouth Church would do well to imitate. A Russian peasant, for instance, before committing a theft or any other heinous sin, will invariably throw a cloth over the picture of the Virgin, which hangs, as an object of worship, in his room, thus, at all events, showing an anxiety to conceal his crime from her sacred eye.

In some respects, undoubtedly, we should consider the extension of the Greek Church influence into Turkey to be more desirable for the Christian populations of that country than that of Plymouth, and our astonishment at the reverence and respect which the latter has for the former ceases when we observe how many features they have in common. For instance, we all remember the persecution which went on in Brooklyn of all those who doubted the innocence of "the Beloved Pastor." The spirit of intolerance and blind frenzy that the national Church of Russia, which, according to Mr. Beecher, possesses "the true religion," manifests toward those who dissent from it, evidently commends itself to Plymouth and its pastor.

Three millions of a dissenting sect, for instance, known as "United Greeks," were ordered by an imperial ukase of the Emperor Nicholas to enroll themselves as members of the national Church. They refused, and then commenced a series of persecutions throwing the Bulgarian atrocities far into the shade. Scores of thousands were flogged to death, or perished through maltreatment and privation, or died on their way to Siberia; those who reached their place of exile speedily terminating their miserable existence in the mines. An entire community of nuns of the Roman Catholic convent were either scourged to death or died under the infliction of ingenious tortures, such as dragging them through and half drowning them in horse-ponds, and subjecting them to other and unmentionable horrors. Of these, only two, the abbess and one nun, escaped to France. The persecutions of the Jews, which are still practiced, and which force them constantly to take refuge in Turkey, we have repeatedly alluded to in our columns. The treatment to which the Tchouvassé and Tchermisse Mohammedans of European Russia are exposed has constantly been made the subject of representation to the Porte, which is powerless to protect them. The wholesale expulsion of the Circassians from their mountains is matter of history, and these wretched exiles were at one time the objects of sympathy of many of those who are now calling down the Divine vengeance on their heads. A proclamation by the Polish committee at Constantinople, which we publish elsewhere, describes the outrages to which they have been subjected, the persecutions taking chiefly that ecclesiastical form which seems so palatable to Plymouth Church, and which has resulted in the imprisonment and exile of priests for no other crime than that of refusing to compromise with their consciences in matters of faith.

This is the Church which Mr. Beecher wishes to see triumphant in the East, its influence extended by the blood-thirsty legions who are its blind and fanatic votaries, and who have repeatedly proved their religious zeal by putting whole populations of men, women, and children ruthlessly to the sword in the name of the Prince of Peace. These are the armies of which Mr. Beecher says: "When I heard of the Russian armies going out my sympathy went out with them;" a sentiment which we are informed the Rev. Lyman Abbott and Dr. Edward Beecher endorsed. Taking the past history of this church into account, its quarrels with the other churches of Brooklyn, and the noxious moral influence which has for some years past pervaded the whole atmosphere by which it is surrounded, we can perhaps desire no better evidence of the inherent falseness of the Russian crusade in the cause of religion and civilization than that it should have drawn forth this warm expression of sympathy and support at last Friday's prayer-meeting. Having invoked the Divine blessing upon this gigantic sham, "the proceedings," we are informed, "were brought to a close by the singing of a hymn and the pronouncing of a benediction."—N. Y. Sun.

Anti-Usury.

LONG ISLAND CITY, May 17, 1877.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER:—Since the publication (May 12th) of the Anti-Usury Resolutions, I have been the recipient of letters from various parts of the Union respecting them. Believing that your paper will reach these enquirers, I respectfully ask space in it to answer their interrogations on subjects treated on in the above-named resolutions.

A correspondent in Kansas desires to know whether I am certain that Jewish Rabbis universally condemn the practice of usury between Jews? To him I answer that I am assured they do. The laws of Moses, Exodus ch. 22, verse 25, Leviticus 25 chapter, verse 35-37, and Deut. 23, chapter ver 19, 20 totally and unquestionably forbid the taking of interest or increase on loans of any kind between Jew and Jew.

I have no Mohammedan questioner yet, but, to spare any Mufti the trouble of writing me from Constantinople, I quote the law on which the third resolution is based. "They who devour by usury shall not arise from the dead, but as he arises whom Satan hath infected by a touch, (That is, as an idiotic soul.) This shall happen to them, because they say, 'truly selling is but usury, and yet Allah hath permitted selling and forbidden usury." He therefore, who when there comes to him an admonition from his Lord, abstaineth from usury in the future, shall have what is past forgiven him, and his affair belongeth unto Allah: but whosoever returneth into usury, he shall be the companion of hell fire, and shall continue therein forever." Koran, 3 chap., called the Cow. To the above doctrine, though no Mussulman, I respectfully answer, "Bismillah, blessed will that nation be which first repudiates national and all other legalized usury, and I earnestly recommend my Turkish brethren and sisters to feed their soldiers now engaged in war with milk from that Cow."

A jester from Newark, N. J., enquires if I think Brother Moody could be induced to preach at the Exchange in Wall street from the text quoted for the benefit of Christians in the fourth resolution, viz: "But love ye your enemies and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again. Luke, 6 chapter, and 35 verse. To him I reply, "No, certainly not; to lecture from such a text at such a place is a duty that prudent Protestant ministers would sedulously shun. No doubt should a jealous brother hold forth these, he would limit his call to "come to Jesus," etc.,—and, as many of our money brokers are rollicking good-natured fellows, no doubt some of them would follow his counsel, if the minister could point out to them where Jesus was, and a light wagon and a 2:40 horse could carry them thither."

In conclusion permit me to say that when this country was discovered by Columbus, usurers were considered and punished as criminals throughout the Christian world. In England, from the time of Alfred to that of Henry the Eighth, a period of five centuries the law was: "He who demands usury or increase on money loaned shall forfeit his goods to the King, his lands to the lords of the seas in which they are, (that is the Bishops) and his body shall not be buried in consecrated ground." The latter was considered a great privilege, and is now among Catholics, and it was never denied formally to any class of malefactors, save usurers. But the Anti-Usury Society does not seek to revive old punishments against usury-takers, all that its members demand from Congress is that the laws now on our statute books sustaining it shall be annulled, for while they remain in force the aforesaid members (and all other people in our union) are cruelly and compulsorily made participants in what they know to be a grave and most uneconomical crime.

What the blood is to the physical, that is money to the industrial world. It is the circulating medium in both instances, and its function is to continually visit and vivify, in the first instance all parts of the natural body, and, in the second, all parts of the industrial body. As a nation we are daily and yearly losing our proper share of this medium, in other words, our industrial force is being bled to death. France has a larger national debt than we have, but it is far more easily borne, for the interest money upon it is paid to four millions of Frenchmen and circulates every year through the extremities of the nation, whereas our interest money is shipped to Europe, and is not only lost to us, but operates against us by stimulating foreign interests in opposition to ours. In addition, a very large part of the natural wealth of our country (which by right is inalienable) has been pawned in Europe. Not only our human labors, railroads, etc., but the free gifts of Nature, viz: our lands, mines, and watercourses, have been thus despotically sequestered from us, and changed from blessings into curses on us and on our children. For these reasons we have and do demand from Congress that all the miserable edicts (for such villanies are not laws) which invest money with the power to increase, and, what is worse, sanction and secure such increase, be immediately abrogated and annulled, and that our great communal force, the people's law, be no longer used like a poodle dog to fetch and carry for usurers.

ROBERT W. HUME.

Friendly Correspondence.

GEORGE KISPERT, Jefferson, Wis., writes: That letter of Harry Hoover in No. 20, of your paper gave me great pleasure to read and I find a true description of a large number of men and women in our community. I wish to have a hundred copies of that letter for distribution. Will not fail to show to some of those so-called "Pseudos." It is hard work to agitate, if men are afraid to show their true sentiments. Please book my name for a copy of "Truth Seeker Collection." I will send you the amount altogether with renewal of subscription for my paper.

Mrs R. S. LUCE, Norvel, Mich., writes: I find myself sufficiently interested in your publications to wish for more than my slender purse will warrant me in ordering, but will enclose $1.00 for "Thirty Discussions," "Bible Stories," etc., and 25 cents for Truth Seeker Leaflets and Tracts, for distribution. I am more and more pleased with the "Sages," keep it by me, when weary of work—and think what trials those noble characters of olden time had to encounter, when seeming to stand alone in this world of ignorance and folly, they heroically buffeted the waves of superstition and priest-craft and send forth their golden maxims for the guide and admiration of generations to come in all future time, I hope ere long to be able to order Lord Amberley's "Analysis," but cannot now.

JAMES S. BEDEL, Hudson, Mich., writes: B. F. Underwood and wife, have just left after spending four days with us. We have enjoyed a feast of fat things. Mrs. Underwood is a lady of fine abilities. A lady in every sense of the word, very agreeable and so pleasant. Emotional feelings came over me when we parted. They seem so near to me, and have taken such a lively interest in my welfare, that I can never forget them. Oh, for more such Liberal heads and souls as they possess, and then, would the world have beacon lights to lead the people up and out of the old superstition of ignorance and bigotry, into the broad fields of light, reason, truth and happiness. Our League is now permanently established and we have a nucleus around which we can gather. Our President, L. R. Pierson, is a fine man, whom everybody respects. A man of fine abilities and a lawyer. His wife seems to second all his actions, and is seen with him at all our meetings. We have a strong opposition from both the religious and secret societies, besides being unpopular, but we think with fair dealing and courteous treatment, together with moral suasion, we will, after a while win them over to our good cause. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; this is my motto.

Dr. J. S. LYON, Hygeine Home, Springfield, Mo., writes: You are doing a good work, and are accomplishing much. I wonder how you manage to do it all with so little means, and yet make things so lively and so full of interest. Nothing would be more gratifying to me, than to be able to contribute to you liberally the required aid necessary for more comfort and relief from such undue care and tax consequent from this lack, and will not withhold my means when it is possible for me to contribute them to so useful an undertaking. I think your "Interrogatories" and "What I don't believe," the most complete exposition of the Scriptures I ever read. They are simply grand, and ought to be read by every lover of truth and common sense. I aim to keep my papers circulating for I think them too good to keep to be stowed away while I can find a man, woman or child who will read them. The world is famishing for such truths, and when those articles are placed in book form, I intend to get one copy at least, to occupy a place in my library for the benefit of my family and friends, as a living testimony against the monstrous absurdities of the Bible, and followers of the priesthood. The orthodox side of it only has heretofore been presented, and notwithstanding early impressions and a continuous effort to educate the mind into the pious belief of its sacred absurdities is unconvincing, and therefore unsatisfactory, while the opposite side is now so clearly and truthfully demonstrated as to render the verdict decidedly in your favor, and against the bible as a compound of mythology, fanaticism, and priestly delusion.

ANDREW LARSEN, Morgan City, Utah, writes: It is now a long time since I had a friendly greeting with you. My little family, a wife and two children are taking a little pleasure trip out to enjoy the free mountain air. I will now enjoy myself, while sitting here alone, in sending you a few lines, hoping that it may be interesting to you, and if you should think it worthy of a hearing to the readers of your paper, please insert it. Your paper is of all papers, my best companion, and I hope that it may henceforth continue to spread its glorious truth to the millions, so that priestcraft, bigotry, and superstition may be conquered, and truth, reason and common sense be its successor. For one can not find words to express my thankfulness for the freedom of mind that I enjoy to-day. Thanks to Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" and THE TRUTH SEEKER, they are to-day better saviors to me than all the crucified mythological gods that history can tell of. For fifteen years I have been a resident here in Utah, and as such had the privilege to enjoy the freedom that the Constitution of America guarantees to all its citizens. But I, like thousands of others, have been blindfolded by priestcraft, religious bigotry, and superstition. When I first came here I had to suffer the inconvenience of being tossed around by bigots in shape of priests. I have traveled thousands of miles preaching what I then sincerely believed to be the only plan of salvation, because I had been told so. I left a dear family and spent several years of my best time for such a humbug. I will here inclose a relic of that time, which I think will amuse you and may amuse some of the readers of your paper to see what superstition leads to, and what the priests of Utah can get up for making a livelihood. You must know the document cost two dollars. It is what is called a patriarchal blessing, and of course is divine. But it brings these fellows hundreds of dollars yearly. When they cannot get the cash they take butter, eggs, and produce of all kinds. Hundreds of their poor dupes are looking eagerly for the fulfillment of those blessing. I for my part am done with this and could not assure you of its divinity. I was on my mission for three years and a half, but it was in my native land, Denmark, and there was no Anthony Comstock around. I have never been in prison or in battle. I have called thousands of times upon Jehovah, but he never answered.

The following is the "Blessing" referred to:

G. S. L. CITY, May 2nd, 1865.

A Blessing by C. W. Hyde, Patriarch, upon the head of Andrew Larsen, the son of Lars C. Larsen and Johanne Maria Larsen; born May 12th, 1832. Denmark.

Andrew, I place my hands upon your head. I seal upon thee a father's blessing, for there was joy in heaven when you embraced the new and everlasting covenant. Therefore, in as much as you keep hold on the rod of iron, no power on earth can stay thy hands. And you shall have the spirit of Prophecy and thy tongue shall be let loose. For the Father has given his angels charge over thee, and you shall have power to open prisons and power to do any miracle that was ever done upon Earth to forward the Kingdom, and the Power of God shall be with you on the great deep, and no weapon that is formed against you shall prosper; and in as much as you keep humble before the Lord thy God you shall converse with angels. Yea! even you shall hear the voice of God and he will call thee by name. My son, go thy way. I will not forsake thee. I have prepared, a crown in the mansion of my Father for thee.

Thou art of Joseph, and a lawful heir to the fullness of the Priesthood with wives and a great Kingdom upon the Earth, and you shall see the mighty power of God displayed for thy deliverance from time to time. And verily, thus saith the Lord God, all things shall be for your goods, houses, lands, flocks and herds; and sit down with all the Holy Prophets since the world began. I shall be the means of redeeming all thine ancestors, and be crowned with glory, and eternal lives to God and the Lamb, forever and ever. Amen.

Special Notices.

Two young men of average brains and conceit, and rather skeptical in matters of faith, would like to correspond with two young ladies similarly afflicted. Object—addition to both qualities. Address, Jerome or Everett, care of TRUTH SEEKER.

EXPERIENCED LADY TEACHER would like a situation in Private School or Family. Would correspond with Liberal party, with view to a home. "Ellen," care THE TRUTH SEEKER, 2129

HEALTH TO THE AFFLICTED.—Every form of disease permanently and radically cured without drugs. Terms liberal. Send for circular. Address A. G. HUMPHREY, M. D., Galesburg, Ill.

WATER-CURE.—Dr. Lyon's Hygienic Home for the reception of patients for board and treatment, was established in 1874, and is meeting with marked success, both in numbers and cures. Send for circular, etc., to J. S. LYON, Box 247, Springfield, Mo. 12119

INTELLIGENT lady, without incumbrance, would like to make herself useful in the home of Liberal party. Small salary. AMABLE, Care TRUTH SEEKER.

Spermatorrhea.

Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this LIFE-WASTING disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition: had been in insane asylums, many had falling-sickness fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS,

The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N. Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygienic Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

Radical Constructive Literature.
DISCOURSES AND LECTURES
DELIVERED BEFORE THE SOCIETY
OF HUMANITY AND THE LIBERAL CLUB
IN SCIENCE HALL, New York City.

1. The Constitution and Regulations of the First Congregation of the Society of the Church of Humanity, with a short statement of the New Faith. Price, 25 cents.
2. The Old vs. the New Gospel. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 10 cents.
3. The God Idea in History. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.
4. The Safe Side. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.
5. Duties Proportional to Destinies. (In press.) By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.

HENDERSON & BROWN,

Science Hall, 8th St., (near Broadway,) 22d St., New York.

Heathens of the Heath;

A ROMANCE, BY WM. McDONNELL,

AUTHOR OF "EXETER HALL," ETC.

This work is rich in romantic and pathetic incidents, and exhibits with an overwhelming array of facts the atrocities committed by the Church. It shows that the purest morality exists without the Bible, and that many of the heathen philosophers were lovers of virtue. The folly of Christian ministers is fully portrayed. Hypocrisy and bigotry are clearly exposed, and the road to virtue and true happiness plainly marked out. A most pleasing romance is woven into the work, in which much opportunity is afforded the author for fine descriptions and beautiful sentiments which he so well knows how to give utterance to. The characters in the tale are invested with much interest; the hero and heroine gain the love of every reader. "On the whole, it is the work of a master hand—a work of unaffected beauty and the deepest interest." "One of the most valuable features of the work is, its positions are all proven. Every thinking, enquiring mind should peruse it." 600 pp., 12mo. Price, in paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

- Sexual Physiology.....$2 00
- Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book.....1 00
- Health and Diseases of Women.....25
- Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses.....50

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. TRALL, M.D., 102 E. 22d St., New York.

MRS. BEVIER, ELECTRICIAN.

Cures Dyspepsia when all others fail; also by VITAL MAGNETISM

the most despondent are inspired with renewed life and energy. It imparts Electricity, Life, and Tone to the Brain, preventing Heart disease. I also have the VITAL SPARK, or COUNT CAGLIOSTRO'S SECRET. 455 Sixth Avenue, N. Y.

E. P. Cooley,

Manufacturer of

Window Shades and Opaque Cloths.

64 READE STREET, NEW YORK.

Dealer in Fixtures, Cords, Tassels, Hollands, etc.

IMITATION LACE SHADES A SPECIALTY.

Combining the beauty of a Lace Curtain with the utility of a Window Shade. ORDERS BY MAIL PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO, and FORWARDED WITH CARE. Retail Orders delivered in any part of the country, C. O. D. In ordering special sizes give size of opening, also size of glass. State where you saw this adv.

Just Issued! ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3 00; Leather, $1 00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4 50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,

141 Eighth St., New York.

BANNER OF LIGHT,

The oldest journal in the world devoted to the

SPIRITUAL PHILOSOPHY.

ISSUED WEEKLY

AT No. 9 MONTGOMERY PLACE, BOSTON, MASS.

COLBY & RICH,

Publishers and Proprietors.

ISAAC B. RICH.....Business Manager,
LUTHER COLBY.....Editor,
JOHN W. DAY.....Associate Editor,
Aided by a large corps of able writers.

THE BANNER is a first-class, eight-page, Family Newspaper, containing forty columns of interesting and instructive reading, embracing a LITERARY DEPARTMENT; REPORTS OF SPIRITUAL LECTURES; ORIGINAL ESSAYS—upon Spiritual, Philosophical and Scientific Subjects. EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT. SPIRIT-MESSAGE DEPARTMENT. CONTRIBUTIONS by the most talented writers in the world, etc., etc.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION IN ADVANCE.
Per Year.....$3 00
Six Months.....1 50
Three Months.....75

Postage fifteen cents per year, and must accompany the subscription.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Money-Order on Boston, or a Draft on a Bank or Banking House in Boston or New York City, payable to the order of Colby & Rich, is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Draft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the sender.

Specimen copies sent free.
ADVERTISEMENTS published at twenty cents per line for the first, and fifteen cents per line for each subsequent insertion.

COLBY & RICH,

Publishers and Booksellers,

No. 9 MONTGOMERY PLACE, BOSTON.

KEEP A FULL ASSORTMENT OF SPIRITUAL, PROGRESSIVE, REFORM,
AND MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS,

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
Catalogues of Books Published and for Sale by Colby & Rich sent free.

THE WORLD'S

Sixteen Crucified Saviors.

OR,

CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST

CONTAINING

New, Startling, and Extraordinary Revelations in Religious History, which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the

Christian New Testament,

and furnishing a Key for unlocking many of its Sacred Mysteries, besides comprising the History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods.

BY KERSEY GRAVES,

Author of "The Biography of Satan," and "The Bible of Bibles" (comprising a description of twenty bibles).

This wonderful and exhaustive volume by Mr. Graves will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which he has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape the student of freethought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows, to the mark. Printed on fine white paper, large 12mo., 380 pages, $2. Address,
D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

